

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2007 with funding from Microsoft Corporation

<http://www.archive.org/details/academyliteratur45londuoft>

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

---

---

JANUARY — JUNE,
1894.

---

---

36188
3/3/95

VOLUME XLV.

PUBLISHING OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON, W.C.

1894.

LONDON :
PRINTED BY ALEXANDER AND SHEPHEARD, LONSDALE BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

CONTENTS OF VOLUME XLV.

LITERATURE.

REVIEWS.

	PAGE
Adams's (Francis) The New Egypt ...	51
Allen's (Grant) The Lower Slopes ...	263
Astley's (Sir John) Fifty Years of my Life in the World of Sport ...	512
Baddeley's (St. Clair) Charles III. of Naples and Urban VI. ...	301
Baynes's (Thomas Spencer) Shakespeare Studies and other Essays ...	439
Bell's (Cora Hamilton) translation of De la Rochetiere's Life of Marie Antoinette ...	30
— (Nancy) translation of Von Höhnelt's Discovery of Lakes Rudolf and Stefanie ...	408
Bertram's (James) Some Memories of Books, Authors, and Events ...	492
Birrell's (Augustine) Essays about Men, Women, and Books ...	119
Black's (Robert) Horse Racing in England ...	144
Blessington, the Countess of, Conversations of Lord Byron with ...	94
Bourke's (Hon. Algernon) Correspondence of Mr. Joseph Jekyll ...	221
Boyesen's (H. H.) Commentary on the Works of Henrik Ibsen ...	285
Bradshaw's (John) Sir Thomas Munro ...	365
Bridges' (Robert) Milton's Prosody ...	202
Brooke's (Stouford A.) History of Early English Literature ...	222
Brown's (Baldwin) Stoics and Saints ...	181
— (Horatio F.) Venice ...	301
Browning's (Oscar) Guelphs and Ghibellines ...	301
Burnett & Mackay's The Erchequer Rolls of Scotland ...	366
Botcher's (S. H.) Some Aspects of the Greek Genius ...	410
Butler's (Arthur John) translation of Scartazzini's Dante-Handbuch ...	242
Campbell's (James Dykes) Samuel Taylor Coleridge ...	141
Carman's (Bliss) Low Tide on Grand Pré ...	7
Cartwright's (Julia) Madame ...	241
Charles's (R. H.) edition of the Book of Enoch ...	93
Cole's (G. A. J.) The Gypsy Road ...	432
Conway's (William Martin) Climbing and Exploration in the Karakoram Himalayas ...	449
Craik's (Henry) English Prose Selections ...	467
Davidson's (John) A Random Itinerary ...	205
Dawson's (W. H.) Germany and the Germans ...	254
Delano's (A.) translation of Tolstoy's The Kingdom of God is Within You ...	241
De la Rochetiere's (Maxime) Life of Marie Antoinette ...	30
Dillmann's (Prof.) The Book of Enoch ...	529
Drumont's (Edouard) Mon Vieux Paris ...	939
Du Camp's (Maxime) Literary Recollections ...	204
Dunmore's (Earl of) The Pamirs ...	28
Du Pontavice de Houssey's (Viscount Robert) Villiers de l'Isle Adam ...	388
Earle's (John) The Psalter of the Great Bible of 1539 ...	452
Egerton's (George) Keynotes ...	143
Ferguson's (Lady) Life of Bishop Reeves ...	6
Fersen, Count de, and Marie Antoinette	431
Fliet's (Robert) History of the Philosophy of History ...	364
Francis's (H. R.) Junius Revealed ...	264
Freeman's (Hon. W. H.) The Principal Works of St. Jerome ...	223
Garnett's (Richard) Poems ...	223
— (Constance) translation of Tolstoy's The Kingdom of God is Within You ...	241

REVIEWS—continued.

	PAGE
Garrett's (F. Edmund) translation of Ibsen's Brand ...	510
Gaulot's (Paul) A Friend of the Queen (Marie Antoinette: Count de Fersen) ...	431
Gosse's (Edmund) The Jacobean Poets ...	322
Gower's (Hon. F. Leveson) Letters of Countess Granville ...	341
Graham's (Mrs. Cunningham) Santa Teresa ...	491
Green's (Mrs. J. R.) Town Life in the Fifteenth Century ...	490
Greenwood's (Frederick) The Lover's Lexicon ...	53
Hare's (Augustus J. C.) The Story of Two Noble Lives ...	40
Harrison's (Willmot) Memorable Paris Houses ...	529
Herbert, George, Life of ...	183
Herford's (C. H.) translation of Ibsen's Brand ...	510
Herm's (Mary) translation of Moltke's Private Correspondence ...	321
Hill's (Georgiana) History of English Dress ...	52
Hoc's (Mrs. Cashel) translation of Gaulot's A Friend of the Queen ...	431
Ibsen's (Henrik) Brand ...	510
James's (M. R.) Apocrypha Anecdota ...	93
— (W. P.) Romantic Professions, and other Papers ...	341
Jebb's (R. C.) The Growth and Influence of Classical Greek Poetry ...	410
Kidd's (Benjamin) Social Evolution ...	261
Kipling's (Rudyard) The Jungle Book ...	530
Knights' (William) Aspects of Theism ...	181
Lamont's (Archibald) Bright Celestials ...	324
Lang's (Andrew) St. Andrews ...	96
— Ban and Arrière Ban ...	451
Le Fann's (W. B.) Seventy Years of Irish Life ...	303
Le Gallienne's (Richard) Prose Fancies ...	527
Leland's (Charles Godfrey) Memoirs ...	75
Lévy's (Arthur) Napoleon Intime ...	409
Lofius, Lord Augustus, Diplomatic Reminiscences of ...	440
Loyd's (Lady Mary) translation of De Houssey's Villiers de l'Isle Adam ...	388
Lugard's (Capt. F. D.) The Rise of our East African Empire ...	5
MacCallum's (M. W.) Tennyson's Idylls of the King and Arthurian Story from the XVth Century ...	300
Macpherson's (Alexander) Glimpses of Church and Social Life in the Highlands in the Olden Time ...	29
Mallock's (W. H.) Labour and the Popular Welfare ...	204
Maxwell's (Sir Herbert) Life and Times of the Right Hon. W. H. Smith ...	161
Mayer's (Gertrude Townshend) Women of Letters ...	283
Ménéval's (Baron) Memoirs of Napoleon ...	509
Moltke's (Field-Marshal) Private Correspondence ...	321
Monier-Williams's (Sir M.) Memorials of Old Haileybury ...	412
Morgan's (M.) translation of Xenophon's Art of Horsemanship ...	144
Moriarty's (Gerard) translation of The Paris Law Courts ...	529
Nicholson's (Prof. J. Shield) Principles of Political Economy ...	344
Overton's (John H.) The English Church in the Nineteenth Century ...	511
Owen's (John) The Skeptics of the French Renaissance ...	27
Partridge, The ...	70
Pearcy's (Mrs.) My Arctic Journal ...	101
Peter, the Gospel according to. By the author of "Supernatural Religion" ...	411

REVIEWS—continued.

	PAGE
Prothero's (Rowland E.) Life and Correspondence of Arthur Penrhyn Stanley ...	117
Robinson's (John Robert) The Last Earl of Barrymore ...	528
Romilly's (Hugh H.) Letters from the Western Pacific and Mashonaland ...	264
Rossetti's (Christina G.) Verses ...	162
Runciman's (James) Side Lights ...	432
Russia's March towards India . By "An Indian Officer" ...	184
Sanday's (Prof. W.) Inspiration ...	430
Sayce's (A. H.) The "Higher Criticism" and the Verdict of the Monuments ...	281
Scartazzini's (G. A.) A Companion to Dante ...	242
Seeley's (J. R.) Goethe Reviewed after Sixty Years ...	469
Sharp's (William) Vistas ...	182
Sherard's (R. H.) translation of Ménéval's Memoirs of Napoleon ...	509
Simcoe's (Stephen Louis) translation of Lévy's Napoleon Intime ...	409
Smith's (Goldwin) Essays on Questions of the Day ...	324
Spalding's (T. A.) The House of Lords ...	389
Spencer's (George William) System of Lucid Shorthand ...	453
Stephens's (H. Morse) Europe at the Time of the French Revolution ...	201
Stokes's (Prof. Sir G. G.) Natural Religion ...	181
Swift's (F. Darwin) Life and Times of James I. of Aragon ...	323
Swinburne's (Algernon Charles) Astrophel, and other Poems ...	429
Symonds's (Margaret) Days spent on a Doge's Farm ...	77
Temple, The ...	183
Temple's (Sir Richard) Life in Parliament ...	7
Thayer's (William Roscoe) The Dawn of Italian Independence ...	301
Thompson's (Francis) Poems ...	302
Tolstoy's (Count Leo) The Kingdom of God is Within You ...	244
Vernon's (Hon. William Warren) Readings from Dante's Inferno ...	343
Von Höhnelt's (Lieut. L.) Discovery of Lakes Rudolf and Stefanie ...	408
Walliszewski's (R.) The Romance of an Empress ...	120
Walters's (J. Cuming) Tennyson ...	96
Ward's (Mrs. Humphry) Marcella ...	303
Watts's (H. E.) Spain ...	144
Willert's (P. F.) Henry of Navarre and the Huguenots in France ...	470
Wilson's (H. A.) The Gelasian Sacramentary ...	304
Winchester College ...	73
Wolsley's (Lord) Life of John Churchill, Duke of Marlborough ...	387
Yeats's (W. B.) The Celtic Twilight ...	244
Zdzicowski's Byron and his Age ...	530

NOVELS.

Allardye's (Alexander) Earls Court ...	206
Allen's (Grant) Michael's Crag ...	166
Arbuth's (E. Maria) Countess of Salette ...	346
Arden's (Jeffrey) The Triumph of Theresa ...	9
Armstrong's (Frances) Old Cabel's Will ...	196
Arnold's (Edwin Lester) The Constable of St. Nicholas ...	225
— (Walter T.) A Modern Xanthippe ...	206

NOVELS—continued.

	PAGE
Bacot's (E. M.) Mrs. Thorndale's Cousin ...	306
Balestier's (Wolcott) Benefits Forgiven ...	345
Baring-Gould's (S.) The Queen of Love ...	513
Barr's (Amelia E.) Girls of a Feather ...	532
Barry's (John Arthur) Steve Brown's Bunyip ...	79
Bell's (Hesketh) A Witch's Legacy ...	54
Benson's (E. F.) The Rubicon ...	453
Blatchford's (Robert) A Son of the Forge ...	513
Boldrewood's (Rolf) A Modern Buccaneer ...	513
Breton's (Frédéric) A Heroine in Homespun ...	93
Briton's (E. Vincent) The Face of Death ...	123
Brown's (Helen Dawes) The Petrie Estate ...	54
Browne's (T. M.) Under the Live Oaks ...	632
Buchanan's (Robert) Woman and the Man ...	9
Bullock's (Shan F.) The Awkward Squad ...	10
Bullock-Barber's (William) Lame Dogs ...	532
Bunney's (H. C.) Made in France ...	287
Cambridge's (Ada) A Marriage Ceremony ...	246
Cameron's (Mrs. Lovett) A Tragic Blunder ...	32
Campbell's (Mrs. Vers) The Shibboleth ...	345
Cardella's (G.) The Perfect Way of Honour ...	531
Carew's (F. T.) Jim B. ...	368
Catherwood's (Mary H.) The White Island ...	79
Chastfield-Taylor's (H. C.) An American Peeress ...	513
Clifford's (Mrs.) A Grey Romance and other Stories ...	305
Cobban's (J. McLaren) The Burden of Isabel ...	146
Coltina's (Mabel) Juliet's Lovers ...	9
Colmore's (G.) A Daughter of Music ...	414
Conway's (Mrs.) Gold for Dress ...	31
Cooper's (E. H.) Richard Escott ...	146
Cotterell's (Constance) Tempe ...	78
Crawford's (F. Marion) Marion Darce ...	54
— Katherine Lauderdale ...	413
Creswell's (Henry) Broken Fortunes ...	146
Cromwell's (May) Dust before the Wind ...	392
Davidson's (John) Baptist Lake ...	206
— (Hugh C.) Mr. Sadler's Daughters ...	494
Dean's (M.) Eve's Apple ...	433
De Lisle's (Percy) The Hero of the Pelican ...	367
Dene's (Noel) Helty's Heritage ...	326
Diehl's (Mrs.) A Woman's Whim ...	433
Dixon's (Ella Hepworth) The Story of a Modern Woman ...	494
Dole's (Nathan Haskell) Not Angels Quite ...	246
Drew's (D'Arcy) Henry Standon ...	493
Ellis's (T. Mullett) The Beauty of Boscastle ...	207
Esler's (E. Rentoul) How they Loved at Grinpat ...	145
Everett-Green's (Evelyn) St. Wynfrith and its Inmates ...	123
Fenn's (G. Manville) The Stor Gazer ...	51
— In an Alpine Valley ...	121
Foley's (Charles) Cœur-de-Roi ...	494
Frederic's (Harold) The Copperhead ...	368
Fry's (E. N. Leigh) Janet Delille ...	391
Garrett's (Edward) Her Day of Service ...	514
Gaunt's (Mary) Dave's Sweetheart ...	367
Gerard's (Dorothea) The Rich Miss Riddell ...	494

NOVELS—continued.

	PAGE
Gerrard's (Paul H.) A Sleep Walker .....	472
Gilchrist's (R. Murray) The Stone Dragon .....	287
Gissing's (Algernon) At Society's Expense .....	8
Glanville's (Ernest) A Fair Colonist .....	287
Grand's (Sarah) Our Manifold Nature .....	434
Gray's (Maxwell) An Innocent Impostor .....	196
Haggard's (H. Rider) Montezuma's Daughter .....	31
Hall's (Charles E.) An Ancient Ancestor .....	122
Hardy's (Lady Duffus) A Buried Sin .....	166
Hardy's (Thomas) Life's Little Ironies .....	453
Harland's (Mrs. H.) translation of Serao's Forever Love .....	346
Hart's (Mabel) In Cupid's College .....	367
Hartington's (Edward) The New Academics .....	32
Heale's (J.) Markham Howard .....	98
Henniker's (Markham) Outlines .....	946
Hill's (B. Grimley) The Old House of Rayner .....	166
(John) The Common Ancestor .....	245
Hinkson's (Mrs.) A Cluster of Nuts .....	434
Hobbes's (John Oliver) A Bundle of Life .....	98
Hocking's (Silas K.) One in Charity .....	121
(Rev. Joseph) Ishmael Pen- gelly: an Outcast .....	186
The Monk of Mar Saba .....	472
Holmes's (Eleanor) The Price of a Pearl .....	225
Home of the Dragon, The .....	79
Hope's (Anthony) The Prisoner of Zenda .....	451
Hort's (Dora) Tiara .....	10
Howard's (Christopher) Come Back from the Dead .....	123
Hoyer's (M. A.) What Happened at Morwyn .....	10
Good Dame Fortune .....	191
Hudson's (Frank) She Shall be Mine .....	351
Hilbard's (Percy) The Romance of Shere Mate .....	305
Hume's (Fergus) The Best of Her Sex .....	325
A Midnight Mystery .....	392
The Mystery of Landy Court .....	454
Hungerford's (Mrs.) The Hoyden .....	51
The Red-House Mystery .....	254
An Unsatisfactory Lover .....	368
Hunter's (P. Hay) The Silver Bullet .....	392
James Inwick .....	494
Hyne's (C. J. Cuthbert) The Recipe for Diamonds .....	414
Inderwick's (F. A.) A Prisoner of War .....	55
A Yellow Aster .....	245
Jameson's (William) My Dead Self .....	266
Jocelyn's (Mrs. Robert) Pamela's Honeymoon .....	391
Jokai's (Maurice) Eyes Like the Sea .....	78
In Love with the Czarina .....	246
Keeling's (Elsa D'Este) Appassionata .....	98
Keith's (Leslie) Lisbeth .....	185
Kenesly's (Dr. Arabella) Molly and her Man of War .....	198
Kennard's (Mrs. Edward) Just Like a Woman .....	472
Kernahan's (Coulson) A Book of Strange Sins .....	10
King's (Sydney) translation of Arbib's Maria, Countess of Saleto .....	346
Kirke's (Vernon) "Zorg" .....	207
Knox-Little's (W. J.) A Waif from the Wess .....	99
Lewis's (Helen Prothero) Hooks of Steel .....	286
Linton's (Mrs. Lynn) The One Too Many .....	305
Littlejohn's (John) England against the World .....	392
Lynch's (E. M.) A Parish Providence .....	532
Lyon's (Gilberta M. F.) For Good or Evil .....	98
Maartens' (Maarten) The Greater Glory .....	265
Mackay's (Kenneth) Out Back .....	9
MacNab's (Frances) Relics .....	166
Macquoid's (Mrs.) In an Orchard .....	305
Marrat's (Florence) The Hampstead Mystery .....	122
Marshall's (Mrs.) The First Light on the Eddystone .....	532
Martin's (Mrs. Herbert) Britonart .....	165
Masterman's (J.) A Devoted Couple .....	326
Mathers's (Helen) A Man of To-day .....	471
Maud's (F. W.) Victims .....	287
McClanland's (Lieut.-Col. W. H.) De- ferred Pay .....	266
McCarthy's (Justin) Red Diamonds .....	165
McIver's (G.) Neurosomia .....	472
Melrum's (D. Storror) The Story of Margrédal .....	367
Mellor's (C.) The Death Penalty .....	514
Mikoultch's (V.) Mimi's Marriage .....	226
Mitchell's (Edmund) The Temple of Death .....	472
Mitford's (Bertram) The Luck of Gerard Ridgely .....	122
Moffat & White's What's the World Coming To? .....	186
Moore's (George) Eather Waters .....	433

NOVELS—continued.

	PAGE
Muddock's (J. E.) Only a Woman's Heart .....	225
Murphy's (G. Read) Beyond the Ice .....	246
Murray's (David Christie) In Direct Peril .....	315
Nelson's (Jane) The Rousing of Mrs. Potter, and other Stories .....	208
Newman's (B. Paul) Raymond's Folly .....	166
Newell's (Henry) Whiff! .....	434
Nisbet's (Hume) A Bush Girl's Romance .....	246
Norris's (W. E.) Saint Ann's .....	454
O'Grady's (Standish) Lost on Du-Corrig .....	414
Oliphant's (Mrs.) Lady William .....	225
Orsi's (Count) A Maid of Brittany .....	286
Ouida's Two Offenders .....	207
Parry's (E. Gambier) The Story of Dick Paterson's (Arthur) The Daughter of the Nez Percés .....	257
Perrin's (A.) Into Temptation .....	454
Pinkerton's (Thomas) Blizzard, and Another Fantasy .....	206
Platt's (James, jun.) Tales of the Supernatural .....	99
Poole's (E. T. E.) His Troublesome Sister .....	494
Præd's (Mrs. Campbell) Christina Chard .....	614
Ramsden's (Lady Gwendolen) Speedwell .....	301
Rita's The Ending of my Day .....	287
Rives's (Amélie) Tanis, the Sang-Digger .....	367
Russell's (Mrs. H. E.) Joyce Martindale .....	166
(Dora) A Great Temptation .....	414
Rutherford's (Mark) Catherine Furze .....	206
Serao's (Mathilde) Forever Love .....	346
Sergeant's (Adeline) Christians .....	51
The Surrender of Margaret Bellarmine .....	392
Serjeant's (Constance) A Threefold Mystery .....	225
Seven Christmas Eves .....	79
Seymour's (Florence) In the Meashes .....	392
Shaw's (E. L.) If Men were Wise .....	532
Sheldon's (Gilbert) The Standishes of High Acre .....	326
Sherer's (John W.) Alice of the Inn .....	0
Sichel's (Edith) Worthington Junior .....	146
Simpson's (Warwick) Eighteen of Them—Singular Stories .....	514
Smilovsky's (Alois Vojtech) Heaven's .....	368
Spinner's (Alice) A Study in Colour .....	346
Stackpole's (W. H.) The Teleporon .....	368
St. Anby's (Alan) Orchard Damerel .....	471
In the Face of the World .....	532
Steel's (F. A.) The Flower of Forgiveness .....	454
Sterry's (J. Ashby) A Naughty Girl .....	168
St. Germaine's (E. L.) Hugh Darville .....	32
Stuart's (Esmé) Inscrutable .....	326
The Power of the Past .....	404
Superfluous Woman, A .....	286
Terrell's (Thomas) A Woman of Heart .....	185
Theories. By A. N. J. A. P. .....	186
This Troublesome World .....	31
Tirebuck's (William) The Little Widow and other Episodes .....	306
Travels of Matthew Dudgeon, Gentle- man .....	346
Tregatha's (Monica) Her Angel Friend .....	306
Tucker's (Horace) The New Arcadia .....	414
Tynan's (Katherine) A Cluster of Nuts .....	434
Upward's (Allen) The Queen against Owen .....	346
Vallings's (Harold) Three Brace of Lovers .....	32
Vashti and Esther .....	31
Vezoff's (Ivan) Under the Yoke .....	186
Ven's (Mrs.) The Husband of One Wife .....	471
Vincent's (Vin) The White Aigrette .....	205
Waltord's (L. B.) A Question of Pen- manship .....	99
Warden's (Florence) My Child and I .....	325
Warung's (Price) Tales of the Early Australian Days .....	514
Watson's (Lily) The Vicar of Lang- thwaite .....	206
Weyman's (Stanley J.) A Gentleman of France .....	99
White's (Percy) Mr. Bailey Martin .....	145
Wilkins & Vivian's The Green Bay Trees .....	531
Will's (C. J.) Her Portrait .....	146
Woolson's (Constance Fenimore) Horace Chase .....	434
Ycul's (Nelle) His Wife by Force .....	532
Yerke's (Curtis) Darrell Chevasney .....	226
Between the Silences .....	472
Young's (Amelia S. C.) Needs Must .....	414
Zaugwill's (I.) The King of Schnorrers .....	326

MINOR NOTICES.

Adam's (J. & A. M.) Platonis Prota- goras .....	207
Adams's (Estelle Davenport) The Poets' Praise .....	266
Armstrong's (Isabel J.) Two Roving Englishwomen in Greece .....	99

MINOR NOTICES—continued.

	PAGE
Bacon's (Alice Mabel) A Japanese Interior .....	347
Bikelas's (M.) Addresses and Recol- lections .....	99
Botta, Anne C. L. Memoirs of .....	532
Boyle's (F.) About Orchids .....	11
Brooks's (Phillips) Letters of Travel .....	123
Burke's (Ulrich R.) Life of Benito Juarez .....	455
Capensaga's (Basque) translation of the Spanish Catechism of Ripalda .....	227
Cave's (Henry W.) Picturesque Ceylon .....	347
Codrington's (Dr. R. H.) translation of Marau's Story of a Melanesian Deacon .....	455
Coleridge's (Edward P.) The Tragedies of Sophocles .....	79
Comic Tragedies .....	307
Conway's (Moncure Daniel) The Writings of Thomas Paine .....	473
Curtius's (E.) Gesammelte Abhand- lungen .....	435
Dale's (John) Round the World by Doctor's Orders .....	347
Davidson's (John) Sentences and Para- graphs .....	473
Ducré's (E.) Histoire de la Marine Mil- itaire de Bayonne .....	226
Earle's (Alice Morse) Customs and Fashions in Old New England .....	307
Evans's (Rev. Thomas Saunders) Latin and Greek Verse .....	79
Eyre-Todd's (George) Byways of the Scottish Border .....	327
Findlay's (Jessie Patrick) Michael Lamont, Schoolmaster .....	327
Flynn's (J. S.) Sir Robert N. Fowler, Bart., M.P. .....	167
Freeman's (E. A.) Studies of Travel .....	166
Galdos's (B. Perez) Marianela .....	226
Lady Perfecta .....	227
Gale's (Norman) A June Romance .....	533
Gardner's (Alexander) Ballad Min- strelsy of Scotland and Songs of Scotland .....	327
Gilchrist's (Murray) Frangipani .....	266
Gomme's Topographical Selections from the "Gentleman's Magazine" .....	287
Graham's (D. S.) The New Wether .....	533
Grant's (A. J.) Greece in the Age of Pericles .....	167
Gsell's (Stéphane) Essai sur le Règne de l'Empereur Domitian .....	435
Guiraud's (P.) La Propriété Foncière en Grèce jusqu'à la Conquête Romaine .....	167
Hale's (Edward E.) A New England Boyhood .....	306
Hamilton's (Catherine J.) Women Writers .....	187
Harper's (C. G.) From Paddington to Penzance .....	11
Hill's (Constance) Frederic Hill .....	196
Hueffer's (Ford) The Queen who Flew .....	533
Humphray's (F. P.) The Queen at Bal- morat .....	473
International Album-Guide .....	124
Jessopp's (Dr. A.) Random Roaming, and other Papers .....	267
Keane's (J.) translation of Poushkin's Prose Tales .....	533
Kempt's (Robert) Convivial Caledonia .....	326
Knight's (Prof. William) Prose Writings of Wordsworth .....	267
Knights' (Mark) Peeps at the Past .....	298
Kostromitin's (J.) The Last Day of the Carnival .....	267
Leslie's (G. D.) Letters to Marco .....	10
Lightfoot, Bishop .....	454
Malloch's (Mrs. C. A.) translation of Von Wieser's Natural Value .....	473
Maran's (Clement) The Story of a Melanesian Deacon .....	455
Marchant's (E. C.) Thucydides Book VIII. .....	208
Marshall's (Emma) Penshurst Castle .....	238
Martinego-Cesaresco's (Comtesse) La Poésie Populaire .....	226
Maughan's (W. C.) Rosneath, Past and Present .....	327
Maxwell's (Sir Herbert) Scottish Land- Names .....	472
Merriman's (George S.) Noah Porter .....	307
Meyer's (E.) Geschichte des Abendlandes bis auf die Perserkriege .....	167
Montague's (Charles) Tales of a Nomad .....	123
Owen's (J. A.) Forest, Field, and Fell .....	11
Pennell's (E. R.) To Gipsyland .....	123
Poushkin, Alexander, The Prose Tales of .....	533
Renieri's Μητροφάνης Κριτόπουλος καὶ οἱ ἑν' Ἀγγλῶν καὶ Γερμανῶν φιλο- ἀδῶν .....	103
Ruskin, John, Three Letters and an Essay by .....	267
Ryland's (F.) Johnson's Life of Addison .....	267
Schuchardt's (Ilugo) Baskische Studien .....	227
Seton's (Gabriel) Barnraig .....	327
Sizer's (K. E.) The Wooing of Osyth .....	285
Smith's (G. Barnett) Women of Renown .....	187
Smith's (Alfred T.) William Blake .....	267
Stoughton's (John) Recollections of a Long Life .....	454

MINOR NOTICES—continued.

	PAGE
Street's (G. S.) Critical Sketches .....	533
Swanwick's (Anna) translation of The First Part of Goethe's Faust .....	79
Thompson's (F. Diodati) In the Track of the Sun .....	346
Thorpe's (W. G.) Middle Temple Table Talk .....	473
Torr's (Cecil) Ancient Ships .....	434
Tozor's (H. F.) Selections from Strabo .....	207
Tott's (J. W.) Random Recollections of Woodland, Fen, and Hill .....	11
Twining's (Louisa) Recollections of Life and Work .....	187
Tysack's (Mrs. R. H.) How I Shot my Bears .....	123
Underwood's (Francis H.) The Builders of American Literature .....	306
Von Wieser's (Prof. Friedrich) Natural Value .....	473
Wharton's (Mary) translation of Galdos's Marianela .....	226
translation of Galdos .....	227
White's (George White) The Heart and Songs of the Spanish Sierras .....	226
(Gleeson) Book-Song .....	206
Wild Flowers in Art and Nature .....	11
Woolward's (Robert) Nigh on Sixty Years at Sea .....	533

THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE.

Alexander's (Dr. William) Primary Convictions .....	393
Bank's (J. E.) translation of Orelli's Twelve Minor Prophets .....	55
Berger's (Samuel) paper on "Quelques Textes latins inédits de l'ancien Testament" .....	56
Bickell's (G.) Kritische Bearbeitung des Jobdialogs .....	55
Das Buch Job .....	147
Blakie's (Dr. W. G.) The Book of Joshua .....	393
Brooks, Phillips, Addresses by .....	515
Brünnow's (R. E.) translation of Siegfried's Notes on The Book of Job .....	55
Charles's (Mrs. Rundle) Early Christian Missions of Ireland, Scotland, and England .....	393
Davison's (Dr. W. F.) The Praises of Israel .....	55
Dowden's (Bishop) The Celtic Church in Scotland .....	515
Farrar's (Dr. F. W.) The First Book of Kings .....	393
Gardner's (Prof. Percy) Theory upon the Origin of the Lord's Supper .....	147
Ingram's (Rev. A. F. W.) New Testament Difficulties .....	394
König's (Eduard) Alttestamentliche Kritik und Christenglaube .....	55
Liddon's (H. P.) Explanatory Analysis of St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans .....	147
Lightfoot's (Bishop) Biblical Essays .....	146
Liturgy of the Holy Apostles Adai and Mari .....	514
Lumby's (Prof. J. Rawson) The Epistles of St. Peter .....	147
Maclean's (Dean) East Syrian Daily Offices .....	392
Miller's (James) translation of Weizsäcker's Apostolic Age of the Christian Church .....	146
Niebuhr's (Carl) Versuch einer Reconstitutions der Deboralides .....	58
Sabatier's (Prof. A.) Examination of the Gospel of Peter in relation to the Canonical Gospels .....	147
Scrivener's (Rev. F. H. A.) Adversaria Critica Sacra .....	514
Siegfried's (C.) The Book of Job .....	55
Smith's (R. Travers) The Church in France .....	515
Tiele's (C. P.) Geschiedenis van den goddienst in de oudheid tot op Alexander den groote .....	56
Von Orelli's (Dr. C.) The Twelve Minor Prophets .....	55
Von Weizsäcker's (Carl) The Apostolic Age of the Christian Church .....	146

MINOR POETRY.

Argyll's (Duke of) The Burdens of Belief, and other Poems .....	368
Baldon's (Henry Bellyse) The Rescue, and other Poems .....	247
Barlow's (George) The Crucifixion of Man .....	369
Binyon's (Lawrence) Lyric Poems .....	247
Bridges' (Robert) The Humours of the Court .....	494
Cochrane's (Alfred) The Kestrel's Nest .....	415
Dabbs & Righton's Dante .....	247
Dawson's (W. J.) Poems and Lyrics .....	33

MINOR POETRY—continued.

	PAGE
Evans's (M. A. B.) In Various Moods ...	247
Fanshawe's (Reginald) Two Lives ...	327
Ford's (Robert) Ballads of Bairnhood ...	369
Gale's (Norman) Orchard Songs ...	369
Griselda ...	369
Hake, Thomas Gordon, The Poems of ...	415
Hinkson's (Katharine Tynan) Cuckoo Songs ...	415
Jacob's (Dean) A Lay of the Southern Cross, and other Poems ...	369
Japp's (Alexander H.) Dramatic Pictures, English Rispetti, Sonnets, and other Verses ...	369
Lane's (Geoffrey) A Song for the Season, and other Poems ...	369
Mackie's (Gascoigne) Poems Dramatic and Democratic ...	33
Martin's (Sir Theodore) Madonna Pia, and other Dramas ...	495
Morris's (Lewis) Songs without Notes ...	414
Morrison's (Jeanie) Doorside Ditties ...	369
Peacock's (Florence) Poems ...	369
Richard's (Marcus S. C.) Lyrics and Elegiacs ...	33
Riley's (James Whitcomb) Poems here at Home ...	32
Robertson-Hicks's (Mandé) Flowers from Oversea ...	33
Scott's (Duncan Campbell) The Magic House ...	32
Thomson's (James) Poems ...	327

ORIGINAL VERSE.

1894 ...	34
All Souls Night ...	395
Amazon, A Wounded ...	209
Bocage, Two Sonnets of ...	371
Brought Back from the Sea ...	125
Decadence ...	249
Divae Genetrix's Lavdes ...	318
El-Askri ...	308
Epilogue to a forthcoming Volume of Sonnets ...	228
Future World, To the ...	12
Heather Burning ...	329
Lily and the Poet, The ...	517
Moderno, Alice, From the Portuguese of 189 ...	475
Poet's Wife, A ...	148
Precipice, Sea, and Sky ...	416
Payche, On a Bust of ...	57
Scaffell, A Shadow on ...	169
Simonides, An Elegy of ...	535
Spring Sonnets from my Garden ...	101
Swan Song ...	268
Two Hands ...	81
Winter Exile in the South ...	289
Sonnets from my Garden ...

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

Académie Française, The ...	102
Brunetiere, M., at the Académie Française ...	189

ORIGINAL ARTICLES—continued.

Cambridge, Honorary Degrees at ...	209, 418, 535
Etymological Notes ...	228
In Memoriam: Hon. Roden Noel ...	476
— Charles Henry Pearson ...	407
Liederhandschrift at Jena, The ...	125
Teaching University for London, The ...	189
Tennysonianism ...	57, 81
University Jottings ...	34, 57, 80, 101, 124, 148, 168, 188, 208, 228, 248, 288, 308, 328, 348, 370, 394, 418, 436, 456, 474, 496, 516, 534
"Yellow Book, The" ...	349

CORRESPONDENCE.

Adamnan, Saint, An unknown Work of ...	210, 229
"Aethelred-Mucil, Gairnorum Comes" ...	538
"Amourette" ...	438
Asoka Pillars ...	59
Audley, Hugh ...	270
Baquet Customs, &c. ...	372
— Grammar, in the Library of Shirlburn Castle ...	517
Book of Enoch, The ...	191
Boulogne Prudentius Glosses, The ...	498
Brontëa in Ireland, The ...	15
"Buke of the Howlat, The" ...	13
"Burly," Etymology of ...	250
Byron, Lady, and Mrs. Jameson ...	211
Cædmon's "Genesis," 2906-7 ...	331, 350
Chaucer, The Naivete of ...	373
Chaucer's Book of the Duchesse ...	191
Chester Illustration of a Joke of Shakespeare's ...	191
Child Marriage in 1823 ...	104
Clark's (Kate McCosh) Persephone and other Poems ...	438
Coleridge and Opium ...	170, 192
Dante in Northern Latitudes ...	36
— and Bertran de Born ...	104
Dante's "Young King" ...	60, 104
— Reference to the Libro dell' Aggregazione delle Stelle ...	126
— Interpretation of "Galilea" as "Bianchezza" ...	291
— "Seconda Morte" ...	418, 438
"Engelland" ...	170
Enoch, The Book of ...	127
Etymologies, English ...	457
Exodus (xxxv.-xl.), Hebrew and Septuagint Texts of ...	309
"Ex Oro" ...	127
Funeral Custom, Ancient, in Wexford and Picardy ...	330, 372
Genesis viii. 19, A Primitive Disarrangement of ...	497
Golspie, The Name of ...	59, 82, 127
"Grandel" ...	396
"Halleybury, Old" ...	438
Hastings, The "Shield Wall" at ...	396, 419, 479, 498
Hibbert Lectures, The ...	310
Hymn Writers, English ...	192
"Ip" and the St. Vigean's Stone ...	349
Jameson, Mrs., and Lady Byron ...	211
Job xix. 17 ...	15, 36

CORRESPONDENCE—continued.

Johnson, Dr., and Sir Thomas Browne ...	291
Lamaism as a Demonology ...	38
Lepe, Chancer's Town of ...	458
Lock on the Thames, What was it? ...	290, 330
Locks, Pounds, and Paths on the Thames ...	330
Logie Elphinstone Stone, The ...	280, 293
Lydgate, A Stow MS. of ...	395
Milton's "Philistine" ...	372
Morgan, Sir Thomas ...	140
North-Pictish Inscriptions, The ...	13, 36, 58, 81, 103, 126, 269, 290, 349, 477
Ogam Sign X, The ...	229
Ogams, The Logie Elphinstone ...	289, 290
Papry, Greek, New ...	457
Perceba, Olla, Ollina, Ollusini ...	395
Percy-Names, Old-English ...	457
Posture of Prayer, Ancient ...	125, 150
Radical Brighton Parson, A, in 1575 ...	519
"Re Giovane" or "Re Giovanni" in Dante's Inferno ...	15
Septuagint versus Hebrew Text of the Bible ...	149, 371, 478
Shakespeare's "Dunsinane" and Milton's "Philistine" ...	372
Shanklin, Etymology of ...	170
Slang, What is it? ...	537
Slater's (Mr.) "Early Editions" ...	250, 270
Spenser, "Faerie Queene," I. ii. 18 ...	310, 350
St. Luke, iv. 23, 24, A Primitive Disarrangement of ...	418
Surnames, The Manufacture of ...	320
"Table of Green Fields" ...	331
Tales of Terror , Authorship of ...	35
Tatian's Diatessaron and a Dutch Harmony ...	249
Teaching University of London ...	211
"Tennyson — Poet, Philosopher, and Idealist" ...	128
Theomacha, A ...	170
Tibetan "Trees of the Law" ...	59
Tournour, Cyril ...	270
Transylvania and Hungary ...	419
"Typology" ...	230
"Year-Weeks," Seventy, of Daniel "Yeoman," Etymology of ...	408

OBITUARY.

Ballantyne, Robert Michael ...	148
Felmeri, Prof. Lewis ...	456
Goldsmith, Henry ...	118
Gray, J. M. ...	268
Kolokotronis, Theodore Gennaioas ...	437
Krystallén, Konstantine ...	475
Morley, Prof. Henry ...	417
Morris, Rev. Dr. Richard ...	417
Noel, Hon. Roden ...	456, 476
Peabody, Elizabeth Palmer ...	101
Pearson, Charles Henry ...	475, 497
Smith, Prof. W. Robertson ...	280
Tregellas, Walter Hawken ...	475
Vizetelly, Henry ...	12
Wilks, Rev. Mark ...	476
Yates, Edmund ...	437

NOTES.

"Anecdota Maredsolana" ...	188
Books published in 1893 ...	34
Copyrights registered in Canada in 1893 ...	348
Gladstone, W. E., Speeches and Public Addresses of ...	168
Navy Records Society ...	496
Palaeography, Books illustrating the Science of ...	12
"Pastorales" of the Basque ...	56
Sanskrit Writings in China ...	455
Shakespeare, Alleged Autograph of ...	394
Stevenson, Mr. R. L., collected edition of the works of ...	436
"Studia Sinaitica" ...	455
Tenneyson, Lord, Epitaph to ...	498

CONTENTS OF THE JOURNALS.

Altpreussische Monatschrift ...	329
American Journal of Psychology ...	101
Antiquary ... 34, 160, 228, 290, 371, 407, 518
Asiatic Quarterly Review ...	248, 496, 516
Atlanta ...	248
Boletín of the Real Academia de la Historia ...	81, 148, 180, 249, 457
Chasell's Magazine ...	57, 168, 248
— Saturday Journal ...	57
Chums ...	57
Contemporary Review ...	209
Economic Journal ...	534
Educational Review ...	12
English Illustrated Magazine ...	168
Essex Review ...	496
Expositor ... 12, 125, 209, 308, 395, 476
Expository Times ...	200
Good Words ...	248
Harper's Magazine ...	496
Home Words ...	328
Humanitarian ...	516
Idler ...	57
Jewish Quarterly Review ...	57
Ludgate Illustrated Magazine ...	168
Mind ...	101, 437
National Review ...	328
New Review ... 168, 248, 328, 496
New Science Review ...	534
New World ...	57
Nineteenth Century ...	308, 534
North American Review ...	12, 188
Pall Mall Magazine ...	248
Psychological Review ...	437
Quiver ...	248
Reliquary ...	248
Revue de Paris ... 148, 169, 289
Sunday Magazine ...	57, 248
Theologisch Tijdschrift ...	57, 200, 395
Westminster Review ...	496
Woman at Home ...	328
Young Man ...	168

SCIENCE.

REVIEWS.

	PAGE
Austin's (Alfred) The Garden that I Love .....	519
Bent's (J. Theodore) The Sacred City of the Ethiopians .....	37
Bouney's (T. G.) The Story of our Planet .....	150
Budge's (E. A. Wallis) The Book of Governors .....	351
..... The Discourses of Philoxenus .....	351
Bula N'zau's Travel and Adventure in the Congo Free State .....	538
Crusius's (Otto) Die Mimiomben des Herondas .....	230
Dalmeida's (G.) Les Mimes d'Herondas .....	230
Ellis's (Col. A. B.) The Yoruba-Speaking Peoples of the Slave Coast of West Africa .....	251
Greek Papyri in the British Museum, Catalogue of .....	60
Hervieux's (Leopold) Arrianus et ses Anciens Imitateurs .....	104, 128
Kaibel's (G.) Stil und Text der ΠΟΛΙΤΕΙΑ 'ΑΘΗΝΑΙΩΝ des Aristoteles .....	192
Kenyon's (F. G.) Catalogue of Greek Papyri .....	60
..... Hyperides' Orations against Athenogenes and Philippides .....	479
Lockyer's (J. Norman) The Dawn of Astronomy .....	271
Mather's (George) Two Great Scotsmen .....	419
Moellendorf's (R.) Aristoteles und Athen .....	192
Sabbadini's (Romigio) Il Commento di Donato a Terenzio .....	396
Sotti's (G.) I mimi di Heroda .....	230

MINOR NOTICES.

Aikman's (C. M.) Manures and the Principles of Manuring .....	458
American Journal of Mathematics .....	351
Balf's (W. W. Rouse) Essay on Newton's Principia .....	171
Brugmann's (Karl) Grundriss der vergleichenden Grammatik der indogermanischen Sprachen .....	16
Cook's (Albert S.) First Book in Old English .....	373
Cooke's (M. C.) Handbook of British Hepaticae .....	291
Dahlstrom's translation of Weisbach & Hermann's Mechanics of Hoisting Machinery .....	312
Forsyth's (A. R.) Theory of Functions of a Complex Variable .....	83

MINOR NOTICES—continued.

Gamgee's (Arthur) Physiological Chemistry of the Animal Body .....	458
Geddes' (Patrick) Chapters in Modern Botany .....	291
Gray's (Jane Loring) Letters of Asa Gray .....	291
Grünbaum's (M.) Neue Beiträge zur semitischen Sagenkunde .....	331
Harkness & Morley's Treatise on the Theory of Functions .....	83
Harshberger's (Dr. J. W.) Botanical and Economical Study of Maize .....	291
Heaviside's (Oliver) Electrical Papers .....	311
Hebrew and Samaritan MSS. in the British Museum, List of .....	331
Henry's (Victor) Précis de Grammaire Comparée de l'Anglais et de l'Allemand .....	16
Horn's (F.) Platonstudien .....	539
Jessop's (C. M.) The Elements of Applied Mathematics .....	171
Kelle's (Prof.) Geschichte der Deutschen Litteratur .....	374
Klein's (Felix) On Riemann's Theory of Algebraic Functions and their Integrals .....	83
Larsson's (Dr. Ludvig) Ordfförad till de äldsta Isländska Handskrifterna .....	439
Loney's (S.) Plane Trigonometry .....	351
Lowe's (A. E. H.) Treatise on the Mathematical Theory of Electricity .....	171
Mach's (Prof.) Science of Mechanics .....	311
Maclean's (George Edwin) An Old and Middle English Reader .....	373
McAulay's (A.) Utility of Quaternions in Physics .....	171
Muir's (M. M. P.) The Alchemical Essence and the Chemical Element .....	458
Storm's (Dr. Gustav) Otte Brudstykker af den ældste Saga om Olaf den Hellige .....	439
Raabe's (Richard) Die Geschichte des Dominus Mari .....	331
Strack's (Hermann L.) Einleitung in den Talmud .....	332
Thorpe's (T. E.) Essays in Historical Chemistry .....	458
Von Siemens, Werner, Scientific and Technical Papers of .....	311
Watson's (H. W.) Treatise on the Kinetic Theory of Gases .....	171
Weisbach & Hermann's The Mechanics of Hoisting Machinery .....	312
Windelband's (Dr. W.) Geschichte der alten Philosophie .....	538
Ziwet's (Alexander) Theoretical Mechanics .....	312
Zupitza's (Prof.) Uebungsbuch .....	373

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

Hymus, Greek, from Delphi .....	459
Indian Jottings .....	211
Jerome's (St.) Revision of the Latin Gospels .....	83
Sanskrit Literature in India .....	397
..... Manuscripts in China .....	438

CORRESPONDENCE.

Avianus, The Fables of .....	129, 151
Bent's (Mr. Theodore) Discoveries at Yeha, near Aksum .....	171
Gray, Prof. Asa .....	439
Herodas .....	520
Lucretius, Fresh Source of Tradition regarding the Life of .....	519
S-plurals in English .....	38, 62, 84, 106, 151
Vulgate, Syriac Influence on the Text of the .....	105

OBITUARY.

Hodgson, Brian .....	450
Whitney, Prof. William Dwight .....	499

SCIENCE NOTES.

American Psychological Association .....	63
Feldae, The Pupils of the .....	500
Geographical Society's Awards .....	352
Hayden Medal, The .....	106
Johnson's Gardener's Dictionary .....	393
Meteorological Society's Fourteenth Exhibition .....	312
Paracelsus Library .....	63
Royal Society, New Members of the .....	439

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

Aristotle's Politics , Emendations on the First Four Books of .....	520
Asoka, The New Edicts of .....	39
Assyrian Glossary, Prospectus of a .....	539
Babrius, Fables of .....	106
Bonaparte's (Prince Louis-Lucien) Library .....	312
Charaka-Samhita, Translation of the .....	312
Hoernle's (Dr.) edition of the Bower MS. 539 .....	539
Homer, Papyrus Fragments of .....	129

PHILOLOGY NOTES—continued.

Initial Consonant Attraction .....	81
Jerome's Greek MSS. in revising the Latin Gospels .....	17
Ruinach, M. Theodore, on Jews of Alexandria and a Roman Emperor .....	151
Salishan Group of Languages .....	63
Yenissel Inscriptions, Attempted Decipherment of .....	63

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

Anglo-Russian Literary Society 63, 153, 273, 421, 500 .....	421, 500
Aristotelian Society 39, 107, 172, 193, 312, 352, 398, 500 .....	352, 398, 500
Asiatic Society .....	107, 213, 273, 539
Cambridge Antiquarian Society .....	193, 440
Philological Society .....	151, 500
Clifton Shakspeare Society .....	130, 253, 332, 439, 520
Elizabethan Society 106, 172, 232, 292, 420 .....	292, 420
Folklore Society .....	130
Goethe Society .....	375
Hellenic Society .....	490, 539
Historical Society 39, 85, 213, 312, 353, 460, 540 .....	540
Institute of British Architects .....	39
Manchester Goethe Society .....	152
Meteorological Society .....	107, 312, 352, 540
Philological Society .....	85, 213, 352, 398, 490
Ruskin Society .....	85
Society of Historical Theology .....	130, 233
Victoria Institute .....	253, 352
Viking Club .....	152, 375, 398

CONTENTS OF THE JOURNALS.

Babylonian and Oriental Record 129, 163, 312, 398 .....	312, 398
Beiträge zur Assyriologie .....	352
Classical Review .....	151, 252, 374, 520
Geographical Journal .....	129
Handbuch der Physik .....	171
Indian Antiquary .....	39, 212, 375, 490
Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal 212 .....	212
..... of the Maha-Bodhi Society .....	39
..... of Hellenic Studies .....	106
..... of the Buddhist Text Society of India .....	212
..... of the Anthropological Society of Bombay .....	212, 539
..... of Philology .....	374
Natural Science .....	430
Nature .....	129
Physical Review .....	312
Revue des Etudes Juives .....	151
Science Progress .....	252

FINE ART.

REVIEWS.

	PAGE
Beni Hasan ... ..	490
Bosanquet's (Bernard) History of Aesthetic ... ..	130
Evans's (Lady) Chapters on Greek Dress ... ..	540
Foulkes's (Constance J.) translation of Morelli's The Galleries of Munich and Dresden ... ..	378
Frizzoni's (Gustavo) La Galleria Morelli in Bergamo ... ..	378
Furtwängler's (A.) Meisterwerke der Griechischen Plastik ... ..	333
Gray's (John M.) James and William Tassie ... ..	172
Hymans's (Henri) Lucas Vosterman ... ..	39
Lermoloff's (Ivan) Die Galerie zu Berlin ... ..	378
"Morelli's Critical Studies of Italian Painters" ... ..	376
Perrot & De Lasteyrie's Monuments et Mémoires ... ..	501
Phillips's (Claude) Sir Joshua Reynolds ... ..	313
Wallis's (Henry) Persian Ceramic Art ... ..	353

MINOR NOTICES.

Clerc's (M.) De Rebus Thyatirenorum ... ..	85
Commentatio Epigraphica ... ..	293
Dürer, Albert, The Little Passion of ... ..	293
Hatton's (Richard G.) Text-Book of Elementary Designs ... ..	293
Lethaby's (W. R.) Lead Work ... ..	293
Rushforth's (G.) Latin Historical Inscriptions illustrating the History of the Early Empire ... ..	85
Taylor's (Edward R.) Drawing and Design ... ..	293

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

	PAGE
Ashmolean Museum, The ... ..	540
Champs de Mars Salon, The ... ..	378
Drawings, English, at Messrs. Agnew's ... ..	164
Egypt, Letters from ... ..	132, 173, 234, 313, 401
— Exploration Fund ... ..	153, 293, 461
Excavation of the Temple of Qusen. Hatasu at Deir-el-Bahari ... ..	153, 293
Exhibitions, Minor ... ..	214
Glasgow Institute ... ..	194
Hadrian's Wall, Exploration of ... ..	522
Hatasu, Temple of, at Deir el Bahari ... ..	153, 293
Himalayas, The ... ..	234
India, The Archaeological Survey of ... ..	521
Koptos, Discoveries at ... ..	421
Old Masters at the Royal Academy ... ..	17, 64, 107
Pelaspia Italy ... ..	273
Royal Academy, The ... ..	399, 441, 460, 491
— New Associates of the ... ..	41
Royal Scottish Academy ... ..	233
Royal Society of Painter-Etchers ... ..	254
Water-Colour Exhibitions ... ..	400

CORRESPONDENCE.

Botticelli's "Spring" ... ..	100, 133, 214, 334
Chaldean Statues in the Guildhall Museum ... ..	541
Philae, Threatened Destruction of the Temple of ... ..	110
"Pig" of Roman Lead ... ..	334
Roman Britain ... ..	254
Tharvis Museum, The ... ..	274
Tile, Roman, from Gloucester ... ..	214

OBITUARY.

	PAGE
Berg, Gunnar ... ..	19
Stanton, Clark, R.S.A. ... ..	41
Steell, Gourlay ... ..	133

NOTES.

Akropolis of Athens, History of the ... ..	255
British Museum, Extension of the ... ..	254
Casts, Collection of, at South Kensington Museum ... ..	18
Coins, Primitive Greek, found in the Island of Samos ... ..	541
Constable, The Craze for ... ..	379
Crete, Central, Discoveries made in ... ..	379
Dashur, Brick Pyramid of ... ..	215, 235
Duret's (Théodore) Collection of Japanese Prints ... ..	110
Eastlake, Lady, Will of ... ..	41
Graffiti of Hal-Nub ... ..	194
Haverfield's (F.) Report on "Roman Inscriptions in Britain" ... ..	522
Jameson, George, "the Scottish Vandyck" ... ..	314
Lead, pig of, Roman, found near Matlock ... ..	314
National Gallery, Acquisitions for, in 1893 ... ..	174
North Gallery at Kew ... ..	294
Notre Dame, The Devils of ... ..	110
Painters, Titular Distinctions bestowed upon ... ..	134
Pnyx, Excavations under the Slope of the ... ..	86

NOTES—continued.

	PAGE
Reinach, M. Salomon, on "Le Mirage Oriental" ... ..	174, 235
Roman Walls found in London ... ..	462
Rubies, Spinel, with Persian Inscriptions ... ..	462
Sherborn's (Mr. C. W.) engraved work ... ..	18
Sunday Opening of Picture Galleries ... ..	379

CONTENTS OF THE JOURNALS.

American Journal of Archaeology ... ..	41, 195, 255, 402
Archæologia Aeliana ... ..	353
— Oxoniensis ... ..	541
Art Journal ... ..	501
Illustrated Archaeologist ... ..	86, 294
Königlich Preussischen Kunstsammlungen ... ..	501
L'Anthropologie ... ..	174, 235
L'Art ... ..	65
Magazine of Art ... ..	314
Repertorium für Kunstwissenschaft ... ..	134
Revue Critique ... ..	134
Studio, The ... ..	353
Westdeutsche Zeitschrift ... ..	315

THE STAGE AND MUSIC.

THE STAGE.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

	PAGE
Bernhardt, Mme. Sarah, and Mr. Willard ... ..	522
"Money," at the Garrick ... ..	462
Pailleron's "Cabotins" ... ..	154
Pantomime, New ... ..	86

NOTES.

"An Old Jew," at the Garrick Theatre ... ..	41
"Arms and the Man," at the Avenue ... ..	541
"Cotton King, The," at the Adelphi ... ..	274
"Faust," at the Lyceum ... ..	336
"Frou-frou," English adaptation of ... ..	195
"Gauntlet, A," at the Royalty ... ..	87
Grundy, Mr. Sydney, on Stage Literature ... ..	335
Pantomimes in the Country ... ..	175
Rehan, Miss Ada ... ..	19, 41
"Second Mrs. Tanqueray," at the St. James's ... ..	174
"Transgressor, The," at the Court ... ..	110

NOTES—continued.

	PAGE
"Two Orphans, The," at the Adelphi ... ..	423
Zangwill, Mr., as a dramatist ... ..	19

MUSIC.

REVIEWS.

Chappell's (William) Old English Popular Music ... ..	42
Hervé's (Arthur) Masters of French Music ... ..	315
Parry's (C. Hubert H.) The Art of Music ... ..	274

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Arkwright's (G. E. P.) The Old English Edition ... ..	19
Pizzi's (Ennio) Gabriella ... ..	134
Stojowski's (Sig.) Dances Humoresques ... ..	19

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

	PAGE
Bach's "Matthew Passion" ... ..	255
Beethoven Festival at Bonn ... ..	403
Berlioz's "Faust" at Venice ... ..	354
Handel Festival, The ... ..	541
Mackenzie's (Dr.) "Bethlehem" ... ..	335
Massenet's "Thais" ... ..	294
— "Werther," &c. ... ..	502
Opera at Covent Garden ... ..	423, 482, 523
— at Drury Lane ... ..	523
Operas, New, at Brussels ... ..	402
Verdi's "Falstaff" ... ..	442

OBITUARY.

Patey, Madame ... ..	195
Stewart, Sir Robert Prescott ... ..	275, 295
Von Bülow, Dr. Hans ... ..	155

NOTES.

	PAGE
Apollo, Hymn to, discovered at Delphi ... ..	463, 542
Argiewicz, Master Arthur ... ..	442
CONCERTS:—
Henschel's ... ..	66, 155, 195, 235, 315
Monday Popular ... ..	66, 87, 110, 134, 175, 235
Bach Society ... ..	87
Saturday Popular ... ..	134, 175, 215, 235, 275, 379
Philharmonie ... ..	105, 235, 354, 463, 642
Bristol Orpheus Glee Society ... ..	315
Wagner Concert at the Queen's Hall ... ..	335
Wolf's ... ..	442
Richter's ... ..	433, 523
"Faust," at Drury Lane ... ..	295
Frost, Miss Beatrice ... ..	295
"Gabriella," at the Albert Hall ... ..	492
Hofmann, Master Josef ... ..	423
Huberman, Master Bronislaw ... ..	379, 502
MacCarthy, Miss Maud ... ..	423
Pagan to the Pythian Apollo ... ..	463, 542
Saint-Saëns, M. ... ..	502

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1131.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JANUARY 6, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS	PAGE
CAPT. LUGARD'S RISE OF OUR EAST AFRICAN EMPIRE, by Prof. A. H. KEANE . . . . .	5
LADY FERGUSON'S LIFE OF BISHOP BEEVES, by Dr. NORMAN MOORE . . . . .	6
SIR RICHARD TEMPLE'S LIFE IN PARLIAMENT, by ARTHUR ARNOLD . . . . .	7
BLISS CARMAN'S LOW TIDE ON GRAND PRÉ, by WILLIAM SHARP . . . . .	7
NEW NOVELS, by J. STANLEY LITTLE . . . . .	8
SOME COUNTRY BOOKS . . . . .	10
NOTES AND NEWS . . . . .	11
ORIGINAL VERSE: "TO THE FUTURE WORLD," by the Rev. JOHN OWEN . . . . .	12
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS . . . . .	12
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS . . . . .	13
CORRESPONDENCE—
"The Duke of the Howlat": a Correction, by Prof. Skeat; The North-Pictish Inscriptions translated and explained, II., by E. W. B. Nicholson; "The Brontës in Ireland," by Dr. W. Wright; Job xix. 17, by Prof. Cheyne; The Disputed Reading in "Inf." xxviii. 135, by A. G. Ferrers Howell . . . . .	13
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK . . . . .	16
PHILOLOGICAL BOOKS . . . . .	16
SCIENCE NOTES . . . . .	17
PHILOLOGY NOTES . . . . .	17
OLD MASTERS AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY, I., by CLAUDE PHILLIPS . . . . .	17
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY . . . . .	18
STAGE NOTES . . . . .	19
MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS . . . . .	19

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by HOLL, R.A., GILES, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided and are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing nearly 70 Miniature Photographs of notable autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

New Pamphlet, "Autotype a Decorative and Educational Art," free on application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL.

By PERCY RUSSELL.

With Prefatory Remarks by Mr. GLADSTONE.

Sixth Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s

With Portrait.

The WESTMINSTER REVIEW says: "A very complete manual and guide for journalist and author. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense..... We have little else but praise for the volume."

DIGBY, LONG & CO., PUBLISHERS,

1 BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., Art Reproducers.

"—QUOD PETIS HIC EST."

IT will be in the recollection of our numerous clients, and the public generally, that for a long period a widely felt want was experienced amongst Artists, Authors, Publishers, and Printers alike, in the way of obtaining easily accessible and reliable information as to the best and cheapest methods—consistent with high-class work—of Reproduction, as applied to Oil Paintings, Water-Colour Drawings, Pen and Ink Sketches, Photographs, MSS., &c., &c.

The marked success which has attended our efforts to meet this want induces us to make more widely known the lines on which our House was established.

For many years we had made a special study of the various processes adopted, both at Home and Abroad, for the Reproduction of Works of Art in Monochrome and Colours; and our House being the first to enter the field to supply so necessary a desideratum, we had the good fortune, in our interviews with the various Continental Firms, to secure valuable concessions from many of the leading houses in France, Bavaria, Germany, and Austria, and in some cases to obtain exclusive rights for Great Britain and Ireland.

These various concessions have proved to be highly advantageous, alike to manufacturer and client—to the manufacturer from a widely increased and rapidly extending business, and to client from excellence of results, combined with the lowest remunerative charges.

We are thus enabled to supply the highest possible class of work, and at the same time to advise as to the best method of reproduction according to the nature of the original. We are not committed to any one process, and are perfectly unbiassed in giving advice to our clients, who may in all cases rely upon safe guidance as to the methods best suited to their varied requirements. This is a special feature of our business.

For many years past we have been entrusted with commissions from most of the principal Fine Art Publishers, who have on every occasion expressed themselves in terms of high approval of our various processes.

The well-known house of HERR FRANZ HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, gave us the sole right for Great Britain and Ireland to supply their Photogravure, Block and Collotype processes. This house bears a world-wide reputation for artistic finish. In all their methods of Art Reproduction it is unsurpassed by any European establishment, while as regards their Photogravure Process, many of our leading artists consider that it stands without a rival.

HERR HANFSTAENGL'S Studios are of the most elaborate and extensive character, and the liberal support we have received on his behalf from our chief London Publishing Houses is a proof of their appreciation of the value and importance of his work. We have constantly on view many costly and important plates from paintings by artists of high repute, and a visit to our offices will confirm the high encomiums we have received on all hands as to the excellence and quality of the work that has already emanated from our firm in all its branches.

OFFICES: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by KATSE & Co., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

TYPE-WRITING.—All kinds of Copying. AUTHORS' MANUSCRIPTS, Pedigrees, &c. Home Work. Terms: 1d. per folio (72 words); or 5,000 words, and over, 1s. per thousand.—Miss NICHOLSON, The Avenue, Stevenage, Herts.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STOKER, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

THE TRUTH about STAMMERING.—Any one interested will receive the latest information and important books on the cure, on loan, post free, without charge, from J. HARRIS, Messrs. Deacon's, 154, Leadenhall Street, E.C.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to best University or Army Tutor, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained (free of charge) by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. BAXTON, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

RUSSIAN LANGUAGE.—IVAN CZAUNE, 73-75, LOWER THAMES STREET, LONDON, E.C., invites gentlemen intending to study Russian to communicate with him. His method of teaching is unequalled, and his terms moderate. Translations corrected, and grammatical questions explained by post.

MR. KINWAN.—LESSONS in the ART of SPEECH. Illustrated Dramatic Readings (a combination of speech, pictures, and music). Selections. Literary Lectures.—Address: 3, Vernon-place, W.C.

BYRON — SHELLEY — KEATS: IN MEMORIAM ENDOWED YEARLY PRIZES for the BEST ESSAY in ENGLISH, written by a Woman of any nation. Third set. With Portrait of Founders and "Gossip." 1s. 1d.—For rules, send addressed halfpenny wrapper to ROSE MARY CRAWSHAY, Bwlch, Breconshire.

CATALOGUES FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, Importers of Foreign Books, 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, AND 20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH. CATALOGUES post free on application.

HUBERT CROSS & CO., NEW AND SECOND-HAND BOOKSELLERS, 8, AGAR STREET, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

CATALOGUE of SECOND-HAND and other BOOKS just issued sent post free on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

"BLACK AND WHITE." MR. HENRY BLACKBURN'S STUDIO.

The COURSE of INSTRUCTION in DRAWING for the PRESS wash, line, &c.) is continued daily, with Technical Assistants. Students join at any time. Advice and instruction by Correspondence.

123, Victoria Street, Westminster (near Army and Navy Stores).

ESTABLISHED 1851. BIRKBECK BANK, Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London. TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand. TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100. STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT. For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY. HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY. HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

THROAT AND COUGH Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use EPF'S GLYCERINE JUBUBES. In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing. Sold only in boxes, 7½d., and tins, 1s. 1½d. Labelled: JAMES EPF & Co., Ltd., Homoeopathic Chemists, London.

MUDIE'S*SELECT*LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum. LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum. N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription, and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS. Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms. Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS and POST FREE

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY, 10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER, Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited, 30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON; 241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

THE COLONIAL COLLEGE and TRAINING FARMS (Limited), Hollesley Bay, Suffolk.

For the Training of those destined for Colonial Life, &c. The College owns and farms for the instruction of its students a fine Seaside Estate of 1,800 acres. Prospectus on application to the RESIDENT DIRECTOR.

KING'S COLLEGE, LONDON.

LADIES' DEPARTMENT. 13, Kensington-square (close to High-street, Kensington, Station). In this Department LECTURES are given to Ladies in the various subjects of University Education by Professors and Lecturers on the staff of King's College. The lectures are adapted for ladies above the age of 16. THE CLASSES COMMENCE on JANUARY 15th. For a prospectus or further information apply to the Vice-Principal, Miss C. G. SCHWARTZ, at the above address. To return for four stamps a complete Syllabus of Lectures may be obtained.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY. THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

The SECOND TERM of the TWENTIETH SESSION in the DEPARTMENT of SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY, and ARTS begins TUESDAY, JANUARY 9th. The CLASSES prepare for University Degrees in Arts, Science and Medicine, as well as for various Professions. Prospectuses of Day and Evening Classes may be had (post free) from the Registrar. Lydian Hall is open for the Residence of Students whose homes are at a distance from Leeds.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS GRANTS THE DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Truro, &c.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL, London.—An EXAMINATION for filling up about FOUR VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on the 17th JANUARY NEXT.—For information apply to the BURSAR, St. Paul's School, West Kensington, W.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS, 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Pictorial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost. Specimens and price list on application. Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

THEATRES.*COURT THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, A NEW TRIPLE BILL. At 8.15, GOOD-BYE. Messrs. Herbert, Hicks, Draycott, &c., and Miss M. Linden. At 9, FAITHFUL JAMES. Messrs. Linden, Pattle Browne; Messrs. Wye, Nainby, Draycott. At 10, UNDER THE CLOCK. Messrs. Brookfield, Hicks, Nainby, &c.; Miss Lottie Venne, &c.

CRITERION THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9.10, THE HEADLESS MAN. Mr. Charles Wyndham, Messrs. Blakeley, Valentine, Worthing, Atherley, Taylor; Mesdames Jeffreys, Francis, Matthews, Miller, N. Noels, Baker. Preceded, at 8.10, by THE BENGAL TIGER. Messrs. Somerset, Atherley, Hemsley; Misses M. A. Victor, Maris.

GAIETY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, DON JUAN. Messrs. Arthur Roberts, R. Pateman, E. Payne, W. Warde, G. Mudie; Mesdames Millie Hylton, Cissy Loftus, Maria Davis, Louise Montague, Sinden, Mills, Henderson, Hamer, Durkin, Cannon, Benton, Collier, Monckton, and Katie Seymour.

GLOBE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, CHARLEY'S AUNT. Mr. W. S. Penley, Messrs. Walter Everard, Ernest Hendrie, H. Farmer, Cecil Thornbury, and H. Reeves Smith; Misses Ada Branson, Audrey Ford, Cudmore, Nina Boucicault. At 8, JOHN THURGOOD, FARMER.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, CAPTAIN SWIFT. At 8, SIX PERSONS. Mr. Tree, Messrs. Henry Kemble, F. Kerr, C. Allan, Holman Clark, Hallard, Montagu, and F. H. Macklin; Mesdames Carlotta Addison, Fanny Colman, Irene Vanbrugh, and Mrs. Tree.

LYRIC THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, Christmas Edition of LITTLE CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS. Messrs. E. J. Lounen, J. F. Sheridan, F. Cook, G. Tate, W. S. Laidlaw, Roland Caroe; Mesdames Effie Clements, G. Whitford, Holland, Moore, Alice Lethbridge, Leicester, Thorne, and Miss May Yohé. At 7.40, WEATHERWISE.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, A GAIETY GIRL. Messrs. C. Hayden Coffin, Eric Lewis, Kaye, Bantock, D'Ossay, Porteous, Rimmis, Somerville, and Harry Monkhouse; Misses Decima Moore, Juliette Neville, Grey, Cutler, Studholme, Pounds, Phelps, Maud Hobson, Massey, Lloyd, Robinson, and Gorst. At 7.45, ADOPTION.

SAVOY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, UTOPIA (LIMITED). Messrs. Rutland Barrington, W. H. Denny, J. Le Hay, Scott-Fishes, Gridley, S. Russell, Hunt, and C. Kenningham; Mesdames Nancy McIntosh, F. Perry, E. Owen, and Rosina Brandram.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, MOROCCO BOUND (VOL. II.). Messrs. J. L. Shine, H. Haslam, A. Seymour, H. Sparling, G. Grosmith, jun., R. Temple, D. Munro, and Charles Danby; Misses Jennie McNulty, Agnes Hewitt, Temple, Ruggles, Ripley, Maggie Roberts, and Letty Lind. At 7.45, Rex Harley, Mimic.

STRAND THEATRE.

THIS DAY, at 2.30 and 8.45, BINKS. Messrs. Willie Edoulin, George Giddens, H. Ross, G. Humphrey, Mackenzie, Huss, Philip, Lambert, Alexander, C. Porter; Mesdames Jenny Dawson, Fanny Wentworth, Nancy Graeme, Rose Fendennis, and Alice Atherton. Preceded by BEST MAN WINS.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.45, GUDGEONS. Miss Sybil Carlisle, Miss Violet St. Ledger, and Miss Janette Steer; Messrs. Murray Carson, W. T. Lovell, Chas. Fulton, C. Herbert, H. Beatty, J. A. Welch, and Mr. Herbert Waring. At 8.10, LEAP YEAR.

THE TRAFALGAR THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, TOM, DICK AND HARRY. Messrs. Chas. Hawtrey, John Beauchamp, W. R. Shirley, Ernest Percy, W. F. Hawtrey, C. Milton, C. Meyrick, Arthur Playfair; Mesdames Vane Featherston, Esmond, Williams, Sophie Larkin. At 8.10, PICKWICK.

On 5th Jan., price 4d., post free, 4½d.

THE BUILDER NEW YEAR'S NUMBER Contains 12 beautiful large plates:—Westminster Abbey; Dankel Cathedral; Bishop's Chapel, Chester; Wellington Monument, St. Paul's; Musée Galliera, Paris; New Houses of Parliament, Berlin; "On no Man's Land," a Medieval Study, &c.

Publisher of "THE BUILDER," 46, Catherine Street, W.C.

To H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES.

BRAND & CO'S AI SAUCE, SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS and POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME PIES, Also, ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA, TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET, MAYFAIR, W.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

JANUARY, 1894.

COMMENCEMENT OF A NEW VOLUME.

PROFESSOR TYNDALL. By the Right Hon. PROFESSOR HUXLEY.
THE MANCHESTER SHIP CANAL (With a Chart.) By the Right Hon. LORD EGERTON OF TATTON.
THE REVOLT OF the DAUGHTERS. By MRS. CRACKANTHORPE.
SANITARY INSURANCE: A SCHEME. By G. WALTER STEEVES, M.D.
ZOROASTER and the BIBLE. By the Rev. Dr. L. H. MILLS.
THE SCRAMBLE for GOLD.
(1) By SIR JULIUS VOGLÉ.
(2) By J. P. HESLITSE.
CHATS with JANE CLERMONT. (Concluded.) By WILLIAM GRAMAM.
A WORD for our CATHEDRAL SYSTEM. By the Rev. Dr. JESSOP.
THE NEW WINTER-LAND. By WILLIAM SHARP.
CHINESE POETRY in ENGLISH VERSE. By HENRY A. GILES.
CHARTERED GOVERNMENT in AFRICA. By ARTHUR SILVA
WHITE.
PROTECTION for SURNAMES. By the Right Hon. the Earl of DUNDONALD.
RECENT SCIENCE. By Prince KROPOTKIN.
CHARLES THE TWELFTH and the CAMPAIGN of 1712-13. By His Majesty the King of Sweden and Norway.

London: SAMPPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; Co., LTD.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

JANUARY.

THE IRELAND of TO-MORROW. By X.
MR. FRANCIS THOMPSON, a NEW POET. By COVENTRY PATMORE.
FOOTBALL. By CRESTON.
THE EMPLOYMENT of WOMEN. By MISS BULLY.
THE TRUE DISCOVERY of AMERICA. By CAPT. GAMMIE, R.N.
CHEMICAL ACTION of MARINE ORGANISMS. By PROF. JUDN, F.R.S.
THE ORIGIN of MANKIND. By PROF. BURCHNER.
THE FRENCH in INDIA. By LEWIS B. BOWRING.
THE LEPROSY COMMISSION. By DR. THIN.
PRINCE ALEXANDER of BATTENBERG. By J. D. BOUSCHIER.
THE TRIPLE ALLIANCE in DANGER. By E. B. LAMIN.
IRISH RAILWAYS. By X.
CHAPMAN & HALL, Ltd.

COMMENCEMENT OF A NEW VOLUME.

THE EXPOSITOR.

Edited by the Rev.

W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, M.A., LL.D.

CONTENTS of JANUARY NUMBER. PRICE 1s.

AGRAPHA: SAYINGS of our LORD not RECORDED in the GOSPELS. The First of a Series of Papers.
By Rev. Walter Lock, M.A., Keble College,
Oxford.
THE BIBLE and SCIENCE. I. THE MOSAIC BOOKS.
By Sir J. W. Dawson, C.M.G., F.R.S.
THE PREMIER IDEAS of JESUS. I. THE SOVEREIGNTY of CHARACTER.
By Rev. John Watson, M.A., Sefton Park
Church, Liverpool.
A REPLY to MR. CHASE.
By Professor W. M. RAMSAY, M.A.
MAURICE MAETERLINCK on RUYSBROECK.
By Jane T. Stoddart.
THE RIGHT EUGENESS of CHRIST'S KINGDOM. The
First of a Series of Expository Papers.
By Rev. Professor Marcus Dods, D.D.
THE FAITH of GOD.
By George W. Johnson, M.A.
HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, PATERNOSTER ROW.

THE RELIQUARY.—1s. 6d. Quarterly.

CONTENTS.—JANUARY, 1894.

PRE-CONQUEST CHURCHES of the OLD KINGDOM of NORTH-
UMERIA. By C. C. NODDGE, Illustrated.
TALISMANS. III. By J. LEWIS ANDRE, F.S.A.
SOME LINCOLNSHIRE BELL CUSTOMS. By FLORENCE PEACOCK.
Illustrated.
SOME EIGHTEENTH CENTURY SUSSEX NOTES. I. Illustrated.
OLD MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS in IRELAND. I. Illustrated.
CATHEDRAL CHURCHES of SWEDEN. II. Land. By T. M.
FALLOW, M.A., F.S.A. Illustrated.
TESTAMENTA ANTIQUA. IV. Will of John Laws, Bishop of Rochester, with Notes. By W. H. S. JONES, M.A.
ON a RECENTLY DISCOVERED WALL-PAINTING in KENT.
By Rev. Canon SCOTT-ROBERTSON. Illustrated.
TOUCHING for the KING'S EVIL.
QUARTERLY NOTES and REVIEWS.
London: BERNARD & SONS, LTD., 23, Old Bailey; and Derby.

NOW READY.

NEW NOVEL.

A QUEER HONEYMOON.

By H. DEW.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

London: HAYMAN, CHRISTY & LILLY, Ltd., 20 & 22, St. Bride Street, E.C.; and of all Booksellers.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

SYLVIE and BRUNO CONCLUDED. By Lewis Carroll. With

Illustrations by Harry Euroiss. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

RICHARD ESCOTT. By Edward H. Cooper, Author of "Geoffrey Hamilton." 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.BLACK AND WHITE.—"The author of that exceedingly clever study of men and manners, 'Geoffrey Hamilton,' has given us in 'Richard Escott' a good study of a scoundrel of birth and breeding."THE LOVER'S LEXICON: a Handbook for Novelists, Playwrights, Philosophers, and Minor Poets: but especially for the Enamoured. By FREDERICK GREENWOOD. Crown 8vo, 6s.SPECTATOR.—"In conception and plan the book is most original.....Endless are the questionings which arise out of this fascinating volume. Each page provides a fresh problem for discussion."DAILY CHRONICLE.—"Mr. Greenwood's pages often blossom into great literary beauty, but over them all is the light of that 'loveliness' which comes of humanity."TIMES.—"The style is adapted to the subject with much skill and subtlety, and the whole idea of the book is original and captivating."

ADVENTURES in MASHONALAND. By Two Hospital Nurses,

ROSE BLENNERHASSETT and LUCY SLEEMAN. Third Thousand. Extra crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

TIMES.—"The book is written in direct unconventional language. It will, we are convinced, be widely read, and widely enjoyed."

SPECTATOR.—"It is a book that should make Englishmen proud of their fellow-countrywomen."

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"The adventures and hardships of these two brave ladies are extremely fascinating reading."

WORLD.—"The book is excellent reading, full of movement and incident."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"Every page of the book is well worth reading."

REMINISCENCES of the GREAT MUTINY, 1857-59. Including the Relief, Siege, and Capture of Lucknow, and the Campaigns in Rohilkund and Oude. By WILLIAM FORBES-

MITCHELL, late Sergeant 93rd Sutherland Highlanders. Extra crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

TIMES.—"His narrative is vivid and full of strange and romantic incidents."

SPECTATOR.—"No one who wants to be amused and to be made to feel proud of our army should fail to read it."

NATIONAL OBSERVER.—"His book will appeal to all lovers of adventure and manly worth."

SOME ASPECTS of the GREEK GENIUS. By S. H. Butcher,

Litt.D., LL.D., Professor of Greek in the University of Edinburgh, formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, and of University College, Oxford. Second Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, 7s. net.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"He has written a delightful book, in a pleasant style, full of learning, suggestive, stimulating—a book which no student of Greek literature can lay down without a hearty feeling of gratitude to the author."MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"The present volume is enlarged by the addition of a most interesting new chapter on 'The Dawn of Romanticism in Greek Poetry.'.....The essay both expresses and strengthens a conviction already held by a very large number of readers, if not students, of Greek."

GLASGOW HERALD.—"The new essay is a very fine literary study."

FREEMAN'S JOURNAL.—"The book in its revised form is as luminous and able a treatise on an inexhaustible subject as we have had from the press for many years."

SPECIMENS of GREEK TRAGEDY. Translated by Goldwin

SMITH, D.C.L. 2 vols., globe 8vo, 10s.

TIMES.—"The translations are felicitous and scholarly, and will be read with keen interest and warm appreciation by all who, like Mr. Goldwin Smith, retain their love for classical literature and their delight in the fascinating art of translation."

ESSAYS on QUESTIONS of the DAY, POLITICAL and SOCIAL.

By GOLDWIN SMITH, D.C.L. Extra crown 8vo, 9s.

TIMES.—"Though his point of view is in no sense and in no case a party one, each party in borrowing his arguments for its own purposes will find itself compelled to recognise the fine temper of the weapons taken from the same armoury which he uses against itself."

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"He is a thoroughly well-informed, incisive, and courageous critic of the new order of ideas."

GLASGOW HERALD.—"At once solid and brilliant, well reasoned, and often witty."

MACMILLAN &amp; CO., LONDON.

THE "BORDER" WAYERLEY.

THE NOVEL FOR JANUARY NOW READY.

QUENTIN DURWARD. 2 vols.

TWELVE ETCHINGS by AD. LALAUZE.

Introduction and Notes by ANDREW LANG.

LONDON: JOHN C. NIMMO, 14, KING WILLIAM STREET, STRAND.

Price One Shilling net; 1s. 2d. post free.

THE INVESTORS' REVIEW

For JANUARY.

Edited by A. J. WILSON.

A PARALYTIC BANK of ENGLAND.

FRENCH FINANCE and SOCIAL DISORDER.

HINTS and MEMORANDA for INVESTORS.

THE TRUSTEES, &amp;c., CORPORATION.

THE PERUVIAN CORPORATION.

A CRITICAL INDEX to NEW INVESTMENTS.

THE "Investors' Review" Office, 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.; and at all Railway Bookstalls.

A PENNY A DROP.

THE PURE OTTO OF ROSE

IN

Toilet "Vinolia" Soap and

"Vinolia" Toilet Powder,

NOW COSTS A PENNY A DROP.

Now Ready.

THE OLD ENGLISH POPULAR MUSIC.

By the late WILLIAM CHAPPELL, F.S.A.

A New Edition, in Two Volumes, of the Popular Music of the Olden Time (under the above title).A Collection of the best Song, Ballad, and Dance Tunes of England, from the earliest times to the end of the reign of George II.

With a Preface and Notes, and the earlier examples entirely revised.

By H. ELLIS WOOLDRIDGE.

Demy 4to, edition, bound in buckram. Two Vols., 2 gns. net.

Edition de Luxe, on large hand-made paper, bound in half-vellum, limited to 100 copies, Two Vols., 4 gns. net.

CHAPPELL &amp; Co., New Bond Street, and MACMILLAN &amp; Co., London.

PRINTING and PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,
&c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., are prepared to undertake the Printing and Publishing of first-class
Newspapers, Magazines, Books, Catalogues, Pamphlets, Prospectuses,
Articles of Association, Minutes of Evidence, &c., in the best style.
Their offices are fitted with the latest improvements in Rotary and other Machinery, the most modern English and Foreign Type, and they employ none but first-class workmen. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, from Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 5750. Telegraph, "Africanism, London."

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOW READY AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND RAILWAY BOOKSTALLS.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

For JANUARY.

In which are commenced two new Serial Stories:

A BEGINNER.

By RHODA BROUGHTON.

AN INTERLOPER.

By FRANCES MARY PEARD.

"One can never help enjoying TEMPLE BAR."—The Guardian.
"Who does not welcome TEMPLE BAR?"—John Bull.

MONTHLY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

NEW WORKS OF FICTION.

JUST READY.

The VICAR of LANGTHWAITE

By LILY WATSON. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

JUST READY.

SPEEDWELL. By Lady Guen-

DOLEN RAMSDEN. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

SECOND EDITION.

DIANA TEMPEST. By Mary

CHOLMONDELEY. Author of "Sir Charles Danvers," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Diana Tempest" is a delightful heroine, fresh, courageous, and true. Col. Temp-est and his son Archie are clever sketches of character. The story is thoroughly well worked out; old Mrs. Courtenay is a delightful old lady."—The Guardian.

BY DR. KENEALY.

MOLLY and her MAN-O'-WAR.

By Dr. ARABELLA KENEALY, Author of "Dr. Janet of Harley Street." In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"A narrative of the rarest, freshest humour merging into one of the sweetest of love-stories."—Sheffield Daily Telegraph.

NOW READY.

BRITOMART. By Mrs. Herbert

MARTIN, Author of "Bonnie Lesley," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A truly beautiful story. It is the purpose of this delightful book to demonstrate the power of a pure and valiant woman to make the world better. 'Britomart' will rank among the most noteworthy literary productions of the year."—Daily Telegraph.

NOW READY.

A HEROINE in HOMESPUN.

By FREDERIC BRETON, Author of "The Crime of Maunsell Grange," &c. In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"There is much strange and weird superstition in the tale; but apart altogether from its folk-lore it is remarkable and interesting. No better tale of the North has come under our notice for a long time. The heroine is a beautiful character."—Glasgow Herald.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "NEAR NEIGHBOURS."

THE SWING of the PENDU-

LUM. By FRANCES MARY PEARD, Author of "The Baroness," &c. In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

TEMPE. By Constance Cotterell,

Author of "Strange Gods." In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"In calling attention to Miss Cotterell's latest novel, we need not for a moment hesitate to say that it is one of the cleverest books of the year that has just now closed. It is a series of psychological studies, displaying the highest sort of analytical subtlety and descriptive power."—Daily Telegraph.

TWO NEW EDITIONS.

FROM MOOR ISLES. By

JESSIE FOTHERGILL, Author of "The First Violin," &c. [Just ready.]

LOVER or FRIEND? By Rosa

N. CAREY, Author of "Nellie's Memories," &c.

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

READY JAN. 15.

THE DAWN OF ASTRONOMY:

A Study of the Temple Worship and Mythology of the Ancient Egyptians.

By J. NORMAN LOCKYER, C.B., F.R.S.

Illustrated. Cloth, 21s.

THE STORY OF OUR PLANET.

By T. G. BONNEY, D.Sc., LL.D., F.R.S., F.S.A., F.G.S.,

Professor of Geology in University College, London, Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, and Honorary Canon of Manchester.

With COLOURED PLATES and Maps, and about 100 Illustrations
Cloth, 31s. 6d.

READY SHORTLY.

OUR RAILWAYS:

Their Development, Enterprise, Incident, and Romance.

By JOHN PENDLETON,

Author of "A History of Derbyshire," and "Newspaper Reporting in Olden Time and To-day."

2 vols., Illustrated, 24s.

READY SHORTLY.—2 vols., 32s.

THE DIPLOMATIC REMINISCENCES OF LORD AUGUSTUS LOFTUS,

P.C., G.C.B., 1862 to 1879.

The Second Series of these Reminiscences covers the period of Lord Loftus' residence at the Courts of Bavaria, Berlin, and St. Petersburg.

N.B.—A Third Edition of the First Series of these Reminiscences is now on Sale, 2 vols. (covering the period from 1837 to 1852), 32s.

Volume VI. of

CASSELL'S STOREHOUSE OF GENERAL INFORMATION.

Fully Illustrated with High-class Wood Engravings, and with Maps and Coloured Plates.

Is NOW READY. Cloth, 5s.

READY SHORTLY.

THE MAN IN BLACK.

By STANLEY WEYMAN,

Author of "A Gentleman of France," &c.

With 12 Full-page Illustrations, 3s. 6d.

POPULAR EDITION.—6s.

THE STORY OF FRANCIS CLUDDE.

By STANLEY J. WEYMAN,

Author of "The House of the Wolf," &c., &c.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED,
LUDGATE HILL, LONDON.

LOW'S STANDARD NOVELS BY POPULAR WRITERS.

In Uniform Crown 8vo Volumes, bound in cloth, HALF-A-CROWN each.

BY WILLIAM BLACK.

A DAUGHTER of HETH. With
Portrait of the Author.
The STRANGE ADVENTURES
of a PHAETON.
A PRINCESS of THULE.
IN SILK ATTIRE.
KILMENY.
MADCAP VIOLET.
THREE FEATHERS.
THE MAID of KILLEENA.
GREEN PASTURES and PIC-CADILLY.
MACLEOD of DARE.
LADY SILVERDALE'S SWEET-HEART.
WHITE WINGS.
SUNRISE.
THE BEAUTIFUL WRETCH.

SHANDON BELLS.
ADVENTURES in THULE.
VOLANDE.
JUDITH SHAKESPEARE.
THE WISE WOMEN of IN-VERNNESS.
WHITE HEATHER.
SABINA ZEMBRA.
THE STRANGE ADVENTURES
of a HOUSE-BOAT.
IN FAR LOCHABER.
THE PRINCE of JOHN
LOGAN.
THE NEW PRINCE FORTU-NATE.
DONALD ROSS of HEMIRA.
STAND FAST! CRAIG ROV-TON.

BY R. D. BLACKMORE.

LORNA DOONE. Thirty-ninth
Edition. With Photogravure Portrait of the Author, specially prepared for this new issue. Also Illustrated Edition for Presentation, gilt edges,
7s. 6d.; and Edition de Luxe,
21s.
CLARA VAUGHAN.
CRIPPS the CARRIER.

TOMMY UPMORE.
CRADDOCK NOWELL.
CHRISTOWELL.
ALICE LORRAINE.
MARY ANERLEY.
ERENA.
KIT and KITTY.
SPRINGHAVEN. (Also Illustrated Edition, 7s. 6d.).

BY THOMAS HARDY.

FAR from the MADDING
Crowd. With a Photogravure Portrait of the Author, from a Photo by Wheeler, of Weymouth.
THE MAJOR of CASTER-BRIDGE.

THE TRUMPET MAJOR.
A LADY OF THE LACIA.
THE RETURN of the NATIVE.
THE HAND of ETHELBERTA.
A PAIR of BLUE EYES.
TWO on a TOWER.

BY W. CLARK RUSSELL.

THE WRECK of the "GROS-VENOR." With Photogravure
Portrait of the Author.
AN OCEAN FREE LANCE.
THE LADY MAUD.
A SEA QUEEN.
LITTLE LOO.
The FROZEN PIRATE } Shortly.

MY WATCH BELOW.
JOHN HOLDSWORTH.
CHIEF MATE.
JACK'S COURTSHIP.
A STRANGE VOYAGE.
A SAILOR'S SWEETHEART.
BETWIXT the FORELANDS
MRS. DINES' JEWELS. } Shortly.

BY GEORGE MAC DONALD.

THE VICAR'S DAUGHTER.
With Photogravure Portrait of the Author.
ADELA CATHCART.
MARY MARSTON.
WEIGHED and WANTING.

GUILD COURT.
STEPHEN ARCHER.
A DISH of ORTS, and other Essays. By Dr. Mac Donald.
With Portrait.

BY RUDYARD KIPLING.

Uniform Demy 8vo, Volumes, Illustrated Covers, One Shilling each.

SOLDIERS THREE: Stories of Barrook-Room Life.
THE STORY of the OAPSBYS: a Tale without a Plot.
IN BLACK and WHITE: Stories of Native Life.
WEE WILLIE WINKIE.
UNDER the DEODARS: In Social Byeways.
THE PHANTOM 'RICKSHAW, and other Eerie Tales.

STORIES FROM "SCRIBNER."

Super-royal 32mo, printed on parchment paper, uncut edges, paper binding, 1s. 6d. each; cloth, gilt top, 2s. each.

STORIES of NEW YORK. | STORIES of the SEA.
STORIES of the RAILWAY. | STORIES of ITALY.
STORIES of the SOUTH. | STORIES of the ARMY.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE. JANUARY NUMBER.

CONTENTS.

CONSTANTINOPLE. (Concluding Paper.) F. MARION CRAWFORD
Illustrated.

THE ACTOR. JOHN DEWEY. (The Sixth Article in the series on "Men's Occupations.") Illustrated.

THE FIFER. PHILIP GILBERT HAMERTON. Painted by Edouard Manet. With Full-page Illustration (Portrait) and Portrait of Manet.

JOHN MARSH, SOUTHERNER. GEORGE W. CARLE. Chaps. I.—
VII. (Began in this number—to be continued.)

STORIES in STONE from NOTRE DAME. THEODORE ANDREA COOK.
Illustrated.

SIR JOSHUA REYNOLDS. FREDERICK KEFFEL. Illustrated from Engravings of his Works.

WEBSTER'S REPLY to HAYNE. Hon. ROBERT C. WINTHROP.
&c.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 6, 1894.

No. 1131, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Rise of our East African Empire: Early Efforts in Nyasaland and Uganda. By Capt. F. D. Lugard. In 2 vols. (Blackwoods.)

FROM the sub-title, it will be noticed that these bulky volumes cover the whole field of British interests in East Africa: that is to say, the recently constituted "British Central Africa Protectorate" of Nyasaland north of the Zambesi, and the equatorial region hitherto administered by the Imperial British East Africa Company. Capt. Lugard, already distinguished in the Burmese wars of 1885-87, has been actively engaged in both territories off and on since the spring of 1888. Indeed, it is no exaggeration to say that the retention of these lands, if they are to be ultimately retained, will be largely due to the brilliant services of this high-minded and intelligent British officer, who took the leading part in the protracted struggle against the Arab slavers at the north end of Lake Nyasa (1888-89), and in the memorable Uganda expedition of 1889-92. After the temporary pacification of this distracted region, he returned to England in the autumn of 1892, and at once resigned all connexion with the East Africa Company. He was thus left a free hand to deal independently with the stirring events quorum pars magna fuit, and which led to the despatch of Sir Gerald Portal to inquire into and report upon the state of affairs in the equatorial lake region. The result is the present work, which has been prepared chiefly as "a book of reference" to be consulted by the general public in connexion with Sir Gerald's Report, already drawn up, though not yet officially published.

But although its object is temporary, the value of the book is permanent; and were its multifarious contents arranged with more regard for the convenience of the reader, it might rank as well nigh the best work on African affairs in general that has yet appeared. A copious index, however, makes some compensation for the confused arrangement, aggravated as this is by numerous digressions, and even by some superfluous episodes, such as nearly a whole chapter occupied with reminiscences of jungle life in Burma. In future editions, which are sure to be called for, the author would be well advised to eliminate much of this extraneous matter, and also to transfer to the end of the second volume all those chapters in the first (xv. to xxi. inclusive), which, though dealing with general topics of great interest, are nevertheless here out of place, completely obstructing the progress of the narrative.

At the same time, occasion might be taken to rectify a few minor points, such as the inclusion in the Zulu family of the predatory Magwangara, who, like the neighbouring Wanindi of the Rovuma basin, appear to be really aborigines calling themselves Maviti, that is, Zulus, and living up to the name in their marauding habits. The suggestion, which commends itself on many grounds, that the Swahili class prefixes should be uniformly adopted in the nomenclature of all lands of Bantu speech, should be consistently carried out; and consequently, the strictly correct Chinyanja, for instance, should take the form Ki-Nyanja, that is, Nyasa or "Lake" language. In several places the term dawā is spoken of in a way to imply that it is the native word for a charm or talisman against dangers and misfortunes of all kinds. It may possibly have been introduced, and acquired this meaning, in a few districts subject to Moslem influences. But the word itself is not Bantu, but Arabic, widely current throughout the East (Persia and India for instance) in its proper sense of "physic."

A more important question is raised by the implication (ii., p. 34) that Unyoro was formerly subject to Uganda, whose yoke it "had long since thrown off." No doubt when Uganda became dominant throughout the lacustrine plateau, its Kabaka ("emperor") Kamanya, direct descendant of the "Divine Kintu," founder of the present dynasty, claimed the overlordship of Unyoro, and even of Karagwe. But at the time when all these states formed merely so many provinces of the now dismembered Kitwara empire, the centre of administration appears to have always been either in Unyoro or in Karagwe, never in Uganda. In fact, according to the somewhat confused national traditions, the pastoral Wahuma conquerors from Gallaland first settled over a century ago in the Magungo district, at Unyoro, where they are still represented by the full-blood Hamitic Walinda herdsmen, and whence the Huma power was rapidly spread over the indigenous negroid Bantu populations of the equatorial lake region. Hence, Kam-rasi's son, Chua (Kaba Rega), present ruler of Unyoro, and eighteenth in descent from the founder, still claims the title of Makama ("monarch") of Kitwara; nor does it appear that any of his forefathers ever acknowledged the suzerainty of Uganda either de facto or de jure.

The chapters devoted to such general subjects as the natural resources and commercial possibilities of the country, railways and other means of communication, the labour supply, and especially the slave question in its various political and economic aspects, are all of abiding interest, and will be referred to again and again by all those who have at heart the future welfare of the African populations. But pending the reception and action to be taken upon Sir Gerald Portal's Report, most readers will be attracted to the section dealing more specially with the situation in Uganda, and with the arguments for and against the retention of the equatorial lake region. These momentous topics they will here find ably and lucidly treated by the one man who is allowed, on all hands, to be the best informed, and in every way the most competent to form an adequate judgment on the grave issues involved. These issues may be beyond the grasp of the "Little Englanders" who view imperial interests from the parochial standpoint, but who, fortunately for themselves, still form but a fraction of the thinking public. Their "mistaken humanitarian theories," as the author euphemistically calls them, are easily disposed of; and the able summary of reasons for retaining our hold of East Central Africa will appear conclusive to all healthy minded students of current politics, free from the morbid sentimentality which is usually so disastrous to those in whose apparent interest it is paraded:

"The British empire," he writes, "will survive, even though the peoples of Uganda and many other countries be wiped off the face of the earth. But the far-seeing vision of a great statesman must perceive that consequences far more serious will follow for Great Britain by such an act than any that may be involved in the accomplishment or the shirking of a mere moral duty per se. Europe stands by to note whether we mean to evade our solemn obligations undertaken in conference with the Powers. Aggressive nations watch to see if our foreign policy is to be national and continuous, or a policy dictated by party exigencies—a policy of vacillation or retrogression. On the bleak Pamirs, in Afghanistan, in Egypt, in Morocco, and in Siam, we may look for the reflex action of our policy in East Africa; and so this little insignificant state of Uganda becomes the straw which shows which way the wind blows. . . . Lord Rosebery is at the helm—a 'strong man'—and his impressive words are on record: 'We are bound to maintain that continuity of moral policy which Great Britain cannot afford at any time or in any dispensation to disregard.'"

Personal adventure is, for the most part, kept carefully in the background. But reference is unavoidably made to one incident, a remarkable gunshot wound which Capt. Lugard received at a night attack on the Arab station of Kopa-Kopa near the head of Lake Nyasa, and which for a time paralysed both arms. After entering without fracturing the right elbow-joint, the bullet "struck the main artery, but pushed it aside without cutting it, or I must inevitably have bled to death; it then struck my chest, apparently in a direct line for the heart, but, glancing off a rib, passed along under the skin, and came out at the top of my breast-pocket, making a long, tearing flesh-wound in its exit. Then it struck the wrist of my left hand, carrying into the wound a portion of some letters which were in my breast-pocket. It 'pulverised' the main bone of this arm, cutting also a minor artery. This latter wound is, even now in 1893, still open, and pieces of bone still come away, though it is five years since I was hit."

Besides the already mentioned index, the work is enriched with no less than fourteen specially prepared maps, and numerous full-page and other illustrations. A few of these, however, seem, like some of the text, to be out of place; and at least one sensational picture, the "Massacre of the Wankondé" (vol. i., p. 54), must surely be fanciful, for it represents an occurrence at which no European was present.

A. H. KEANE.

The Life of the Rt. Rev. William Reeves, D.D.
By Lady Ferguson. (Dublin: Hodges, Figgis & Co.; London: Longmans.)

DR. WILLIAM REEVES, Bishop of Down, Connor, and Dromore, who died on January 12, 1892, was an antiquary of the first order. He was exact in all he wrote and a safe guide to the past: one who never used conjecture for research, or was content to suppose what might have been when it was possible by investigation to ascertain what did take place. In his historical studies he not only searched records and sifted their contents with discrimination, but investigated every locality for himself. He was an expert among books and parchments, and no less so in the open country, tracing the boundary of an obsolete kingdom along some obscure stream or across a mountain-side, or, from its bearings, identifying some heap of stones, overgrown with nettles, as the ruins of a forgotten church or burying-place. In this combination of book work and field work he excelled.

His Ecclesiastical Antiquities of Down, Connor and Dromore, published in 1847, when he was perpetual curate of Kilconriola, the parish of the co. Antrim in which the flourishing town of Ballymena is situated, will bear comparison with the greatest works of its kind, and shows a minute knowledge of the topography of Ulidia, the kingdom which was the refuge of the most ancient ruling tribes of Ulster, and most of which is included in the present counties of Down and Antrim. His Acts of Archbishop Cotton in his Metropolitan Visitation of the Diocese of Derry A.D. 1397, published in 1850, is an invaluable work of reference for another district of Ulster. Each place visited by the famous Master of Gonville Hall is carefully identified, and the learned notes are readable as well as instructive. His edition of Adamnan's Life of Columba, published in 1857, shows a similar minute knowledge of the island of Iona, and of everything relating to its history. Carlyle, not a lavish distributor of praise, after commending the veracity of Adamnan on an occasion when I happened to be present, expressed his admiration of the minute care of the editor, who had annotated all that needed annotation in this wonderful picture of life in the Hebrides in the sixth century.

Besides these three great works, Dr. Reeves printed more than seventy separate memoirs, and assisted in the editing of many other books. Some of his memoirs are only a few pages long, but of every one it may be asserted that it contains information either inaccessible or accessible with difficulty anywhere else. Most of them are full of the results of original research. His identification of a MS. volume of Lives of Saints in Archbishop Marsh's library as the Codex Ardmachanus mentioned by Patrick Fleming in his Collectanea Sacra (1667), is a model of its kind of work. After showing the resemblance of the texts in several points, Dr. Reeves points out that, in speaking of the carrying off of an Irish abbot of Bangor, Fleming uses the words "tollentibus sexaginta novem maleficus illud a nobis." The outrage was committed on a dark night, so that the precise enumeration of the number of the band seems even more difficult to understand than its size. The codex in the library he found had the words tollentes maleficus illud a nobis.

69

The Irish Latinists often used a nominative instead of an ablative absolute, but a reviser of the MS. altered the original nominative absolute into an ablative by adding an s between malefici and illud, by placing deleting points under the final es of tollentes, and above those letters a and b and the contraction for us, thus reading tollentibus. Fleming's copyist adopted the ablative, and read the b and the contracted us as Arabic figures for sexaginta novem. The bishop used sometimes to add, when he talked of this emendation, that an Irish clergyman in the period of the Tractarian controversy wrote to an English bookseller for a copy of Tract No. 90. "Sir," wrote the bookseller, after some delay, "I have searched everywhere, but regret that I am unable to obtain a copy of the tract you desire entitled, 'No Go.'"

Armagh is a small city of modern aspect, time, war and fire having long since destroyed all its most venerable architectural features; but in his Ancient Churches of Armagh, published in 1860, Dr. Reeves has made clear the ancient plan and arrangements of the ecclesiastical capital of Ireland.

Dr. Reeves was prodigal of ease, and with his own hand copied many volumes of manuscript and prepared several elaborate indexes to the works of others. When it is remembered that the author of all these works was not a fellow of a college living in learned affluence, nor a person of ample means, but was devoted to an anxious profession, was the father of a numerous family, and was obliged throughout life to be careful about ways and means—it will be admitted that, in writing his biography, Lady Ferguson has performed a service, not only to him, but to every one who aspires to learning, or needs an example in its pursuit.

Lady Ferguson is the widow of Sir Samuel Ferguson, the late Keeper of the Records of Ireland, and both she and her husband were intimate friends of Dr. Reeves—shared his tastes and pursued similar studies. Her opportunities of information on her subject were great; she has made excellent use of them, and has written a biography which is in every way worthy of its subject, and which fairly sets forth his work and character without omission and without prolixity.

William Reeves was the eldest child of Boles Reeves, a retired solicitor, living at Charleville, co. Cork. Both his birthday and the place of his birth were appropriate to a man who was destined to do so much for the history of literature in Ireland. He was born on St. Patrick's Eve, 1815; and Charleville, where he was born, known in Irish as Rath Luirc, was famous for sessions of the native poets which were held there till the middle of the last century. He was sent to school in Dublin, and entered Trinity College in October, 1830. In 1833 he obtained a scholarship, and graduated in 1835. He intended to take orders, and, with a view to parochial usefulness, studied medicine and took the degree of M.B. in 1835. He married shortly before he was ordained in 1838, and became curate first of Lisburn and then of Kilconriola, both in the diocese over which, forty-eight years later, he presided. After some years his income was augmented by becoming head master of the diocesan school at Ballymena. An interesting letter from a former pupil is printed by Lady Ferguson. The pupil describes his master's love of the Irish game of handball, in which he used his left hand, and his agility in leaping. John O'Donovan was a frequent visitor; and it is a curious illustration of the fallibility of early recollections that the pupil says that "at all times Dr. Reeves and he carried on their conversation in Irish," for the bishop, though a beautiful scribe of the Irish character, was not versed in the language. While in this laborious situation Dr. Reeves published the "Antiquities of Down, Connor, and Dromore" and Primate Cotton's "Visitation," both books of which a scholar with no other occupation might be proud.

A dry old clergyman who came to Ballymena, anxious to get money for a religious society, after hearing all about the church there from the perpetual curate, said: "What would St. Paul have thought of all this?" "St. Paul," said Dr. Reeves, "would, I am sure, have been highly pleased; he would have patted me on the back and said, 'Well done,' and if he had any money about him would have given me a subscription!" His wife, to whom he was devotedly attached, died in 1855, and his edition of Adamnan's Life of Columba was the work to which he turned his sorrowing mind.

Lady Ferguson has rightly printed several kind and generous letters from Reeves to O'Donovan, encouraging him in difficulties, offering him hospitality, and giving him literary help. In one he says:

"The system of noticing incuria in a critique, unless it be to stay a presumptuous author, I detest. My plan is, whenever I am able to detect a slip, to communicate it to the author for his use, not abuse."

Dr. Reeves became vicar of Lusk, near Dublin, in 1857, in 1861 librarian of Armagh, and in 1865 rector of Tynan near Armagh, then dean of Armagh, and in 1886 bishop of Down, Connor, and Dromore, which see he filled till his death in 1892.

Lady Ferguson has not omitted to show that he was as zealous and laborious in the duties of his clerical offices as he was in his favourite studies. Her biography is interesting in every part, portrays the bishop's work and character perfectly, and justifies her conclusion:

"Although only a curate up to the age of forty-two, with large family, straitened income, and laborious daily work always conscientiously performed, the subject of this biography was enabled, by the sheer force of character, of integrity, prudence, self-denial, industry and perseverance, to leave behind him much precious work done for country and church. His unaffected goodness and kindness made for him hosts of friends. His faithfulness deserved and secured their life-long regard."

A bibliography of the bishop's works, by Rev. J. R. Garstin, is a valuable addition to the book.
NORMAN MOORE.

Life in Parliament. Being the Experience of a Member in the House of Commons from 1886 to 1892, inclusive. By Sir Richard Temple. (John Murray.)

THIS is an engaging and interesting memorial of the long and Conservative Parliament of 1886, with a brief retrospect of the short Parliament which preceded it, and an introduction to the Parliament of 1892, written by a distinguished and very able man, who is modestly happy in the position of a Tory "item." The tone of the book is admirable, frankly partisan and yet fairly considerate of his opponents: worthy of one who having played a great part on another stage is willing, and more than willing, to work with rank and file in the House of Commons.

The most attractive feature in Sir Richard Temple's pages is the freshness of his writing, his delight in his position, his intense loyalty to his party and its leaders, his devotion to Parliament, in which he seems to find supreme happiness and contentment. The style is simple, unaffected, and agreeable; and while old parliamentary hands may enjoy so honest a record, it will be of greater value to those who seek to learn something of the parliamentary system. By no one, other than a constant attendant in the House of Commons, could this work have been written; because, with fewest words and with unfailing accuracy, the leading thread of every proceeding of importance is plainly displayed and followed. This is not an easy process, and could only have been accomplished by a careful observer with experience of administrative work. There is not a touch of egotism; but in one justly proud passage, Sir Richard declares that he took part, in six years, in 2,072 out of 2,118 divisions—a feat of duty which has, perhaps, never been surpassed.

So much has been said in recent years against the House of Commons, that it is refreshing to find a member, of great knowledge of the world, declare that "the mutual generosity, invariably shown to each other by opponents, is such as I have never seen equalled in any other assembly." But this freshness—so rare in ex-officials—is the charm of the book. Who would expect an ex-Governor of Bombay to assert that—"Any one who has worked there [in a Committee Room] for five hours, walks downstairs to his place in the House with a sense of physical and mental fatigue, but also with a consciousness of having learnt much that is worth knowing."

Or thus to write with rapture of walks at dawn of day, when the long sitting is over:—

"The exquisite air seemed to blow away the cobwebs that had gathered round our brains during the night's work. The amber sky behind the Horse Guards and the Admiralty heralded the sunrise. The sylvan island and the wooded banks had their counterparts on the glossy surface as we crossed the bridge over the water that adorns the Park."

Sir Richard admires Mr. Gladstone; and although his work is narrative rather than descriptive, Indian readers will be able to form some true idea of this greatest parliamentary figure, especially as to "the passion, the glow, the sympathy, the magnetism" of his speech. At the age of eighty, "the poetic, pathetic, romantic passages in his oratory were still lovely," the "swing of his arm like the sweep of a scimitar, and yet with a movement both graceful and appropriate." It must, we think, be adjudged a fault of style when a writer so frames his sentences that, if the work be read fifty years hence, confusion may arise as to whether it was penned in the lifetime of the chief personage referred to. Referring to Mr. Gladstone's beautiful speech in memory of John Bright, Sir Richard Temple writes: "Then rose Mr. Gladstone to make one of those orations in which he excelled all men living." When Mr. Gladstone has passed away, the reader of this passage—and there are many passages to which the same remark applies—might not suppose it was written during his leadership of Parliament.

Sir Richard writes as a Tory "stalwart," with pride in the young men of his party, with fairness to his opponents, and candour as to his friends. Lord Randolph was the favourite of 1886, because, in the words of a typical Conservative, "he had taught the people to believe in us"; and, as leader, Sir Richard thinks he evinced "tact, readiness, resourcefulness, courage, and resolution." He describes Mr. Chamberlain's oratory as "distinguished by language concise, simple, pointed, incisive; by sentences short and compact; by utterance sharp and fluent; by gesture quick and nervous; by wit pungent and familiar but not elaborated."

Mr. Maurice Healy has an ingenuity "in devising amendments such as I have seldom seen equalled, and never surpassed in its way." These are fair samples of his judgments.

This book is especially interesting because of Sir Richard's eminent qualifications as an observer of Parliament. Its pages afford abundant evidence in this respect, surpassing even the high repute of the author. He has gained with great distinction experience in India and upon the School Board. He declares "the House has never been chargeable with neglect of India," and that "at no time did the House appear to so good an advantage as when an educational debate was in progress." The most loyal party spirit does not blind him against the admission, that "the two errors committed by our able and successful Government—the Parnell Commission and the Licensing Clauses—might have been avoided." His concluding words are in admiration of Mr. Gladstone's speeches, "the beauty of which will ever linger in the memory even of his opponents"; and the whole work is not only worthy of its author, but none the less acceptable because it does honour to the most powerful of the institutions of our country.

ARTHUR ARNOLD.

Low Tide on Grand Pré. A Book of Lyrics. By Bliss Carman. (David Nutt.)

ALL who follow closely the drift of contemporary poetry must have had their curiosity piqued again and again within recent years by the fugitive verse of Mr. Bliss Carman. In this country only a small portion of his frugal output has appeared: a noble elegiac poem on Matthew Arnold, which saw the light in the Universal Review, though it was merely a third part of an Arnold threnody; one or two lyrics in weekly papers; and a few poems in Mr. Lighthall's Anthology of Canadian Verse. Most of his published writings have appeared in the Atlantic Monthly, the Century, the Independent, and one or two other American periodicals; though of all that he has put into print only a small section has been made public, as those know who possess his privately circulated leaflets and pamphlets.

It is not long since the present writer had occasion to review in the ACADEMY the latest book of another Canadian poet, Prof. Charles Roberts. Prof. Roberts and Mr. Carman are admittedly the finest poetic voices heard as yet in the Dominion, and it would be difficult to select work surpassing theirs from the mass of verse of high quality produced by the younger American writers. Certainly there is none of a more exquisite lyrical note than that of Mr. Carman. In this peculiar grace he has but one rival among his compatriots, if the living can be said to have a rival in the dead—Isabella Valancey Crawford, who died young some years ago, but not before she had given warrant of rare powers.

In the face of so much expectation, Mr. Carman must have known that many readers would judge his range and power and promise by this first book. This being so, it seems to me regrettable that he has refrained from publishing some of his most beautiful and, certainly, most mature work. For not only has he excluded several of those noteworthy ballads of which he has given some of us a foretaste, the Arnold threnody, and other verse of an exceptional quality; but he has even omitted certain ballads and lyrics, already published, which would surely have interfered in no way with the homogeneity of the present volume. In Mr. Lighthall's Anthology, for instance, there is the "Wraith of the Red Swan," with its firm delicate touch and haunting cadences; and there are kindred poems which would not be out of place in Low Tide on Grand Pré. However, we must perforce accept Mr. Carman's decision, and judge his work by what he chooses to give us.

To the fantastically got-up volume which Mr. David Nutt has published—redeemed so far by a charming cover—the author has a prefatory note, wherein he sets forth that the poems that follow have been collected with reference to their similarity of tone, and that all are variations on a single theme, more or less aptly suggested by the title, Low Tide on Grand Pré. It seemed better, adds Mr. Carman, to bring together between the same covers only those pieces of work which happened to be in the same key, than to publish a larger book of more uncertain aim. Here, of course, we have sufficient explanation of the author's reticence; though I still think these Grand Pré lyrics might have formed, so to say, a section rather than an independent whole.

It is perhaps advisable to tell the English reader that Grand Pré is the part of Acadia in Nova Scotia which Longfellow has made familiar in "Evangeline." It is a country of flat expanses and vast perspectives, hemmed by marshes and fronted by the sea that surges inland round the mountain promontory of Blomidon, in what is known as the Bay of Fundy. The present writer, as doubtless many another visitor to Acadia, was surprised to recognise so little of the Acadia of "Evangeline." The "vast primeval forest" and "rocky caverns" do not meet the expectant eye. The real poetic Acadia exists, perhaps, only in the mind; though the dreamy, beautiful land in the north-west of Nova Scotia has visible and potent charm for all who love it. But those who would know it in the spirit will discern it more clearly in the lyrics of Charles Roberts and Bliss Carman than in "Evangeline," particularly in poems such as "The Marshes of Tantramar" and "Low Tide on Grand Pré."

It is difficult to distinguish the charm which haunts these Acadian lyrics. There is in them a delicate air that reaches us

"Through twilight scented fine like musk";

a serene calm, as of that

" . . . lone rush
Astir in the slim
White stream where sheer Blue mornings are ";

a sense of melancholy and regret, ever wrought by and instinct with nature—

"On runnels dark by slopes of fern,
The hazy undern sleeps in sun,
Remembrance and desire, undone,
From old regrets to dreams return."

Most of the lyrics themselves suggest that moth in "Pulvis et Umbra," with "pale grey dust of beaten wings," each a

"vagrant of the starlit gloom,
One frail waif of beauty fronting Immortality and doom —"

in all of them something of "Dust and shadow and forgetting,

Frost and reverie and sleep."

All are dominated by an overmastering sense of beauty, and permeated with a love of nature for which there is no epithet so apt as the much misused and hackneyed word "intense." If ever there was a child of nature, it is the author of "The End of the Trail," "The Vagabonds," "Pulvis et Umbra," and other poems in a lovely slow-music that is all his own.

"Because I am a wanderer
Upon the roads of endless quest,
Between the hill-winds and the hills,
Along the margin men call rest.

* * *

"Because the holy winter night
Was for my chamber, deep among
The dark pine forests by the sea,
With woven red auroras hung. . .

* * *

"Therefore I house me not with him,
But journey as the sun goes forth,
By stream and wood and marsh and sea,
Through dying summers of the North."

Here and here in this book, and particularly in "The Vagabonds," there is proof of kinship with Omar Khayyam. The country both love

"It is a country of the sun,
Full of forgotten yesterdays."

And with the New World singer as with the old Persian poet, there is the same acceptance of the common doom:

"In the beginning God made man
Out of the wandering dust, men say;
And in the end his life shall be
A wandering wind and blown away."

He has the large, simple utterance which has so deep a charm; and none can gainsay the distinctiveness of lines such as, for example,

"Outside, a yellow maple tree,
Shifting upon the silvery blue,
With small, innumerable sound,
Rustled to let the sunlight through.

"The livelong day the elvish leaves
Danced with their shadows on the floor;
And the lost children of the wind
Went straying homeward by our door.

"And all the swarthy afternoon
We watched the great deliberate sun
Walk through the crimsoned hazy world,
Counting his hill-tops one by one.

"Then as the purple twilight came
And touched the vines along our eaves,
Another shadow stood without
And gloomed the dancing of the leaves.

* * *

"I saw retreating on the hills,
Looming and sinister and black,
The stealthy figure swift and huge,
Of one who strode and looked not back."

Occasionally the singer forgets his craft, but only once disastrously, as in the unforgivable final quatrain of "Seven Things." He must be on his guard, too, against repetition of favourite effects and words; and at "auroral," "leaguer," "lyric" as an epithet, "dream," and "bugling" he should for a time look askance, despite their beauty.

I have only room now to quote a single short poem from this fascinating, if in one respect disappointing, book of lyrics. Let it be so characteristic a piece as "Carnations in Winter":

"Your carmine flakes of bloom to-night
The fire of wintry sunsets hold;
Again in dreams you burn to light
A far Canadian garden old.

"The blue north summer over it,
Is bland with long ethereal days:
The gleaming martins wheel and flit
Where breaks your sun down orient ways.

"There, when the gradual twilight falls
Through quietudes of dusk afar,
Hermit antiphonal hermit calls
From hills below the first pale star.

"There, in your passionate love's foredoom,
Once more your spirit stirs the air,
And you are lifted through the gloom
To warm the coils of her dark hair."

WILLIAM SHARP.

NEW NOVELS.

At Society's Expense. By Algernon Gissing. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Alice of the Inn. By John W. Sherer. In 3 vols. (W. H. Allen.)

Juliet's Lovers. By Mabel Collins. In 3 vols. (Ward & Downey.)

Woman and the Man. By Robert Buchanan. In 2 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

The Triumph of Theresa. By Jeffrey Arden. In 2 vols. (Sampson Low.)

Out Back. By Kenneth Mackay. (Remington.)

What Happened at Morwyn. By M. A. Hoyer. (Digby, Long & Co.)

Tiara. By Dora Hort. (Fisher Unwin.)

Tanis, the Sang-Digger. By Amélie Rives. (Town Topics Publishing Co.)

The Aukward Squad. By Shan F. Bullock. (Cassells.)

A Book of Strange Sins. By Coulson Kernahan. (Ward, Lock & Bowden.)

MR. ALGERNON GISSING's latest novel bears upon it the impress of hurry. Following upon Between Two Opinions, it is disappointing. The characterisation is faulty: we get types in replica, and the attributes of one character are transferred to another. Two brothers intended to be sharply differentiated are made to deny themselves, the one to do what would be the act of the other. Throughout the shadow of one personality is thrown over another, so that the outlines of the two become merged. Again, situations are created off-hand: men and women are projected on to the stage without proper introduction; a reference to the play bill does not always enlighten us. Were it not for these faults of detail, the inherent improbability of the plot might be excused. The daughter of a struggling journalist, a young girl who has been a governess and more recently a strolling player, conceives the plan of passing off as an American heiress, and introducing herself into society as the protégée of a baronet's widow. For this privilege she pays her sponsor at the rate of £800 a year. This sum—to be accurate, a thousand pounds—she borrows from a young solicitor who is madly in love with her. There is nothing absolutely impossible so far. It may be granted, too, that a young woman whose social education has been conducted from outside rather than from inside, might commit the error of putting forward Florida as her quondam home. She was not to know that she was offering a premium to detection, in that that country is well stocked with sprigs of nobility engaged in the futile occupation of orange culture. She would, however, have been clever enough to avoid the solecism of addressing Lady Ivelet as "your ladyship." It was absolutely necessary for her to assume social equality as a condition precedent to the proposed relationship. Still, Mr. Gissing may claim that, as an American, she was acting within her assumed character. In any case Helen Ilderton's adventures are interesting reading. The sketch of Thomas Paine Goldhawke is powerfully drawn. He is a miserly cynic, who holds his evil passions well in hand, in so far as they might militate against the success of the sordid aims with which his soul is filled. This creature vents his pent-up spleen against himself, the self-loathing following upon inward glimpses of his own vileness, by exacting a high moral code from a defenceless woman. Such ruthless harshness as this toward a particular sin to which a vicious person has no leanings, is a common trait of egoistic degeneracy, and Mr. Gissing has diagnosed the disease cleverly. The book contains some fine descriptive writing. Aggethorpe and its people stand in epitome as the symbols of that all-devouring commercialism of modern times, which is greedily eating up rural England, its noxious breath blasting far and wide. Mr. Gissing writes admirably: his style is picturesque and epigrammatic. He is in effect a poet, and is to be congratulated upon not yielding to the temptation of cutting his prose up into feet and rhymes, in which form it would probably be a weariness to the spirit instead of being extremely pleasant reading.

Mr. Sherer has evidently been troubled with the suspicion that his work is a little old-fashioned, for he makes one of his characters say of a certain incident that it savours of the novels of the last century. A young girl brought up at a Midland hostelry is first left a small fortune by an Indian civilian who breathed his last in her uncle's house, and then finds herself the legitimate daughter of a woman of wealth and position. This is rather disturbing, but Alice keeps her head admirably. She remains staunch to the simple yeoman of her choice, repulsing the advances of the "off-coloured" son of her benefactor, while she refuses to join her mother's household and become a woman of fashion. When she loses her fortune, she takes the loss as a philosopher should, and all through gives token that she is a woman of high character. The book is melodramatic in form, and is full of incident and adventure. But the author tries to hold too many skeins in his hands, and the narrative suffers from the constant dropping of threads. We are led to expect that a scheming lawyer is also to prove a crafty thief; but in the end the author finds he can dispense with this part of his plan. Mr. Sherer is prolix; his novel is often both jejune and crude; but we go on reading it, interested despite ourselves. Its satire is often effective, and we are given a really admirable gallery of portraits. Dr. Loftus is an exact type of the fossilised incumbent, with a passion for letters and an abhorrence of parochial trivialities. A cleverly drawn picture of the English fools who will receive any "tar-brushed" adventurer who styles himself "prince" is found in Miss Maude. Moreover, it is rare to meet in the pages of fiction a landscape painter who talks sanely about his art. Eugene Marlo, despite a few lapses into pathos, does. Mr. Sherer has evidently made a shrewder guess at what constitutes a poetic interpretation of landscape than the generality of critics. If it is not the admirable good temper and frankness of the author which make this book worth reading, it would be difficult to say what does; for worth reading it is.

On general principles one has long since come to the conclusion that the dramatised novel is a mistake; but, nevertheless, Miss Mabel Collins's latest book contains many of the elements essential to successful drama. Juliet is the daughter of an actress of distinction, Margaret Vane, by her marriage with Lord Francis Ellerton. Lord Francis has married to gratify his vanity and to win a bet. He is a mere viveur, good looking and well groomed. Juliet loses her mother and is left by her father to fight her way in the world. He gives her as a companion an illegitimate daughter of his own. Juliet goes on the stage and achieves an unprecedented success. Actresses who have served no apprenticeship to their craft generally do in novels, but Miss Mabel Collins is at pains to make her heroine's case come within the four corners of possibility. As a popular actress Juliet Vane's lovers are many, among others a half-mad manager, a star actor, and a young peer. The actor wins, but on the day of their secret marriage a woman claiming his name appears before Juliet. The young wife's conduct at this juncture is noble, as it is throughout the narrative; but it is scarcely sane. Nevertheless, the stars work in their courses for her good; for although we are told she cannot love the man who ultimately wins her, it is as clear as a proposition in Euclid that she must come to do so, though this love will not be passion. The book has a healthy tone: it is another protest against the unwisdom of training girls in ignorance of the ways of life. The characterisation improves as the author proceeds, and the extraordinary conduct of the actor-manager at the beginning of the story is justified to us by his final act. We are reminded of real persons and life-dramas in almost every chapter, but Miss Collins welds these fragments into a consistent whole. This is a novel of situation; and since it never makes an undue demand on our credulity, it deserves respectful consideration.

A pure and loving woman is yoked to a dissolute painter. When her troubles have reached an acute stage, a benevolent curate comes to her relief, placing £10 at her disposal. The husband returns from an evening spent in drinking and card playing, and forces this money from his wife. He leaves her stunned and flies the country. Simultaneously the wife inherits a fortune. Years afterwards, living in seclusion in the country, she is wooed by a young baronet. In the nick of time the curate re-appears on the scene, and presents his protégée with what he considers to be proofs of her husband's death. All is well, but at this moment the painter re-appears and claims his wife; he has, however, to reckon with the husband of a woman he has seduced. Mr. Buchanan's Woman and the Man may be left here. Its strength lies in effective "curtains." The American adventures of Philip O'Mara, and of the man who ultimately puts a period on his career, are in the manner of Bret Harte, and could have been dispensed with: nothing material to the story would have been lost.

The Triumph of Theresa is another theatrical sketch done in fiction. The Countess Kavalefski is a compromised cosmopolitan: in her we at once recognise one of the fashionable vagabonds of mixed extraction who belong to the commonplaces of current fiction. The Countess finds it convenient to do the behests of a Russian minister. She comes to England to extract from the War Office plans of the defences of the Cyprus harbours. She meets the man who possesses these plans by the purest accident. She has beauty and courage, and she plays upon this Colonel Farquhar a kind of confidence trick, gaining her end. Unfortunately for her, she has found, what she had no suspicion she possessed, and has lost it in the process. An unscrupulous rival, one Count Sovanoff, has acquainted himself with the secret of the Colonel's indiscretion, and extracts from the unhappy woman, as the price of his silence, the condition that she shall not marry her lover. The situation is intense, and it is dramatic. Obviously the tale recalls Sardou's "Dora." The last chapter is an encumbrance; so is a great deal of somewhat trite essay writing. Occasionally the author's cynicism is as effective as it is bitter. He will irritate some readers by an excess of special pleading, and by the assumption that they are incapable of rising above the common-place in the passions of love and hate; but he gives us at least one splendid situation, and that indeed is something.

Australians must be a long-suffering race, if their patience is equal to unswathing stories so closely enveloped in padding as Out Back. A brother and sister of good birth, Richard and Inez Parry, are left penniless orphans in Australia. Richard is in a bank. He is handsome and attractive, but he has a passion for the turf. The rest is obvious: he robs the exchequer and decamps. Inez goes on the stage; but we next meet her as the wife of a dotting old man, loved by and loving her husband's manager. The manager, Jack Wrixon, in order to get the money to enable him to make off with his employer's wife, enters into league with a gang of bushrangers, in whose leader, Captain Scarlet, we presently discover Richard Parry. At a critical moment Wrixon leaves his confederate to his fate; at a later juncture he finds it convenient to put a bullet into him. Meanwhile, the wronged husband is in prison on suspicion of being in league with the bushrangers; the excellent manager and the infatuated wife, to save themselves, have dropped compromising banknotes into his desk. Now Wrixon changes his tactics, and makes love to the step-daughter of the woman whose honour he has undermined. He is ultimately roasted to death in a bush fire. His tragic end is described with considerable energy and vigour. The erring wife and the brother, as pretty a couple of villains as could well be, escape to South America under the protection of an amiable kinsman, Lord Cheshire, who turns up in the nick of time to take his dear cousins to his bosom. If we could overlook such fustian as this, there is something to commend, especially the description of the corroboree; but two hundred pages of "out-back" dialogue, tags of turf prattle, and bush-ranging commonplace, produce in the mind a sensation of confusion and weariness past all bearing. At p. 139 things begin to get coherent; but Mr. Kenneth Mackay has still a great many yarns in his note book, and after allowing us a short respite, the devil tempts him to begin transcribing them again, and alas! he yields to the temptation.

"The past cannot be wiped away as we wipe writing from a slate," says the author of What Happened at Morwyn, though an acceptance of the easy-going conclusions of the previous writer would be equivalent to ignoring this inexorable law of cause and effect. Mrs. Hoyer enforces a great ethical truth with energy and power; the verities she deals with are eternal, though she does complicate the issue by making them depend upon ephemeral forms of belief; still, on the whole, she shows admirable self-control. Errors of judgment and taste there are; the title is infelicitous, so often is the nomenclature. Again, a girl of eighteen is not likely to be able to start offhand and earn her living as a painter of specimen flowers, and to distance all rivals at the work. There is some haziness about money details, some lavishness in the use of capitals. But, apart from such trifles, this story of a young girl's heroic efforts to pay off the debts of a dishonest father is told with directness and lucidity. It claims our interest from the beginning, and retains it to the end. It is a highly creditable first appearance.

Miss Dora Hort's description of Tahiti is interesting; the romance which accompanies it is more so. It is a pathetic tale, another of those pitiable records of the degradation of native races at the hands of their conquerors. It propounds anew the old doubting question, as to whether the primitive relations between the sexes are not, on the whole, fraught with a greater measure of happiness than the connexions incident to super-civilised communities. Tiari is a beautiful half-caste. She is relentlessly pursued by a dissolute French officer; but she will have none of him nor of the native chief Huree: she loves the Frenchman's friend, Selwin. Selwin is a paragon of virtue, but he has certain of those ugly traits which sometimes go with virtue. Rather than that she shall die for love of him he marries the girl, and he has his reward. But he proceeds to bungle shamefully, as only a crass Teuton could. His piggyish philistinism loses him his wife, and none can say he does not merit his punishment. In Tiari and Selwin we are reminded of Otomie and Thomas Wingfield in Mr. Rider Haggard's latest romance. Redundant characters which are never used, and situations which lead to nothing, should be pruned from this book; but for the sake of Tiari, a charming study, and for its descriptions, it should be read.

In Tanis, the Sang-Digger, Miss Amélie Rives grasps with a firm grip the problem with which Miss Hort has wrestled, and she has produced a work of noble austerity. She goes fearlessly to the roots of things: her allegory is elemental, primitive; it is really great—an epic in prose. Shot from the blue, in other words from the mountainous home of a pagan community, comes a beautiful girl, wild and unkempt, fearless in her natural purity, but longing to attach herself to the higher types of humanity, that she may steady herself in her innate goodness. She seeks the valley, led by instinct to the home she needs. Her strong, healthy animalism makes her conscious of her lower self. She knows the meaning of the passion she would control for a man magnificent in his physical beauty, but grossly carnal in every part of his nature. Her spiritual being is quickened in the hot house of the atmosphere she now breathes. She loathes and despises the lover who pursues her, but the attraction he has for her is not to be killed. She will clove this man. She will show him that loving is not merely wanting. She draws the curtain aside and lets him peep in through the window at a beautiful picture, that of a man and woman perfectly mated. This, she tells him, is what love can be. Here is Tanis's ideal; but it is not the man's, he cannot see it: his eyes are darkened; he is of the earth, earthy. The situation is a fine one, and the author treats it with consummate art. Indeed, we have in this book no ephemeral work of fiction, but a serious contribution to a problem which must ever take rank above every other human problem. The story holds mighty truths in the kernel of it. In Tanis we are, as it were, projected backwards into primeval times, or it is as if a primeval type had been thrown on to a sheet by a dark lantern. We are in at the genesis of that ideal love which has taken the place, in the higher types of men and women, of the purely animal passion. We are granted a vision of that birth when wings of the spiritual broke through the chrysalis of the carnal. Tanis, as a character, is a very beautiful creation, and an original one. There will be many who will take the surface of this book and see in it nothing more than a sublimation of Mr. Chevalier's Muse; others will say coarse things of Tanis's heroic self-sacrifice, as coarse things are said every day of the countless women who, under a stern sense of love and duty, hold in abeyance their higher natures.

These stories by Mr. Shan F. Bullock improve as they proceed. "The Awkward Squad" would be amusing but for its unconscionable length. The squads are two secret organisations of Loyalists and Fenians. They chose the same place for their drilling ground, and out of this coincidence all manner of curious and entertaining situations are evolved. The "State Official" is a pregnant little tale of a boycotted postmaster: but the last story, "One of the Unfortunates," is really admirable. Its easy-going satire is general rather than pointed; but many a candidate for, and member of, parliament, English as well as Irish, will wince as he follows the career of Michael Loughrey.

It would be ridiculous to imagine that justice could be done to Mr. Coulson Kernahan in an article of this nature. A few bald statements must suffice, as in the case of Miss Amélie Rives. Works like Tanis and A Book of Strange Sins, which deal, without cant or parti pris, with the deepest subtleties of spiritual experience, with the travail of the soul in its long night watches, are not to be dealt with in a score or so of lines. Such books are among the healthiest symptoms not only of modern literature but of modern thought. They are on the crest of the wave, whether we regard them from the artistic or the ethical standpoint. Mr. Kernahan's plummet essays to sound the very depths of the human soul. Occasionally, of course, he reaches those depths where no plummet will sink; but when this is so we can only feel sympathy with him. There is no writer, living or dead, who could deal with such themes as those which form the staple of "A Suicide" and "A Lost Soul" without touching the confines of the unfathomable. Mr. Coulson Kernahan has been practically silent for three years; but, as he says, "we suffer nowadays from a plethora of book production, and unless a writer has something to say which is different from or better said than what has been said before, he will earn a more lasting title to our regard by selling sound sugar at honest prices than by publishing a book." Mr. Kernahan need have no fear that in these words he has condemned himself. His book is a fine one, and I think it will live.

JAMES STANLEY LITTLE.

SOME COUNTRY BOOKS.

Letters to Marco. By G. D. Leslie, R.A. (Macmillans.) Happy the man who receives such suggestive chatty letters, the reader will think. Mr. Leslie, from his old house by the Thames, studies birds and flowers in a loveable fashion (the former by the aid of a binocular glass, even as he lies in bed), and then dispatches his observations, frequently enriched with artistic drawings, to his friend. From a couple of answers here given that friend—no less a person than Mr. H. Stacy Marks, R.A.—shows himself quite capable of appreciating this pleasant rustic gossip. All who love birds and gardens will delight in these letters. They may not always be very profound—here and there, perhaps, a scientific ornithologist might smile; but Mr. Leslie's enthusiasm and capacity for seeing beauty in everyday life, his careful eye, his bonhomie, render this a charming volume, as fit for the fireside as the arbour. These letters begin in 1885, and reach to last spring. Perhaps a second series of them, it is to be hoped, may be in store for their admirers. To take a dip at random into their contents: starlings, eels, tulips, chub, kingfishers, weeds, larks, winter scenery, droughts, fog, and a multitude more subjects jostle each other, and all are attractively treated. There is an interesting account of Mr. William Morris's quaint house at Kelmscott. Indeed, anything old and beautiful has naturally charms for Mr. Leslie. The illustrations greatly add to the value of the book. It will help all who are fortunate enough to live in the country to see their own blessedness, and teach others that an untold wealth of beauty, and endless avenues of interest in nature, greet the wanderer from high roads and beaten tracks, even in old England.

From Paddington to Penzance. By C. G. Harper. (Chatto & Windus.) The author and a friend were wise enough to determine that their own country presents endless beauties to those who saunter through it with an observant eye. Accordingly, they walked last summer some 280 miles to the Land's End, and everywhere found objects and "bits" for Mr. Harper's skilful pencil. This record of their holiday tramp comprises more than a hundred views: some inserted in the text, others printed as plates; all most characteristic and beautifully finished. The view of Winchester College and that of Exeter Cathedral may be selected as admirable among so many that are good. Thus the book forms, with its quaint linen binding, a book of beauty infinitely more captivating than the volumes which transported the artistic taste of half a century ago. As for its letterpress, perhaps the less said the better. The book forms a faint imitation of Innocents Abroad, but at an immeasurable distance. Mr. Harper's style is blatant, aggressive, overwhelming: possessed, too, with a demon of jocularly. His facts are carefully chosen, and he quotes quaint epitaphs, and invariably describes the most picturesque aspects of each locality that he visits. Just as he has secured his reader's attention, he runs on in front, as it were, leaps out from behind a bush with a shout and a witticism, emphasised by a metaphorical clap on the back, so that his unfortunate fellow-wayfarer, after a few repetitions of this procedure, is awed into silence, and utterly smitten down before his companion's irrepressible joviality. Mr. Harper's preface, and even his dedication, are flagrant examples of this stupendous kind of writing. He throws one of the ammonites brought from Cornwall at "nomadic cats" on his return, and this is only the end of his soliloquy on it:

"These spoils of our touring were handier after all than coals, which blacken the hands, or soap, for which the morning finds a use; but I sometimes wonder who finds them, the very aristocracy of missiles, hurtled through midnight air from lofty eyries upon pavements deserted by all save the slow-pacing policeman and those afore-mentioned disturbers of the peace."

Again, he finds a house built by a sailor long since dead, and this is his account of him:—

"he has voyaged long since into the Unknown, and his romance has gone with him, for the place is now but a superior sort of tea-garden, where you drink your tea and eat your cream and strawberries in the open-air arbours and the society of innumerable centipedes and spiders."

This magnificent style soon wearies a plain man. Once more the author breaks out against "prim and proper county councils, whose internal rottenness is varnished over with a shiny varnish of prudery," and much more. Organ-grinders, tourists, landladies, Camborne, and even the venerable British constitution are similarly treated; "We meet no foreign foe to-day. No storms rend the branches of the oak; the tree, alas! is rotting at the heart. Ah! the pity, the misery of it!" Seriously, Mr. Harper's pictures are worthy of a better setting. Perhaps his spirits will have somewhat toned down before he takes the knapsack again. Freed from his polylogical outbursts, more sketches would be gratefully received. The text of From Paddington to Penzance shows in many places that, when not aiming at magniloquence, he can describe both events and scenery with a careful pen.

Forest, Field, and Fell. By J. A. Owen. (Lawrence & Bullen.) This handful of topographical essays is bound together by the same strong sympathy with birds and natural beauty as distinguishes a Son of the Marshes, whose books the authoress of Forest, Field, and Fell has edited. It is irresistible to compare her style with his nervous and strong-flowing periods. With more general and historical learning, she lacks his descriptive skill, his larger enthusiasm for every aspect of nature, his large and varied insight into the habits of the native birds and beasts. Yet there is a subtle liking for old people and rustic characters, the odds and ends of humanity, in her writing. She touches their failings with a delicate hand, and draws out the loving and deeper traits, so that she carries on her reader, and insensibly shows him that the dullest and apparently most commonplace people possess depths of strong feeling and a warm love which often lies hid under a rough exterior. The death of the dog Cyrus (p. 59) is very pathetic, and a case in point. Another essay treats of the agricultural school at Manderscheid in the Upper Eifel. This is especially noteworthy in connexion with the "continuation schools" of the present day, and should be read by all who are interested in education. The old memories of Stirling and the moors of Western Skye furnish two agreeable chapters, while the Bat Caves near San Antonio de Bexar must be a novelty to many readers. This little volume is among the most pleasant of its kind.

Random Recollections of Woodland, Fen, and Hill. By J. W. Tutt. (Sonnenschein.) Mr. Tutt is a fellow of the Entomological Society, and looks at nature, whether in forest, bog, or mountain, as represented by moths and flies. Yet he admires a beautiful prospect, although he immediately gets out his net and pill-boxes and diligently hunts up its insects. There is much to be learned from his pages on the mimicry of insects, their metamorphoses, and life-history in general. Mr. Tutt's researches in the fens of East Anglia and his account of insects which are either extinct there or fast dying out, thanks to drainage and ploughing up of their old haunts, is at once interesting and melancholy. But the same process is going on everywhere. Man and his wants speedily exterminate animal and plant life when at all weak or not widely localised, while a succession of stronger though less interesting plants and creatures takes their place. It is seldom that the change is shown in minute life with the care and fidelity with which Mr. Tutt displays it. He meets keepers, coastguardmen, and the like in his researches, and these rencontres are amusingly told. His book was worth writing and deserves perusal.

About Orchids: a Chat. By F. Boyle. (Chapman & Hall.) Is anyone in search of a hobby? Let him grow orchids and gain his enthusiasm by reading this book. Mr. Boyle has done for orchids what Dean Hole did for roses—set forth their beauty and poetry, and then dissipate the legend that only nursery-men and millionaires can grow them by showing any lover of a garden how to do so. Anecdote follows anecdote, hints and directions are thickly scattered through what in some hands might have become a dull volume; but all, thanks to the author's skilful style, is full of interest, and makes a book that no intelligent person will lay down till finished. After an amusing account of his experiences in a suburban garden, Mr. Boyle takes his readers to an orchid sale, which greatly resembles a book sale, where almost priceless rarities are at times put up for auction. A brief account is then given of the three classes into which orchids are conveniently divided for culture: according as they need a cool, a warm, or a hot atmosphere. A chapter succeeds on the marvellous history of the lost orchid, Cattleya labiata vera, which disappeared from 1818 to 1889; this is followed by a visit to Messrs. Sanders's Orchid Farm at St. Albans; and the book concludes with a chapter on the hybridisation of orchids. During an English winter, to peruse Mr. Boyle's account of masses of rose-red, pink and yellow, and pure white blossoms, their fantastic shapes, their lovely foliage and drooping habit, together with the wondrous new combinations which arise from hybridising, is to realise the feelings of the Peri at the gates of Paradise. Something, indeed, may be learnt of the beauty of orchids by Mr. Boyle's lovely illustrations reduced from Reichenbachia; more, so far as books can exhibit it, from Mr. Bateman's Century of Orchids; most by visiting a good collection. The salmon-fisher might almost welcome his most gaudy flies in the blossom of Paphinia Cristata, from Trinidad. Cool orchids are what the author recommends to a beginner; and among the five hundred at present under cultivation, four genera, Odontoglossum, Oncidium, Cypripedium, and Lycaste, specially lend themselves to the amateur; "no class of plants can be cultivated so easily," says Mr. Boyle, "as none are so certain to repay the trouble as the cool orchids." The mystery of the first genus growing in its native forests at the height of thirty feet, rarely at thirty-five, more rarely at twenty-five, is well commented on. The mode in which orchids are collected, the dangers and excessive cost which attend it, exceed a romance in interest. It is no wonder, therefore, that when a late orchid-grower near London sold his collection, an American syndicate was said to have paid down £12,000 for a small portion, while the rest fetched at auction a similar sum. The geographical distribution of orchids unfolds more mysteries to the botanist. Indeed, these plants, however considered, abound in wonders and unexpected surprises. One may be seen in collections—Laelia elegans—which has been exterminated in its native home, while of the marvels produced by hybridisation there seems no end. This process frequently results in a thousand fresh shades of colour—crimson, mauve, magenta, and orange. There are even, unlike roses, a few instances known of blue orchids. Mr. Boyle's fascinating book, needless to say, should be studied together with Darwin's volume on the fertilisation of orchids. The perusal of these will bring much innocent happiness into the life of many who are beginners at present in the art of growing orchids.

We have received the first part of Wild Flowers in Art and Nature (Edward Arnold), to be completed in six monthly parts. It consists, in the first place, of coloured plates, of royal quarto size, which have been reproduced—in England—from drawings specially made by Mr. H. G. Moon, the illustrator of Sanders's great work on Orchids; secondly, of popular botanical descriptions, written by Mr. F. W. Burbidge, curator of the University Gardens at Dublin; and thirdly, of practical hints for young painters, contributed by Principal Sparkes, of the South Kensington Museum. The wild flowers in the present part are all among the most familiar—the forget-me-not, heather, yellow iris, and hawthorn; of the illustrations, the best is that of the several species of heather. While intended primarily for the technical instruction of art students, the work will also prove attractive to all lovers of rural life.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. W. & A. K. JOHNSTON, of Edinburgh, will publish immediately a new Atlas of India, based on the most recent Government Surveys, with an introduction by Sir W. W. Hunter. It consists of sixteen plates, on the uniform scale of fifty miles to an inch, with a few insets and plans of towns. Special attention has been paid to the physical features, all rivers, canals, and lakes (together with all names referring to water), being printed in blue, and hills in brown. Towns and villages are inserted according to population, which is shown by symbols and lettering. The introduction gives general, physical, political, statistical, and historical details.

MESSRS. LONGMANS, GREEN & Co. will publish next week a book entitled The Discovery of Lakes Rudolf and Stefanie, being an account of Count Samuel Teleki's exploring and hunting expedition in Eastern Equatorial Africa, during the years 1887 and 1888, written by his companion, Lieutenant Ludwig von Höhnel, and translated by Nancy Bell (N. D'Anvers). It will be in two volumes, with nearly 180 illustrations, besides six coloured maps, giving the route of the expedition, altitudes of camping places, &c.

A NEW volume by Mr. Augustine Birrell, entitled Essays about Men, Women, and Books, is announced for publication on January 15, by Mr. Elliot Stock. The American edition will be published by Messrs. Scribner & Sons.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will publish immediately The House of Lords, by Mr. Thomas Alfred Spalding. This work consists of four parts—the definition, the history, the indictment, and the proposed reform of the Upper House. It concludes with a list of measures that have been rejected by the Peers.

"EARLS COURT," a novel of provincial life, which has been appearing serially in Blackwood's Magazine, will be published next week in three-volume form, with the name of the author, Mr. Alexander Allardyce.

MR. WILLIAM HEINEMANN announces for publication on January 15, a one-volume edition of The Heavenly Twins. The same publisher will issue, on January 10, a new three-volume novel by an anonymous writer, entitled A Superfluous Woman; and also a new edition of A Question of Taste, by Maarten Maartens.

MESSRS. OSGOOD, McILVAINE & Co. will publish shortly a second volume of Roumanian Folk Songs, entitled The Bard of the Dimbovitza. Like the former volume, the songs have been translated by Carmen Sylva and Alma Strettell, from a collection made by Hélène Vacaresco.

A NOVEL, entitled Bright Celestials, will appear very shortly through Mr. T. Fisher Unwin. It is a story of Chinese life, in relation to Christian missionary enterprise. The author, who writes as John Coming Chinaman, is Mr. Archibald Lamont.

ARCHDEACON FARRAR has completed an entire revision of the text and notes of his Life of Christ; and the new edition will be issued by Messrs. Cassell & Co. during the present month.

A NEW and enlarged edition of Stories of Golf, collected by Prof. Knight, of St. Andrews, and Mr. T. T. Oliphant, will be issued by Mr. Heinemann next week.

WE are asked to announce the existence of a poem, written but not printed, entitled "The Kindness of Venus in the Life and Death of Man, endeavoured to be shown in a third and last Letter from W. J. Ibbett to his Friend, H. B. Forman."

THE January number of the North American Review, published in this country by Mr. Heinemann, will contain the following articles: "Dinners and Dinners," by Lady Jeune; "Afterthoughts of a Story-teller," by Mr. George W. Cable; "The Sunday School and Modern Biblical Criticism," by the Rev. Dr. C. A. Briggs; and "Intercollegiate Football," by Dr. J. William White and Dr. Horatio C. Wood.

THE popularity of Tom Brown's School-days in America is attested by the issue, at Philadelphia, of an illustrated edition, containing a portrait of the author, and photogravures of scenery in the Vale of the White Horse and of buildings at Rugby.

It is also worth mentioning that a Boston publisher announces a handsome reprint of Rossetti's House of Life, with the readings of the edition of 1871, and with the lyrics that formed part of the original sequence. It is to be printed at the University Press of Cambridge (Mass.) with initial letters and borders specially designed for the occasion.

WE hear that Count Leo Tolstoi has written to M. Paul Sabatier, offering to translate into Russian his newly published Life of Saint Francis d'Assisi.

In connexion with the Society of Friends of Russian Freedom, Mr. George Kennan will deliver a lecture upon "Political Exiles in Siberian Convict Mines," at Prince's Hall, Piccadilly, on Monday next, at 8 p.m.

THE first meeting of the new session of the Viking Club—which has now been reconstituted as a social and literary society for all interested in the North, and especially to encourage students of Northern history and antiquities—will be held on Friday next, January 12, at 8 p.m., in the King's Weigh House Rooms, Thomas-street, Grosvenor-square, when Mr. F. York Powell will deliver an inaugural address on "Some Literary and Historical Aspects of Old Northern Literature." Among the papers promised for future meetings are: "Prehistoric Art in the North," by Mr. J. Romilly Allen; "The Boar's Head at Queen's College, Oxford, and a Teutonic Sun God," by Dr. Karl Blind; and "The Orkney and Shetland Lamp," by Mr. Edward Lovett.

MR. BERNARD QUARITCH has issued as the latest of his "Rough Lists" a very interesting catalogue of manuscripts and of books illustrating the science of palaeography. Manuscripts may be classed under various headings: as being literary texts before the invention of printing, as being artistically valuable for their illuminations, as documents for palaeography, as the crude materials for history, or even as autographs. Of all of these there are examples here, though Mr. Quaritch has preferred to arrange his MSS. in strict chronological order, which of course cuts across other divisions. He has, however, prefixed a classified index according to subjects, and called attention in a preface to some of his chief treasures. He no longer owns the famous Talbot Prayer-book—which has, we believe, found a home in the United States—but he still has in his possession several early liturgical books of English manufacture, and also MSS. of Wyclif, Chaucer, Gower, and the unique Towneley mysteries. Italian, French, and German art is magnificently represented; among these we may specially mention a superb vellum of the "Roman de la Rose," dated circa 1475. Greek and Latin classics are less conspicuous; for, to tell the truth, they are less valued by collectors. But the first lot of all is a Greek codex of the Gospels, of the tenth century, which was brought from Cyprus by Major Alessandro Censola; and there are several Latin Bibles of the twelfth to the fifteenth century.

WE regret to record the death of Mr. Henry Vizetelly, one of the pioneers of illustrated journalism, and an industrious author, whose Glances Back through Seventy Years was reviewed in the ACADEMY of November 25. He died near Farnham, on the morning of New Year's Day, from an illness which may be directly traced to his imprisonment for publishing a translation of M. Zola's novels.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

TO THE FUTURE WORLD.

DARK World! I ask not if thou be,
Thy Being or non-Being frets not me;
I would not lift—if so I might,
The curtain that enshrouds thy night.

For grant thou art—that could not change
Stern duty's sphere—in Earth-life's range,
Still must I work, learn, think, and say,
As now I do, from day to day.

Grant thou art not; yet must I still
One round with Man, Life, Thought fulfil;
With these, their Life-course done—I must
In death commingle—dust to dust.

The flower that grows, matures, and dies,
One moment brightening living eyes,
Demands no more of Life, Time, Bloom
And Space, than Earth allots it room.

Goodness is great, Truth still bides true,
Though Earth-things 'scape man's Earth-born view,
Eternal Time claims this one day,
Though Heaven and Earth both pass away.

Content am I—my here-life be Worthy of Immortality;
Yet, careless somewhat—if its lot
Be that, or death—still'd and forgot.

Content—as by high wisdom plann'd,
This Earth-to Heaven-life to expand,
Or else this Life itself to guard
As its sole duty, worth, reward.

JOHN OWEN.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

OUR old friend, the Expositor, still gives a corner now and then to non-professional theology. The article which has given us most unmixed pleasure in the January number (the contents of which have been already briefly mentioned) is Miss Stoddart's sympathetic notice of Maurice Maeterlinck on Jan van Ruysbroeck, the fourteenth century mystic, to whom his countrymen gave the title "L'Admirable." Not only Maeterlinck's French translation of Ruysbroeck, but his own critical estimate, appear to deserve the attention of literary and theological students. Prof. Ramsay's reply to Mr. F. H. Chase's article on the Galatia of the Acts is no doubt instructive, but also very painful reading. If such extreme self-confidence and dictatorial assumption were to be displayed by a heretic, he would be almost universally condemned by English theologians. Will no one arise to protest against this unfortunate vehemence on the part of a critic who, though in some respects so traditionalistic, is in other respects so revolutionary in his opinions? Sir J. W. Dawson will hardly expect to produce much impression on critics of the Pentateuch by his strangely intolerant article on the authorship and authority of the Mosaic Books. His own critical ability may be gauged by his mode of rescuing the historical accuracy of the (Elohistic) account of the two Hebrew midwives in Ex. ii. 15-22. "Students of nature who are also Christians," we are told, find the Higher Criticism "somewhat superficial and unscientific." What, then, is to be said of Sir J. W. Dawson's rectifications of its errors? Mr. Lock's popular article on the "Unwritten Sayings of Jesus Christ" forms a happy contrast to the Canadian professor's outburst of religious partizanship.

THE January number of the Educational Review opens with an article on "Reform at Westminster School," by the headmaster, Dr. Rutherford, in which he explains precisely what changes the governing body propose to introduce, and why.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- FOURNIER DE FLAIX, E. Pendant une mission en Russie. 1<sup>re</sup> Série. A travers l'Allemagne. Paris: Larose. 10 fr.
- MOLTRE'S, H. v., Briefe an seine Braut u. Frau u. an andere Anverwandte. Stuttgart: Deutsche Verlags-Anstalt. 10 M.
- POUYOUBVILLE, Albert de. Etudes coloniales: La politique indo-chinoise, 1892—1898. Paris: Savine. 3 fr. 50 c.
- SCHMIDT, W. Ueb. den Süd der Legenden des Ms. Laad 108. Berlin: Vogt. 1 M. 60 Pf.
- STEINER, B. Ludwig Tieck u. die Volksbücher. Berlin: Vogt. 1 M. 60 Pf.
- TYBOL, F. Lessings sprachliche Revision seiner Jugend-dramen. Berlin: Vogt. 1 M. 80 Pf.
- WISCHELMANN'S PROGRAMM, 17. Hallesches. Die Hesperis des Polygnot v. C. Robert. Halle: Niemeyer. 8 M.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- ANALECTA hymnica medii ævi. Hrg. v. G. M. Dreves. XVI. Hymnodia hiberica. Leipzig: Reissland. 9 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

- ANDRIEU, J. Une Province à travers les siècles. Histoire de l'Agénais. Paris: Picard. 14 fr.
- CHAPOUTIN. Etudes historiques sur l'ancienne province dominicaine de France. Paris: Picard. 8 fr.
- DARÈS le Phrygien, Histoire véritable des Grecs et des Troyens, traduite par Ch. de Bourgueville, Sieur de Bras, avec Notes par Tony Genty. Caen: Massif. 25 fr.
- KRAUS, F. X. Die christlichen Inschriften der Rheinlande. 2. Thl. 2. Abth. Die Inschriften der Erzbistümer Trier u. Köln. Freiburg i.-B.: Mohr. 30 M.
- SCHLEIER, R. Erinnerungen e. Schleswig-Holsteiners. 4. Bd. Schleswig-Holstein im 2. Kriegsjahre 1849—1850. Wiesbaden: Bergmann. 8 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

- ELVSTRAND, M. Hieracia alpina aus den Hochgebirgsgegenden des mittleren Skandinavien. Upsala: Lundquist. 2 M.
- HÉRIAUD, Joseph. Les Diatomées d'Auvergne. Paris: Klincksieck. 12 fr.
- ZIMMERMANN, A. Beiträge zur Morphologie u. Physiologie der Pflanzenzelle. 2. Bd. 1. Hft. Tübingen: Laupp. 2 M.

PHILOLOGY.

- HERMANN, A. Untersuchungen üb. das schottische Alexanderbuch. Berlin: Vogt. 1 M. 60 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"THE BUKE OF THE HOWLAT": A CORRECTION.

Cambridge: Dec. 30, 1893.

In "The Buke of the Howlat," l. 736, ed. Amours (Scot. Text Soc.), we read as follows:—

"Haile, alterar of Eva in anc, but vro."

I insert the two commas, which are not in the edition.

This line, as it stands, can neither be understood nor scanned, but requires an emendation. It is the old story of the confusion of n with u. The word anc should be ave, with the sense of Lat. Ave, as used in the angel's salutation, viz., Ave Maria. The person addressed is the Virgin Mary; and the sense is "Hail, thou alterer of Eva into Ave!" The phrase but vro is a mere tag; it meant, originally, "without luck"; hence, without hazard, without doubt. See Ure in the glossary to Barbour. The change of the monosyllabic anc to the dissyllabic Ave greatly improves the scansion of the line.

For the explanation, see my note to Piers Plowman, C. viii. 250. It was a favourite medieval quibble to say that the Virgin changed Eva—i.e., the sinner Eve—into Ave, the salutation of the angel. Our ancestors hit upon the brilliant discovery that, in order to change Eva into Ave, they had only to spell it backwards!

I think another u has gone wrong in Bologros and Gawane, 704. We there find that two fighting warriors "all to-turmit thair entyre." There is no such word as to-turmit, as the French turner never takes the A.S. prefix to. The word is to-turvit (to-turmit), from the M.E. to-torvien, which see in Strattmann; and compare the remarks on "topy-survy" in the Appendix to my larger Etymological Dictionary (p. 831). Torvien is to hurl, and to-torvien is to hurl to bits, to dash to pieces.

In the Howlat, l. 760, talburn is a way of writing tabburn—i.e., tabour. In l. 821, golk is another form of gowk—i.e., cuckoo, just as, in l. 215, rolpand is another form of roupand or roupand. I explained these peculiarities of spelling in my article on ghost-words: see Phil. Soc. Transactions, 1885-6 (p. 350).

WALTER W. SKEAT.

THE NORTH-PICTISH INSCRIPTIONS TRANSLATED AND EXPLAINED.

II.—The Northernmost Stones.

Bodleian Library, Oxford.

Of the four remaining inscriptions south of the Moray Firth which Prof. Rhys classes as appearing to be "for certain more or less Pictish in point of language," two are only fragmentary, and the other two do not afford the same opportunities for rapidly convincing the reader as do the more northern inscriptions. These latter I shall accordingly deal with first, and print them as they are found on p. 304 of Prof. Rhys's paper. It must be understood, however, that the division into words there given is only conjectural, except in the two cases where the Ogams are punctuated.

One identification must be repeated from my former letter: its suggestion I owe to Dr. Joass. The word edd, ett, or eht = Old-Irish (1) ait, ait, (2) aite, aide, and Scottish Gaelic aite, which (at least in some parts of the North Highlands) is pronounced aihte. These words mean a place or dwelling: their root-meaning is "hearth," as I shall show in a future letter.

I. Althallorr edd Maqq Nuuvva rreirng.—These are the Ogams on the edge of the Golspie stone (Sutherland); and after re-examining them with the help of Dr. Joass's special skill, and since then in the excellent photograph in Lord Southesk's Oghams of Scotland, I can emend the text in most important particulars. There is no a after the M, but there is a very short stroke running into the bottom of the q—obviously used like the apostrophe in M': in the Book of Deer we find both mac and its genitive meic written m̃c. Between the two u's there is a short vertical mark. The following h is an a, for the photograph shows a scratched stem-line passing through it. And there is no reason to suppose that the two fractures on the top edge were not made before the Ogams were cut: consequently, no missing letters have to be supplied, and the nine strokes after the last e can be legitimately read as ech.

Read, then, Althallorr edd M'qq Nu' Uvvar-rech, transliterate into modern Scottish Gaelic Althallr: aite M'c Nu h-Uabharach, and render "Althallr: hearth of M'c Nu the Bold" (or "Proud"). Uabharach is the gen. of uabharach, which means "proud," while its other form, uaibhreac, also means "Spirited, full of spirit: animosus" (Highland Society's Dict.): we find e = ai persistently in these stones, and v = bh, while the modern insertion of an h between the two u's would have been quite optional in Old-Irish.

But what, you say, does Althallr mean? It's the name of the stead. But it looks like Norse, not like Gaelic! Exactly so: the name of Sutherland is Norse; Golspie itself is probably a Gaelicised Norse name; the name of the neighbouring hamlet of Backies is Norse; so in part, belike, is that of the neighbouring castle of Dunrobin (Dunraffu, or something like it, being an early form). For the Norsemen held the Sutherland coast for several centuries. Althallr is simply the Old-Norse adj. hallr "sloping" with the Old-Norse prefix al- "quite" or "very." This stone stood in Kilmaly kirkyard, which is on the lower slope of what geologists know as the hundred-foot beach—a braeside rising from the plain towards the mountains behind; the very kirkyard is "all of a slope"!

On one side the stone has a cross but no inscription: the cross was enough to show that on that side (doubtless) the land was church-land. But on the side (doubtless) of the stead of M'c Nu the Bold is an inscription to give the name of the stead and its owner, and a full-length portrait of M'c Nu the Bold himself, with an axe in his right, a knife in his left, and figures of a dog, a fish, a sea-monster (?), snakes, and various familiar Pictish symbols about him. Can anyone seriously doubt that this was a march-stone?

As for the name Nu, it affords a second instance of Pictish u = Irish and modern Scottish Gaelic ua: it is the Irish adj. nua, "strong." It is, of course, a genitive depending on M'qq, and in Scottish Gaelic a nom. Nu would have its genitive the same.

II. . . . alluorann urract pcvv Cerroccs.—This is our next stone going north. It was found in the broch ("Pictish tower") of Burrian, on the little isle of North Ronaldshay (Orkneys), above the original floor, and apparently among débris between it and the new paved floor of a later occupation (Arch. Scotica, v., p. 346). It has a lightly incised cross on the same side as the Ogams, but nothing on the other side. Near it was found an oblong stone cist containing red ashes. So that it is probably sepulchral: and the word eht does not occur on it.

As regards the text, Prof. Rhys says (p. 292) that there is a stop before the second a. The p is an x, which is also the Ogam for e. Read . . . * Uorr ann Uurraetevv Cerroccs, and translate "Of . . . [the] Great in Uurraet of [the] Rock."

Uorr of course = vorr = nhor, is an old genitive† of mor "great," and is evidently the title of the head of a clan or family. Ann is the Scottish Gaelic preposition so spelt, and means "in." It governs a dative, and Uurraetevv is a dat. pl. in -ev or -eevv = modern Scottish Gaelic -aibh. Even, I imagine, when not governed by a preposition, the dat. pl. of the name of the inhabitants of a district is often used both in Irish and Scottish Gaelic to signify the district itself: e.g., Laignib, Leinster; Ultaib, Ulster; Cataibh, Sutherland; Gallaibh (= the strangers, i.e., Norsemen), Caithness. I owe my knowledge of this fact and these instances to Prof. Mackinnon of Edinburgh, to whom I lately addressed some sceptical queries on the derivation of the Gaelic name of Sutherland. For the doubling of the ee see O'Donovan's Irish Grammar, p. 7, "in the ancient manuscripts all long vowels are found doubled, as dee, gods." Finally, Cerroccs is the gen. of a noun which = Irish carraic "a rock," modern Scottish Gaelic carraig. For in Old-Irish the dropping of final s "was late, since the Ogam inscriptions still have final s . . . Old-Irish Luig-dech = Ogam inscription Lugudeccas gen. sg. to nom. sg. Lugaid" (Brugmann, Comp. gr., Eng. trans., i., p. 432).

The name of the people (? in nom. pl. Uurraet) is doubtless derived from ur "fair," and act = Ir. acht "body": the analogy of the Irish original forms rect, oct, luct, by the side of the "infected" forms recht, ocht, lucht (Zeuss, p. 68), and of derived substantives in -acht arising out of an earlier -act (ib.), seems to warrant one in postulating act = acht.

* I regard the entire name as yet uncertain, though the photograph in Arch. Scot. v., pl. 46, gives me hopes of some day reading it.

† "In the North Highlands mh becomes u" (Prof. Mackinnon in the Transactions of the Gaelic Society of Inverness, xii., p. 354). In the Dean of Lismore's book I find the two masc. genitives vor and vor within three lines (p. 56).

It is remarkable that in so tiny an isle (four square miles) there should be a name so near to Urract as Verracott, which is borne by an hamlet less than two miles from the Pictish tower in which this stone was found. That tower (it is the only broch in the isle) was, of course, the fort of Verracott. It stood on an eminence (shown in the Ordnance map) with a belt of rock (also shown) between it and the sea: from it the approach of pirates was signalled, whereupon into it swarmed all the folk of the isle with their flocks and herds. And I suggest that the name of Verracott, which looks like a Norse compound of vera "snugness," and kot "farm," may be a rationalised Norse representative of a Pictish Urract, and that the broch may have been called Verracott of (the) Rock, or Rocky Verracott, to distinguish it from Verracott of the plain: just as in the parish where the Golspie stone was found there is a Kilmaly Craigton up on the rocky mountain-side, at some distance from the older Kilmaly.

III. besmeggnanammovef.—"The first Ogam," says Prof. Rhys (p. 296), "may have been b, l, v, s, or n, according to the number of scores that may be wanting, if any." Lord Southesk (p. 205 of his paper on the Oghams of Scotland) gives part of an additional stroke below the line at the beginning, which would make the letter an l. The final Ogam on grounds stated below I take to be e. Read Les Meqq Nan am Movee, and translate "Enclosure of M'e Nan in Bobhe(th)" ("Cowkilling").

In Meqq e as usual = Irish ai, and the word answers to the Old-Irish maice, the gen. of macc (modern Scottish Gaelic mac, gen. mic). Its being a genitive makes us morally certain that the word before it was a substantive. That is les = O.-Irish less, les, North Highland leas, which in modern Scottish Gaelic only means a garden or plantation, but which in Irish means "a house, habitation; a palace, court; fortified place; enclosures or stalls for cattle" (O'Reilly)—cf. also Irish lias, sheep-fold, or hut for sheep or cattle.

Meqq Nan may = "son of Nan," or "son of Luck." We should in either case expect the gen. to be nain; but Nun in the Newton stone shows that Pictish is liable to omit the insertion of an i in the gen. before final n.

Am = the regular mutated form, before a labial, of the preposition an "in." The following proper name defies all my efforts to derive it, if the last four sloping strokes form an f; but as such an f has never yet been found in Oghams, and as both the Newton and Lunasting stones show e so written, I read Movee = Bobhai(th), "Cowkilling." The initial b would in Irish lose or change its sound by eclipsis owing to the preceding m; Pictish ee = ai; and final th, though not quiescent after ai in modern Scottish Gaelic, sounds only as h, and after a, o, u would be dropped altogether: at the end of Irish words this h is "very faintly sounded" (O'Donovan, p. 55). Moreover, there is an O.-Ir. bai, "death," which would give bobhai without any th. Bobhai(th) very possibly got its name from having been the scene of a slaughter of cattle by Norse pirates.

After writing these words, I mentioned my conjecture to Mr. Oman, who referred me to the following passage of Keary's Vikings in Western Christendom:

"What an expressive word is that peculiarly northern one Strandhögr, strand-slaughter; meaning a raid from a Viking vessel upon the farms near the coast, the capture of sheep and cattle which were driven down to the strand and slaughtered there previously to being shipped and carried off" (p. 275).

This stone was found on the sea-coast in St. Ninian's Isle (Shetland) in a burial-ground on the site of the no longer existing chapel of St. Ninian (Proceedings of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, xii., p. 24). Consequently it is another example of the kirk-yard march-stone.

IV. Crrosee Nahhtvddaššs: datrr: ann- Berriese: Meqqdrrroann.—But Prof. Rhys tells me that he now believes the second r in Berriese to be an n, and that the f is more probably an s. The o in ddrroann is a peculiar character, which seems to equal one given in the Ballymote book as an equivalent for both o and oi (Rhys, p. 272). Read Bernises and (?) ddrroann, and translate "Cross of Nāhtūdašsdatrr in Bernises ("Battle-headland") of M'e Droian."

This stone was found in the north-east of Bressay, one of the Shetland isles "near the ruinous Church of Culbingsgarth, which is surrounded by a very old burying-ground" (Stuart, ii., p. 30). It is ornamented on each side with figures of men and animals, and with interlaced work, which on one side can be regarded as forming a cross. It has two lines of Oghams, the first ending with ann followed by a small mark which, with Prof. Rhys, I take to indicate that the inscription is "continued on the other edge of the stone," and which he has denoted by an hyphen.

This is almost certainly a burial-stone, and Prof. Rhys himself takes the first word as = cross (Scottish Gaelic crasg, cf. Irish croisg "a small cross"). Nahhtvddaššs is the gen. of a Norse nickname = "doer of ill deeds by night," from the stems of nātt "night" (which must have been nāht at an earlier time) and ādāštr "misdeeds": no doubt there was a masc. noun (ādāštr?) = "misdoer" (like ādāšda-maštr and the fem. forvāša), with its nom. ending in -r and its gen. in -s. Datrr is, of course, the Old-Norse datrr "daughter." Ann is once more the preposition ann "in." Ber-nises doubtless shows us once more Pictish e for ai, and = Bair-nisais = Battle-headland (Irish bair "contest" and neais-ais "headland"); for the stone was actually found on an headland, which, having on it the ruins of a broch, is morally certain to have been the scene of at least one battle. Meqq of course = the gen. maice.

It may be asked why, instead of ann bernises, we do not have ammernises by mutation and eclipsis, as in the case of ammovee for an(n)-bovee. The reason is that the words which follow ann are on the opposite edge of the stone: they may, indeed, have been meant to be capable of being read as a distinct inscription.

The cross is either a monument to the Norse lady whose name was Nāhtūdašsdatrr, or else a stone indicating a burial-place belonging to her. In either case, it looks as if the Pictish owner of the surrounding land was careful to have that ownership recognised on the cross, so that no claim to it should be set up by her or her Norse kinsfolk.

V. Ehtecon Mor.—This was found in the parish of Conningsburgh in Shetland, and Prof. Rhys is disposed to look at it "as the oldest inscribed stone in the northern isles." It may be imperfect at beginning, but the part left = Ehte Con Mor, "Hearth of Cu the Great."

It is interesting to find that here at least the invasive feature of initial consonantal mutation had not yet been introduced, for we have Mor not Ior; there is also no doubling of letters. Cu = both "Dog" and also "Warrior," and its Old-Irish gen. is con (modern Scottish Gaelic coin). Mr. Oman asks me if Con and Conningsburgh have anything to do with each other, and I see now that Conning is probably the Old-Norse of Mac Con!

Bearing in mind that ait is another form of ehle, it is curious that there is a hamlet called Aith, only 1½ miles from the place where this stone was found. That place was an old kirk-yard, so that here again we have a kirkyard march-stone. It is, however, only a fragment, and we cannot tell whether there was a cross on the other side.

The following passage, which I extract from Mr. Goudie's paper in the Proceedings of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland for 1882-3, p. 311, is worth reading:

"The natives of the district in which this stone was found . . . are noted for characteristics of temper, character, and perhaps also physique, which distinguish them from the body of Shetlanders generally, and have given rise to surmising that theirs is a different race origin. I am informed by Mr. Bruce, Younger of Sumburgh, that some short time since the Anthropometric Section of the British Association desired a set of specimen photographs of types of native Shetlanders for the purpose of comparison on their own special line of investigation. Seventeen such photographs were sent by him in reply to their request, including those of three natives of Conningsburgh, and these last were all pronounced to be Celtic! The rest, of varying physiognomy and complexion, though mostly fair, were unmistakably Scandinavian. According to this view, therefore, the present Ogham-inscribed Stone from Conningsburgh is not the only relic from the Celtic age in that district that has come down to the present day."

There is, however, a second line above Ehte Con Mor, which Prof. Rhys obviously omits on p. 304 of his paper, for no other reason than that the reading of it was too doubtful. On p. 295 he gives it as devoddre, saying that the scores "are nearly all very doubtful, except the ddr."

Now this inscription occurs at the end of a stone, and is thus an exact parallel to the Oghams on the Newton stone, where the sculptor, finding he had not room enough, wrote an upper line, which is to be read as if the spectator had turned round and was reading in the opposite direction. Let us so read the upper line in the Conningsburgh stone, and we get not devoddre but erlloet. Translate Pictish e as usual into ai, and this = airlloetail. Now air is a preposition meaning "upon" or (Irish) "before," lot is "wounding" or (Irish) "destruction," and ail is (Irish) "a stone, rock," while ail is in Scottish Gaelic "a rock, a steep bank washed by water." Consequently the entire inscription will be "Hearth of Cu the Great in front of (or, upon) Lotail" (Destruction-rock?). "Destruction-rock" may indicate some rock where vessels had been wrecked, for both the spot where the stone was found and the hamlet of Aith have a rocky coast immediately at their back. Or it may refer to a rock close to the site of the stone—upon which a Pictish tower stood, and which may consequently be presumed to have been the scene of at least one conflict between Picts and Vikings.

The apparently abnormal ll at the beginning of lotail has an interesting phonetic meaning. The preposition air (er) in Irish, and sometimes in Scottish Gaelic, aspirates any aspirable consonant which follows it. Now O'Donovan tells us (Ir. Gram., p. 32) that "Haliday . . . classes l among the aspirable consonants, and marks it, when aspirated with two dots, thus l̇. And it is true that, when coming after all those particles which cause other consonants to be aspirated, it has, in some parts of Ireland, a different sound from its primitive one."

—though he demurs to its being called an aspirate sound. Well, the Welsh ll is hl pure and simple; but, whether that be the sound of ll in the present case or not, I have no doubt that the doubling of the letter represents the change of value affirmed by Haliday and O'Donovan.

VI. X'tocuhetts: a'ehhtlmmnn: hecvvevv: Nehktonn.—Here the initial X is a regular Ogam for E. The symbol for the first o is unknown, and Lord Southesk (Proceedings of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, February 11, 1884, p. 202) says "among the Ballymote characters it most resembles UI." Read, then, Ett Uí Cuhetts: a hehhtt munn: Hecvvevv: Nehhtonn, and translate "Hearth of O' Cuhett: his hearth about Quee of Nehton."

Uí is the gen. of Ua, a grandchild, the modern O'. Cuhett is a proper name meaning "wild" "savage"—the Irish cuthaidh, pronounced cuhai: but in the Book of Armagh final -dh is almost or quite always d (O'Donovan, p. 49). Again, wherever Irish or modern Scottish Gaelic have ai, Pictish normally has e or ee—not to mention that in Ulster ai "is invariably pronounced like e short" (id., p. 15). So that Cuhett seems to be an absolutely correct representation of Cuthaidh as it may have been pronounced. A is the possessive "his" or "her," and both in modern Irish and in modern Scottish Gaelic it aspirates a following vowel only when it = "her." But in Old-Irish initial h was inserted or omitted without fixed rule (Zeuss, p. 48). Still, if anyone would rather take Uí as feminine, the Highland Society's Dictionary allows it.

Munn = munn (cf. Nnn for Nun on the Newton stone) = Old-Irish mun, with one of the meanings of Scottish Gaelic mu (the same preposition), i.e., around. It governs a dative, and also aspirates the following consonant. Hecvvevv is undoubtedly a dat. pl.—the district being, as is so often the case, named after the inhabitants—from (Irish) cua "martial" = cuaibh; and the reason for its having the h before instead of after the cc apparently is that the ccvv were taken as a single combination = Qu. In the very district in which this stone was found (Lunasting, on the mainland of Quee Ness; there is also a hamlet called Quey in Conningsburgh, another part of the same isle. As regards Nehhtonn, Prof. Rhys no doubt rightly equates it with the familiar Pictish name Nechtan, of which there are various forms: possibly the nominative of the present one may be Nahhtonn. Doubtless he was the owner of Quee.

Of the precise spot in Lunasting where the stone was found I know nothing, except that it "was found at a depth of five feet from the surface, in a moss at a distance of some miles from any known ruin" (Proceedings of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, December 11, 1876, p. 24). That being so, it was probably not a kirkyard march-stone, and it has no cross or anything else on its reverse. It has a very small + outlined on the left of the last word; but the top of this is feathered, and I suggest that it is a pointer, like the very similar mark on modern maps which shows where the North is. In that case the horizontal line would indicate the line on which the stone stood, and the arrow directed across it towards the ground would show that the Hearth of Ua Cuhetts was on the spectator's side—which accords with what I have maintained to be the case elsewhere, that the inscription was written to face the property.

In my next letter I shall return to the stones south of the Moray Firth.

E. W. B. NICHOLSON.

P.S.—Lord Southesk points out to me that I have overlooked his latest opinion about the initial Ogams on the Newton stone. He holds that they are probably five straight strokes, not six. Prof. Rhys also reads only five. Read, then, Aedd, not Aidd (with no difference in sense). I ought also to have taken Vor as agreeing more probably with Aiq-Nnn than with Nnn alone. Translate "Hearth of Ac-Nun the Great," &c.

"THE BRONTËS IN IRELAND."

Norwood: Jan. 1, 1894.

Mr. Andrew Lang's letter leaves no vital question in dispute between him and me. At the same time, it is only courteous that I should reply to the questions which he raises on subsidiary matters.

He has a difficulty with regard to the slack bargain made between little Hugh Brontë's father and Welsh with regard to the adoption of the child. But it is a matter within the range of the most limited experience that bargains made between relatives often leave important items understood, and that such understandings lead generally to the gravest misunderstandings. Has Mr. Lang never heard of a slack agreement between an author and a publisher, in which vital points, as vital as any left out of the Brontë agreement, were left in abeyance to breed trouble? If he has not, Mr. Walter Besant could give him interesting details.

Mr. Lang asks: "If his object was the allowance of £50 a year, could the astute Welsh leave that detail out of 'the family oath,' and chance it recklessly?" The obvious answer to this question is: the transaction was an adoption, and not an agreement for the boarding out of "a remunerative guest."

Mr. Lang thinks the motive in connexion with the adoption of "extreme slimness." So an outsider might consider the motives for any adoption of another man's child, with all consequent troubles. But it is a matter of very common occurrence that childless parents do adopt other people's children; and there is always the accompanying desire, that so far as possible the adopted should be for ever cut off from their old homes, and only know as parents those who have adopted them.

No doubt Mary Brontë, like every childless wife, longed for a child: the mother's heart within her would yearn for one of her own kith and kin, who should grow up to sympathise with her, and protect her from the demon to whom she was bound, and, perhaps, in time restore the fallen fortunes of the Brontë home. And it was doubtless Mary Brontë who prevailed on her husband, by golden and other promises and prospects, to make the journey for the purpose of securing the child.

When we look at the matter in the light of these common, everyday considerations, there does not appear any improbability in the story told by Hugh. So far then from the motives for the adoption being slim, they were the strongest possible: the desire of a childless wife for a child of her own people, and the desire of the father to provide for one of his sons. To people with the land-hunger in their hearts, the old farm by the Boyne was a prize, the attainment of which was worth some risk.

That Hugh should have called one of his sons "Welsh" after the scoundrel whom he was accustomed to anathematise is strange; but it is a fact which no doubting can alter. Possibly Hugh's Celtic wrath may have relented after Welsh's tragic death. Welsh's end was one of the many tragic matters that I left out of my book. He returned home one night drunk, turned his wife out of the house, and was found burnt to a cinder on his own hearth. The Celtic heart does not hate the dead, and it is possible that Hugh's wrath may have given place to pity and kindly feeling.

Mr. Lang is no doubt acquainted with Bengel's Canon of Criticism, known as the difficilior (proclivi scriptiori præstat ardua), which teaches that the more unlikely reading is the more likely to be correct. Hugh Brontë was artist enough to have given the story a plausible turn, if it had not been true, especially as the Aunt Mary was on visiting terms with him at the time.

I had written thus far when I received a letter from an author and critic, bearing on the very question under discussion. I add an extract; and if I gave the name of the author, Mr. Lang would be the first to recognise his authority as equal to his own.

"Mr. Lang seems to me to approach the matter from the wrong side. He asks, in effect, 'What reason have we for supposing Hugh Brontë's story to be true?' Whereas the more sensible, as well as the more urbane question is, 'What reason have we for supposing it not to be true?' And to this question the only possible answer is, 'None whatever.' The mere existence of the story demands an explanation, and the most natural explanation is that it is a record of fact."

In submitting my replies to Mr. Lang's questions, I wish it to be clearly understood that Hugh Brontë's stories are given in my book exactly as I got them, and that nothing which I have advanced is involved in the question whether they are fact or fiction. At the same time, I maintain that the probabilities are overwhelmingly in their favour.

WILLIAM WRIGHT.

JOB XIX. 17.

Oxford: Dec. 30, 1893.

Before resorting to such a violent conjecture, would it not have been better if Mr. G. Margoliouth had consulted his predecessors? That וְהָיָה כִּי יִרְאֶה is corrupt was seen long ago by Merx; but his conjecture, וְהָיָה כִּי יִרְאֶה, is unsatisfactory. Let us, then, turn to Paul Haupt's critical edition of the Hebrew Old Testament, "part 17" of which, containing the Book of Job by Prof. Siegfried of Jena, has lately been published by Mr. David Nutt. We there find the new and satisfactory conjecture וְהָיָה כִּי יִרְאֶה "and I am become an abomination" (comp. xv. 16, and especially xix. 19). The half-legible fragments of this word, when drawn together, may have looked like וְהָיָה כִּי יִרְאֶה. Next, let us open Prof. Robertson Smith's learned and illuminative work on kinship in Arabia. There it is pointed out (p. 33) that "in all parts of Arabia one of the technical terms for a clan or sub-tribe is batn"; בְּנֵי בַטְנִי, therefore, may well mean, in such a book as Job, "the men of my clan," and the introduction of "pellices" (!) into Job's happy and united family becomes superfluous. But even had the case been different, a word like לִרְאֶה, not found in the Song of Solomon (see Song vi. 8), should not, I think, be conjecturally introduced into Job.

T. K. CHEYNE.

THE DISPUTED READING IN "INF." XXVIII. 135.

Exeter: Dec. 30, 1893.

It is admitted that "Il Re Giovane," as the designation of the prince to whom Bertran de Born gave mai conforti, was known by Dante to have been the name by which Bertran habitually described him in his writings. Therefore, even allowing that Dante may have wrongly supposed the prince's name to have been John, would it not be in accordance with probability, and characteristic of Dante, that he should make Bertran in Hell still speak of the prince as il re giovane, using the name by which he had called him in the world? The authority of the MSS. in favour of the reading "Giovanni" is, no doubt, a difficulty; but Dr. Moore, in the passage of his Textual Criticism to which Mr. Toynbee refers, gives cogent reasons for setting that authority aside in this particular case.

Mr. Toynbee, however, suggests that, if the writer of the Cento Novelle Antiche gives to the "Young King" the name of John, Dante may have made the same mistake. But this seems to be answered by the arguments of Dr. Moore (Text. Crit., p. 349), replying to Scartazzini and Philalethes, who urged a similar contention; unless, indeed, it can be shown that the writer of the Novelle was as much superior to his contemporaries in historical knowledge of the subject as we must suppose Dante to have been.

A. G. FERRERS HOWELL.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- MONDAY, Jan. 8, 5 p.m. London Institution: "The Pond and its People," by the Rev. Dr. Dallinger.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Painting," I., by Mr. J. E. Hodgson.
8 p.m. Aristotelian: "Bradley's Appearance and Reality," by Mr. H. W. Carr.
TUESDAY, Jan. 9, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Air: Gaseous and Liquid," VI., by Prof. Dewar.
4 p.m. Royal Medical: "Mountains," II., by Mr. Douglas W. Freshfield.
8 p.m. Biblical Archaeology: Anniversary Meeting; "Tarshish and Navigation among the Jews," by the Rev. Dr. A. Löwy.
8 p.m. Civil Engineers: "Concentration and Sizing of Crushed Minerals," by Mr. R. E. Commans.
8 p.m. Colonial Institute: "The Australian Outlook," by Miss Flora L. Shaw.
8 p.m. Library Association: "Scientific Text-books, and the Question of the Disposal of Out-of-date Editions," by Mr. Archibald Clarke; "Plea for a Closer Union between Public Libraries and other Public Educational Institutions, with the Outlines of a Plan," by Mr. J. Y. W. Macalister.
8.30 p.m. Anthropological Institute: "Two Funeral Urns from Loochoo," by Prof. Basil Hall Chamberlain; "Ethnological Notes on the New Hebrides," by Lieut. Boyle T. Somerville; "The Arungo and Marombo Ceremonies among the Tshinyai, and other Notes," by Mr. Lionel Deede.
WEDNESDAY, Jan. 10, 7 p.m. Society of Arts: "Plants: their Poes and Defences," II., by Mr. Walter Gardiner.
8 p.m. Geological.
8 p.m. Elizabethan: "William Browne of Tavistock," by Mr. A. H. Bullen.
THURSDAY, Jan. 11, 4 p.m. Royal Medical: "Mountains," III., by Mr. Douglas W. Freshfield.
8 p.m. London Institution: "Shakspeare in relation to his Contemporaries in the Fine Arts," by Mr. Wyke Bayliss.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Painting," II., by Mr. J. E. Hodgson.
8 p.m. United Service Institution: "The Coast-Lands of the North Atlantic," I., by Mr. H. J. Mackinder.
8 p.m. Mathematical.
8 p.m. Electrical Engineers: Inaugural Address by the President, Mr. Alexander Siemens.
8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.
FRIDAY, Jan. 12, 7.30 p.m. Ruskin: "The Sanguine Stain: Things Visible and Faith," by Mr. Sydney Robjohns.
8 p.m. Philological: A Dictionary Evening, by Mr. Henry Bradley.
8 p.m. Viking Club: "Some Historical Aspects of Old Northern Literature," by Mr. F. York Powell.
SATURDAY, Jan. 13, 11 a.m. Association for the Improvement of Geometrical Teaching: General Meeting.

SCIENCE.

PHILOLOGICAL BOOKS.

Grundriss der vergleichenden Grammatik der indogermanischen Sprachen. Vol II., Part 2, and Indices. By Karl Brugmann. (Strasburg: Trübner.) With these two volumes Prof. Brugmann has brought his great work to an end. The previous volumes of it have already been so fully reviewed in the ACADEMY that we need hardly say more about its last instalment than to congratulate the author on the successful completion of his task. It was a task which to many of us seemed too vast and ambitious to be undertaken by any single man. That it should have been accomplished, therefore, by a single scholar in so comparatively short a space of time is a matter of astonishment. The thoroughness and accuracy of the work as a whole make our astonishment the greater. The second part of the second volume continues the analysis of the verb. As in the first part of the volume, Prof. Brugmann shows a greater tendency to relapse into the old doctrine of agglutination in his explanation of flecational forms than we should have expected. However, he expresses himself very cautiously on the matter. Thus he tells us (p. 1331) that "we are not in a position to explain etymologically the signification of all the personal terminations. A part of them may originally have been independent personal pronouns." Certainty on the point can never be ascertained, the materials being wanting; all we can arrive at is a moderate degree of probability, based on the general direction which modern researches into historical examples of the growth of flection are taking. These, it seems to us, tell against the agglutinative theory, while the etymological arguments formerly adduced in favour of it have for the most part broken down. Taking a general survey of Prof. Brugmann's work, we cannot fail to be struck by one prominent fact. The number of examples upon which his phonetic laws and flecational equivalents are founded is extremely limited. The words in the several Indo-European languages which can be compared with one another with a reasonable amount of certainty is, after all, not very large. That is to say, the number of demonstrably certain etymologies, in spite of all the time and labour that have been bestowed upon the subject, is comparatively small. There are certain words the relationship and common origin of which is indubitable; but the number of them is not great, and for the most part their affinities have been recognised from the very beginning of comparative philology. A question of some importance is suggested by this fact. How can we be sure that the phonetic laws we have ascertained are not subject to numerous exceptions, or rather to the action of other laws with which we are not acquainted? A phonetic law is the generalised statement of a connected series of phonetic phenomena, but it holds good only of the phenomena from which it has been derived. These phenomena are uttered words; and where the phenomena are limited, the generalisations based upon them must be limited too. The difficulty is to know what is the extent and nature of the limitation, since it is still impossible to co-ordinate the phenomena that lie outside them: that is to say, to find clear and certain etymologies for the larger part of the Indo-European vocabulary. And yet a single new etymology might very materially modify the generalisations we have made, and limit the action of our phonetic laws in an unexpected manner.

Précis de Grammaire Comparée de l'Anglais et de l'Allemand, rapportés à leur commune origine et rapprochés des langues classiques. Par Victor Henry. (Paris: Hachette.) The object of this very able and interesting book is to enable students who know something of modern German and modern English, to understand the relation in phonology and grammar between those languages, and their common relation to Greek and Latin. The learner is not assumed to have any previous acquaintance either with the earlier stages of English and German, or with the other Germanic dialects; the necessary data being furnished as they are required. The attempt is novel and somewhat daring, but M. Henry has been in a surprising degree successful. The book, in fact, forms an excellent introduction to the comparative philology of the Indo-European languages; its peculiar value being due to the fact that the principles of the science are throughout presented in their application to the explanation of phenomena with which the learner is already familiar. The index of English words illustrated contains about nine hundred entries, and the index of German words nearly as many. In the nomenclature there are several points which will be interesting to readers more accustomed to German than to French philological literature. The word phonème for a sound-element, i.e., that which in speech occupies the same place that a "letter" occupies in written language, supplies a real need. The term "sound" is inconveniently 'indefinite, so that it is sometimes difficult to avoid misusing "letter" in this sense. Apophonie and metaphonie, the literal equivalents of ablaut and umlaut, have the advantage of being in accordance with the general principles of French scientific nomenclature, and also that of admitting of the formation of adjectives from them. Possibly they may sometime come to be adopted in English, though the attempt to introduce them would certainly at first meet with opposition. M. Henry uses prégermanique to denote what German philologists call urgermanisch. This seems unfortunate, as it leaves him unprovided with any equivalent for vorgermanisch, which expresses a notion that is often indispensable to lucidity of exposition. The three ablaut-grades represented in the words λείπω, ἔλιπον, λέλοιπα, are designated by M. Henry as état normal, état réduit, and état fléchi. We do not quite see the ground for the selection of the last of these names, though it is a good thing to have definite names of some sort. In the main M. Henry's statements are remarkably correct, but a few apparent oversights may be mentioned. The words father, butter, &c., do not end in a vocalic r. We have genuine l, m, and n vowels, but the vocalic r is unknown in English. The word house is not "a loan-word from Scandinavian" (p. 38). Busy should not be cited as an example of a word with original u; the Anglo-Saxon bysig is more correctly bisig. The word god is referred to a masculine theme ghutós; but in original Germanic it was neuter, the change of gender being due to Christianity. Boy can hardly descend from an Anglo-Saxon **bōfig*. Hill is not cognate with hügel. It is not necessary to explain the voicing of the final consonant in knowledge by the analogy of words with the suffix -age; the phenomenon is strictly normal (cf. the common pronunciation of Greenwich, Woolwich), its cause being identical with that usually supposed to be operative in Verner's Law. Henchman certainly never meant "hangman," and the comparison with the German henker is unfortunate. It is a mistake to say that doom's-day is ever written as two words; and Oxford is not an "asyntactic" compound, the original form being Ornaford. On p. 235 there is a curious inadvertence; M. Henry seems for the moment to have thought that the k of the High German kalb corresponds to a common Germanic g. It is not possible (notwithstanding the high authority of Kluge) that ever can be the etymological equivalent of the German immer. The modern starve for sterve is not due to the substitution of the preterite form for the present; it is a normal result of a phonetic law, which has been a good deal interfered with by mixture of dialects. M. Henry adopts, perhaps too unhesitatingly, the theory of Collitz, that the Germanic weak preterite originated from the third person singular of the Indo-European perfect middle. It is impossible not to feel attracted by this brilliant conjecture; but it requires a large amount of supplementary hypothesis to make it square with the facts. The note on p. 349, which says that, according to phonetic law, "l'anglais devrait conjuguer choose **cheesest* et **frooze freezest*" embodies a serious misconception. No such form as frooze could have arisen by the operation of any known law: the Old-English frēosan is quite normally represented by freeze, and the reason why ēosan has become choose and not chese is that the initial palatal (in some dialect) absorbed the first element of the diphthong. These somewhat minute criticisms do not seriously detract from the value of M. Henry's book, which we warmly recommend to those who are beginning the study of comparative philology.

SCIENCE NOTES.

PROF. RAMÓN Y CAJAL, of Madrid, has been chosen to deliver the Croonian lecture before the Royal Society this year. His subject will be "The Minute Structure of the Nervous System"; and the date fixed is March 1.

At the annual meeting of the Académie des Sciences, held on December 18, the following prizes were awarded to American astronomers: the Arago medal to Mr. Assaph Hall for his researches on the satellites of Mars, and to Mr. E. E. Barnard for his researches on the first satellite of Jupiter; and the Janssen gold medal to Mr. Samuel Langley for his researches in astronomical physics.

The Dawn of Astronomy, by Prof J. Norman Lockyer—whose name appears with a C.B. among the honours of the New Year—will be issued in this country by Messrs. Cassell & Co. on January 15, and will be published simultaneously in America.

THE index to the thirty reports of the British Association, from 1861 to 1890, is now ready, and may be obtained from Mr. John Murray.

UNDER the auspices of the Royal Geographical Society, Mr. H. J. Mackinder, reader in geography at Oxford, will deliver a course of ten educational lectures in the theatre of the Royal United Service Institution, Whitehall, on successive Thursdays, at 8 p.m., beginning on January 11. The subject of the course is, "The Relations of Geography to History, with special reference to the Coastlands of the North Atlantic"; and the lectures will be illustrated with the oxy-hydrogen lantern. Admission to the opening lecture is free.

ON behalf of the same society, Mr. Douglas W. Freshfield, president of the Alpine Club, is to deliver three Christmas lectures to young people, on "Mountains," in the hall of the Royal Medical Society, Hanover-square, to-day (Saturday), and on Tuesday and Thursday of next week, at 4 p.m.

THE Rev. Dr. Dallinger will deliver a lecture at the London Institution, on Monday next, at 5 p.m., entitled "The Pond and its People: a Modern Study of Minute Life and Beauty," illustrated with lantern slides.

A COURSE of six lectures to working men, on "Plant Structure considered in relation to the Environment," will be delivered by Mr. J. B. Farmer at the Museum of Practical Geology, Jermyn-street, beginning on Monday next, January 8, at 8 p.m.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE Bishop of Salisbury and the Rev. H. J. White have circulated a letter entitled: "On the Question of what Greek MSS., or Class of Greek MSS., St. Jerome used in revising the Latin Gospels." They state that, in the course of their work of revision of St. Jerome's text of the Gospels, the conviction has been gradually forced upon them that Jerome's Greek MSS. must have exhibited a type of text which is not represented by any class of MSS., and sometimes not by any one existing MS. They admit that peculiar readings may sometimes be explained by carelessness on Jerome's part, sometimes by his desire to avoid unnecessary change from the text of the Old-Latin, and sometimes by very early corruption of the text after it left his hands; but they contend that these explanations do not cover all the phenomena. They proceed to print examples of readings which have produced the above conviction, under three heads: (1) cases where Jerome has introduced into the Latin text readings which are not found, or scarcely found at all, in Old-Latin MSS., and which do not occur in any Greek MSS. at present known; (2) verses of which the Greek counterpart appears half in one family of MSS., and half in another; (3) Vulgate readings which have only partial and sporadic attestation in existing Greek MSS. Finally, they appeal to students to help them in looking up Greek MSS. at present uncollated or insufficiently collated, in order that their own conclusions, to be published as part of the epilogue to the forthcoming fasciculus containing St. John, may be as sound as possible.

FINE ART.

OLD MASTERS AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

I.

ONCE more it is proved by the winter exhibition of the Royal Academy that the artistic riches of England are practically inexhaustible. During the last few years, many of her finest collections have been scattered, and unfortunately to a great extent absorbed into the public and private galleries of Germany, France, Belgium, and, above all, of the United States. All the same, the stream continues to flow up to the present time with scarcely diminished volume, and Burlington House will be found to contain this year not a few surprises even for the keenest and best instructed student of the old masters. The exhibition may be said to contain no less than five distinct sections. A great feature is, as usual, the display of English art; and here we find not only the canvases of Hogarth, Sir Joshua Reynolds, Gainsborough, Romney, Wilson, Turner, Cotman, Crome, and the minor divinities, for which one looks naturally on such an occasion; but also examples of John Phillip, George Mason, Frederick Walker, and a Scottish artist of great merit, George Paul Chalmers. An entire room is allotted to the paintings, sketches, and designs of Thomas Stothard, who has never before appeared to such advantage; and yet another to William Blake's replica set of illustrations to the Book of Job, painted for the late John Linnell. Another feature of the collection is the In Memoriam exhibition of oil paintings by the late John Pettie, R.A., which fills the gallery beyond that allotted to the early Italian and Netherlandish schools. With these latter and the works of the full Renaissance we propose to deal in the first place. It is in this section, as usual, that there is most to discuss from the critical standpoint, the attraction of the problem to be solved being in many instances superadded to the æsthetic enjoyment of the work of art.

The "Virgin and Child" (Dr. J. P. Richter), ascribed to Giovanni Bellini, would, if by that great master, belong to his early Paduan period. The grand, sculptural head of the Madonna is not unworthy of him, but the type of the divine Bambino is such as we meet with nowhere else in his early works: the hands are more slender than his, the landscape is harder and more summary. The "Virgin and Child" (Earl of Northbrook), also given to Giovanni Bellini, and wrongly described as "Virgin and Child with Saints and Angels," is, as the Catalogue states, the replica of the central group in the picture, once famous as Bellini's, in the sacristy of the Redentore Church, Venice. That picture is now, by general consent, withdrawn from the caposcuola and given to Bissolo, to whom must also be ascribed Lord Northbrook's Bellinesque Madonna. Again, we must question the attribution to Bellini of the highly elaborated "St. Jerome" (no name of owner), which is at any rate an admirable example of his school and period. It must either be a production of Bassiti in his Bellinesque phase, or a Cima da Conegliano. We prefer the latter hypothesis, the picture bearing a marked family resemblance to the "St. Jerome" from Hamilton Palace, now in the National Gallery, and to the similar and still finer panel in the Brera Gallery at Milan. Interesting questions arise, too, in connexion with the "Virgin and Child" (Chas. Butler, Esq.), ascribed to Mantegna, and which, though a genuine Paduan work of the Quattrocento, is certainly not from his hand. The design of the central group is identical with that of a larger tempera, No. 27, in the Berlin Gallery, also ascribed, though with a query, to Mantegna. The latter has, however, in lieu of the characteristic landscape background of this example, a plain blue ground, and an outer frame with groups of angels or putti. The touch in the two panels is absolutely different; yet neither can be accepted as a genuine work of the mighty Paduan himself, though both are very probably derived from a design or drawing of his. A genuine example of the Bellinesque Vincenzo Catena, in the hard, glassy manner of his earlier time, is the "Virgin and Child with Saints and Donors" (Miss Henriette Hertz): it bears a close resemblance to two pieces of about the same time in the National Gallery at Budapest. An equally genuine but rather later Cstens, not in the best condition, is the curious "Christ giving the Keys to St. Peter" (Dr. J. P. Richter). The picture in its present state is not, on the whole, an attractive one. It contains, nevertheless, one daring and notable piece of colour—an allegorical figure (Charity?), robed all in white with palest blonde hair, relieved against a sky of faint blue. We cannot accept as Cima's own the large and imposing upright figure—"The Saviour" (Chas. Butler, Esq.)—notwithstanding its rich colour and glowing landscape. The execution shows neither in the figure nor in the landscape the searching character which we invariably associate with his work. To the early time of Francesco Francia, when he was still the aurifex, still under the influence of Lorenzo Costa, belongs the "Virgin and Child" (Ludwig Mond, Esq.). A delightful little early Crivelli, in the perfect preservation which distinguishes the temperas of this master, is Lord Northbrook's "Virgin and Child"; and a peculiarly quaint and distinctive example of early Umbrian art, the "Virgin and Child" (No. 155), which is here by some curious slip set down to Cima da Conegliano, though it has hitherto been ascribed, and probably rightly ascribed, to that scarce Perugian, Fiorenzo di Lorenzo. A charming and, to our thinking, quite genuine specimen of Filippino Lippi (No. 156, no name of owner) is the "Tobias and the Angel"—yet another version of the subject so dear to the Florentine painters of the latter half of the fifteenth century. The youthful Tobias topples over as he walks in rather disquieting fashion; but the figure of the archangel is of great beauty, and in type very characteristic of Filippino. We hail with genuine satisfaction the appearance of two new and finely preserved Botticellis, "Scenes from the Life of San Zenobio" (Ludwig Mond, Esq.), which are beyond all question from his own hand, and not merely from his bottega, like so many of the quaint decorative panels, tondi, &c., exhibited under his name at the New Gallery. These scenes in the life of the saint are conceived with all the flutter, all the feverish excitement, which is so peculiar to Botticelli when he has freed himself from all extraneous influences. The execution, with the characteristic defects of the master, has also that conciseness and precision of outline which distinguish him from his numerous followers and imitators. Another fine panel by Botticelli of much the same dimensions, and treating the same subject, though not in identical fashion, is No. 9 in the Dresden Gallery. Mr. J. T. Heseltine's "Virgin and Child with St. John," charming as it is in design and colour, shows certain weaknesses of draughtsmanship and modelling which prevent us from attributing it to the master himself. A smaller and finer example of the same subject is in the Poldi-Pezzoli Museum at Milan; and a weaker repetition of the main group, also ascribed to Botticelli, finds a place in the present exhibition of the New Gallery. A reappearance on these walls is that of Melozzo da Forlì's curious "Federigo and Guidobaldo da Montefeltro, Dukes of Urbino," lent by the Queen, from Windsor Castle. Injured as is the large panel, it still appears a highly interesting example of Quattrocento portraiture, showing very strongly the influence of the first in order of Italian chiaroscurists, Piero dei Franceschi (or della Francesca as he is commonly called). Some part of the obscurity of the almost Rembrandtesque chiaroscuro is, no doubt, due to darkening and restoration; but all the same, the original scheme of light and shade must have been, for the time, a very bold and original one. That Melozzo was a remarkable chiaroscurist is conclusively shown in the much better preserved figures of "Rhetoric" and "Music," which since 1866 have been in the National Gallery. The Queen's picture, these two panels, and two more—"Astronomy" and "Logic"—now in an injured condition in the Berlin Gallery, formed part of a great scheme of decoration in one of the chambers of the beautiful Palace of Urbino. Three other panels, which represented "Grammar," "Geometry," and "Arithmetic," and made up, with the pictures of London and Berlin, the Trivium and Quadrivium of the Sciences, have disappeared; the Windsor picture is apart from, and yet apparently belongs to, this set. It may have been intended as the crowning decoration of the whole, showing Federigo de Montefeltro as the patron of letters and science, by the emblematic figures of which he is surrounded. Two vigorous little panels, stimulating and quite Veronese in colour, by Niccolò Giolino, a painter not to be rightly understood out of his native Verona, are respectively styled "Coronation of a King" and "Beheading of a King" (167 and 171, no name of owner). A place of honour in the great room is rightly accorded to Sebastiano del Piombo's imposing "Holy Family" (Earl of Northbrook), a work of Michelangesque power, marked by passages of magnificent draughtsmanship. It is, however, already somewhat forced and empty in its dignity, somewhat self-conscious in its obtrusive victory over technical difficulties—as the works of Buonarroti's followers were too apt to be. Sebastiano has here already passed through the transitional phase, in which he mingled with unique success the styles of Giorgione and Raphael, that phase to which we owe such masterpieces (all of them formerly and some still attributed to Raphael) as the so-called "Fornarina" of the Tribuna, the "Dorothea," which from Blenheim has passed to Berlin, the "Violin Player," until recently in the Sciarra Palace at Rome, and perhaps the so-called "Portrait of Raphael by Himself," in the Czartoryski collection at Cracow. The Venetian still peeps forth, all the same, in certain passages of colour in Lord Northbrook's picture, and stands revealed in the quite Giorgionesque portrait of the donor kneeling in adoration before the Virgin. The "Portrait of a Senator" (Duke of Abercorn), ascribed to Raphael: is a splendid example of Cinquecento portraiture, which would do no discredit even to the greatest master. The half-figure of an elderly grey-bearded man stands fronting the spectator in imposing calm, wearing sumptuous black and white robes unrelieved by any colour. The peculiar technique, the cold yet impressive colour-harmony are, if we are not greatly mistaken, those of Parmigianino. We know that the mannered yet extraordinarily gifted Parmese painter submitted at one time to the influence of the Roman school, and to that of Giulio Romano in particular; while the latter master certainly in his late works showed that he was not proof against those meretricious attractions of Parmigianino, which were so irresistibly and fatally fascinating to his contemporaries. Next to this portrait hangs another fine work by the same artist, a "Holy Family" (Chas. Morrison, Esq.), painted throughout in a high, cold key, with a careful finish which does not exclude breadth, and showing at once all his faults and all his merits. It is impossible to accept as from the brush of Angelo Bronzino the agreeable but by no means first-rate "Portrait of a Lady" (Chas. Butler, Esq.), which entirely lacks the strength and authority of the Florentine master, and is not even of his school. New to us, and certainly one of the most exquisite things in the exhibition, is the "Flute Player," by the Brescian painter, Gian Girolamo Savoldo. It confirms that he, like his fellow-townsmen, Romanino, was strongly affected by the art of Giorgione, who, indeed, cast his magic spells, not over Venice alone, but over the whole eastern corner of Northern Italy. The subject is of the simplest. A pensive, brown-haired young man, in a rich but sober fur-trimmed gown, with a black hat and feather, sits looking naively out of the picture, holding a flute in both hands. The dusky reds of the flesh-tints, the shifting greys of the mantle, and the tones of the background are very characteristic of Savoldo, by whom, moreover, the piece is signed en toutes lettres. The "Mother and Child"—why not "Virgin and Child"?—(Ludwig Mond, Esq.) belongs to the latest period of Titian, and gives one more proof that he possessed in extreme old age a masterly facility, a power of summarising form by a succession of broad, simple touches, which is in itself sufficient to give a distinctive character to the works of his last decade. This canvas, which is a study rather than a picture, comes from the Dudley collection. The large "Christ among the Doctors," by Paris Bordone (Dr. J. P. Richter), is a very important example of the sumptuous Venetian in a phase of his art otherwise very imperfectly represented in England. In the splendid glow of the colour, in the treatment of the architectural motives, it recalls the "Fisherman presenting the Ring of St. Mark to the Doge," in the Accademia at Venice, but in coherency of composition stands far behind that famous work. The large canvases by Leandro Bassano and Bonifazio Veneziano call for no especial mention. Difficult questions are raised by the highly-finished and finely-preserved "Virgin and Child" attributed to Andrea Solaro (Andrew McKay, Esq.). It is not to be denied that it is very closely related to the well-known "Vierge au coussin vert," by the Milanese master, in the Louvre, of which panel though its design is entirely different, it reproduces the local colours and the general tonality. On the other hand, there is a something vacuous and lifeless in the expression of the Virgin, there is a certain stiffness and awkwardness in the pose and arrangement, leading us to suspect that the painting must be, not by the master himself, but by some close follower or imitator. The landscape, with its quaint little group of figures, differs entirely from any landscape of Solaro's with which we are acquainted. Very good examples of Bernardo Bellotto—so often confused with his uncle, Antonio Canale (Canaletto), though he equalled him neither in authority nor in charm—are the two large "Views of Dresden" (Lord Hillingdon). They no doubt once belonged to the great series of similar views by the artist which are now hung, with the late Italian and French works, in the lower rooms of the Dresden Gallery.

CLAUDE PHILLIPS.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE collection of casts at South Kensington Museum, though not so large as it ought to be, is of great interest, and the examples are well chosen. Up to the present time they have been exhibited in a rather confused fashion in the high gallery, whose floor they overfilled. It is now proposed to remove them to the neighbouring corridor, at present occupied by textiles. An experiment has been made in this direction, and is found very satisfactory. The casts are individually better seen. The Laocoon group, for instance, is now placed against the wall under an arch, which frames it satisfactorily, and the corresponding arches of the wall-arcade serve equally well to divide and group with other important works. At the same time the tapestries, which previously hung in the corridor, are now being moved into the old cast gallery, and gain immensely by the change. They were formerly illuminated by light from the windows in front of them, which left their upper portions insufficiently lit. They now enjoy a brilliant top light, which reveals their splendid effect of colour, and at the same time, falling as it does very obliquely, will produce a minimum of fading. The change inaugurated by Prof. Middleton is a great improvement in all respects.

MR. W. BISCOMBE GARDNER is engraving on wood the portrait of Mr. George Meredith, which Mr. G. F. Watts has just finished painting. A limited number of artist's proofs will be printed, of the size of about 12 by 9 inches. Subscribers should apply direct to the engraver, Hind Head, near Haslemere.

MESSRS. HENRY GRAVES & Co. will have on view next week, at their gallery in Pall Mall, a collection of sporting and other pictures, by Mr. Douglas Adams.

THE engraved work of Mr. C. W. Sherborn, or a very considerable portion of it, has been gathered together for exhibition in New York before ever that honour has been paid to it in England. Mr. Keppel has been lately exhibiting there no less than seventy of Mr. Sherborn's prints, a few of which are etchings, while the greater number are the line engravings for book plates, at once exquisite and masculine, which have become this artist's admitted speciality. There are forty-four book-plates, the first of which (the plate for Mr. Sherborn's own books) was done, we are surprised to note, as long ago as 1873, but the year 1889 appears to have been the most prolific year, about five-and-twenty book-plates being assigned to that date. Of course, certain of the plates now exhibited in New York have at different periods found their way to the Royal Academy and to the Royal Society of Painter-Etchers, but they have appeared at either rather as "single spies" than in "battalions." A very interesting minor exhibition could be made by bringing them altogether under one roof in London, for there is not only wonderful merit but great variety in them, albeit they most of them own the inspiration of that high German art which was practised most perfectly by Dürer, Aldegrever, and the Behams. From one influence which is rather widely spread among our weaker ornamentists—the influence, we mean, of the modern pre-Raphaelite, who, as the Arts and Crafts display him, is too apt to be morbid of vision, if not incompetent of hand—Mr. Sherborn, we need hardly declare, is wholly free. His work is of singular ingenuity and of mature and accomplished art.

A CORRESPONDENT writes: "We learn from the Aftenposten of Christiania that Norwegian art has sustained a serious loss in the death, at Berlin, on December 23, of the young landscape painter, Gunnar Berg, of Svolvaer, in the Lofoten Islands. Gunnar Berg was only thirty years of age, but he had already won for himself a considerable reputation as a colourist and a vigorous and truthful painter of the scenery of his native islands, especially of the picturesque scenes connected with the winter fisheries. He had studied painting at Paris and also at Berlin, and was known in both those cities; but he only exhibited once in London—at the German Exhibition at Earl's Court in 1892—when his fine picture, 'Svolvaer Harbour in Winter,' occupied the place of honour in the Berlin room. Gunnar Berg was a singularly handsome man and a great athlete. His grand physique and genial, simple manners will cause him to be long remembered by those English visitors to Norway who had the privilege of knowing him."

We have received from the Autotype Company a remarque proof of an autogravure after a design by Mr. Frederick Shields, suggested by the well-known verses of William Blake, beginning "Little lamb, who made thee." The design consists of two little girls and a lamb in a green field. The elder child is kneeling, and the other stands looking over her shoulder at the lamb. The expression of the elder, as, with finger raised, she puts the question to the lamb is simple and earnest, and the whole group is inspired with a spiritual sentiment in sympathy with Blake's verses, and worthy of the artist. The faces of the children are of much beauty, but the arms of the elder strike us as belonging to a younger girl.

THE STAGE.

WE have ever been among the admirers of Miss Ada Rehan. She is probably the strongest comic actress of any stage on which the English language is spoken. But, like other actresses, her art is to be analysed and reasonably appraised; whereas in at least one of our contemporaries—a generally lively evening newspaper is the worst sinner in this respect—simple hysteria, on the subject of this lady, takes the place of judgment. Miss Rehan has been seen during the present week in that which is in the main, if it is not altogether, Garrick's adaptation of Wycherley's "Country Wife." For the part of the Country Girl—Garrick's name for a piece in which it had been found desirable to change the condition of the heroine—Miss Ada Rehan is still admirably adapted. Her robust humour, her animal spirits (almost as "unfailing" as Lord Rosebery's "tact"), not to speak of her mature acquaintance with the exigencies of the boards, singularly fit her for this impersonation. As we have remarked before, an actress's range is limited, and her domain dominated by her own personality: rarely does even the greatest art permit her an achievement foreign to her physique, her temperament, or her years. Miss Rehan can never have been an ideal Lady Teazle, though a skilful and capable Lady Teazle, in a way of her own, she has, of course, shown herself. Her judicious admirers must accordingly have been glad to note her recent relinquishment of the part, and her resumption of one of those characters which certainly she was born to play. In "The Country Girl," just as in "The School for Scandal," she has had the strongest support from Mr. William Farren, in certain parts one of the most admirable of English comedians, and one who assuredly should be seen always in such comedy as is old and legitimate. Next week, at Daly's, "The Country Girl" is to give place to Shakspeare's "Twelfth Night." That it will be played with great intelligence by what we must now take leave to consider rather an Anglo-American than an American company is, of course, not to be doubted; but we confess we like little the proposal to play the piece in four acts instead of in five. The less a classical text is tampered with the better; the Daly Company did not deal gingerly, by any means, with "The School for Scandal": it adopted somewhat heroic measures in recasting and abridgment, and absolutely to no useful or justifiable end. The company, we hear, does not remain with us for many weeks more. When it comes back again, it will be received with none the less favour by our better class of playgoers, if it does not signalise its return by the presentation of any maimed version of an English classic. Not the most gifted company under the sun can with impunity trifle with the text of the masterpieces of our dramatic literature—things written at epochs when the best imaginative work was wont to take dramatic form.

Mr. ZANGWILL, in a very modest but not the less successful or less creditable way, has made his début as a dramatist. His little one-act piece, in which but two artists perform, is presented at the Haymarket, at the hour of the curtain-raiser; but a curtain-raiser in quality it certainly is not. It is singularly ingenious and able, the notion of it being suggested by a sentence by a thoughtful if whimsical American man of letters. Mr. Zangwill, when he is not engaged upon the more serious of his work, loves paradox and surprise. His singularly alert and flexible talent—a talent by no means devoid of subtlety, though it has known how to be popular—finds appropriate exercise in the curiously clever little piece which is performed at the Haymarket.

MUSIC.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

The Old English Edition—Nos. 1-7. Edited by G. E. P. Arkwright. (Joseph Williams.) With the object of this edition earnest musicians will be in full sympathy. In the Preface, we read that "it is intended to reprint a selection from the music hidden away in public and private libraries, which is almost unknown, except to antiquaries and collectors of rare books." This hidden music is often of value and interest, and old English compositions cut a very respectable figure by the side of much modern music. The songs of the Masque written in honour of the marriage of Lord Hayes (1607), words by Thomas Campion, music by various composers, are delightfully simple and quaint. No. 2 contains six songs by Dr. Arne, including "Not on beds of fading flowers," from Milton's "Comus." The pianoforte accompaniments are arranged from the original scores, which are also given at the end of the volume; the composer of "Where the Bee sucks" needs no commendation. Nos. 3-5 contain Madrigals by George Kirbye, known by his settings of old psalm-tunes for The Whole Book of Psalms, published by Thomas Este in 1592. The Introduction to No. 3 gives an interesting account of this Kirbye, considered one of the best of English Madrigal writers. His music is remarkable, not only for contrapuntal ingenuity, but for clearness of rhythm and expression. Nos. 6 and 7 are devoted to the songs of the famous old master, William Byrd. Mr. H. Ellis Wooldridge has given valuable help and advice in the preparation of these volumes.

Dances Humoresques. By Sig. Stojowski (Op. 12). (Stanley Lucas.) This collection consists of six pianoforte pieces. There are plaintive phrases which recall Chopin, and brilliant passages which remind one of Liszt; but still the music contains an original element which is welcome. Only players of refined taste and good technique ought to venture on these pieces; for otherwise the peculiarities, involving difficulties of phrasing or execution, would become too prominent.

THE following are published by Mr. C. Woolhouse:

Six Songs by H. Heine, music by Noel Johnson. It is difficult, after Schubert and Schumann, to render justice to any other settings of Heine. Mr. Noel Johnson is an excellent composer, and the songs under notice are expressive; but yet there seems in them, on the whole, work rather than warmth. There is a feeling of restraint with which, considering the echoes of the past, it is only too easy to sympathise. The same composer's "Sae wait I for you, lassie," is a quiet, quaint little song. "In Foreign Lands," by J. J. Haakman (Op. 11), Book 2, are clever pieces for the pianoforte. The one entitled "In Russia" is rather long, and its varied moods seem to require an explanatory programme. They are arranged also as duets, and from the writing we conclude they first appeared in that form. J. J. Haakman has also published a Method for the Violin (Op. 17): the subject matter is well arranged, and there are some excellent illustrations. The statement in reference to the harmonic minor scale, that "there is another minor scale according to a German professor, Herr Gottfried Weber," is, to say the least, peculiar. J. S. SHEEDLOCK.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER, BELFAST,

Were awarded the Grand Diploma of Honour—Highest Award for Irish Damask Table Linen, Edinburgh, 1890
Two Prize Medals, Paris, 1889.

IRISH DAMASK TABLE AND HOUSE LINEN.

Fish Napkins, 2s. 11d. per doz. Dinner Napkins, 5s. 6d. per doz. Table Cloths, 2 yds. square, 2s. 11d. 2½ yds. by 3 yds., 5s. 11d. each. Kitchen Table Cloths, 11½d. each. Strong Huckaback Towels, 4s. 6d. per doz. Frilled Linen Pillow Cases, from 1s. 2½d. each.

IRISH CAMBRIC

Embroidered Handkerchiefs, in all the latest styles, from 1s. to 20s. each.

Children's Bordered, 1s. 3d. per doz.
Ladies' " 2s. 3d. "
Gentlemen's " 3s. 3d. "

Hemstitched:
Ladies', 2s. 9d. per doz.
Gents', 3s. 11d. "

POCKET HANDKERCHIEFS.

COLLARS: Ladies' and Children's 2-fold, 3s. 6d. per doz. Gents' 4-fold, 4s. 11d. per doz.
CUFFS for Ladies, Gentlemen, and Children, from 5s. 11d. per doz.

IRISH LINEN

Illustrated Price-Lists and Samples Post Free to any part of the World.

COLLARS, CUFFS, SHIRTS.

Best quality long-cloth Shirts, 4-fold Linen Fronts, 36s. 6d. half-dozen. (To measure 2s. extra.)

BY SPECIAL
APPOINTMENTS TO
THE QUEEN AND EMPRESS FREDERICK
OF GERMANY.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER, BELFAST.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE'S LIST OF SCHOOL BOOKS.

PROGRESSIVE FRENCH READERS.

By Prof. LÉON DELBOS, of H.M.S. "Britannia," late of King's College, London.

LITTLE EUGÈNE'S FRENCH READER: for Beginners. Anecdotes and Tales. Edited with Notes and a Complete Vocabulary. Third Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d.

THE STUDENT'S GRADUATED FRENCH READER, for the Use of Public Schools. I. FIRST YEAR. Anecdotes, Tales, Historical Pieces. Edited with Notes and a Complete Vocabulary. Eighth Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s.

THE STUDENT'S GRADUATED FRENCH READER, for the Use of Public Schools. II. SECOND YEAR. Historical Pieces and Tales. Edited with Notes. Sixth Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s.

"It would be no easy matter to find a French Reader more completely satisfactory in every respect than that of M. Delbos."—Athenæum.
 "This is a very satisfactory collection from the best authors, selected with great care and supplied with adequate notes. . . . A thoroughly good book of this kind should in fact be calculated to inspire a taste for literature in the student's mind. The volumes edited by M. Delbos fairly meet this requirement."—Journal of Education.

EUGÈNE'S STUDENT'S COMPARATIVE

GRAMMAR of the FRENCH LANGUAGE, with an Historical Sketch of the Formation of French. For the Use of Public Schools. With Exercises. By G. EUGÈNE FAENAGHT, late French Master in Westminster School. Fifteenth Edition, thoroughly Revised. Square crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. Or Grammar, 3s.; Exercises, 2s. 6d.

"In itself this is in many ways the most satisfactory Grammar for beginners that we have as yet seen. . . . The book is likely to be useful to all who wish either to learn or to teach the French language."—Athenæum.

"The appearance of a Grammar like this is in itself a sign that great advance is being made in the teaching of modern languages. . . . The rules and observations are all scientifically classified and explained. . . . It is one that we can strongly recommend for use in the higher forms of large schools."—Educational Times.

EUGÈNE'S FRENCH METHOD: Elementary

French Lessons. Easy Rules and Exercises preparatory to the "Student's Comparative French Grammar." Fourteenth Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d.

FRENCH for BEGINNERS: Lessons, Systematic, Practical, and Etymological. By J. LEMAISTRE. To proceed "Eugène's Method" and the various Elementary French books. Second Edition. Cloth, 2s.

VICTOR HUGO. Edited for the Use of Schools, by J. BOÏELLE, Senior French Master in Dulwich College.

LES MISÉRABLES: les Principaux Episodes. Edited with Life and Notes. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, each 3s. 6d.

NOTRE-DAME DE PARIS. Adapted for the Use of Schools and Colleges. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, each 3s.
 By the SAME EDITOR.

FRENCH COMPOSITION THROUGH LORD MACAULAY'S ENGLISH. Crown 8vo, cloth, with Notes, Hints, and Introduction.

Vol. I. FREDERICK the GREAT. 3s.—Vol. II. WARREN HASTINGS. 3s. 6d.—Vol. III. LORD CLIVE. 3s.

FIRST STEPS in FRENCH HISTORY, LITERATURE, and PHILOLOGY. For Candidates for the Scotch Leaving-Certificate Examination, the various Universities Local Examinations, and the Army Examinations. By F. F. ROGET, French Lecturer St. Andrews University. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"This manual will be a boon to many who have neither time nor inclination to work through a large volume on the history of French literature, but who yet desire to obtain a knowledge sufficient to enable them to pigeon-hole their reading of French prose and poetry."—Educational Times.

"Compiled with high aims. . . . The outcome of considerable study and reflection."—Journal of Education.

"The volume is everywhere written with conscience and accuracy, and cannot fail to prove useful."—Scotsman.

"He has displayed qualities which are rarer and more praiseworthy than mere erudition."—Saturday Review.

AN INTRODUCTION to OLD FRENCH: History Grammar, Chrestomathy, and Glossary. By the SAME AUTHOR. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE MODERN FRENCH CLASS BOOK.

Specially prepared to meet the Requirements of the Merit and Leaving-Certificate Examinations. By PAUL TERROUX, late Greenock Academy. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d. net.

THE ARMY SERIES OF FRENCH AND GERMAN NOVELS. Edited by J. T. W. Perowne, M.A.

NEW VOLUME JUST READY.

ERZÄHLUNGEN. E. Hoefer. 3s.

LE COUP DE PISTOLET, &c. Prosper Mérimée. 2s. 6d.

"A book more admirably suited to its purpose could not be desired. The editor deserves to be congratulated."—National Observer.
 "The first two volumes are an excellent choice, and we advise anyone, whether candidate or lay, to purchase the volume of Mérimée."—Journal of Education.

VAILLANTE. Jacques Vincent. 2s. 6d.

"The books are well got up, and in 'Vaillante' an excellent choice has been made."—Scotsman.

"The notes are few and brief, but all are helpful."—Guardian.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON; AND 20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.

FOR THE OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE SCHOOLS AND LOCAL EXAMINATIONS, 1894.

"Messrs. Williams and Norgate's useful series."—Speaker.

FRENCH CLASSICS for ENGLISH STUDENTS.

Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by LÉON DELBOS, M.A., of H.M.S. "Britannia," Dartmouth, late of King's College.

Messrs. WILLIAMS & NORGATE having determined to re-issue this series in a cheaper form, they can now be obtained as under:—

Price per Volume, sewed, 6d.; paper boards, 9d.

- |  |  |
|--|--|
| 1. RACINE.—LES PLAIDEURS.              | 8. XAV. DE MAISTRE.—PRISONNIERS DE GUERRE, and LE LÉPREUX D'AOSTE. |
| 2. CORNEILLE.—HORACE.                  | 9. LAFONTAINE.—FABLES.   |
| 3. CORNEILLE.—Cinna.                   | 10. MOLIÈRE.—MISANTHROPE. By G. H. Clarke.                         |
| 4. MOLIÈRE.—LE BOU ROZOIS GENTILHOMME. | 11. MOLIÈRE.—FOURBERIES DE SCAPIN. By G. H. Clarke.                |
| 5. CORNEILLE.—LE CID.                  |  |
| 6. MOLIÈRE.—LES PRÉCIEUSES RIDICULES.  |  |
| 7. CHATEAUBRIAND.—VOYAGES EN AMÉRIQUE. |  |

Specimen copies free to Teachers.

"Compared with other books having the same aim, these books deserve very favourable mention. For the notes are well selected, well expressed, and to the point."—Saturday Review.

"Amazingly cheap. . . . deserve to be widely known."—Academic Review.

"The new issue is a marvel of cheapness."—Journal of Education.

OUTLINES of GERMAN LITERATURE, from the Earliest Times to the Present Day. By JOS. GOSTWICK and ROBERT HARRISON. Second Edition, Enlarged and Improved. 8vo, cloth, 10s.

COMPLETE PRACTICAL GERMAN GRAMMAR.

With Exercises, constituting a Method and Reader. By T. HEINRICH WEISSE.

Fourth Edition, almost entirely Rewritten. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"We have no hesitation in pronouncing this the fullest and most satisfactory German Grammar yet published in England."—Journal of Education.

WEISSE'S NEW CONVERSATIONAL EXERCISES in GERMAN COMPOSITION, with Complete Rules and Directions, with full references to his German Grammar. Second Edition. 12mo, cloth. (KEY, 5s.) 3s. 6d.

Set for the University of Edinburgh Local Examinations, 1894.

WEISSE'S SHORT GUIDE to GERMAN IDIOMS.

Being a Collection of the Idioms most in use. With Examination Papers. 8vo, cloth, 2s.

WEISSE'S ELEMENTS of GERMAN. 8vo, cloth, 8s.

SCHLUTTER'S GERMAN CLASS BOOK: a

Course of Instruction based on Becker's System, and so arranged as to exhibit the Self-Development of the Language, and its Affinities with the English. By FR. SCHLUTTER, late Royal Military Academy, Woolwich. Fourth Edition. 12mo, cloth, 5s. KEY, 6s.

NEW EDITION. Corrected to the Official German Spelling.

A GERMAN READING BOOK: a Companion to Schlutter's "German Class Book." With a Complete Vocabulary. By A. MOELLER. 12mo, cloth, 2s.

FOUQUE'S UNDINE, SINTRAM, ASLAUGA'S

RITTER, Die beiden HAUPTLEUTE. Four Parts in 1 vol., 8vo, cloth, 6s.

Also separately:

UNDINE, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s. SINTRAM, 2s. 6d.; cloth, 3s. ASLAUGA'S RITTER, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s. DIE beiden HAUPTLEUTE, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

"In ordering through Booksellers, 'Williams and Norgate's Edition' should be specified; it is the only uniform edition, clearly printed, in crown 8vo.

ULRICH'S GERMAN SERIES.

Revised by JOHN GIBSON, M.A.

Just published.

Part III. COMPOSITION. Containing Thirty-Two pieces from the best English Authors, and their Translations into German. 8vo, cloth, 1s.

Part I. GRAMMAR, and Part II. SYNTAX, are in preparation.

ULRICH'S GERMAN PROSE, with Notes on Syntax and Translation, followed by a Complete Vocabulary. By ANTON J. ULRICH, Master of Modern Languages at the King's School, Warwick. Revised by JOHN GIBSON, M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

"A cheap and useful little volume."—Journal of Education.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1132.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JANUARY 13, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO.

THE EAST AND WEST ENDS.

WORTHINGTON JUNIOR: a Story of Contrasts. By EDITH SICHEL. 8 vols. "This is one of the most satisfactory novels we have read for some time."—Spectator. "Full of smart sayings and well-turned phrases."—Daily Chronicle. "She has considerable power of satiric portraiture."—Glasgow Herald.

THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDERS: Voyages and Experiences in the W. Pacific, 1875 to 1891. By W. T. WAWN, Master Mariner. With numerous Illustrations and Maps. Royal 8vo, 18s. "A work of peculiar interest. It affords a vivid insight into labour recruiting in the Pacific."—Standard. "Abounds with valuable information."—Chronicle. "Graphic and amusing accounts of little-known places and peoples told in a sailorly straightforward manner."—Telegraph.

THE BUCCANEERS OF AMERICA: a True Account of the Most Remarkable Assaults committed of late years upon the Coast of the West Indies by the Buccaneers of Jamaica and Tortuga (both English and French). By JOHN ESQUEMELING, one of the Buccaneers who was present at those tragedies (1684-5). Edited by HENRY POWELL. With Maps, Sieges, and Portraits. (Includes the very scarce Fourth Part.) Royal 8vo, 15s. "A handsome edition, with excellent facsimiles of the fine engravings."—Bookman.

NEW SOLUTION OF AN HISTORICAL MYSTERY. THE STORY OF LOUIS XVII. OF FRANCE. By E. E. EVANS. With 5 Engraved Portraits. 10s. 6d.

HISTORY OF ENGLISH CARICATURISTS AND GRAPHIC HUMORISTS OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY. By GRAHAM EVERITT. Illustrated from Drawings by all the leading Caricaturists of the Century. Royal 8vo, 10s. 6d. "At last we have a treatise upon our caricaturists and comic draughtsmen worthy of the great subject. A thoroughly readable book."—Pall Mall Gazette.

MR. WILLIAM MORRIS'S NEW BOOK. SOCIALISM: its Growth and its Outcome. By WILLIAM MORRIS and E. BELFORD BAX. Price 6s. (Large-Paper Edn., 15s. net.)

SUICIDE AND INSANITY. By J. A. K. STEAHAN, M.D. 6s. "Deals exhaustively with the psychological, historical and ethical aspects of the question. A weighty contribution."—Times.

THE SKEPTICS OF THE FRENCH RENAISSANCE. By Rev. JOHN OWEN. 8vo, 10s. 6d. Montaigne, Rabelais, Charron, Sanchez, Le Vayer, Pascal.

RUSSELL M. GARNIER'S IMPORTANT WORK. HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH LANDED INTERESTS: its Customs, Laws and Agriculture; Vol. II. MODERN PERIOD. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

NEW VOLUME OF THE DILETTANTE LIBRARY. RICHARD JEFFERIES: a Study. By H. S. SALT. Author of "Life of Thoreau" &c. Portrait. 2s. 6d. Large Paper Edition, with 4 full-page plates of "Jefferies Land," specially painted by Bertha Newcombe. 10s. 6d. net.

SOCIAL PEACE. By Professor Schulze-GAERNERTZ. Translated by C. M. Wicksteed, and Edited by Graham Wallis, M.A. (Oxon). 3s. 6d. "A study by a competent observer of the industrial movement in England and the developments of trade unionism."—Times.

NEW ONE-VOLUME NOVELS.

A NEW DOG STORY: and another. BLIZZARD AND ANOTHER FANTASY. By THOS. PINKERTON, Author of "John Newbold's Ordeal." 2s. 6d. "We have known Mr. Pinkerton as the spirited romancer and satirist, and have found him original and incisive in touch. There is some genuine fun in the idea (of this book), and it is comically worked."—Athenaeum. "A piece of hearty, rollicking, and uncommon humour."—National Observer.

TWIXT SHADOW AND SHINE. By Marcus CLARKE, Author of "For the Term of His Natural Life." 2s. 6d.

A MODERN XANTHIPPE. By Walter T. ARNOLD. 3s. 6d.

THE BEAUTY OF BOSCASTLE. By T. MULLETT ELLIS. 5s.

THE ETHICAL LIBRARY. Vols. I.-II. Ea. 4s. 6d.

1. THE CIVILISATION OF CHRISTENDOM. By BERNARD BOSANQUET, M.A. (Oxon), LL.D. (Glasgow), late Fellow of Univ. Coll., Oxford.

2. STUDIES IN CHARACTER. By Sophie BRYANT, D.Sc. Other volumes to follow by Professor A. SIDGWICK, Mr. LESLIE STEPHEN, J. H. MURHEAD, M.A. (Oxon), Mr. D. G. RITCHIE, M.A. SONNENSCHN & Co., Paternoster Sq., E.C.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

MARK RUTHERFORD'S NEW WORK.

CATHARINE FURZE: a Novel. By MARK RUTHERFORD, Author of "Mirism's Schooling," &c. 2 vols., cloth, 12s. [Ready next week.]

DR. JESSOPP'S NEW WORK.

RANDOM ROAMING. By Rev. AUGUSTUS JESSOPP, D.D., Author of "Trials of a Country Parson," &c. Portrait. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

"'Random Roaming' is assured of a hearty welcome. Contact with Dr. Jessopp's mind is a wonderful stimulus to the love of the antiquities of our island, animate as well as inanimate."—Times.

REV. SAMUEL COX'S LAST WORK.

THE HEBREW TWINS: a Vindication of God's Ways with Jacob and Esau. By the late Rev. SAMUEL COX, D.D., Author of "Expositions," &c. With Portrait and a Prefatory Memoir by his WIFE. Cloth, 6s.

"Characterised by the well-known simplicity and clearness of Dr. Cox's style."—Spectator.

PICTURESQUE SPAIN.

THE HEART and SONGS of the SPANISH SIERRAS. By GEORGE WHITE WHITE. 7 Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE REFORMERS' BOOK-SHELF.—New Vols.

BAMFORD'S PASSAGES in the LIFE of a RADICAL. Edited, and with an Introduction, by HENRY DUNCKLEY ("Verax"). 2 vols., cloth, 3s. 6d. each. [Ready.]

INDEPENDENT NOVEL SERIES.—New Vol.

LADY PERFECTA: Translated from the Spanish of B. PEREZ GALDOS, by MARY WHARTON. Demy 12mo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE CHINAMAN AT HOME AND ABROAD.

BRIGHT CELESTIALS. By JOHN COMING CHINAMAN. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE STORY OF THE SECOND ESTATE.

THE HOUSE OF LORDS: a Retrospect and a Forecast. By THOS. ALFRED SPALDING, LL.B. Cloth, 10s. 6d.

THIS DAY, full size, demy 8vo, cloth, 5s.

TWO SPHERES. By T. E. S. T. Pp. 512. Revised and Enlarged throughout.

* * The Publisher can arrange for Purchasers to see these Works at the nearest Bookseller's on receipt of address.

LONDON

T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

Recent Part (CONS:GNIFICANT-CROUCHING), 12s. 6d.
New Section (CROUCHMAS-CZECH), 4s.

A NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY ON HISTORICAL PRINCIPLES.

Founded mainly on the Materials Collected by the Philological Society.

Edited by JAMES A. H. MURRAY, LL.D.

NOTICE.—The present position of the Work is as follows: Vol. I, A and B. Edited by Dr. MURRAY. Imperial 4to, half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d. [Published.] Vol. II, C. Edited by Dr. MURRAY. Imperial 4to, half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d. [Published.]

* * The Parts comprised in Vols. I. & II. are still sold separately

Vol. III, D and E. D. Edited by Dr. MURRAY. [In the press.] E. Edited by HENRY BRADLEY, M.A. E-EVERY. 12s. 6d. [Published.]

EVERYBODY—EZOD. [Shortly.] Vol. IV, F, G, and H. F. Edited by HENRY BRADLEY, M.A. "The colossal nature of Dr. Murray's undertaking and monumental thoroughness of his work are attested by the fact that this (the second) volume of no less than 1,303 pages is devoted to the letter C alone, and that the space this letter requires will even be surpassed by the letter S. On the other hand, nine of the smaller letters, X, Z, Y, Q, K, J, N, U, and V, will only require the same amount of space."—Times.

THE OXFORD ORIENTAL SERIES.

Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

A BURMESE READER: being an Easy Introduction to the Written Language, and Companion to Judson's Grammar. For the use of Civil Service Students and others who wish to acquire the Language quickly and thoroughly. By R. F. ST. ANDREW ST. JOHN, Hon. M.A., Member of the Royal Asiatic Society, Teacher of Burmese in the University of Oxford and University College, London, and late Deputy-Commissioner in Burma.

THE OXFORD ORIENTAL SERIES.

Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

GRAMMAR of the BENGALI LANGUAGE, Literary and Colloquial. By JOHN BEAMES, Bengal Civil Service (Retired), Author of "A Comparative Grammar of the Modern Aryan Languages of India," &c. [Shortly.]

Parts I, II, and III, A-'LOBH'A. Imperial 4to, 21s. each.

A CONCORDANCE to the SEPTUAGINT, and the other GREEK VERSIONS of the OLD TESTAMENT (including the Apocryphal Books). By the late EDWIN HATCH, M.A., D.D., and HENRY A. REDPATH, M.A., assisted by other Scholars. Until the publication of Part V., but not afterwards, subscriptions may be paid in advance at the price of £4 4s. for the Six Parts.

"The accuracy of the Hebrew words, as well as the figures for the quotations, is marvellous."—Guardian.

"A work on which this generation may well congratulate itself."—Record.

NEW VOLUME. Part III. Books V., VI., and VII.

Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d.

SACRED BOOKS of the EAST. Edited by F. MAX MÜLLER. Vol. XXI. The SATAPATHA-BRAHMANA, according to the Text of the Mādhyandina School. Translated by JULIUS EGGELENG.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

QUINTI SEPTIMI FLORENTIS TERTULLIANI DE PRÆSCRIPTIONE HERETICORUM—AD MARTYRAS—AD SCAPIULA M. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by T. HERBERT BINDLEY, B.D., Merton College, Oxford, Principal of Coddington College, Barbados, and Examining Chaplain to the Lord Bishop.

Crown 8vo, 5s.

A SHORT ACCOUNT of the LAND REVENUE and its ADMINISTRATION in BRITISH INDIA. With a Sketch of the Land Tenures. By B. H. BADEN-POWELL, C.I.E., F.R.S.E., M.R.A.S., late of the Bengal Civil Service, and one of the Judges of the Chief Court of the Punjab.

"Mr. Baden-Powell knows his subject practically and thoroughly, and he has been able to provide what may be called a standard textbook for students of the land systems of India, and at the same time a book which the more general student of systems and theories of land tenure will read with great interest and profit."—Spectator.

Full Catalogues post free on application.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE,

CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PAGE

OWEN'S SKEPTIC OF THE FRENCH RENAISSANCE, by the Rev. WENTWORTH WEBSTER . . . . .	27
LORD DUNMORE'S THE PAMIES, by STEPHEN WHEELER . . . . .	28
MACPHERSON'S HIGHLANDS IN THE OLDEN TIME, by A. H. MILLAR . . . . .	29
A NEW LIFE OF MARIE ANTOINETTE, by F. T. MAZIALS . . . . .	30
NEW NOVELS, by WILLIAM WALLACE . . . . .	31
SOME BOOKS OF VERSE, by NORMAN GALE . . . . .	32
NOTES AND NEWS . . . . .	33
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS . . . . .	34
ORIGINAL VERSE: 1891, by PERCY ADDLESHAW . . . . .	34
MAOAZINES AND REVIEWS . . . . .	34
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS . . . . .	35
CORRESPONDENCE—
The Authorship of "Tales of Terror," by T. H.; Dante in Northern Latitudes, by the Rev. Dr. E. Moore; Lamanism as a Demonology, by Surgeon L. A. Waddell; Job xix. 17, by G. Margoliouth and Dr. A. Neubauer; The Northern-Fetich Inscriptions, by Sir Herbert Maxwell . . . . .	35
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK
BENT'S SACRED CITY OF THE AETHIOPIANS, by Prof. SAYCE . . . . .	37
CORRESPONDENCE—
The -s Plurals in English, by Prof. Napier . . . . .	38
SCIENCE NOTES . . . . .	39
PHILOLOGY NOTES . . . . .	39
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES . . . . .	39
HYMNS' LUCAS VOSTERMAN, by FREDERICK WEDMORE . . . . .	39
THE NEW ASSOCIATES OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY . . . . .	41
OBITUARY . . . . .	41
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY . . . . .	41
STAGE NOTES . . . . .	41
CHAPELL'S OLD ENGLISH POPULAR MUSIC, by J. S. SHEDLOCK . . . . .	42

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

TYPE-WRITING.—All kinds of Copying. AUTHORS' MANUSCRIPTS, Pedigrees, &c. Home Work. Terms: 1d. per folio (72 words); or 5,000 words, and over, 1s. per thousand.—Miss NIGHTINGALL, The Avenue, STEVEAGE, Herts.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS
115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List—115, Fleet Street, London.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STOKER, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

THE TRUTH about STAMMERING.—Any one interested will receive the latest information and important books on the cure, on loan, post free, without charge, from THURAIL, Messrs. Deacon's, 154, Leadenhall Street, E.C.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to best University or Army Tutors, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained (free of charge) by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. REYNOLDS, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

MR. KIRWAN.—LESSONS IN SPEECH
Illustrated Dramatic Readings (a combination of speech, pictures, and music). Selections. Literary Lectures.—Address, 3, Vernon Place, W.C.

BYRON—SHELLEY—KEATS: IN MEMORIAM ENDOWED YEARLY PRIZES for the BEST ESSAY IN ENGLISH, written by a Woman of any nation. Third set. With Portrait of Foundress and "Gossip." 1s. 1d.—For rules, send addressed halfpenny wrapper to ROSE MARY CRAWSHAW, Bwleh, Breconshire.

WANTED, a TEACHER of MODERN and ANCIENT GREEK. Must be able to speak Greek and be also well versed in the Literature. Apply by letter, Central School of Foreign Tongues, Howard House, Arundel Street, Strand.

CATALOGUES
FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
Importers of Foreign Books,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN
AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS
and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

THE COLONIAL COLLEGE and TRAINING FARMS (Limited).

Hollesley Bay, Suffolk.
For the Training of those destined for Colonial Life, &c.
The College owns and farms for the instruction of its students a fine Seaside Estate of 1,800 acres.
Prospectus on application to the RESIDENT DIRECTOR.

KING'S COLLEGE, LONDON.

LADIES' DEPARTMENT.
13, Kensington-square (close to High-street, Kensington, Station).
In this Department LECTURES are given to Ladies in the various subjects of University Education by Professors and Lecturers on the staff of King's College. The lectures are adapted for ladies above the age of 16.
The CLASSES COMMENCE on JANUARY 15th.
For a prospectus or further information apply to the Vice-Principal, Miss C. G. SCHWITZ, at the above address.
In return for four stamps a complete Syllabus of Lectures may be obtained.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL, London.—An EXAMINATION for filling up about FOUR VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on the 17th JANUARY NEXT.—For information apply to the BURSAR, St. Paul's School, West Kensington, W.

COUNTY BOROUGH of BRADFORD.

ASSISTANT LIBRARIAN.
The Free Library Committee require the services of an Experienced ASSISTANT LIBRARIAN, who will be required to devote himself exclusively to the duties of the office. Salary £100 per annum. Applications, in Candidates' own handwriting, stating age (which must not be less than 25 nor exceed 40 years), qualifications, and other particulars, together with copies of recent testimonials, and endorsed "Assistant Librarianship," to be sent to me not later than MONDAY, the 22nd instant. (Cavassing members of the Committee will be a disqualification.)—By Order. W. T. MCGOWEN, Town Clerk.
Town Hall, Bradford, 9th January, 1894.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter.)
Patron—HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.
President—The Right Hon. Sir M. E. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I.
THURSDAY, 18th JANUARY, at 8.30 P.M.
The following Paper will be read:—
"ANTONIO PEREZ IN EXILE," by Major MARTIN A. S. HUME, F.R.Hist.S.
20, Hanover Square, W.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY
74, New Oxford Street, London,
Is remarkable for its Display of Copies of Celebrated Works of
THE GREAT MASTERS.

Reproductions of the most important Paintings in the following Collections:—
NATIONAL GALLERY, LONDON,
BUCKINGHAM PALACE,
WINDSOR CASTLE,
UFFIZI, FLORENCE,
PITTI, FLORENCE,
ACADEMY OF FINE ARTS, FLORENCE, AMSTERDIAM,
THE HAGUE,
LOUVRE, PARIS,
LUXEMBOURG, PARIS,
ROYAL GALLERY, DRESDEN,
HERMITAGE, ST. PETERSBURG,
PRADO, MADRID,
VATICAN, ROME,
HAARLEM, FRANKFORT,
AND

THE PARIS SALONS.
A LARGE COLLECTION of EXAMPLES of MODERN FRENCH and ENGLISH ART in SELECTED FRAMES suitable for HALL, LIBRARY, DRAWING-ROOM BOUDOIR, &c.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 68 Miniature Photographs of notable Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

AUTOTYPE: a DECORATIVE and EDUCATIONAL ART
NEW PAMPHLET—FREE ON APPLICATION.
THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,
&c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., are prepared to undertake the Printing and Publishing of first-class Newspapers, Magazines, Books, Catalogues, Pamphlets, Prospectuses, Articles of Association, Minutes of Evidence, &c., in the best style. Their offices are fitted with the latest improvements in Rotary and other Machinery, the most modern English and Foreign Type, and they employ none but first-class workmen. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 2739. Telegraph, "Africanism, London."

MUDIE'S
SELECT LIBRARY

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and
SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.
COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.
N.R.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.
Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.
All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.
LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY,
10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER;
Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;
241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL.
By PERCY RUSSELL.
With Prefatory Remarks by Mr. GLADSTONE.
Sixth Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s
With Portrait.

The WESTMINSTER REVIEW says: "A very complete manual and guide for journalist and author. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense. . . . We have little else but praise for the volume."
DIGBY, LONG & CO., PUBLISHERS,
18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,
the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of important Plates always on view.
Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.
J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their
Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., at a moderate cost.
Specimens and price list on application.
Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

Now Ready,
THE OLD ENGLISH POPULAR MUSIC.

By the late WILLIAM CHAPPELL, F.S.A.
A New Edition, in Two Volumes, of the Popular Music of the Olden Time (under the above title).
A Collection of the best Song, Ballad, and Dance Tunes of England, from the earliest times to the end of the reign of George II.
With a Preface and Notes, and the earlier examples entirely revised.

By H. ELLIS WOOLDRIDGE.
Demy 4to, edition, bound in buckram. Two Vols., 2 gns. net.
Edition de Luxe, on large hand-made paper, bound in half-vellum, limited to 100 copies, Two Vols., 4 gns. net.

CHAPPELL & Co., New Bond Street, and MACMILLAN & Co., London.

ON DEMAND AT ALL LIBRARIES.
A SUPERFLUOUS WOMAN.
A NEW NOVEL,
IN THREE VOLUMES.

LONDON: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

BLACKIE & SON'S EDUCATIONAL LIST.

CLASSICS.

Caesar's Gallic War. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, Exercises, and Vocabulary, by JOHN BROWN, B.A., Worcester College, Oxford. With Coloured Map, Pictorial Illustrations, and Plans of Battles. Book I., cloth, 1s. 6d. Book II., cloth, 1s. 6d.

Virgil's Aeneid. Book I. Edited, with Introduction, Outline of Prosody, Notes, Exercises on the Hexameter, Vocabulary, &c., by Rev. A. J. CHURCH, M.A., sometime Professor of Latin in University College, London. [Nearly ready.]

Latin Stories: Short Selections from the best Prose Authors. Edited, with Notes, Vocabulary, and an Introductory Note on Translation, by A. D. GONLEY, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Magdalen College, Oxford. Cloth, 1s.

[This book is suitable as a Reader, and as a practice-book in "unseen."]

Xenophon's Anabasis. Book I. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Appendix on Greek Construction, and Vocabulary, by C. E. BROWNIGG, M.A., Chief Classical Master in Magdalen College School, Oxford. With Map, Plans of Battles, &c. [Nearly ready.]

A Classical Compendium: being a Handbook to Greek and Latin Constructions. By C. E. BROWNIGG, M.A., Chief Classical Master in Magdalen College School, Oxford. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

[This book will be of great assistance to students of prose composition.]

ENGLISH.

Introduction to Shakespeare. By Professor DOVDEX. Illustrated. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

The Warwick Shakespeare. A New Series of the greater Plays.

HAMLET. Edited by E. K. CHAMBERS, B.A., sometime Scholar of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

MACBETH. Edited by the Same. Cloth, 1s.

RICHARD II. Edited by C. H. HERFORD, Litt.D., Professor of English at University College, Aberystwith. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

JULIUS CAESAR. Edited by A. D. INNES, M.A., sometime Scholar of Oriel College, Oxford. Cloth, 1s.

Blackie's Junior School Shakespeare.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE. Edited by GEORGE H. ELY, B.A., sometime Assistant Master in the United Westminster Schools. Cloth, 8d.

HENRY THE EIGHTH. Edited by the Same. Cloth, 8d.

HENRY THE FIFTH. Edited by W. BARRY, B.A., English Master at Tottenhall College, Staffordshire. Cloth, 8d.

COROLANUS. Edited by WALTER DENT. Cloth, 10d.

JULIUS CAESAR. Edited by the Same. Cloth, 8d.

Scott's Lay of the Last Minstrel. Complete, with Introduction and Notes. Cloth, 1s. 6d. Also in Two Parts, Cantos, I.-III. and IV.-VI., cloth, 10d. each. And in Single Cantos, paper, 2d. each; cloth, 8d. each.

Addison's Sir Roger de Coverley. Edited by FRANCES E. WILCOFF. Cloth, 10d.

Gray's Elegy, Eton College Ode, and the BARD. Edited by ELIZABETH LEE, Lecturer in English at the Streatham Hill High School. Paper, 2d.; cloth, 3d.

The Pupil's English Grammar: an Introduction to the Study of English Grammar, based upon the Analysis of Sentences. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

MODERN LANGUAGES.

French Stories: a Reading Book for Junior and Middle Forms. With Notes, English Exercises, and Vocabulary, by MARGUERITE NINET, French Mistress at the Girls' High School, Graham Street, Eton Square. Cloth, 1s.

A Modern French Reader: Interesting Extracts from Contemporary French. With Notes and Vocabulary by J. J. BEUZEMAKER, B.A., Examiner to the College of Preceptors, &c. Cloth, 1s.

Schiller's Song of the Bell, and other Poems. Edited by GEORGE MACDONALD, M.A., Balliol College, Oxford. Cloth, 8d.

HISTORY.

Outlines of the World's History, Ancient, MEDIEVAL, and MODERN, with special relation to the History of Civilisation and the Progress of Mankind. By the Rev. EDGAR SANDERSON, M.A., sometime Scholar of Clare College, Cambridge. With many Illustrations and Coloured Maps. 664 pp., cloth, red edges, 6s. 6d.

Also separately:—Part I., ANCIENT ORIENTAL MONARCHIES, 1s. Part II., GREECE AND ROME, 2s. Part III., MEDIEVAL HISTORY, 1s. Part IV., MODERN HISTORY, 2s. 6d.

A History of the British Empire. With Pictorial Illustrations, Tables, Maps, and Plans. By the Rev. EDGAR SANDERSON, M.A. 476 pp., cloth, 2s. 6d.

A Summary of British History. With Appendices. By the Rev. EDGAR SANDERSON, M.A., Author of "A History of the British Empire," &c., &c. 208 pp., cloth, 1s.

An Epitome of History, Ancient, Mediæval, and MODERN. For Higher Schools, Colleges, and Private Study. By CASL FLOETZ. Translated by W. H. TILLINGHAST. 630 pp., cloth, 7s. 6d.

A Synopsis of English History; or, Historical Note-Book. Compiled by HERBERT WILLS. Cloth, 2s.

GEOGRAPHY.

A Pronouncing Vocabulary of Modern Geographical Names, nearly Ten Thousand in number. With Notes on Spelling and Pronunciation, &c. By GEORGE G. CHISHOLM, M.A., B.Sc., Author of "A Handbook of Commercial Geography." Cloth, 1s. 6d.

A Synoptical Geography of the World: a Concise Handbook for Examinations, and for General Reference. With a complete Series of Maps. Cloth, 1s.

Zehden's Commercial Geography of the World: Chief Centres of Trade and Means of Communication, Natural Productions, Exports, Manufactures, &c. Translated from the German of Professor ZEHDEN, Handels-Akademie, Leipzig. With Map of the Chief Trade Routes. Second Edition, corrected to date. 592 pp., cloth, 5s.

MATHEMATICS.

Euclid's Elements of Geometry. With Notes, Examples, and Exercises. Arranged by A. E. LAYNG, M.A., Headmaster of Stafford Grammar School; formerly Scholar of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge. Books I.-VI. with XI. and Appendix; and a wide Selection of Examination Papers. Cloth, 4s. 6d.

Books I-IV. in 1 vol., 2s. 6d. Book I., 1s.; II., 6d.; III., 1s.; IV., 6d.; V. and VI. together, 1s.; XI., 1s. 6d.

Preliminary Algebra. By R. WYKE BAYLISS, B.A., Vice-Principal of the United Service Academy, Southsea, formerly Scholar and prizeman of Peterhouse, Cambridge. Cloth, 2s.

Algebra. Up to and including Progressions and Scales of Notation. By J. G. KERR, M.A., Headmaster of Allan Glen's Technical School, Glasgow. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Algebraic Factors. How to Find Them and How to Use Them. Factors in the Examination Room. By Dr. W. T. KNIGHT, Headmaster Towcester School. Cloth, 2s.

Elementary Text-Book of Trigonometry. By R. H. PINKERTON, B.A., Balliol College, Oxford. Cloth, 2s.

Mathematical Wrinkles for Matriculation and other EXAMS. By Dr. W. T. KNIGHT, Headmaster Towcester School. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

An Introduction to the Differential and INTEGRAL CALCULUS. With Examples of Applications to Mechanical Problems. By W. J. MILLAR, C.E. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

Pickering's Mercantile Arithmetic. By E. T. PICKERING, Accountant to the Birmingham School Board. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

SCIENCE.

Heat, and the Principles of Thermodynamics. By C. H. DRAPER, D.Sc., B.A. With many Illustrations. Cloth, 4s. 6d.

Hydrostatics and Pneumatics. By R. II. PINKERTON, B.A., Balliol College, Oxford. Fully Illustrated. Cloth, 4s. 6d.

The Student's Introductory Handbook of SYSTEMATIC BOTANY. By JOSEPH W. OLIVER, Lecturer on Botany and Geology at the Birmingham Municipal Technical School. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

Elementary Text-Book of Physics. By Prof. EVERETT, D.C.L., F.R.S. Fifth Edition. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

Deschanel's Natural Philosophy. Translated and Edited by Prof. EVERETT. Twelfth Edition. Cloth, 18s.; also in Parts, limp cloth, 4s. 6d. each.

Part I.—Mechanics, &c. Part III.—Electricity, &c.
Part II.—Heat. Part IV.—Sound and Light.

Outlines of Natural Philosophy. By Professor EVERETT. Enlarged Edition. Cloth, 4s.

Theoretical Mechanics. By R. II. PINKERTON, B.A., Balliol College, Oxford, Lecturer in Mathematics, University College, Cardiff. Cloth, 2s.

Elementary Text-Book of Dynamics and HYDROSTATICS. By R. II. PINKERTON, B.A. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

The Arithmetic of Magnetism and Electricity. By ROBERT GUNN. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Magnetism and Electricity. By W. JEROME HARRISON and CHARLES A. WHITE. Cloth, 2s.

Light, Heat, and Sound. By CHARLES H. DRAPER, D.Sc., Head Master of Woolwich High School. Cloth, 2s.

A Text-Book of Organic Chemistry. By A. BERNTHSEN, Ph.D., formerly Professor of Chemistry in the University of Heidelberg. Translated by GEORGE M'GOWAN, Ph.D. Cloth, 6s.

Elementary Inorganic Chemistry, Theoretical and PRACTICAL. With Examples in Chemical Arithmetic. By A. HUMPHOLDT SEXTON, F.R.S.E., F.I.C., F.C.S. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Chemistry for All; or, Elementary Alternative Chemistry in accordance with the Science and Art Syllabus. By W. JEROME HARRISON, F.G.S., and R. J. BAILEY. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

Qualitative Chemical Analysis, Inorganic and ORGANIC. By EDGAR E. HOEWILL, F.C.S. Cloth, 2s.

An Elementary Text-Book of Physiology. By J. M'GREGOR-ROBERTSON, M.A., M.B., Lecturer in Physiology, Queen Margaret College. New and Revised Edition. Cloth, 4s.

Elementary Physiology. By VINCENT T. MURCHÉ. Cloth, 2s.

Earth-Knowledge. A Text-Book of Physiology. By W. JEROME HARRISON, F.G.S., and II. ROWLAND WAKEFIELD. Cloth, 3s. Also in Two Parts—Part I., 1s. 6d.; Part II., 2s.

Elementary Botany. By JOSEPH W. OLIVER, Lecturer on Botany and Geology at the Birmingham and Midland Institute. Cloth, 2s.

An Elementary Text-Book of Zoology. By W. JEROME HARRISON, F.G.S. Cloth, 2s.

An Elementary Text-Book of Applied MECHANICS. By DAVID ALLAN LOW (Whitworth Scholar), M.Inst.M.E. Cloth, 2s.

Elementary Agriculture. Edited by R. P. WRIGHT. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

Elementary Hygiene. By H. ROWLAND WAKEFIELD, Science Demonstrator, Swansea School Board. Cloth, 2s.

* * Detailed Catalogue of Educational Works will be sent post free on application.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, 49 AND 50, OLD BAILEY.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Now ready, 3 vols., 31s. 6d.

'L I S B E T H.

By LESLIE KEITH,

Author of "The Chilcotes," "In Spite of Himself," &c.

"Unqualified praise may be cordially and unhesitatingly accorded to 'Lisbeth,' in which are readily discoverable all the inventive, constructive, and literary elements that, when felicitously combined, furnish the material of which a really first-class novel may be fashioned by a master hand." Daily Telegraph.

DEDICATED BY PERMISSION TO LORD ROBERTS.

Now ready, 6s.

A KING'S HUSSAR:

Being the Military Memoirs for 25 Years of a Troop Sergeant-Major of the 14th (King's) Hussars.

Edited by HERBERT COMPTON.

"It is rarely our privilege to call public attention to so interesting, instructive, and wholesome a book as 'A King's Hussar.'" Daily Telegraph.

Now ready, price 6s.

Dr. DUMANY'S WIFE

By MAURUS JÓKAL.

"In the story itself the most noticeable qualities are the judicious courage and the brilliant invention of the writer. The most trivial incidents of the story are not taken from the common stock of common novelists; each of them forms a part of an artistic representation of real life."—Speaker.

POPULAR EDITION.

Now ready, price 6s.

THE STORY OF FRANCIS CLUDDE.

By STANLEY J. WEYMAN,

Author of "A Gentleman of France,"
&c., &c.

"There is one book among all those new books which kept a weary reviewer from his bed. That book is 'Francis Cludde,' by Mr. Stanley Weyman. All fathers, guardians, and uncles should buy a copy to keep, and another, or several others, to give away to boys."

Mr. ANDREW LANG in The New Review.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED,
LUDGATE HILL, LONDON.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

With 179 Illustrations and 2 large and 4 small Coloured Maps. 2 vols., 8vo, 42s.

DISCOVERY OF LAKES RUDOLF AND STEFANIE:

An Account of Count Samuel Teleki's Exploring and Hunting Expedition in Eastern Equatorial Africa in 1887 and 1888.

By HIS COMPANION, LIEUTENANT LUDWIG VON HÖHNEL.

Translated by NANCY BELL (L. D'ANVERS).

NEW BOOK BY CANON OVERTON.

THE ENGLISH CHURCH in the NINETEENTH CENTURY.

By the Rev. JOHN H. OVERTON, D.D., Canon of Lincoln, Rector of Epworth, Doncaster, and Rural Dean of the Isle of Axholme. 8vo, 14s.

ST. ANDREWS. By ANDREW LANG. With 8 Plates and 24

Illustrations in the Text by T. Hodge. 8vo, 15s. net.

"St. Andrews has had among her many lovers some who have aspired also to be her historians. These older chronicles are like to be superseded, except with those of dry-as-dust tastes, by Mr. Andrew Lang's story of the fortunes of the 'dear city of youth and dream.' . . . It is the record of St. Andrews that will henceforth be read and remembered." Scotsman.

INSPIRATION: Eight Lectures on the Early History and Origin

of the Doctrine of Biblical Inspiration. Being the Bampton Lectures for 1893. By the Rev. W. SANDAY, M.A., D.D., LL.D., Dean Ireland's Professor of Exegesis. 8vo, 16s.

"This book will be found in a very high degree both interesting and illuminating by any man of ordinary literary intelligence who has a taste for candid inquiry in regard to the Bible and for well-grounded conclusions. For here we have an account of the Bible by a man very remarkably well qualified to give it. . . . No writer of any school or on any subject could give us the impression of unprejudiced intelligence more strongly."—Guardian.

THE LITTLE SISTERS of the POOR. By Mrs. ABEL RAM,

Author of "The Most Beautiful," "Emmanuel," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE STUDENT'S DICTIONARY of MEDICINE and the ALLIED

SCIENCES. Comprising the Pronunciation, Derivation, and Full Explanation of Medical Terms, together with much Collateral Descriptive Matter, numerous Tables, &c. By ALEXANDER DUANE, M.D., Assistant-Surgeon to the New York Ophthalmic and Aural Institute, Reviser of Medical Terms for "Webster's International Dictionary." 8vo, price 21s.

NEW NOVEL BY STANLEY J. WEYMAN.

A GENTLEMAN of FRANCE; being the Memoirs of GASTON DE BONNE, Sieur de Marsac. By STANLEY J. WEYMAN, Author of "The House of the Wolf." 3 vols, crown 8vo, 25s. 6d.

"The book is not only good literature, it is a 'rattling good story,' instinct with the spirit of true adventure and stirring emotion. Of love and peril, intrigue and fighting, there is plenty, and many scenes could not have been bettered." Athenæum.

NEW NOVEL BY H. RIDER HAGGARD.

MONTEZUMA'S DAUGHTER. By H. RIDER HAGGARD, Author of

"She," "Allan Quartermain," &c. With 24 Full-page Illustrations by MAURICE GREIFFENHAGEN. 1 vol, crown 8vo, 6s.

"Readers will thank the good fortune which has put into their hands a book for these long winter evenings which will chain and rivet their attention and awaken their interest to the highest pitch. Mr. Haggard has never produced anything better, either in matter or in manner."—Observer.

THE ONE GOOD GUEST: A Story. By L. B. WALFORD. New

and Cheap Edition. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"Mrs. Walford has never written a pleasanter novel."—Scotsman.

"A story so full of the best human nature that it is vastly pleasant to read, and equally grateful to remember." National Observer.

WHAT NECESSITY KNOWS. By L. DOUGALL, Author of

"Beggars All," &c. New and Cheaper Edition. 1 vol, crown 8vo, price 6s.

"A very remarkable novel, and not a book that can be lightly classified or arranged with other works of fiction. It is a distinct creation, and we approach it in the spirit of wonder, not unmixed with suspicion, which is the greeting that awaits most new things."—Manchester Guardian.

THE SILVER LIBRARY—Two New Volumes.

CARTHAGE and the CARTHAGINIANS.

By R. BOSWORTH SMITH, M.A., Assistant Master in Harrow School. With Maps, Plans, &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE EXPANSE of HEAVEN: Essays

on the Wonders of the Firmament. By R. A. PROCTOR. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

ON TUESDAY NEXT,

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, No. 367.

1. MEMOIRS OF CHANCELLOR PASQUIER.
2. THE ECONOMY OF HIGH WAGES.
3. THE POETRY OF RURAL LIFE.
4. RECENT EDITIONS OF TACITUS.
5. POPULAR LITERATURE OF MODERN ITALY.
6. THE LAST CAMPAIGN OF MONTROSE.

7. THE RESULTS OF THE CRUSADES.
8. AMONG THE HAIRY AINU.
9. ADDRESSES OF THE LATE EARL OF DERBY.
10. THE PROGRESS OF ANGLING.
11. THE SESSION OF 1893.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO. NEW YORK: 15, East 16th Street.

MR. MURRAY'S LIST OF SCHOOL BOOKS.

SIR WM. SMITH'S EDUCATIONAL SERIES.

Young Beginner's Latin Course.

2s. each.

- I. First Latin Book. Grammar, Easy Questions, Exercises, and Vocabularies.
- II. Second Latin Book. An Easy Latin Reading Book, with Analysis of Sentences.
- III. Third Latin Book. Exercises on the Syntax, with Vocabularies.
- IV. Fourth Latin Book. A Latin Vocabulary for Beginners, arranged according to Subjects and Etymologies.

PRINCIPIA LATINA.

- *Part I. Grammar, Delectus, Exercises, and Vocabularies. 3s. 6d.
- APPENDIX TO PART I. Additional Exercises and Examination Papers. 2s. 6d.
- *Part II. A First Latin Reading Book. 3s. 6d.
- *Part III. A First Latin Verse Book. 3s. 6d.
- *Part IV. Latin Prose Composition. 3s. 6d.
- *Part V. Short Tales and Anecdotes for Translation into Prose. 3s. 6d.

Students' Latin Grammar. 6s.

Smaller Latin Grammar. For Middle and Lower Forms. 2s. 6d.

A Child's First Latin Book. Comprising a full Practice of Nouns, Pronouns, and Adjectives, with the Verbs. By T. D. HALL. Revised and Enlarged Edition. 2s.

Greek Course.

INITIA GRÆCA.

- *Part I. Grammar, Delectus, Exercises, and Vocabularies. 3s. 6d.
- APPENDIX TO PART I. Additional Exercises and Examination Papers. 2s. 6d.
- *Part II. A Greek Reading Book. 3s. 6d.
- *Part III. Prose Composition. 3s. 6d.

Students' Greek Grammar. 6s.

Smaller Greek Grammar. For Middle and Lower Forms. 2s. 6d.

Greek Accidence. 2s. 6d.

Plato.—Selections. With Notes. 3s. 6d.

English Course.

*English Grammar. With Exercises. 3s. 6d.

*Primary English Grammar. With Exercises and Questions. 1s.

Primary History of Britain. New and thoroughly Revised Edition. Coloured Map. (430 pp.) 2s. 6d.

Modern Geography. 5s.

Smaller Modern Geography. 2s. 6d.

English Composition. Examples and Exercises. 3s. 6d.

French Course.

FRENCH PRINCIPIA.

- *Part I. Grammar, Delectus, Exercises, Vocabularies, and Materials for Conversation. 3s. 6d.
- APPENDIX TO PART I. Additional Exercises and Examination Papers. 2s. 6d.
- *Part II. A French Reading Book, with Etymological Dictionary. 4s. 6d.
- *Part III. Prose Composition. 4s. 6d.

Students' French Grammar. With an Introduction by M. LITTRE. 6s.

Smaller French Grammar. 3s. 6d.

German Course.

GERMAN PRINCIPIA.

- *Part I. Grammar, Exercises, Vocabularies, and Materials for Conversation. 3s. 6d.
- *Part II. Reading Book, with Dictionary. 3s. 6d.
- Practical German Grammar. For Advanced Students. 3s. 6d.

Italian Course.

ITALIAN PRINCIPIA.

- *Part I. Grammar, Delectus, Exercises, Vocabularies, 3s. 6d.
- *Part II. An Italian Reading Book. 3s. 6d.

MURRAY'S STUDENTS' MANUALS.

Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d. each.

With Maps and Woodcuts.

THE ROMAN EMPIRE.

From its Establishment to the Reign of Commodus, 180.

By J. B. BURY.

The Students' Hume: A HISTORY OF ENGLAND FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES TO 1688. Thoroughly Revised Edition, continued to the Treaty of Berlin, 1878. By Prof. J. S. BREWER. (830 pp.) The Work may also be obtained in Three Divisions, price 2s. 6d. each. PART I. B.C. 55—A.D. 1485; PART II. A.D. 1485—1688; PART III.—1688—1878.

Modern Europe. By R. LODGE, M.A.

Europe during the Middle Ages. By HENRY HALLAM.

Constitutional History of England. By HENRY HALLAM.

Old and New Testament History. By PHILIP SMITH. 2 vols.

Ancient History. To the Conquests of Alexander the Great. By PHILIP SMITH.

Ecclesiastical History. 2 Vols. : I. A.D. 30—1003; II. 1003—1614. By PHILIP SMITH.

English Church History. 3 Vols. : I. 598—1509; II. 1509—1717; III. 1717—1884. By Canon PERRY.

Greece. To the Roman Conquest. By Sir WILLIAM SMITH. With Coloured Maps and Woodcuts.

Rome, to the Establishment of the Empire. By Dean LIDDELL.

Gibbon. By Sir WILLIAM SMITH.

France, to the Fall of the Second Empire. By W. H. JERVIS.

Ancient Geography. By Canon BEVAN.

Modern Geography. By Canon BEVAN.

Geography of British India. By Dr. GEORGE SMITH.

English Language: Its Origin and Growth. By GEORGE P. MARSH.

English Literature. With Biographical Notices of the Authors. By T. B. SHAW.

Specimens of English Literature. By T. B. SHAW. 5s.

Moral Philosophy. By Dr. FLEMING.

SIR WM. SMITH'S SMALLER HISTORIES.

Maps, Plans, and Woodcuts. 16mo, 3s. 6d. each.

England, from the Earliest Times to 1887. New and thoroughly Revised Edition.

Scripture History, continued down to A.D. 70.

Ancient History. Down to the Conquests of Alexander the Great.

Ancient Geography.

Modern Geography, Physical and Political. 2s. 6d.

Rome, to the Establishment of the Empire.

Greece, to the Roman Conquest.

Classical Mythology. For Ladies' Schools and Young Persons.

English Literature. With Lives of our Chief Writers.

Specimens of English Literature.

Little Arthur's Histories.

England, from the Earliest Times, continued down to 1878. With 36 Woodcuts. 1s. 6d.

France, from the Earliest Times to the Fall of the Second Empire. Maps and Woodcuts. 2s. 6d.

Mrs. Markham's Histories.

England, from the First Invasion by the Romans down to the year 1890. 100 Woodcuts. 3s. 6d.

France, from the Conquest of Gaul by Cæsar down to 1878. 70 Woodcuts. 2s. 6d.

Germany, from the Invasion by Marius to 1890. 50 Woodcuts. 3s. 6d.

SIR WM. SMITH'S SCHOOL DICTIONARIES.

Latin.

Smaller Latin-English Dictionary. With a Dictionary of Proper Names. 31st Edition. By Sir WM. SMITH and Prof. T. D. HALL, M.A. (730 pp.) 7s. 6d.

Smaller English-Latin Dictionary. 7s. 6d.

Larger Latin-English Dictionary. 16s.

Larger English-Latin Dictionary. Compiled from Original Sources. 16s.

An English-Latin Gradus, or Verse Dictionary. By A. C. AINSIE, M.A., and H. G. WINTLE, M.A. 44s pp. Crown 8vo. 9s.

Bible.

Concise Dictionary of the Bible. Illustrations. 21s.

Smaller Bible Dictionary. Illustrations. 7s. 6d.

Classical.

Classical Dictionary of Greek and Roman Mythology, Biography, and Geography. With 750 Woodcuts. 18s.

Smaller Classical Dictionary. 200 Woodcuts. 7s. 6d.

Smaller Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities. 200 Woodcuts. 7s. 6d.

Crown 8vo, 9s. 6d.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY OF THE GREEK TESTAMENT.

WITH CONCISE GRAMMAR, NOTES, AND VOCABULARY.

By THEOPHILUS D. HALL, M.A.

This Volume is intended to aid those who desire to study the New Testament in the original Greek Text without any previous knowledge of the language.

MURRAY'S

UNIVERSITY EXTENSION MANUALS.

EDITED BY PROFESSOR KNIGHT, of St. Andrew's University.

An Introduction to Modern Geology. By Dr. R. D. ROBERTS. With Illustrations and Coloured Maps. 5s.

The Realm of Nature: A Manual of Physiology. By Dr. H. R. MILL. 19 Coloured Maps and 68 Illustrations. 5s.

The Study of Animal Life. By J. ARTHUR THOMSON. With many Illustrations. 5s.

The Elements of Ethics. By JOHN H. MUIRHEAD. 3s.

English Colonisation and Empire. By A. CALDECOTT. Coloured Maps and Diagrams. 3s. 6d.

The Fine Arts. By Prof. BALDWIN BROWN. Illustrations. 3s. 6d.

The Use and Abuse of Money. By Prof. CUNNINGHAM, D.D. 3s.

The Philosophy of the Beautiful. By Prof. KNIGHT. Parts I. and II. 3s. 6d. each Part.

French Literature. By H. G. KEENE. 3s.

The Rise of the British Dominion in India. By Sir ALFRED LYALL. From the Early Days of the East India Company. Coloured Maps. 4s. 6d.

The Physiology of the Senses. By Professor MCKENZIE and Dr. SNODGRASS. With Illustrations. 4s. 6d.

Chapters in Modern Botany. By Professor PATRICK GEDDES. With Illustrations. 3s. 6d.

The French Revolution. By C. E. MALLETT. 3s. 6d.

English Literature. By WILLIAM BENTON. With Diagrams. 3s. 6d.

Logic, Inductive and Deductive. By WILLIAM MITTO, late Professor of Logic, University of Aberdeen. With Diagrams. 4s. 6d.

Greece in the Age of Pericles. By A. J. GRANT, King's College, Cambridge. With Illustrations. 3s. 6d.

* Keys to these Works supplied to authenticated Teachers on written application.

* * DETAILED CATALOGUE SENT GRATIS BY POST ON APPLICATION.

LONDON: JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET, W.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOW READY AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND RAILWAY BOOKSTALLS.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

For JANUARY,

In which are commenced two new Serial Stories:

A BEGINNER,

By RHODA BROUGHTON,

AND

AN INTERLOPER,

By FRANCES MARY FEARD.

"One can never help enjoying TEMPLE BAR."—The Guardian.
"Who does not welcome TEMPLE BAR?"—John Bull.

MONTHLY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

NEW NOVELS AT THE LIBRARIES

BY DR. KENEALY.

MOLLY and her MAN-

O'-WAR. By Dr. ARABELLA KENEALY, Author of "Dr. Janet of Harley Street." In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"A narrative of the raciest, freshest humour merging into one of the sweetest of love-stories."—Sheffield Daily Telegraph.

NOW READY.

THE VICAR of LANG-

THWAITE. By LILY WATSON. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

SPEEDWELL. By

Lady GUENDOLEN RAMSDEN. In 1 vol., crown
8vo, 6s.

NOW READY.

BRITOMART. By Mrs.

HERBERT MARTIN, Author of "Bonnie Lesley," &c.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A charming story by a writer already favourably known in the world of pure and pleasant fiction. The plot is distinctly clever and the denouement exceedingly dramatic."— Birmingham Daily Gazette.

SECOND EDITION.

DIANA TEMPEST. By

MARY CHOLMONDELEY, Author of "Sir Charles Danvers," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Let everyone who can enjoy an excellent novel, full of humour, touched with real pathos, and written with finished taste and skill, read 'Diana Tempest.'"—Athenaeum.

NOW READY.

A HEROINE in HOME-

SPUN. By FREDERIC BRETON, Author of "The Crime of Mansell Grange," &c. In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"There is much strange and weird superstition in the tale; but apart altogether from its folk-lore it is remarkable and interesting. No better tale of the North has come under our notice for a long time. The heroine is a beautiful character."
Glasgow Herald.

THE LATEST ADDITION TO BENTLEY'S FAVOURITE NOVELS.

FROM MOOR ISLES.

By JESSIE FOTHERGILL, Author of "The First Violin," &c.

A NEW EDITION. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

NOW READY.

LABOUR AND THE POPULAR WELFARE.

BY

W. H. MALLOCK,

Author of "Is Life Worth Living?"
"Social Equality," &c.

Crown 8vo, price 6s.

"Students who are used to associate economics with a laborious style will be agreeably surprised at the lucidity and simplicity of Mr. Mallock's exposition, the brilliance of his manner, and the aptitude of his illustrations."—The Times.

"The book is one of the most valuable contributions that have been offered to the discussion of what has now become the problem of social problems.....Regarded as a popularly-written exposure of current economic errors and fallacies, it is without an equal in both comprehensiveness and excellence."—Liberty Review.

"In this work Mr. Mallock combats militant
Collectivism with every weapon left in the armoury of Individualism.....He outlines with really remarkable lucidity the parts respectively played in production by Land, Fixed Capital (plant), Circulating or Wage Capital, Labour, and Ability."

Daily Chronicle.

"'Labour and the Popular Welfare'.....is an invitation to the labourer and to the friend of labour to leave off dreaming Socialist dreams that never have been, and never can be realised, and to study, instead, the forces that are at work in producing national progress and wealth."—Scotsman.

"An important and carefully-reasoned treatise.
It deserves careful study."—Daily Telegraph.

"'Labour and the Popular Welfare' should be studied by the Radicals.....They will find wisdom in it, and much food for reflection."—The Echo.

"No one can resist a tribute of admiration to Mr. Mallock for his luminous exposition, and for the exceeding brilliance of his style."

The Weekly Sun.

"Perceiving no reason why 'the salient facts which underlie the social problems of to-day' might not be made for the benefit of 'the general reader' 'as stimulating and fresh as any novel or book of travels,' Mr. Mallock has furnished forth a revised version of Political Economy. His work justifies his estimate of how rousing such an entertainment should be."—Saturday Review.

ADAM & CHARLES BLACK,
SONO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

Just ready, crown 8vo, over 1,000 pages, handsomely bound, cloth extra gilt, gilt edges, 10s. 6d.

DOD'S PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, and KNIGHTAGE for 1894.

"Aims at giving a great deal of information in a small space, and signally succeeds in doing so. For purposes of rapid reference it has no competitor."—Athenaeum.

The ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER'S DIARY for 1894.

Arranged by RALPH HINDLE BAKER.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES.

RUSSIA'S MARCH TOWARDS INDIA

By an "INDIAN OFFICER."

With new Map of Central Asia showing the disputed Territory.

2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, 18s.

"A lucid historical survey...of the gradual development of Russian military power in Central Asia."—Times.

PICTURESQUE CEYLON: Colombo and the Kelani Valley.

By HENRY W. CAVE.

Demy 4to, numerous Full-Page Illustrations in Woodburygravure, gilt edges, Redburgh binding, ONE GUINEA net.

"Everybody likes pictures, and it is an age of illustration; so that 'Picturesque Ceylon,' by Mr. Henry W. Cave—a pretty drawing-room table book just issued by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co.—will have, as it deserves, a Christmas welcome. The author frankly owns that the work is a pictorial, not a literary effort; but many a volume might be written of close-printed, descriptive matter which would not convey nearly so good an idea of the beautiful island of Ceylon as the excellent photographs which are here interspersed with a light and interesting running comment."—Daily Telegraph.

TALES of the CHILDREN'S WARD.

By HONNOR MORTEN, Author of "Sketches of Hospital Life," and H. F. GETHEN.

With Illustrations. 4to, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"A collection of hospital stories is furnished by Honnor Morten and H. F. Gethen, in 'Tales of the Children's Ward.' The title chosen by the authors explains their general purpose. With a large experience of the little sufferers to whom it has been their duty to attend,
Miss Morten and Miss Gethen write their pathetic annals in a series of little sketches, which are capably told, and very interesting. The book should command a ready sale."—Daily Telegraph.

SECOND EDITIONS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE HANDSOME HUMES.

By WILLIAM BLACK.

In 3 vols.

"Told with all the grace and charm of Mr. William Black's familiar narrative style...A refreshing wholesomeness of thought and tone pervades Mr. Black's excellent book."—Daily Telegraph.

THE EMIGRANT SHIP.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL

In 3 vols.

"Movement and incident crowd in every chapter, and the prettiest little love-story flows as an undercurrent among these billows of adventure."—Pall Mall Gazette.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE.

JANUARY NUMBER.

CONTENTS.

CONSTANTINOPLE. (Concluding Paper.) F. MARION CRAWFORD.

Illustrated.

DEEP WATERS. W. G. VAN TASSEL SUTHERN. The title chosen by the author explains their general purpose. With a large experience of the little sufferers to whom it has been their duty to attend,

Miss Morten and Miss Gethen write their pathetic annals in a series of little sketches, which are capably told, and very interesting. The book should command a ready sale."—Daily Telegraph.

"Movement and incident crowd in every chapter, and the prettiest little love-story flows as an undercurrent among these billows of adventure."—Pall Mall Gazette.

A RAINY AFTERNOON. GEORGE A. HIGDON.

SIR JOSHUA REYNOLDS. FREDERICK KEPPEL. Illustrated from

Engravings of his Works.

THE PLACE of the EXODUS in the HISTORY of EGYPT. A. L.

Lewis.

WEBSTER'S REPLY to HAYNE. Hon. ROBERT C. WINTEROP.

&c. &c.

JANUARY NUMBER now ready, price One Shilling.

FASHIONS of TO-DAY

in Dress, Fancy Work, Art, Music, Literature, Women's Work, &c. With Coloured Plate, Pattern Sheet, and numerous Illustrations.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 13, 1894.

No. 1132, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Skeptics of the French Renaissance. By John Owen. (Sonnenschein.)

THIS is a most difficult book to review: difficult because it takes us over almost unknown ground, difficult because the writer surveys the ground from a point of view peculiarly his own. Most of us have read Montaigne and Pascal; they are part of the stock in trade of every educated man. Fewer have studied Charron; but how many are acquainted with Peter Ramus, Sanchez, and La Mothe-le-Vayer, the other three whose works are discussed in this volume? The book itself is a complement, with continuous paging, of The Skeptics of the Italian Renaissance. The same interlocutors present themselves, the same plan is pursued: namely, a biographical sketch, followed by an estimate of the writings, with previous and after discussion, to bring out points of which a different view might be taken. The bibliographical notes at the commencement of each chapter show how well the writer is acquainted with the literature of his subject; the subsequent pages show that he has made this literature his own. We are often astonished at the knowledge of unfamiliar, and what to many would seem barren, fields. Montaigne and Pascal are masters in their separate styles. Mr. Owen has led me to do justice to Charron; but, when read many years ago, he seemed to me then a kind of glorified Mr. Barlow, and almost equally dull and tiresome. Our author gives life to these dry bones, and makes the biography of all full of interest.

What is the thread on which these beads are strung? Two writers more opposite than Montaigne and Pascal can hardly be brought together. The careless Epicurean levity of the one, the intense and almost morbid earnestness of the other, might well form a theme for an ordinary sermon. The one, like Pilate, asks—What is truth? and never cares to wait for the answer; the other wore out mind and body in the search thereof. But Mr. Owen strings them together, not for their difference, but for what he deems their likeness; and this it is that gives pause for thought, and meaning and value to the volume. Montaigne and Pascal both skeptics! How? What then is skepticism? Skepticism, from our author's point of view, does not mean either fruitless doubt or negative unbelief; but the doubt which prompts enquiry, the doubt without which enquiry can hardly exist, which is almost a necessary accompaniment of intellectual progress. The whole truth is not an already ascertained fact in any department of life or of science. There is ever more to be discovered than has yet been explored. This is allowed by all; and the corollary would seem to be that the discoverer and explorer should receive honour and welcome from all men. It may be so now, in the present century, as regards the physical sciences and mathematical truth. But how different it has been in former ages, the sad stories in these volumes fully tell us. How different is it still when the subject of enquiry is other than the physical sciences; when the subject matter of the enquiry is politics, or ethics, or religion? All that a man is honoured for doing in the other sciences he is too often censured and abused for attempting in these. Yet, what a great advance we feel it to be, that the censure or reproach is in words only. How sad the narrative, in ages scarcely more than three centuries apart from our own (the merest fraction in the life of humanity), of the martyrdom of Bruno, and of Vanini, and the murder of Ramus!

Mr. Owen compares Charron with the Italian reformer, Ochino. Is there not a closer similarity with the career of Blanco White in our own time? Valdez certainly cannot be put on the same plane with either Charron or Ochino. He is more like the Plymouth Brethren of our day. Charron's remarks on the duty of following virtue for its own sake, and the immorality of seeking a reward for it (p. 584), are admirably commented on (p. 603). An almost contemporary example might have been brought forward in St. François Xavier, who was converted by the words "What shall it profit a man, &c.," and who yet wrote: "My God I love Thee; not because I hope for heaven thereby, &c." May not the same principle be applied to mere abstract theology as well as to moral teaching? There is a sense in which Agnosticism is true in Christianity. Man has and can have no proper knowledge of the Trinity; the finite cannot comprehend the infinite. Why then should not this Agnosticism be preached from the pulpit? Mr. Owen gives the answer. It might, indeed, "serve with men of a certain class—men of vigorous minds, sanguine temperaments, and comprehensive views, having their intellectual and moral character braced by education, self-discipline, and reflection; but when we have to teach the poor and comfort the sick, we must employ some more human motive and distinct consolation than its philosophy seems able to impart."

Men have to be led gently to the knowledge of God, to know Him first in His relations to themselves, before they speculate on His relations to Himself, or to the universe. Gnosis must precede Agnosis. So again (p. 639)—

"From the point of view of his skepticism, Sanchez regards God as the alone possessor of perfect knowledge. His omniscience is the ideal contrast of our human ignorance, and His infinity the opposite pole of our partial and limited faculties."

But is not this the point of view of all true theology? I cannot see skepticism here. No one puts this grand truth more strongly than the late and the present Bishops of Durham have done in their several writings. On the final sentences of the discussion on Sanchez (pp. 644-6) I would ask: Is it not a fact that the knowledge of the uniformity and regularity of nature, now proved to be so ancient, so constant, and so all-pervading, and the pressure of it on men's minds, have a great deal to do with the peculiar pessimism, the want of spring and of enthusiasm, which marks the close of the nineteenth century?

I pass over other most interesting questions suggested in the essay on La Mothe-le-Vayer, and hurry on to Pascal. All the other names in the volume shrink before Montaigne and Pascal. Yet it is almost repugnant to class these two names together. Montaigne goes with Diderot, Voltaire, and the Encyclopædists; he would have been hand in glove with Renan; we may find some affinity in him with Goethe. But how does Pascal come into such a company? Here is where we are most disposed to question if Mr. Owen has chosen his guests well. It is Descartes, and not Pascal, whom we should have expected to meet with here. It is the former, not the latter, name that all the preceding pages seem to lead up to—which is continually suggested to us. Again, is not Mr. Owen somewhat unjust generally to the Jansenists? I know that it is the fashion now to abuse them; one can hardly take up a French religious or literary publication without finding some sneer at them. But is it deserved? Mr. Owen remarks again and again of the divorce of morality from dogma in the religion of the day; he lauds highly Charron and other skeptics for their defence of the former, and justifies their skepticism thereby. But is their and Charron's protest on behalf of morality to be compared with that of the Port-Royalists, both men and women? What is deemed so praiseworthy in the one, should hardly be called narrow-minded puritanism and harsh asceticism in the other. In dealing with Pascal's life, the time spent in Paris is marked as a period of skepticism and of dissipation, is made to colour the whole after life, and is brought forward as one chief reason why Pascal should be considered as a skeptic. But is such argument valid? Can we reckon every man a skeptic who has passed through a season of doubt? Has not this been the experience of almost every great defender of the Faith? Do we not, in a sense, feel it as a disadvantage, in controversy at least, to Pusey and Keble that they never doubted, and that they could not place themselves in the position of their opponents, and therefore often fail to understand, and to reply to their arguments? Mr. Owen writes (p. 767): "Perhaps the most inconsistent of all books ever published is the Thoughts." And again (p. 776): "The idea of Pascal's extreme skepticism is now accepted as an indisputable fact by all impartial and trustworthy critics." To this I demur. One of his latest critics, M. Brunetière, does not accept the conclusions of Havet or of Faugère as final, or as nearer to the truth than the older view of the Port-Royalists. The question lies in the state of the MS. of the Pensées. Is everything set down there to be taken as the real opinion of the writer, or rather frequently as mere notes of statements or arguments to be refuted? Does not the very force and almost exaggeration with which Pascal states the skeptic's case show his conviction that he had a full and complete answer to it? For instance, the use to be made of the celebrated betting argument, and the weight to be attached to it, would depend entirely on its position in the finished argument of the work that never was completed. The sharp antithesis so strongly put of man's weakness and greatness, of pyrrhonism and dogmatism, of reason and imagination, of determinism and free will, of evil and absolute good, of unbelief and faith, mark the fact that Pascal believed, at least, that he had an answer for and a reconciliation of them all. The very passage (p. 774) which Mr. Owen quotes in one sense, Dean Church cites in the opposite:

"Know then, proud man, what a paradox thou art to thyself. Abase thyself, helpless Reason. Be silent, O imbecile Nature, learn that man transcends man to a degree that is immeasurable, and learn of your Master your real condition, of which you are ignorant. Hear God."

And again (p. 782):

"In the later years of his life he had come to regard Christ, His life and teachings, as the centre-point of all knowledge, whether human or divine."

What is the true interpretation of such passages? May it not be that Pascal, like many others, held what has been called the doctrine of co-ordinate truths? That these antithetical truths are like lines which really meet in a point or converge to a centre which is immeasurably or infinitely distant; but to us, who see so small a portion of them within our limited vision, who can travel along them for so short a time, they must appear as parallel and separate; but this appearance does not lessen the assurance that they all meet in God, in Christ. If a man "has faced the spectres of the mind, and laid them" at length, should not his position be judged by the conclusion, not by the mere processes by which he has arrived at it? The builder or architect is appraised not by the disiecta membra of the materials which he uses, but by the completed edifice. Pascal did not live to finish his, and we can only infer what it might have been; but does not what is left of it give us sufficient assurance that his skepticism had been vanquished, and that he had found, or believed that he had found, a meeting point for all these apparently irreconcilable truths.

One remark more. Has Mr. Owen sufficiently allowed in these volumes for the difference between southern and northern temperament in holding the "twofold truth?" Many a radical and professed atheist, of Southern France at least, sends his daughters to be educated in ultramontane convents. Emilia Pardo Bazán somewhere tells of a Spanish apostle of free-thought urgently exhorting all women, the mothers of the future generation, to attend his lectures. "Where are your own wife and daughter?" asked the lady afterwards. "Do you think," was the indignant reply, "that I would allow them to attend these lectures?" Can we imagine Charles Bradlaugh acting thus?

In a review of a work like this mere conventional eulogy is out of place. I can only express my very great admiration of it, and how keenly I feel my incompetence to gauge adequately the learning of which proofs are given on every page.

WENTWORTH WEBSTER.

The Pamirs: being a Narrative of a Year's Expedition on horseback and on foot through Kashmir, Western Tibet, Chinese Tartary, and Russian Central Asia. By the Earl of Dunmore. In 2 vols. (John Murray.)

LORD DUNMORE has achieved a land journey of more than two thousand miles, "crossing sixty-nine rivers and forty-one passes, many of them"—of the passes, no doubt—"being amongst the highest in the world." So much one learns from the Preface. There is a vagueness in the phrase, "amongst the highest," but it seems to afford hope of something out of the common in altitudes. And then, at the end of the second volume, there is a diagram of high places scaled by the aspiring traveller, with a line to represent the comparative insignificance of Mont Blanc. The highest of all was the Karakorum Pass, for which an elevation of 18,900 feet is shown. In the text Lord Dunmore states that one of his aneroids marked 18,980 and the other 19,300 feet. As a matter of fact, however, the true altitude of the Karakorum, ascertained by careful observations of the boiling point, is 18,550 feet. This is the figure given both in the Indian Survey map and in the Imperial Gazetteer of India; and it is not a little absurd for a traveller to suggest three other readings. Once, indeed, it did occur to Lord Dunmore that his aneroids varied in a curious way; but he has evidently omitted to consult Mr. Whympers's monograph on the subject, and, as a rule, notes down altitudes with boundless confidence in the accuracy and value of his totals. The error is the more to be regretted, since the measurement of heights was his only essay in scientific observation. He was ill-equipped with instruments at starting; and of those he took with him, several were broken before he crossed the mountains. He never once fixed a position by astronomy; while even the daily record of his marches was so carelessly kept up, that on one occasion he found himself a good four-and-twenty hours out of his reckoning. When we recall the admirable and painstaking work done by former travellers like Col. Trotter and Mr. Elias, who in their passion for geographical research went through untold hardship, Lord Dunmore's claim to speak as an explorer of new regions, his criticisms of existing maps, and his attempts to improve on them, argue a strange misapprehension of the importance of his journey.

He was more successful as a sportsman. His main object in going to the Pamirs was to shoot oris poli. He chose the worst season, indeed, for the trip, as he admits himself; yet he made the most of his opportunities when there, and, judged merely as a story of shikar, his narrative is exciting enough. It will also give the reader who is unacquainted either with General Gordon's book The Roof of the World, or Shaw's High Tartary, or Wood's Journey to the Oxus, a tolerably good idea of the Pamir region. A better description of the country between the Punjab and Leh in Ladakh will be found in Mr. Knight's recent work. From Leh Lord Dunmore proceeded to Yarkund and the Pamirs—

"And o'er the aerial mountains which pour down
Indus and Oxus from their icy caves
In joy and exultation held his way."

He seems to regard the passage of the Karakorum as an extraordinary feat. Few living Englishmen, he says, have crossed this pass and, to the best of his belief, there are only three published accounts thereof. But since Dr. Thomson reached the summit in 1847, dozens of English travellers have traversed and described the Karakorum; among whom may be mentioned the members of the Forsyth Mission, as well as Shaw, Dalgleish, Johnson, Carey, Younghusband, and Colonel Mark Bell. Lord Dunmore visited Somatash, in the Alichur Pamir, five months after the fight there between Afghans and Cossacks. Fourteen Afghan soldiers had been buried on the field of battle, and he found their blood-stained coats hard by the tomb. A month later he met Col. Grombchevsky, who took part in the engagement, and asked him about it; but the Cossack officer curtly answered, "I have entirely forgotten." Somatash, Lord Dunmore thinks, should be written Surma-tash, "Black Stone"; and he was told by the Kirghiz that there was such a stone with an inscription on it, which the Russians had carried away with them, an unwarrantable removal of a neighbour's landmark. He afterwards saw the identical stone in the Tashkend Museum. The writing, of which he appends a translation, refers to a Chinese victory. The vanquished enemy, it says, took to flight, "while our soldiers in the pursuit resembled tigers and leopards, chasing hares and foxes." Nevertheless, Lord Dunmore was unable to discover the history of the Black Stone. "That some legend is attached to it," he observes, "there is no doubt; but these Kirghiz are strangely ignorant regarding anything in the shape of folk-lore belonging to their own country." Sometimes, one might add, these travellers are strangely ignorant. Tradition and history may both be found in Gen. Gordon's book. When the Chinese took possession of Eastern Turkestan in 1759, the Khoja ruler of the country fled with the remnant of his forces to the Pamirs, hotly pursued by the Chinese general. The fugitives were overtaken at Somatash, and, in their panic, drove their own wives and children, mounted on horses and camels, into Yashil Kul, the Green Lake, to save them from the hands of the enemy. According to the legend which General Gordon heard from the Kirghiz, the noise of lamentation and the cries of the dying are audible on the shores of Yashil Kul to this day.

The information about the Kirghiz, collected in chapter xxx., will of course attract the attention of ethnologists. According to the author, the Kirghiz race in the Pamirs is divided into four principal tribes: namely, Niaman, Kipchak, Ta-it, and Kissack. It should be noted, however, that the Kirghiz of the Pamir and the Alai are more properly known as Kara Kirghiz. They are identical with the Buruts; and Sir Henry Howorth is of opinion that they represent that section of the race, afterwards known as Kirghiz Kazaks, which in the twelfth century remained independent of the Khans of the Golden Horde. They first came, he tells us, to the Pamirs in the early part of the sixteenth century, when they were driven southwards by the Kal-mucks. If this be so, there is an anachronism in Matthew Arnold's allusion to the wandering Kirghizzes who lived on the Pamir in the days of Sohrab and Rustum. Sir Henry Howorth believes, moreover, that both Kirghiz and Kara Kirghiz were descended from the Kirai ruled over by Prester John. The late Colonel Kostenko printed in his Gazetteer of Turkestan a list of Kara Kirghiz tribes, and another will be found in Schuyler's book. The Russian authority has "Namiian" where Lord Dunmore writes Niaman (the Naimans are a well-known race); Kesek or Kazik-Aiak for Kissack; Kadirshah for Kiddarshah; and Kandi for Kangdeh. The Kipchaks are entirely distinct from the Kirghiz. Lord Dunmore describes the Pamir Kirghiz as a simple, peaceable folk, who neither raid nor rob. Their encampments are governed by Begs elected by themselves. Their probable destiny is to become the subjects of the White Czar.

The Hon. George Curzon has dealt with Lord Dunmore's theory about the source of the Oxus. It is not a new theory, and from both historical and geographical points of view, there is much to be said for and against it. But a writer who firmly believes that the word "Oxus" is derived from the Turki Ak-su, "white water," puts himself at once out of court. Sir Henry Rawlinson and Sir Henry Yule were agreed in regarding "Oxus" as the Greek transliteration of Waksh. Prof. Vambéry suggests that the mythical hero of Turkish legend, Oghuz, gave his name to the river. It is an interesting controversy; but there is nothing in Lord Dunmore's book that will help us to a solution. Among other eccentricities that may be mentioned, is the statement that the Amir Sher Ali was the eldest son of the Dost. Surely, too, it is a little absurd in these days to quote at length "the very interesting and instructive parallel between the gods of the Indian and European heathens," drawn by Sir William Jones. Last of all one may venture a word of protest against the facetious style which Lord Dunmore thinks it necessary to adopt. A single example will suffice. His travelling companion, Major Roche, missed a fair shot at an ovis poli. Lord Dunmore writes:

"His description of his rage was most graphic; having nothing to lean against, he sat down on the ground to swear, and if all the hopes and wishes that he expressed for that shikari's future were to be fully realised, the man would do well to solicit instant cremation as the more pleasurable alternative."

This sort of thing might be left to the New Humorists.

STEPHEN WHEELER.

Glimpses of Church and Social Life in the Highlands in the Olden Time. By Alexander Macpherson. (Blackwoods.)

THERE has been a marked tendency of late to write the history and topography of Scotland in sections. The idea was first carried out, to some extent, by that clever, self-confident personage, Sir John Sinclair, of Ulbster; and the result of his patience and perseverance was the monumental work known as the "Old Statistical Account," published just a hundred years ago. Within the pages of his twenty-one volumes there are preserved numerous traditions from half-civilised districts, details of agricultural processes now obsolete, and records of historical buildings that have since disappeared, which could not readily have been preserved save by the plan he adopted. Fifty years after Sinclair's time, a similar work was carried out under the superintendence of Messrs. Blackwood & Sons, entitled the "New Statistical Account," which is now very valuable for reference. Both these schemes were entrusted to the parish ministers, possibly because no other educated person could be found in every parish capable of giving authoritative statements. But a vast change has come over Scotland in the meanwhile. The local antiquary has become a man of importance; and we no longer need to take our topography with an admixture of the odium theologicum, nor find dissertations on the culture of turnips interspersed with denunciations of the enormity of Dissent. Quite a number of volumes dealing with separate counties have been issued within the last twenty years, and there are not many portions of Scotland now left without an historian.

For work of this kind Mr. Macpherson's goodly volume may be taken as a model. Though his title is wide enough to include all Scotland north of the Grampians, he has confined himself to that portion of the valley of the Spey known as Badenoch—the district colloquially described as "the land of the Macphersons." With this part of the kingdom the author is thoroughly familiar. It is what they call in Scotland his "calf-ground," and is to him the "spot of earth supremely blest" which every patriot locates somewhere. There is not a ruined castle or moss-covered tombstone in all that wide strath which does not preserve for him some memories of departed warriors, of devoted heroines—

"Of old unhappy, far-off things,
And battles long ago."

Like a true Highlander, he delights to trace the heroic deeds of his clansmen of other days, and to relate with enthusiastic fervour tales of their prowess in the field, and fidelity to their leaders. Badenoch may be taken as a district fairly representative of the condition of the Scottish Highlanders generally; hence this book reproduces a faithful picture of the past and present condition of Northern Scotland.

There are two centres of civilisation around which social life always crystallises—the church and the feudal castle. In his volume, therefore, Mr. Macpherson has made these two institutions supply the main divisions of his work. The Badenoch district includes the parishes of Kingussie, Alvie, and Laggan; and the ecclesiastical history of each is given in detail. It is accepted as a credible tradition that a church was founded by St. Columba at Kingussie towards the close of the sixth century, and the name of the saint is still preserved in connection with the cemetery that surrounded the church, though every trace of the building has long since disappeared. There was unquestionably a church here in the twelfth century, for at that time a certain Muriach, or Murdoch, was the parson of Kingussie. As his elder brother died without issue, Muriach became chief of the Clan Chattan, and obtained a dispensation from the Pope in 1173, which enabled him to marry the daughter of the Thane of Cawdor. From this circumstance his descendants were known by the name of Macpherson = Sons of the Parson, though the strictly correct designation is Clann Mhuirich = Sons of Murdoch. The parson had five sons, four of whom were the ancestors of a numerous progeny. Ewan, the second son, is now represented by Duncan Macpherson of Cluny; and the others were the founders of the families of Cromb or Smith, of Macgillivray, and of Davidson. The history of the church of Kingussie is traced with much detail from the time of Murdoch till the present day, though lack of documentary evidence leaves the pre-Reformation period rather obscure. In a similar way Mr. Macpherson has dealt with the history of the other parishes in the Badenoch district, giving many curious details as to the successive Protestant ministers. He has made copious extracts from the Session Records, especially those contemporaneous with the Rebellions of 1715 and 1745; and these throw much light upon the conditions of social life in the Highlands at that most interesting time. The minister and the elders forming the session had then full charge of the morals of the parishioners; and, though their penances were often autocratic, on the whole they dispensed a kind of rough-and-ready justice. If we were to take the Session Records of Scotland as an absolutely true index of the social state of the people, it would appear that the besetting sin of Scotsmen of that period was incontinence; but the session of Kingussie had the happy knack of turning even this infraction of the moral law to public benefit. Take the following instance:—

"June 20th, 1714.—Gregor McGregor, cited, appeared, and confessed that he had been guilty with the foresaid Nin Ian Buiy, both being exhorted to repentance, and appointed to satisfy descepline next Lord's-day, and the said Gregor appointed to build a bridge of fea charhad on the high way betwixt the church and Kintacher for his penalty."

Next to this sin came disrespect for the Fourth Commandment; and numerous instances are given of punishment meted out to abandoned creatures who absented themselves from the kirk, or who "prophaned the Lord's-day" by pulling nuts in the wood, or fishing in the water of Feshie. Several of the tenants of Dallyfour were treated as hopeless reprobates, because they had dared to bring home their wandering swine from the strath upon the sacred day.

The castles in Badenoch occupy a considerable portion of this most interesting volume. The Castle of Ruthven was long the seat of the Lords of Badenoch; and as this lordship was held for many years by the Comyns, it is probable that the first keep bearing this name was erected by one of them early in the fourteenth century. In 1371, Badenoch was conferred by Robert II. upon his son Alexander Stewart, whose lawless conduct led to his commemoration in history by the sobriquet of "the Wolf of Badenoch." References are made to the career of this rapacious prince in various parts of Mr. Macpherson's volume, though he does not allude to the fact that the chief seat of the turbulent nobleman was at Garth Castle, in Glenlyon—now the property of Sir Donald Currie—the old keep there being still known as the Caisteal-a-Chuilen-Churta = the Castle of the Fierce Wolf. Objection may also be taken to the inscription which Mr. Macpherson quotes as that placed on the gravestone of the Wolf of Badenoch in Dunkeld Cathedral. His version does not agree in several particulars with the veritable epitaph, and omits the phrase describing him, with monumental sarcasm, as "bene memoriae." About the middle of the fifteenth century Ruthven Castle became the property of the Earls of Huntly, and it figured frequently in the wars that ravaged Scotland during the two succeeding centuries. The old castle was destroyed by Viscount Dundee in 1689, and the ruins were partly removed to make room for Ruthven Barracks, erected in 1718. It was here that the fugitives from Culloden met to take farewell of Prince Charlie; and it is supposed that, but for the urgent command to disperse sent by the Prince, the clansmen would have rallied and struck another blow to bring "the auld Stuarts back again." Mr. Macpherson has brought together much valuable matter relating not only to Ruthven, but to the chief historic monuments in the district.

Two literary names are inseparably associated with Badenoch—James Macpherson, the translator of Ossian, and Mrs. Grant, of Laggan, the author of Letters from the Mountains. In the biographical sketch of "Ossian" Macpherson, the author has once more gone over the arguments in favour of the authenticity of the Ossianic fragments. Few critics now believe that James Macpherson evolved Ossian from his inner consciousness, since his confessedly original poems are beneath mediocrity. On the other hand, the fact (to which his new defender does not allude) that he interpolated fraudulent documents in his two volumes of "State Papers"—for instance, the notorious forgery of Viscount Dundee's narrative of the Battle of Killiecrankie—justifies the suspicion with which he has been regarded. But, in any case, Macpherson deserves the renown he obtained. If he merely rescued portions of a lost Gaelic epic and translated them into English, he was worthy of fame; if he invented Ossian and the whole majestic story of the deeds of Fingallian heroes, he was a creative poet worthy of a place not far from Milton. A fine reproduction of his portrait by Romaey embellishes this volume, together with a view of the mansion of Belleville which he built out of the produce of his literary labours. Mrs. Grant, of Laggan, has dropped out of the notice of the present generation, though she was the valued correspondent of Sir Walter Scott, and her prose works were once the delight of Edinburgh society. One or two of her poems are still preserved among the gems of Scottish minstrelsy.

In bringing his records of the district down to the present day, Mr. Macpherson has given very full details as to the family of Cluny Macpherson, dwelling especially upon the honourable career of Ewan Macpherson of Cluny, who died in 1885 at a very advanced age—"the last of the old Jacobite chiefs." He was the grandson of that Cluny Macpherson whose romantic adventures in 1745 are well known to every student of the period; and he thus formed a curious link between that time and our own day. There are two portraits of him given in this volume, both showing the characteristic garb of the clan of which he was the acknowledged and beloved chief. The genealogies of the various branches of the Clan Macpherson should be of service to members of this widely scattered race, and, unlike most genealogies, they are eminently readable. The only objection that can be taken to the work as a whole is the unmethodical arrangement of the topics, which has resulted from the publication of portions at various times; but this difficulty is largely amended by means of indices.

A. H. MILLAR.

The Life of Marie Antoinette. By Maxime de la Rocheterie. Translated from the French by Cora Hamilton Bell. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

It would be going too far to say that M. de la Rocheterie is altogether without political bias. For instance, he considers that Louis XV. showed "self-possession and courage" during his last illness, and made an edifying end; and he also evidently regards Louis XVIII. as having been an altogether wise and efficient ruler—and these are views that rather imply a monarchical standpoint. But though, looking at things from this standpoint, he was not likely perhaps to set down aught in malice against Marie Antoinette, yet, on the other hand, he has not yielded to the temptation, if temptation there were, of aught extenuating. This Life is a serious and conscientious piece of historical work, and may justly be described as impartial with that best kind of impartiality that excludes neither love nor admiration.

Poor Queen! Even in the earlier years, when her path seemed strewn with flowers, she had to walk in difficult and slippery places. It was no well-disciplined mature woman, but a child of fourteen, who left Vienna in the spring of 1770 to pick her way, as best she could, among the petty intrigues of the dissolute French court; and her husband, the Dauphin and future king, was an immature dolt. If the pretty, charming, natural, spontaneous girl made mistakes as she blossomed into womanhood, who shall wonder? No doubt she gambled—most women of a certain rank gambled in those days. No doubt she rebelled against the etiquette by which she was enveloped—it must often have been unspeakably wearisome—and sought refuge, either in an imprudent retirement, or in public diversions even more likely to create misconception. No doubt, too, her words were sometimes indiscreetly sharp, probably sharper than she meant them to be. But M. de la Rocheterie, while setting down the faults—not glossing them at all—claims for her, and I think justly, that through the earlier years, when frivolity was yet possible, she was whole-hearted, pure, essentially good and kindly: a genuine woman.

In truth, her character does not seem hard to read; and it could only be by one of Fate's most cruel freaks that a woman with such a character, coupled with such advantages of face and bearing, should have been so unpopular. Of course, one must always remember that France and Austria had for generations been hereditary enemies, and that the young princess came to her new country, as it were, from a hostile camp. Nor did Maria Theresa, with her much sermonising—a good deal of it deserved—always do justice to the delicacy of her daughter's position. Then the French royal family, into which she entered on her marriage, were a prey to small jealousies, and with a blind folly well-nigh incredible seemed to take a malign pleasure in discrediting her. That the populace should have come to hate her so atrociously is not, perhaps, matter for surprise. She was a foreigner and a queen. Circumstances, the utter want of a leader on the loyalist side, forced her into a position of political prominence, for which notwithstanding her superb gifts of courage and devotion, she was not fitted by nature or education. Napoleon is reported to have said of her daughter, the Duchess of Angoulême, that she was the only man in the family. In almost similar terms Mirabeau had said of her: "The king has only one man near him, and that is his wife." Against this one man—this rock in some ways so strong, and yet from its position and supports so weak—the rising tide of the mob's passion surged angrily, cruelly, mercilessly. It is no paradox to say that she would not have been detested so much if she had been less lovable and queenly.

Even now the old cry of hate finds an occasional echo. There is a curious passage in the paper on Robespierre in Mr. John Morley's Critical Miscellanies that seems like a belated utterance of 1793. "Blind and obstinate choice of personal gratification before the common weal," "one of the worst state criminals that ever afflicted a nation," "incredible dissipations," "insensate gambings," "dissimulation," "vindictiveness," "a bitter grief to her heroic mother," "the evil genius of her husband," "the despair of her truest advisers," "imputed depravities," for surpassing "anything" that Juvenal has recorded against Messalina, "and that may be true for aught we shall ever know to the contrary," "the protagonist of the most barbarous and execrable of causes"—these be good set terms. Fouquier-Tinville scarce found better in which to arraign "Veuve Capet" when she stood before him, shattered in health, haggard and prematurely old, but yet queenly and undaunted.

"When people write hymns of pity for the Queen," adds Mr. Morley, "we always recall the poor woman whom Arthur Young met, as he was walking up a hill, to ease his horse, near Mars-le-Tour. Though the unfortunate creature was only twenty-eight, she might have been taken for sixty or seventy, her figure was so bent, her face so furrowed and hardened by toil."

Poor thing! She is an item, no doubt, in the great sum total of human misery—misery that has its place, alas! in the England of to-day, as it had its place in the France of last century. But, after all, even putting queenship and the fall from the most exalted rank aside, were her sorrows comparable to those of Marie Antoinette? Her friends, so far as appears, had not been butchered, nor her husband beheaded, nor her son torn away from her and given over to brutal guardianship. Neither had she been afflicted with foul calumny and insult. If she was old at twenty-eight, the queen was old at thirty-eight when her head fell beneath the knife. Lot for lot, I think the poor peasant is not most to be pitied. When asked, at her trial, why she had not answered one of the most hideous charges brought against her, the queen rejoined, her voice ringing through the hall: "If I have not replied, it is because nature refuses to reply to such a charge made against a mother. I appeal to every mother here present." Surely such a cry pierces through all distinctions of rank. Grant that she stood there a woman only, and not a queen; still the sorrows of her womanhood may call for sympathy. While as to the political position she took up, surely again she may be forgiven for not having recognised, in the France of 1793, the dawn of a regenerated human race. M. Taine, who had studied the subject profoundly, never reached that knowledge at all.

It is just a century since she went, fearless, to her terrible end. M. de la Rocheterie's excellent history appears at an opportune date. It is time the pamphlets of a hundred years ago were forgotten.

FRANK T. MARZIALS.

NEW NOVELS.

Vashti and Esther. In 2 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

Montezuma's Daughter. By H. Rider Haggard. (Longmans.)

This Troublesome World. In 3 vols. (Edward Arnold.)

Gold for Dross. By Mrs. Conney. In 3 vols. (Hutchinson.)

A Tragic Blunder. By Mrs. Lovett Cameron. In 2 vols. (White.)

Hugh Darville. By E. L. St. Germaine. (Fisher Unwin.)

Three Brace of Lovers. By Harold Vallings. (Bristol: Arrowsmith.)

The New Academe. By Edward Hartington. (Chapman & Hall.)

Vashti and Esther is described by its author as "a story of society to-day," and there is a touch of Dodoesque smartness in the sayings of some of its characters. Lady Marcia Legh's "Why I suspected you of running away with her I am sure I don't know, except that the human heart is desperately wicked and one always believes the worst of one's friends and relations—especially relations" is not bad; and "Why is it virtuous women always cut their skirts so short?" is positively good. The frocks and the flirtations of the married folk more particularly are quite up to date. Even the unmarried people are tolerable. The best of them is Lettice Legh, who sings

"So 'elp me bob, I'm crazy;
'Lizer, you're a daisy!"

And thus explains to a confidante the relations between herself and the man she is to marry: "I've promised to leave all the swearing and smoking to him. I've promised never to paint—he said nothing about poudre—and never to dance a pas seul of any sort in public." The plot, however, is by no means all that it might have been. Kenneth Johnson, married to the Vashti of the story, is not "thorough." His "affairs" with Mrs. Turton and Mrs. Venning are really not worth mentioning. Besides, he does not seduce Esther Hope. All that he does is to meet her clandestinely, kiss and embrace her, conceal from her at first the awkward little circumstance that he is a married man, give her a necklace, let her fall desperately in love with him, and drift up to London to die. This is not a matter which should wreck matrimonial happiness; and so, of course, the book ends with "We'll have a ripping Goodwood," said Kenneth. Violet rubbed her wet face against his hand with the action of a grateful dog rather than that of a high-spirited, proud woman." A certain "Duchess" is well sketched, though her sudden death at a festivity is nothing less than a scandal. The best portrait, however, in Vashti and Esther is that of Adam Mallard, a religious, love-lorn gamekeeper. It is so good as to encourage the belief that the author could do very much better work than she has done here.

It is to be regretted that Montezuma's Daughter was not published before the "boom" in South African slaughter-house fiction began to decline. It is decidedly the most powerful and enjoyable book that Mr. Rider Haggard has written, with the single exception of Jess. There is, of course, a good deal of killing in the book, for, as its name indicates, it deals with the struggle between Cortes and the Mexicans; but the killing is, to quote the old distinction, "decidedly gentlemanly." Charles Kingsley is suggested by many of the experiences of Thomas Wingfold; and Juan de Garcia, superfine Spanish scoundrel though he is intended to be, recalls rather too easily such very old friends as Mephistopheles and James Carker. But it must be allowed that the duel between Wingfold and the man who has murdered his mother, and even murders his child, is admirably sustained from first to last; and that Otomie, Wingfold's first wife—who is to his second what Rebecca is to Rowena—is an ideal princess of the borderland between barbarism and civilisation. She is worth a dozen Shes, and must be given the first place in Mr. Rider Haggard's gallery of women. But Montezuma's Daughter is strong throughout and in every sense. Above all, there are tender passages in it which encourage the belief that, were its author to make a new departure in fiction—of the desirability of such a new departure there surely cannot be any doubt—he would attain a more enduring though not more brilliant success than his first.

In This Troublesome World an essentially commonplace plot is lifted by circumstances and by one or two "modern ideas" into the upper air of the genuinely romantic. That a doctor should, by means of an extra dose of a sleeping draught, revenge himself on the man who has not only run away with his wife, but has insulted his daughter, and has asked him for a consideration to keep silence about the seduction that he may make a "good" marriage, is not, of course, quite incredible. The wrong man, too, has before now been charged with a murder; and so far, Allan Gilmour may be said to suffer in the company of others. But Dr. Langton with his elixir, which at once gives him life and causes him to betray his secrets, Gilmour with his determination to live down his trial, Claudia with her secret as a daughter and a wife and her mission as a Sister, and the detective Green with the apparently perfect knowledge that enables him to place Claudia in the dock charged with the same crime as Gilmour, give an air of novelty to a story which it would be easy to tear to pieces, but which is characterised not only by originality but by genuine nobility of sentiment. Dr. Langton's final appearance in court—and on the earth—to save his heroic daughter's life by rising from moral weakness into moral strength, and by his own death, is, of course, an impossibility; but it is effective, and effect is the final test of such art as the author possesses and manifestly believes in. It is to the credit of This Troublesome World, that it will be read mainly for its unconventional plot. Gilmour and Claudia, as the Romeo and Juliet of the modern world of science and self-surrender, are admirably sketched; and almost Dickensian art is exhibited in the portrait of Hephzibah, who saves Claudia and the reputation of her husband by inducing the old doctor at the eleventh hour to give a life for a life.

In Gold for Dross Mrs. Conney tries a new departure, but she does not attain a perfect success. We have not, as in A Ruthless Avenger, a whole course of sensational incidents, including a murder and a murderer with a score of aliases; we have only a case of accidental poisoning, and a trial for murder. Mrs. Conney tries her hand at character-sketching; and, mainly, perhaps, because she has found it necessary to fill three volumes, she is tediously minute. Roddy Bethune, the central character of the story, is a good study of a young man not without excellent instincts, but who, from not having sufficient moral force even to attempt to discipline his nature, contracts a loveless marriage, succumbs to a heartless siren, and finally comes to ruin. But most of the other characters are either artistically unlikeable, or artistically impossible. To the one category belongs Jean, Roddy's unloved wife, who, one cannot help thinking, would have made a better job of his life had she tried a little harder to understand him; to the other, his sister Barbara, whose "off and on" treatment of Lord Newnham involves a somewhat too severe tax on ordinary credulity. Mrs. Conney tries further to make both Scotch scenery and London society play a part in her book, but with only a moderate amount of success.

Mrs. Lovett Cameron's style is tolerably well known, and A Tragie Blunder is an average example of it. Rupert Carroll and his cousin, Lord Nethercliffe, are as alike as two peas. This similarity, and other circumstances, give Rupert and Irene Galland a good deal of trouble. Rupert marries Agatha, and becomes grey-haired in consequence; and Irene is just on the point of marrying wealthy, good-natured Joe Taunton. But, of course, Agatha and Joe both die; "all is explained," and Rupert and Irene pair off at the end of the last volume. This is the whole of A Tragie Blunder; it is excellent and even spirited commonplace. It should be said that Billy, a gamin, who plays a very important part in the story, is admirably sketched.

Hugh Darville may be recommended to all who like a fairly well written story of a kind that runs on familiar lines. Hugh meets on board a steamer an interesting child who is rather badly treated by her mother, pities her, introduces her to his friends and relatives, and after she develops into a beautiful young woman, marries her. Then the book presents us with the troubles of another pair of lovers, Dick Melton and Mary Darville, the self-sacrifice of a young man nicknamed "Pepper," who, to prevent a railway accident, gets killed himself, the deteriorating influence exerted over Hugh by the too fascinating and self-conscious siren Lady Caird, and some fearful and wonderful dialect. Altogether, Hugh Darville is a simple, substantial story, printed, by the way, on frightfully substantial paper, which defies the paper-knife.

It would scarcely be fair to dignify Three Brace of Lovers with the title of a novel. It is a farce—here and there rattling, but oftener halting—upon life in Chatterby, of which we are told that it was "not one of those drowsy dead-alive little towns about which we read so much; but, on the whole, rather a brisk little place, gay at certain periods, downright dissipated at times—as, for instance, during the Christmas holidays, or the annual cricket week, when a couple of county matches were played on the town ground—and fervidly athletic always."

The little conspiracy in which, at the beginning of the book, Colonel Trevelloc and his cousin engage, to the detriment and confusion of the inhabitants of Chatterby, has some of the elements of genuine and even genteel comedy in it. It is quite impossible to refrain from sympathising both with the refined Delicia when contrasted with her not quite congenial surroundings, and with her pertinacious and ultimately successful lover Bisset Payne. There is plenty of animal spirits without a touch of coarseness in Three Brace of Lovers, even although it does suggest too often a mere interlude of flirtation between two games of lawn tennis.

There are suggestions both of the literary unconventionalism and of the almost jerky optimism of Charles Reade in The New Academe. It is in reality a picture of a model school, kept by a Mr. Robinson, in which the masters are philosophers and the governesses are angels, including Miss Georgie, of whom we are told, also somewhat after Charles Reade's manner, that "her bodice was no prude," and that "she lavished embraces where she might be allowed, and there was such a bounteous grace about her that one might well believe she thought the limit of allowance too narrow." It is quite obvious that the author of this book has an honest and profound dislike of certain weaknesses in our educational system; but it may be doubted if he is helping to get rid of them by presenting a fanciful picture of a scholastic little heaven below. One feels somewhat dissatisfied also that Eveline, the true heroine of the story, should have consented to abandon her position as widow of the unique and lovable Greatheart even to capture the divine pedagogue, Mr. Anselm, from Miss Georgie with all her armament of bodice and embraces: it is quite certain that Charles Reade would have managed differently and more artistically. At the same time, we must allow that several of the characters in The New Academe—Mrs. Greatheart's son, a major, and a Miss Annie, who is Miss Georgie's foil—are neither unnatural nor carelessly sketched.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

SOME BOOKS OF VERSE.

Poems here at Home. By James Whitcomb Riley. (Longmans.) We said not long ago that American writers had a pleasant habit of sending across the sea some very delightful volumes of verse, and here is another gift to bear out the statement. There is no difficulty for the critic in reviewing this successor to Old-Fashioned Roses, that charming book whereby Mr. Riley first captured English lovers of poetry. Poems here at Home is a book to welcome and give thanks for. It is a melodious medley of grave and gay; but whatever the note of the singer, it is so excellently given out that even the most captious would find it a hard matter to be surly. Mr. Riley has treated many of his themes in dialect, and the poems so presented make, in our case, the more winning appeal. Those that are gravely writ down in scholar's English are full of lovely images; but Mr. Riley's ability is never so evident as when he takes a homely subject, and sings it in the homely western lingo that he understands so well. It is wonderful what a vehicle for emotion a dialect is when used masterfully. Who can resist the music and pathos of William Barnes? If the wise reader will first of all commit to memory the glossary, not turning to the poems till he knows the local vocabulary, he has a treat in store for the present winter. Mr. Riley, however, can be understood without any difficulty. We offer an instance. To our thinking, "Old John Henry" deserves to be for ever remembered.

"Old John's jes' made o' the commonest stuff—
Old John Henry—

He's tough, I reckon, but nens too tough,
Too tough though's a better than not enough!
Says old John Henry.

He does his best, and when his best's a bad,
He don't fret none, ner he don't git sad,
He simply 'lows it's the best he had.

Old John Henry!

"His doctern's jes' o' the plainest brand—

Old John Henry—

A smilin' face and a hearty hand,
'S religen' at all folks understand,
Says old John Henry.

He's stov' up some with the rhumatiz,
And they hain't no shine on them shoes o' his,
And his hair hain't cut, but his eye-teeth ia.

Old John Henry!

"He feeds hisse'f when the stock's all fed—

Old John Henry—

And sleeps like a babe when he goes to bed,
And dreams o' heaven and home-made bread,
Says old John Henry.

He hain't refined as he'd ort to be
To fit the statutes o' poetry,
Ner his clothes don't fit him—but he fits me.

Old John Henry."

It is impossible in a short notice to point out all the excellences of this book. The faults are few. Those who are for capital entertainment cannot do better than become acquainted, at their utmost speed, with this author's verses. His muse goes sometimes in the boots of the backwoodsman, but this does not mean a loss of sweetness. It would be unfair to end this brief review without making comment upon the pretty appearance of the volume.

The Magic House. By Duncan Campbell Scott. (Methuen.) After a perusal of The Magic House, any critical reader will surely be forced to admit two things: firstly, that Mr. Scott not seldom has the true touch only given to the poet; secondly, that he in carelessness has composed his book, and in carelessness brought it into the gaze of men. Here beauty does so strive with ugliness, smoothness with jolting, poetry with prose, that we are confounded by the union of opposites. We venture to present a few contrasts:

"Buried in dingles more remote,
Or drifted from some ferny rise,
The swooning of the golden throat
Drops in the mellow dusk and dies."

In this both the movement and expressions are perfect. Consider, now, the second verse of the lyric that follows:

"My heart would need the earth,
My voice would need the sea,
To only tell the one half
How dear you are to me.

"And if I had the winds,
The stars and the planets as well,
I might tell the other half,
Or perhaps I would try to tell."

Later on in the book Mr. Scott actually surpasses this verse. As thus:

"The winter's loose somewhere,
Gathering snow for a fight;
From the feel of the air
I think it will freeze to-night."

How the writer of many exquisite stanzas, the author of not a few most felicitous turns of language, could print such stuff, it is indeed hard to imagine. There is occupation for Mr. Scott. If he will winnow the chaff from his grain, he has it in his power to please. It would be well if he considered his epithets.

He is audacious, certainly, but that is not enough. Even an innovation needs to be applied harmoniously. We do not love "twanging hawk," for instance. Sometimes Mr. Scott has similar sounds too near to each other

'But the sea is in the splendid sun
Plunging'— and again:

"Starts a group of silver birches Bursting"—

We hope he is prepared to make improvements where improvements are due.

Flowers from Oversea. By Maude Robertson-Hicks. (Rugby: George E. Over.) If the authoress of this pretty book has sung too often in the minor key, we are bound to admit that she has set her sorrow to most pleasant tunes. Little of joy finds a place in these forty-one songs; they all breathe regret, sometimes with a sincerity that comes very closely to the heart. One thing is particularly noticeable. Miss Robertson-Hicks knows all there is to be known about short lines. She is able to write the briefest measures without the least appearance of jolt, and some of her poems written in this mode run with an ease quite remarkable. Some of her conceits are perilous—"a halo round the heart," for instance—but on the whole she has given us a successful first book. We are much tempted to quote "April," which has both beauty and speed, but must choose a shorter extract. Here follow the first two verses of "Blossoms":

"Could I re-gather every flower
Of love and word of thine,
And fashion so a perfect bower
Wherein this heart of mine
Might rest,
With thee for guest!"

"Had memory nobler strength to bear
The stress and strain of time,
My blossoms still were fresh and fair
As in their natal prime,
But how
They wither now!"

Lyrics and Elegiacs. By Marcus S. C. Rickards. (Bell.) Mr. Swinburne, in a noble chorus, has recorded how many things go to the making of man. It is to be presumed that a poet needs more elements. After reading all of Mr. Rickards's book once, and much of it twice, we have come to the conclusion that he is one of those who are greater poets in feeling than in action; out in the fields he has sensations that miss the drudging intellect; the loveliness of flower and tree speaks poetry to him; when he would set down these harmonious impulses upon paper, there is a loss of spirit. The fragrance of the woodland escapes; he is, as it were, tongue-tied as regards the best, the beautiful, that filled him in the presence of nature. A light and lovely utterance has not been given him. But not everything has escaped. He is earnest, thoughtful, suggestive. Sometimes a few verses keep the glow of his sensations, as the sky at evening keeps that of the sun gone below the horizon. In his book there are hundreds of lines that arrest, but far too often there is the heavy touch that mars what would have been otherwise a notable set of verses. We will try to prove our case by quoting the two opening stanzas of an "Ode to a 'Strad' Violin":

"Conceived in Heaven, formed on Earth,
Immortal Genius gave thee birth!
Rich tone, rare fashions stamp thy worth
And prove thy pedigree.
It may be Nature's music clings
Round even severed sylvan things,
And so perchance thy substance brings
A boon from land and sea.

"This frame, so exquisite, long stood
Mid the arboreal brotherhood
Steeped with the warblings of a wood
Nigh some soft southern wave,
A reminiscence of whose chimera
May wake strange harmony at times,
As echoes from pre-natal climes
Lethæan spells outbrave."

could there be a more pronounced conjunction of prose and poetry? And so it is throughout Lyrics and Elegiacs. The book is abundantly interesting, but it is impossible not to regret that Mr. Rickards has gone without the great gift of a "singing mouth."

Poems and Lyrics. By W. J. Dawson. (Macmillans.) Though Mr. Dawson in his first seventy pages has maintained a high level of excellence, we cannot help but think that he has kept the better wine to the last. The early poems are marked by earnestness and a gift of expression too rare in these days, when a pennyworth of education drives a man to a book of verses. If Mr. Dawson has been denied an exquisite finish, if his ear is sometimes a traitor to him, it cannot be disputed that he is more properly equipped for the trade of singing than any eight out of any ten who pipe and pipe and pipe. It seems to us that at p. 103, and thence onward, the author in question shows more of his heart. It is the human in a poet that secures him his public. To juggle with obscure words is to interest a few; to be fantastic in metres wins a little hand-clapping; but to go far and deep, the writer of verse must take and treat subjects that appeal, by the abundant humanity in them, to a man's heart and a woman's. Vapour about the Sphinx if you will; better, though, to sing some such homely trifle as this:

"O wake and behold and rejoice,
For at last, after many days,
A mighty wind gives voice,
And utters God's power and His praise!
O see what a sky there is,
Fathomless, infinite, blue,
From whose zenith there falls the bliss
Of the lark, and all looks new,
Rain-washed, pellucid, refreshed;
And the air quivers through and through
With the sense of life, and the zest
Of joy, and of power, and of hope.
Not a cloud! From base to cope
Clear hewn is the sapphire wall.
Not a sound; but along the slope
Of the wood the cuckoo's call,
And the laughter of children at play,
For the world keeps holiday!
God wakens and moves anew,
And we see the light of His track,
As He vanishes out of view,
And smiles for a moment back!
O Love! rejoice, for at last
The wind's great trumpets are blown,
The rain is over and past.
God visits again His own."

The theology, perhaps, is not sound, nor are the flaws invisible; but there are beauties, and the poem is one to appeal to nearly every reader. Many times in reading this volume we have been tempted to quote, but space forbids. We must, however—positively must—steal the final stanza of "The Little Boy's Programme." When he grows up, the little boy intends to help starving children; to give the sick plenty of flowers and fountains; to bring forward plans innumerable, both small and great, for the general joy of all in sorrow. This is the last verse:

"Now don't you laugh!" The father kissed
The little serious mouth, and said,
'You've almost made me cry instead,
You blessed little optimist!'"

Poems Dramatic and Democratic. By Gascoigne Mackie. (Elliot Stock.) In these poems the democratic element is more to the front than the dramatic. Mr. Mackie is delivered occasionally of the telling phrase, but such an oasis has to be paid for by a lot a little desert. Democracy sometimes waxes tremendous, and Piccadilly is informed that "The pride of race is being spent,

Democracy is taking shape,
And he who boasts of long descent
Is only nearer to the ape."

This is, of course, merely uncivil verse; and we should not stay to comment were it not for the fact that, if signs are prophetic, Mr. Mackie can do much better work than he has dispensed in this book of his.

NORMAN GALE.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE Bishop of Salisbury has transferred the publication of his books to Messrs. Longmans, who publish also the works of the late Bishop of Lincoln, and the Annals of the late Bishop of St. Andrews, as well as the books of Miss Wordsworth, of Lady Margaret Hall.

MESSRS. BELL & SONS will publish next week in their "Ex Libris" series a limited edition of Albert Dürer's Little Passion, printed from stereotypes taken from the original woodblocks, which are in the British Museum. An attempt has been made to reproduce as nearly as possible the second Nuremberg edition of 1511. Mr. Austin Dobson has written an introduction, and the volume will be uniform with his edition of Holbein's Dance of Death in the same series. A photograph reproduction of Dürer's portrait of himself forms the frontispiece.

MESSRS. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS will publish immediately Authors and their Public in Ancient Times, a sketch of literary conditions and of the relations with the public of literary producers, from the earliest times to the invention of printing in 1450, by Mr. George Haven Putnam.

The Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge has in the press an enlarged and revised edition of Mr. Olden's Epistles of St. Patrick. The Bishop of Edinburgh's Celtic Church in Scotland, which will be brought out by the same publishers, is also nearly ready.

MESSRS. REMINGTON & Co. will publish next week Memories of the Mutiny, by Col. F. C. Maude, V.C., and Mr. J. W. Sherer, C.S.I.; and also, immediately, A Maid of Brittany, an Italian romance of the eighteenth century, by Count Orsi.

MESSRS. DIOBY, LONG & Co. announce for immediate publication, under the title of Sixty Years' Experience as an Irish Landlord, the memoirs of John Hamilton, D.L., of St. Erman's, Donegal. The book has been edited by the Rev. H. C. White, late chaplain at Paris, who supplies an introduction.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL will publish shortly, in two volumes, Enid Lyle: a Story of the Convent and the Stage, which has been appearing serially in the Gentlewoman. The name of the author, Miss Bessie Hatton, will be given for the first time on the title-page.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces Spenser's Love Verses, selected and edited by Dr. Grosart, as the new volume of the "Elizabethan Library," to be issued immediately.

WE understand that twenty-nine thousand copies of Mr. Eric Mackay's Love-Letters of a Violinist have now been sold, the book being in its eighth edition, as one of Walter Scott's "Canterbury Poets" series.

ON Tuesday next, January 16, Prof. Charles Stewart, the new Fullerian Professor of Physiology at the Royal Institution, will begin a course of nine lectures on "Locomotion and Fixation in Plants and Animals." On Thursday, January 18, Canon Ainger delivers the first of a course of three lectures on "The Life and Genius of Swift"; and on Saturday, January 20, Prof. W. H. Cummings begins a course of three lectures on "English Schools of Musical Composition." The Friday evening meetings will begin on January 19, when Prof. Dewar will deliver a discourse on "Scientific Uses of Liquid Air."

At the meeting of the London Ethical Society, to be held at Essex Hall, Strand, on Sunday next, January 14, at 7.30 p.m., Prof. Lewis Campbell will deliver an address on "Making the most of Life." Towards the end of February, Mr. Leslie Stephen has promised to lecture on "Authors and their Duties."

MR. CHARLES T. JACOBI, manager of the Chiswick Press, has reprinted—for presentation only—from the Transactions of the Bibliographical Society, a paper which he read last June upon "The Printing of Modern Books." This is not the first time that Mr. Jacobi has placed his knowledge and experience at the disposal of authors, by giving them technical hints about typography. We need hardly say that his own little booklet is itself intended to teach by example. The only thing in it that does not altogether please us is the head-line running half across both pages. We note Mr. Jacobi's opinion that the productions of the Kelmescott Press "will probably have the effect of introducing a general improvement as regards legibility."

THE Publishers' Circular has issued its usual analytical table of books published in 1893. The total number, adding together new books and new editions, is 6382, being 128 more than last year. It would be interesting to compare the totals in the several classes, if one could place any reliance upon the principle of classification. Novels appear to have largely decreased—which is opposed to our personal experience; while juvenile books have increased more than twofold. These two classes together make up nearly one-third of the whole. Taking a period of thirteen years, we find that theology has been declining steadily: in 1881, it was represented by 945 books, or 17 per cent. of the total; last year by 533, or 8 per cent. There is also a notable decline in political and social economy (226 in 1880, and only 85 last year); and in scientific and illustrated works (452 in 1880 and only 123 last year). On the other hand, poetry is looking up, having increased from 93 in 1886 to 234 last year; while the fall in other classes is made up for by an enormous rise in miscellaneous (from 232 in 1881 to 1430 last year).

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

CONTRARY to the usual custom, Oxford meets earlier than Cambridge, term (or rather, residence) commencing at the end of the present week.

DURING the vacation, the Corpus chair of Latin has been filled by the universally anticipated election of Mr. Robinson Ellis, who (we understand) will continue to occupy his old rooms in Trinity. It now rests with the delegates of the common university fund to appoint readers in Greek and in Latin; for it happens that both the new professors (as likewise in the case of the Camden chair of ancient history) had previously been readers in their respective subjects.

CERTAIN American universities have appointed a joint committee to organise a series of lectures on the comparative history of religious beliefs. Each set of lectures will be delivered in each of six universities, as the Hibbert Lectures are delivered in London and in Oxford. The committee have asked Prof. Rhys Davids, secretary of the Royal Asiatic Society, to inaugurate this series of lectures; and he has chosen for his subject "The Literature and History of Buddhism."

PROF. OTTO PFLEIDERER, of Berlin, began this week his first course of Gifford Lectures on "Natural Theology" at Edinburgh. He will deliver twenty lectures during January and February.

ACCORDING to the annual report of the University of Edinburgh, the total number of matriculated students (including 72 women) during the past year was 3138. Of this number, 806 (including 68 women) were enrolled in the faculty of Arts, 160 (including 4 women) in the department of Science, 79 in the faculty of Divinity, 452 in the faculty of Law, and 1641 in the faculty of Medicine. Of the students of medicine 666 (or nearly 41 per cent.) belong to Scotland, 537 (or nearly 34 per cent.) were from England and Wales, 74 from Ireland, 79 from India, 229 (or nearly 14 per cent.) from British colonies, and 36 from foreign countries. The new ordinances, which require a curriculum of five years, seem to have caused but a slight diminution in the number of medical students.

DURING the Easter term, Dr. L. E. Hill, assistant professor of physiology, will give a practical course of instruction in psychophysiology, at University College, London. The course will take the student methodically over the several senses, and familiarise him with the methods by which the new branch of science known as physiological psychology, or psychophysics, determines the precise manner in which sensation varies both quantitatively and qualitatively with variations of the stimulus, of the particular portion of the sensitive surface stimulated, and so forth. This is, we believe, almost the first attempt in England to give to students systematic laboratory instruction in those experimental methods of investigating sense-phenomena which have already borne such valuable fruit in Germany and America. As supplying an exact and practical method of measuring sensibility, the course should further prove valuable to teachers and others.

IN the Edwards Library, at University College (which is open to students every Thursday afternoon), Mr. F. L. Griffith, of the British Museum, is conducting a class for the study of hieroglyphs and the language of ancient Egypt. The special subject for the present term is "Selected Historical Inscriptions of the Middle Kingdom."

MR. J. W. HEADLAM, of King's College, Cambridge, will commence a course of University Extension lectures at Chelsea Town Hall, on Thursday next, at 3 p.m., upon "Greek Politics and Political Thought, from Perikles to Demosthenes."

THE Marquis of Bute has printed, in a handsome quarto pamphlet (Paisley: Alexander Gardner), but anonymously, the address which he gave when installed as Lord Rector of St. Andrews University last spring. To those who remember the stimulating harangues upon self-education delivered in the same place nearly thirty years ago by John Stuart Mill, this mild historical essay upon the ecclesiastical associations of St. Andrews will seem a strange contrast. And yet the one represents the dominant feelings of its time almost as much as did the other. Even in the Scottish universities, "we are all conservatives now." And certainly the Marquis knows how to draw kindly lessons from the study of the past. He can find an apology for Peter de Luna, and even for John Knox: the only historic character connected with St. Andrews to whom he refuses to extend his charity is the Butcher Duke of Cumberland.

PROF. TIELE, of Leyden, has just published an address delivered by him in the University Aula, as Rector Magnificus, on "Western Asia in the Light of the most recent Discovery." It closes with an appeal to younger students not to wait for the formal recognition of Assyriology as a branch of the higher education, but to take some modest share in the great harvest in which the labourers are so few.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

1894.

THE Old Year dies, I bury memories:
Some o'er whose grave I shall not linger long,
Others whose ghosts will always round me throng,
Crooning the echo of old reveries.
Right on your dusky breast a tyrant dies,
Who struck a discord in my life's full song,
Laughed at my weakness as he did me wrong,
Then bribed my grief with jewelled ecstasies.

Lo now! the New Year comes with lance in rest,
To seize his father's throne, to rule his thralls;
Eager alike to curse or make us blest,
Scourging or crowning as his humour calls;
The tired old world is murmuring oppressed,
While from the peaceful stars a promise falls.

PERCY ADDLESHAW.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Antiquary begins the New Year well, with three or four articles of permanent value. The one on the Wroth Silver custom at Knightlow, by Mr. G. L. Gomme, is a valuable addition to our knowledge of pre-historic customs, contributed by one who has made them a life-study. We are in full agreement with him, in believing that every incident in the ceremonial carries us back to a very remote past. "There is," as the author puts it, "scarcely a modern characteristic about the whole performance; it is an ancient ceremony shorn of most of its details, rather than an ancient ceremony which has developed into a modern one." Captain J. W. Gambia's paper on the Guanches, the ancient inhabitants of the Canary Islands, is well deserving attention. The older race of voyagers who might have observed so much have told us so little. Captain Gambier promises a continuation, which we are anxious to see. The engravings with which his text is illustrated are instructive, but certainly not lovely to look upon. Viscount Dillon gives the first part of a paper on the armour in the Tower. His lordship is an authority on the subject, and has, we believe, examined most of the great foreign collections. His remarks are instructive to the antiquary; but will be of still greater service to those without special knowledge who visit the Tower, for they will then be protected from the deluge of fable by which those who show the objects are wont to overwhelm the unwary. Mr. Hope continues his useful notes on the holy wells of Scotland. The editor, in the "Notes for the Month," draws attention to the fact that certain persons who were once Fellows of the Society of Antiquaries, but who have withdrawn from that body, still continue to attach F.S.A. to their names when they appear in print. There is no penalty for this, as there would be if they usurped their neighbour's trade-marks. We had hitherto imagined that, on this very account, gentlemen avoided such practices.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- EYSENHARDT, F. Mittheilungen aus der Stadtbibliothek zu Hamburg. X. 1. Hamburg: Herold. 2 M. 40 Pf.
 L'ART RUSSE: peintres modernes. Moscow: Grossmann. 70 fr.
 PARIS, Gaston. Le haut enseignement historique et philologique en France. Paris: Welter. 1 fr. 50 c.
 RUBINSTEIN, S. E. individualistischer Pessimist. Beitrag zur Würdigung Philipp Mainlanders. Leipzig: Edelmann. 2 M. 40 Pf.

THEOLOGY, ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY, ETC.

- GRADL, L. Die Reformation im Egerlande. Eger: Götz. 5.
 LEITSCHUH, F. Franz Ludwig v. Erthal, Fürstbischof v. Bamberg u. Würzburg, Herzog v. Franken. Bamberg: Buchner. 3 M.
 LUTHER'S, M. Werke. Kritische Gesamtausg. 9. Bd. Weimar: Bublau. 23 M.
 SCHARF, R. Philipp Melancthon's Leben, aus den Quellen dargestellt. Gütersloh: Bertelsmann. 3 M. 60 Pf.

HISTORY.

- MONUMENTA Germaniae historica. Die Urkunden der deutschen Könige u. Kaiser. II. Bd. 2. Thl. Die Urkunden Otto d. III. Hannover: Bahrn. 20 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BERICHT über die wissenschaftlichen Leistungen im Gebiete der Entomologie während des J. 1892 v. Ph. Bertkau u. F. Hilgendorf. Berlin: Nicolai. 24 M.
 BIDOT, A. Contributions à l'étude de la Faune jurassique de Normandie. 1. Sur les Trigonies. Paris: Comptoir Géologique. 15 fr.
 KRAHL, R. Weltweisheit. III. Weltschönheit. Versuch e. allgemeinen Aesthetik. Wien: Konegen. 4 M.
 NAUJ, J. Die Bronzezeit in Oberbayern. München: Piloty. 27 M.
 THOMAS, Ph. Exploration scientifique de la Tunisie. Paris: Comptoir Géologique. 10 fr.

PHILOLOGY.

- DISSERTATIONES philologicae Argentoratenses selectae. Vol. XI. Strassburg: Trübner. 7 M.
 FICK, A. Vergleichendes Wörterbuch der indogermanischen Sprachen. 4. Aufl. 2. Thl. Urkeltischer Sprachschatz v. Whitley Stokes. Uebersetzt, überarb. u. hrsg. v. A. Bezzenberger. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck. 10 M.
 GAUTIER, Léon. Les Epôques françaises. T. II. Paris: Welter. 20 fr.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE AUTHORSHIP OF "TALES OF TERROR."

Dublin.

Permit me, in view of the proposed corrected re-issue of the Bibliographer's Manual, to point out an error in Lowndes's account of the Tales of Terror, an anonymous volume of ballads, popularly, though (as I suspect) mistakenly, ascribed to Matthew Gregory Lewis, editor of the Tales of Wonder and author of the once famous romance of The Monk. Lowndes says:—

"Tales of Terror, Kelso, 1799, 4to: First edition. London, 1801, 8vo. . . . The ballads of Glenfinlas and The Eve of St. John, included in this volume, were written by Sir Walter Scott, Bart."

This account is followed implicitly by Allibone (Dict. of English Literature, 1870), and with some reserve by Mr. Leslie Stephen, who, in the article on M. G. Lewis contributed by him to the Dictionary of National Biography, refers to the book as follows:—

"Tales of Terror, Kelso, 1799; London 1801 (?) (republished with the 'Tales of Wonder,' by Prof. Morley, in 1887. The 1799 edition, mentioned by Lowndes is not forthcoming; that of 1801 (published at Weybridge) is very rare, and not in the British Museum. According to a writer in Notes and Queries, 3rd Series, x. 508, the 1801 edition was the first. . . . A second edition appeared in 1808.)"

The truth is that Lowndes here mixes up two distinct books, with one of which it is certain, and with both, in my opinion, highly probable, that "Monk" Lewis had nothing to do. The book which he describes as "Tales of Terror, Kelso, 1799, first edition," does not contain one line of Lewis's composition. There can be no doubt that it is none other than the tiny volume of ballads (Glenfinlas, The Eve of St. John, William and Ellen, The Fire-King, The Chase, &c.), of which in the autumn of 1799 Walter Scott caused his old friend, James Ballantyne, to throw off twelve specimen-copies, to show the Edinburgh "trade" what the Kelso printing-house could do in the line of booksellers' work. The title given to this little book was—not Tales of Terror, but Apology for Tales of Terror—1779; * and the circumstances which led to its production were, briefly, these:

In 1798 "Monk" Lewis, then in eager search of material for a proposed collection of ballad-tales old and new, entered into correspondence, through their common friend William Erskine, with Scott, in the hope of inducing him to assist. The result was (as everybody knows) that Scott gave Lewis his translations from the German—William and Ellen, The Wild Huntsmen, &c.—and undertook moreover to contribute some original verse to the projected volumes. Accordingly, when, after an interval of more than two years, Lewis's miscellany did at length appear (under the name of Tales of Wonder: January, 1801), it was found to include three original ballads from Scott's pen, along with two of his translated pieces. Meanwhile, during this long delay, Scott, who had thrown himself with ardent zeal into the task of collecting and composing ballads for Lewis's olio, began to burn with impatience at the non-appearance of that dainty dish in the preparation of which he had had so active a finger. In this mood he happened, while on a visit near Kelso, to fall in with his quondam school-mate, James Ballantyne, to whom he recited several of his recent verses, at the same time confessing his vexation at the protracted delay in the publication of Lewis's book. Whereupon Ballantyne expressed his approbation of the verses in the warmest terms, assuring Scott that "his own verses were far above what Lewis could ever do." This led Scott to observe that he wondered his old friend did not try to get some booksellers' work "to keep his types in play during the rest of the week," † and he presently added smilingly:—"You had better try what you can do. You have been praising my little ballads; suppose you print off a dozen copies or so of as many as will make a pamphlet, sufficient to let my Edinburgh friends judge of your skill for themselves." Ballantyne assented; and the result was the production of the Apology for the Tales of Terror, 1799—a little experiment which, as Lockhart observes, served, by reason of its favourable result, to "change wholly the course of Scott's worldly fortunes, as well as of his friend's." (See Lockhart's Life of Sir W. Scott, chap. ix.)

This was, as we have seen, in the autumn of 1799. Early in 1800 we learn from his correspondence that Scott, finding that Lewis's book still hung fire, began at length to think of publishing on his own account an edition of the ballads contained in the Kelso specimen-quarto, and was actually in treaty with James Ballantyne to this end. On April 22, 1800, however, he wrote from Edinburgh to his friend as follows:—

"Some things have occurred which induce me to postpone my intention of publishing my ballads, particularly a letter from a friend, assuring me that The Tales of Wonder are actually in the printer's hands. In this situation I endeavour to strengthen my small stock of patience, which has been nearly exhausted by the delay of this work, to which (though for that reason alone) I almost regret having promised assistance. I am still resolved to have recourse to your press for the Ballads of the Border, which are in some forwardness."

* It is likely that Lewis had, while collecting his materials, entertained the notion of publishing them under the name of Tales of Terror. Such seems, at least, a probable inference from the fact that the name given by Scott to the specimen-quarto of November, 1799, was Apology for Tales—not of Wonder, but—of Terror. When, however, the book at length struggled into existence, its title was found to be Tales of Wonder; and the title discarded by Lewis was presently appropriated by his anonymous rival.

† Ballantyne was at this time printer and editor of a weekly newspaper known as The Kelso Mail.

Thirty years later, writing of the Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, to which he here makes allusion, Scott says:—

"The edition was curious, as being the first example of a work printed by my friend and schoolfellow, Mr. James Ballantyne, who at that period was editor of a provincial paper. When the book came out, the imprint, Kelso, was read with wonder by amateurs in typography, who had never heard of such a place, and were astonished at the example of handsome printing which so obscure a town had produced" (Remarks on the Imitation of Popular Poetry).

The two foregoing passages, then, taken respectively from the letter to Ballantyne and from the Remarks of 1830, prove to demonstration that Lowndes was quite at fault in seeking to identify the volume produced at the Kelso printing-house in 1799 as the recueil of ballads issued in 1801 from the London press, under the name of Tales of Terror, and popularly regarded as the handiwork of "Monk" Lewis. Indeed, the observation which Lowndes adds to his account of the Tales of Terror, viz., that Glenfinlas and the Eve of St. John are included in that volume, alone suffices to prove that he there jumbles up together two perfectly distinct and separate books: for the ballads in question, while they appear in the Apology for Tales of Terror (i.e., the Kelso specimen-quarto of November, 1799), and again in the Tales of Wonder, published by "Monk" Lewis in January, 1801, are neither of them to be found in the Tales of Terror proper, i.e., in the book which appeared in London for the first time in March or April, 1801, and of which a second edition was published in 1808, "printed for R. Faulder by S. Hamilton, Weybridge, Surrey."

The question of the authorship of Tales of Terror is discussed by a writer signing himself H. B. C. in Notes and Queries (3rd Series, x. 508). The notion that Lewis was the author—though assumed to be true by that writer's biographer—is nevertheless, H. B. C. thinks, in all probability a mere vulgar error. For his arguments (which are sound and cogent, and, if need were, might readily be reinforced) the reader is referred to the source indicated above. Mr. Leslie Stephen suggests that the Tales of Terror were designed by their author (whoever he may have been) as a parody on Lewis's Tales of Wonder; and in support of this view he cites the fact that in The Mud King; or, Smedley's Ghost, the last of the "Tales of Terror," Lewis himself is held up to ridicule. But this circumstance cannot, we think, be regarded as a proof that the entire volume was intended to throw ridicule upon Lewis's pet subjects and style of treatment. It must be recollected that Lewis himself travesties his own tragic style in Giles Gollup the Grave, and Brown Sally Green; and that two other comical-tragical ballads, The Cinder King and The Little Grey Man, are included in the Tales of Wonder. If a burlesque of Lewis's book be desiderated, it will be found, we fancy, rather in the quarto volume of fifty-six pages, which was published, also in 1801, at Bury St. Edmunds, under the name of "Tales of the Devil, from the original glibberish of Prof. Lumpwitz, S.U.S., and C.A.C., in the University of Snoringberg" (by H. W. Bunbury, author of The Little Grey Man in the Tales of Wonder). But the Tales of Terror were, we are persuaded, written by one who took as sincere delight in the picturesque, fantastic, and sometimes terrific themes of the Gothic ballad-monger as did Matthew Gregory

Lewis himself; and who approached these romantic subjects every whit as seriously as did the diminutive "Lion of Mayfair." In the rhymed introductory dialogue prefixed to the Tales, the author says, replying to the strictures of the critic:—

"Let tasteless fashion guide the public heart,
And, without feeling, scan the poet's art—
It boots not me—my taste is still my own,
Nor heeds the gale by wavering fashion blown.
My mind unaltered views, with fixed delight,
The wreck of learning snatched from Gothic night;
Changed by no time, unsettled by no place,
It feels the Grecian fire, the Roman grace;
Yet still
The mental eye, by constant lustre tires,
Forsakes, fatigued, the object it admires,
And, as it scans each various nation's doom,
From classic brightness turns to Gothic gloom.

The midnight cloister and the glimmering lamp,
The night-shriek loud, wan ghost, and dungeon damp,
The pale procession fading on the sight,
The flaming tapers, and the chaunted rite,
Rouse, in the trembling breast, delightful dreams,
And steep each feeling in romance's streams!"
T. H.

DANTE IN NORTHERN LATITUDES.

Oxford: Dec. 21, 1893.

I venture to suggest the following explanation that has occurred to me of a difficult passage in the Convito of Dante (Tratt. III. c. vi.), which I have long sought in vain to understand.

Dante, when speaking of the inequality of the days and nights at the different seasons, makes the following curious statement:—"Sometimes the day has fifteen hours and the night nine; and sometimes the night has sixteen hours and the day eight."

Now why should the maximum length of the day and of the night be different, the former fifteen hours and the latter sixteen? Such an inequality clearly could not exist, in fact, at any one place or spot; yet the definiteness with which this anomalous statement is made seems to stamp it as a phenomenon empirically observed, or ascertained in some way, by its author. An astronomical friend to whom I submitted the above extract replied by asking whether there was not in the context some reference to difference of latitude. There certainly is not, but this seemed to me to give the clue to the interpretation. Such a difference could only be true of two places differing in latitude, the longer day occurring at a more northerly and the longer night (or shorter maximum day) at a more southerly station. I next inquired what places would correspond to the phenomena here described, and the reply I received was:—"Rome: Summer day, about fifteen hours, night about nine hours. Paris: Summer day about sixteen hours, night about eight hours (and, consequently, winter night sixteen hours and day eight hours)." This appeared to me at once to throw a curious sidelight on the traditional story of Dante's wanderings. If he were in Paris (or shall we say at Oxford?), he would probably be struck by the increased length of the winter night as compared with that with which he was familiar in Italy, and by observation or inquiry he might have ascertained that the difference was about one hour. It would be natural, then, in such a passage as this, that he should record the maximum inequality with which his own experience had made him acquainted. At any rate, unless he had travelled as far north (roughly speaking) as Paris, he could not have personal knowledge of such a length of night or shortness of day as is here described. And unless some personal experience is thus recorded, why should Dante stop short at the limits here given? For the last chapter shows that he was aware of the day of six months, and the night of the same length, at the poles.

This might be described, in the language of Paley, as an "undesigned coincidence" tending to establish the truth of the tradition that Dante visited our northern latitudes. I am afraid, however, that the most ingenious advocate could hardly extract from it a new argument for his having prolonged his journey to Oxford.

E. MOORE.

LĀMAISM AS A DEMONOLATRY.

London: Dec. 20, 1893.

My researches on Lāmaism, conducted among Lāmas of Central Tibet, present many of the leading features of that religion in a new light.

No one seems to have realised that Lāmaism is essentially a demonolatry, and only covered imperfectly with a thin varnish of Buddhist symbolism, through which its monstrous nature everywhere reveals itself. Even the purest of all the Lāmaist sects, the Gelug-pa, are thorough-paced devil-worshippers, and value Buddhism (the Mahāyāna) mainly because it gives them the whip-hand over the host of malignant demons which everywhere vex humanity with disease and disaster, and whose ferocity weighs like a nightmare on all. Even the purest Gelug-pa Lāma, on awaking every morning, and before going outside his room, must first of all assume the spiritual guise of his fearful guardian, the king of the demons named Vajrabhairava or Sambhara. The Lāma, by uttering certain mantras, culled from the legendary sayings of Buddha in the Mahāyāna Tantras, coerces this demon-king into investing the Lāma's person with his own dreadful guise. Thus, when the Lāma emerges from his room in the morning, and wherever he travels during the day, he presents spiritually the appearance of the demon-king. And the smaller demons, his would-be assailants, ever on the outlook to harm humanity, are deluded into the belief that the Lāma is indeed their own vindictive king, from whose dread presence they flee, and leave the Lāma unharmed. The bulk of the Lāmaist cults comprise much deep-rooted demon-worship and dark sorcery.

L. A. WADDELL.

JOB. XIX. 17.

British Museum: Jan. 6, 1894.

Prof. Cheyne is doing me an injustice, if he thinks that I am unacquainted with the authorities quoted by him in to-day's number of the ACADEMY. If I had not desired to be as brief as possible in my first letter on the subject, I should no doubt have referred to several of the points which he raises.

That Merx's conjecture is unsatisfactory, is acknowledged by almost every student of Job. Siegfried's emendation is no doubt much better, but there are two objections of not inconsiderable weight against it. The proposed word וְיִתְעַבְרִי would be most suitable in itself, but the construction of that form with the preposition ל must be acknowledged to be rather embarrassing. The second difficulty lies in the want of sufficient likeness between וְיִתְעַבְרִי and וְיִתְעַבְרִי. An emendation which can only be explained by the "drawing together" of "half-legible fragments" appears to me to be at least as uncertain as the unfortunate words on the "Inscribed Weight from Samaria," which have so recently been discussed in the pages of the ACADEMY. With the use of the term בָּטָן, as explained by Prof. Robertson Smith in his work on kinship in Arabia, I have been familiar for some time. The idea has also occurred to me that παλλακίδων μου of the LXX. may be only a free rendering of the term בָּטָן. The possibility, however, of a word for pellex in their original is by no means excluded; and in so far as such a possibility exists, my emendation may claim to be in a manner supported by the LXX.

Prof. Cheyne's reference to Job's family life carries with it an appeal which will find an echo in the minds of many; but are we justified in transferring our modern and more excellent idea of a "happy and united family" to the ancient races of the East, who lived under entirely different conditions and under an altogether different code of both civil and religious law? It also seems to me that the use of the term פִּילִגְשִׁים in the Song of Solomon can hardly be considered a sufficient reason why לִרְחֵנָה should not be used in Job. While, therefore, thanking Prof. Cheyne for drawing the attention of students to so many interesting points within so short a space, I still venture to uphold the possibility that my emendation represents the original text of the passage before us.

G. MARGOLIOUTH.

Oxford: Jan. 7, 1894.

I do not doubt that Mr. Margoliouth knew of Prof. Siegfried's emendation, which he found (as I do) quite unsatisfactory. In the first instance the word וְיִתְעַבְרִי must represent a substantive, parallel to רִחוּי; moreover, וְיִתְעַבְרִי has to be followed by a ב, and not a ל, although וְיִתְעַבְרִי is followed by a ל; not to mention that, according to Prof. Siegfried, nearly all the letters of וְיִתְעַבְרִי are changed and some were added. But I do not see the necessity for any emendation in the passage. וְיִתְעַבְרִי means "my compassion," which, if I am not mistaken, was already suggested by Gesenius, and is parallel to רִחוּי. We should translate "My breath [feeling] is loathsome [וְיִתְעַבְרִי, Numbers xi. 20] to my wife, and my sympathy [is loathsome] to my family." Perhaps we should read וְיִתְעַבְרִי "my love," a word current in the Mishnah as well as in Arabic, and perhaps also in Edomite and Midianitic dialects (compare Deuteronomy xxxiii. 3, and the name of Jethro in Numbers x. 29 and Judges iv. 11). It is not unlikely that many words and expressions in Job belong to these dialects. In any case, I prefer Prof. Bickell's reading, וְיִתְעַבְרִי (see R.V.), to that of Prof. Siegfried. Of course I do not agree with Mr. Margoliouth's reading, which also destroys the parallelism.

A. NEUBAUER.

THE NORTHERN PICTISH INSCRIPTIONS.

London: Jan. 8, 1894.

In his interesting analysis of the Northern Pictish inscriptions, Mr. Nicholson suggests that Golspie is a Gaelicised Norse name. Now the local pronunciation is Gheispie, which I take to be a contracted form of Gillespie, the name of a farm in Galloway, known to be the Gaelic cill espuig "the bishop's cell or chapel" (cill, pronounced keel, being the locative case of ceall). This is in some degree borne out by ancient writings, in which Golspie appears in 1330 as Goldespy, and in 1550 as Golspie-Kirkcoun.

Of course, Gillespie as a place-name is distinct from the surname Gillespie, which signifies giola espuig "the bishop's servant."

The name Nu appearing on the Golspie Stone, identified by Mr. Nicholson with the Irish adjective nua "strong," seems to survive in the patronymic McNoah, still current in the old Pictish province of Galloway.

HERBERT MAXWELL.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, Jan. 14, 7.30 p.m. Ethical: "On Making the most of Life," by Prof. Lewis Campbell.

MONDAY, Jan. 15, 5 p.m. London Institution: "Pottery and Porcelain," by Mr. C. F. Biss. 8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Painting," III., by Mr. J. E. Hodgson. 8 p.m. Victoria Institute: "Eastern Discoveries confirmatory of Scripture," by Prof. Hull. 8.30 p.m. Geographical: "An Expedition to the Glaciers of Mount Kenia," by Dr. J. W. Gregory.

TUESDAY, Jan. 16, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Locomotion and Fixation in Plants and Animals," I., by Prof. C. Stewart. 7.45 p.m. Statistical: "Modes of Census-taking in the British Empire," by Mr. Reginald H. Hooker. 8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Discussion, "The Concentration and Sizing of Crushed Minerals," by Mr. R. C. Commins. 8.30 p.m. Zoological: "Some Points in the Structure of the Young of Echidna aculeata," by Prof. W. N. Parker; "A Collection of Butterflies made in Manica, Tropical South-east Africa, by Mr. F. C. Selous in 1892," by Mr. Roland Trimen; "Cercopithecus wolfi," by Dr. A. B. Meyer.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 17, 5 p.m. Microscopical: Address by the President, Mr. A. D. Michael. 8 p.m. Meteorological: Annual General Meeting; Report of Council; Election of Officers; Presidential Address, "The Climate of Southern California," by Dr. C. Theodore Williams. 8 p.m. Folk-lore: Annual Meeting; Address by the President, Mr. G. Laurence Gomme. 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "White Lead Substitutes," by Mr. A. Laurie.

THURSDAY, Jan. 18, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Life and Genius of Swift," I., by Canon Alinger. 6 p.m. London Institution: "Savage Curiosities of Natural History," by Prof. C. Stewart. 8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Painting," IV., by Mr. J. E. Hodgson. 8 p.m. Linnean: "The Origin of the Structural Peculiarities of Climbing Stems by Self-adaptation in Response to External Mechanical Forces," by the Rev. Geo. Henslow. 8 p.m. Chemical: "The Molecular Formulae of some Liquids as Determined by their Molecular Surface Energy," I., by Prof. Ramsay and Miss Emily Aston; "Contributions to our Knowledge of the Acetate Alkaloids," "Picroquinine," by Prof. Dunstan and Mr. E. F. Harrison. "The Action of Heat on Aconitine," and "Further Observations on the Conversion of Aconitine into Isaconitine," by Prof. Dunstan and Mr. F. H. Carr. "The Interaction of Benzylamine and Ethyl Chloroacetate," by Drs. Mason and Winder. 8 p.m. United Service Institution: "The Coast-lands of the North Atlantic," II., by Mr. H. J. MacKinder. 8.30 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Petroleum Fields of India: Their Present Condition and their Probable Future," by Mr. R. D. Oldham. 8.30 p.m. Historical: "Antonio Perez in Exile," by Major Martin A. S. Hume. 8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.

FRIDAY, Jan. 19, 7.30 p.m. Civil Engineers: Students' Meeting. "Discharging and Storing Grain," by Mr. W. G. Wales. 9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Scientific Uses of Liquid Air," by Prof. Dewar.

SATURDAY, Jan. 20, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "English Schools of Musical Composition," I., by Prof. W. H. Cummings.

SCIENCE.

The Sacred City of the Ethiopians. By J. Theodore Bent. (Longmans.)

THE Sacred City of the Ethiopians is Aksum, the object of Mr. and Mrs. Bent's pilgrimage in the winter of 1892-93. It is needless to say that Mr. Bent's record is exceedingly interesting, that he has told his story with all the skill of the practised writer. It is also needless to say that the journey was made in the interests of science, and that archaeology, philology, and anthropology in the narrower sense of the word are all alike gained by it. The journey, however, was not without its risks. Abyssinia is at present in a very disturbed state. What with cholera, famine, and war both intestine and foreign, the Abyssinians are in danger of becoming extinct. The Italians are pressing them upon one side, the dervishes on the other; while the "Emperor" Menelek lives in inglorious sloth in Shoa, and the central province of his kingdom is harried by brigands and distracted by the internecine feud of the two rival chieftains Ras Alula and Ras Mangashah. A temporary truce between the latter enabled Mr. and Mrs. Bent to pay a flying visit to Aksum, and to discover the still older Yeha. Unfortunately the truce was soon broken, and the travellers had to fly to the Italian frontier before their work was fully completed. Their flight from Adua with the Italian Resident was an adventure of a very exciting character.

Not the least interesting portion of Mr. Bent's book is that which deals with Abyssinian Christianity. The churches, ecclesiastical ornaments, and ceremonies of the Abyssinian faith carry us back to an early period in the history of the Christian religion. The Abyssinian monks on the barren heights of their almost inaccessible mountains present us with a living picture of the ancient hermits of the Thebaid. Believers in the "pure Gospel" character of the doctrines of the early Church will, doubtless, study with interest their Abyssinian survivals.

The part of the volume which has the most value for myself is naturally that relating to the archaeological results of Mr. Bent's researches. The squeezes of inscriptions which he has succeeded in bringing home are of the highest importance, not only for history but also for Semitic philology. A chapter upon them is added by Prof. D. H. Müller, in which he gives translations of them, and sets forth the conclusions to which they point. Among them are early Sabæan inscriptions from Yeha, a place a few miles to the north-east of Adua, and, as Mr. Bent points out, on the line of the ancient high road from Adulis to Aksum. Here he found numerous monuments of the past in the shape of upright monoliths, splendid temples of hewn and drafted stone, and the traces of terraces for cultivation on the neighbouring hills. He makes it clear that Yeha must represent the city of Avo mentioned by Nonnosus, the ambassador of Justinian; and the conclusion is confirmed by a fragment of an inscription found on the spot, in which Prof. D. H. Müller reads the words "the temple of Awa." Palaeographically, the inscriptions of Yeha belong to the oldest period of Sabæan writing, and Prof. Müller assigns them to the age of the Mak'arib or High-priests. As the Sabæans were already governed by kings when Tiglath-pileser III. came into contact with them in the eighth century B.C., this would imply a high antiquity. Yeha, in fact, seems to have been the inland capital of an early Sabæan colony in Abyssinia, and takes us back to a time when the traders of Southern Arabia sought gold and ivory in the regions at the sources of the Nile.

The monuments of Aksum belong to a later date, and testify to the influence of the Ptolemies in the Abyssinian highlands. Mr. Bent's photographs and squeezes of them enable us for the first time to determine their true character. Among the most interesting of them are the obelisks, a large number of which still exist. Some of these are merely rude monoliths, but others belong to a later period of highly-developed art. They are carved into the semblance of lofty towers or castles, with a door at the foot and a series of stories above, each of which is provided with windows. The head of the obelisk is rounded and otherwise ornamented, and nail-prints show that it was once covered with a plate of metal. In one case a sort of Greek temple is represented resting on a column, the capital of which is adorned with volutes. At the foot of each obelisk stood an altar, plainly indicating the purpose for which the obelisk was erected.

Besides the obelisks and altars, Mr. Bent found the remains of a temple as well as the pedestals of statues—called "thrones" in the texts—on some of which inscriptions have been cut. Outside the town is a great reservoir of early construction, which is still used; a lioness, carved with considerable spirit on a rock; and a collection of ancient tombs, which are entered by sloping passages.

Some of the inscriptions of which Mr. Bent took squeezes had already been copied by Salt and others. But the copies were so imperfect, that but little could be made out of them. The squeezes have at last given us reliable texts, which can be studied at leisure, and from which we can learn what were the exact forms of the letters employed in them. One of the squeezes gives us what remains of the Sabæan text of the inscription of King Aizan, which had not been copied before. The text is bilingual, in Greek and Ethiopic, and at its commencement the two versions agree very closely together. Aizan was King of Ethiopia in the time of the Roman Emperor Constantius, and the newly recovered Ethiopic text shows that his identification with the Ela-San of the Ethiopian list of kings is impossible. Another of Mr. Bent's inscriptions which is new is in twenty-nine lines of Sabæan characters, and records the victories of Ela-'Amida "king of Aksum and Homer and Raydan and Saba and Sal'in and Tiyan and Bega and Kas." It was the son of this king who erected the inscription discovered by Salt in 1808, and subsequently copied by Rüppell and d'Abbadie, though, unfortunately, owing to the decay of the stone, the copies left much to be desired. Mr. Bent's squeeze of the inscription has consequently been very welcome. The two inscriptions last mentioned are in the letters of the Ethiopic syllabary, which already appear with the inherent vowels fully formed. It is thus clear that the creation of the Ethiopic syllabary must have been the work of a single generation and, probably, of a single man. As some of the letters exhibit more ancient Sabæan forms than those of the inscription of Ela-'Amida, Prof. Müller supposes that they were derived from old documents in the state archives of Aksum.

For the history of the Ethiopic language the inscriptions are of great value. They prove how thoroughly Sabæan the language of the Semitic settlers in Abyssinia originally was. The inscription of Ela-'Amida still preserves the mimmat and the article, as well as old Semitic words like melek, "king." In the Ethiopic texts of his son these no longer appear. But the influence of the native Hamitic languages had not yet been felt to its fullest extent. Many of the later phonetic peculiarities of Ethiopic, which are traceable to a Hamitic source, are still absent from it. The process of change, however, had already begun; and under the influence of the native idioms of the country, Ethiopic was assuming those characteristics which distinguish it from its sister Semitic tongues.

There is one passage in Mr. Bent's book which needs correction. The record I found in Upper Egypt of "Antoni the Trogodyte" (Τρογοδύτης) is written in Greek, not in "hieroglyphics." It is dated in the fourth year of Hadrian, and I have given an account of it in the ACADEMY (April 12, 1892, p. 333).

In conclusion, I can only wish Mr. and Mrs. Bent the same success in their present journey into Hadramaut that attended them in their visit to "the sacred city of the Ethiopians."

A. H. SAYCE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE S- PLURALS IN ENGLISH.

Oxford: Jan. 6, 1894.

After reading Prof. Earle's letter, I am unable to see that he has disproved a single one of my statements or conclusions.

Although it conveys the impression that all my arguments are answered, Prof. Earle's letter deals only with one of the three main reasons adduced, his remarks being merely concerned with two of my statements and the conclusion drawn from them as to the origin of the English s- plurals. The statements were (1) that the Peterborough Chronicle for the years 1122-31 and the Ormulum (in both of which the s- ending of the plural is predominant) "may be said to be free from Romance influence"; and (2) that "we possess no evidence at all that he [Orm] was even acquainted with Norman-French."

My statement with regard to the Chronicle for 1122-31 may, of course, be wrong; but it can only be proved to be so by the production of direct evidence of such French influence taken from the language of the Chronicle for these years. To urge that the prevalence of the s- plurals—the point in dispute—is evidence of such influence would be, of course, inadmissible. Prof. Earle, however, brings forward no evidence; he merely writes,

"To say that Peterborough Abbey was exempt from French influence is gratuitous, and I do not know by what argument it could be justified; and under these conditions to make the assumption is to beg the whole question."

But this is altogether irrelevant, as I made no assumption whatever with regard to Peterborough Abbey. It leaves my assertion, which is only concerned with the language of a specified portion of the Peterborough Chronicle, entirely untouched.

With regard to the Ormulum, I made two distinct and independent statements: the one concerning the absence of Romance influence from Orm's language, and the other to the effect that we have no evidence of his having known French. Neither of these statements hinges, as Prof. Earle represents, "on the assumption that the poet was beyond the range of French influence," nor, in fact, on any "assumption" at all, the former being based on a careful examination of Orm's language, and the latter being simply a record of the fact that the researches of numerous scholars have failed to bring to light any evidence which points to an acquaintance on Orm's part with the speech of the Norman invaders. Prof. Earle, if I understand him rightly, admits the paucity of Romance words, but dissents from the very natural conclusion which I drew therefrom, and is, moreover, of opinion that Orm knew French, in support of which view he states his belief that the poet probably "lived among or near the French people, and in frequent intercourse with them," and that "he was fully acquainted with the French literature of the day." It must be allowed that these are mere surmises and prove nothing. Indeed, Prof. Earle seems to feel that they need corroboration, for he proceeds to express his opinion that "the form of his poem is hardly to be explained without this supposition. For it is our earliest example of a long English poem written in French metre."

But what ground has Prof. Earle for asserting so confidently that the Ormulum is composed in a French metre? I think, none. Very good reasons have been brought forward for the opinion almost universally held by past and present scholars, that Orm not only borrowed his materials from Latin sources (cf. Sarrazin, Englische Studien, vi., p. 1 sqq.), but that also in the metrical form of his poem, Latin, and not French, models were the ones he followed.* It must also be borne in mind that some thirty years before Orm wrote (circa 1170) an English poem of about 400 lines was composed in the same metre, the so-called "Moral Ode," the popularity of which is attested by the numerous MSS. which have come down to us. The possibility that this was Orm's model must not be lost sight of, although the Latin origin is far more probable. The theory that he borrowed the metrical form of his poem from some French original is untenable; for the simple reason that, so far as is at present known, no such French model then existed. The only French poem, composed before Orm's time, in which lines in an apparently similar metre are found is Jordan Fantosme's Chronicle (written between 1174 and 1183), where they occur alongside of the Alexandrines which form the prevailing metre of the poem. But it has been shown that the lines in question, irregularly built as they are (in the extant MSS.), are not in Orm's metre, but have been corrupted by the carelessness of scribes from regular Alexandrines, in which metre the poem was originally composed (cf. Koschwitz, Zeitschrift für romanische Philologie, ii. 340, and Rose, Romanische Studien, v. 382). And with this Prof. Earle's solitary argument in favour of Orm's acquaintance with French literature, &c., falls to the ground. He is, by the way, mistaken in asserting that Orm employs the French word verse. Orm's fers is the Old English fers, a Latin loan-word in use in England certainly as early as the tenth or even the ninth century (cf. Bede's Eccl. Hist. iv. 24 ba ongon he singan . . . ba fers and ba word).

To return, however, to a more important point, the almost entire absence of the Romance element from Orm's vocabulary. To explain this away, Prof. Earle has recourse (if I understand him rightly) to the assumption that Orm purposely avoided the use of Romance words: that in the English of Orm's daily life there was a considerable infusion of French words, but that, from puristic motives, he carefully banished them from his poem. But surely in all linguistic investigations we must take the language as we find it, not as we should like it to be, to fit in with our theories. If unsupported assumptions of this kind are to be used as serious argument, almost anything could be proved or disproved with regard to language. In the present case not a particle of evidence is adduced in favour of this improbable assumption; for the fact that Orm was a phonetician who bestowed especial care upon his orthography proves nothing at all with regard to his attitude towards French words. Until evidence to the contrary is forthcoming, I think we are justified in assuming that Orm wrote as he spoke.

When two different languages are brought into contact, the influence of the one upon the other is first made apparent in the borrowing of words and phrases, and the proportion of such loan-words (or borrowed phrases) may, especially during the earlier periods of contact, be taken as a trustworthy gauge of the amount of influence exercised by the one on the other. Hence, I hold that the almost entire absence of French words from Orm's vocabulary justifies the conclusion which I have drawn from it. Until proof is given that the language of the Ormulum contains further elements (a larger proportion of words, or other features) which must be due to a French source, and cannot be explained as the natural development from Old English, or from Old Norse, or from Latin,* the extremely insignificant proportion of Romance words used by Orm is strong evidence that his speech was still practically untouched by French influence.

The other reasons which I brought forward Prof. Earle has left unanswered. I pointed out that when the Chronicle and the Ormulum were written, the s- ending was not yet the universal plural inflexion in French. In fact, it was not a sign of number at all, but one of case. Take, for instance, the Old French declension of murs, "a wall":

Singular, Nom. murs	Plural, Nom. mur
" Obl. mur	" Obl. murs .

How could any Englishman of the twelfth century possibly deduce from this that s is a characteristic sign of plurality? And if not, how could it influence English plurals?

Another of my reasons which Prof. Earle passes over without mention was that in the Southern parts of England, where French influence on the language was, at this time, most strongly marked—where, therefore, if anywhere, we should look for evidence of an influence on the inflexions—we find the n- plurals so prevalent.†

So much for Prof. Earle's letter. I am unable to see that anything which he has brought forward in the slightest degree affects the question.

It may be well to point out, in conclusion, that the notion of Norman-French influence on our plural ending is a mere hypothesis, which has been copied and recopied from book to book till some people have come to treat it as an historical fact. But no proof of it has ever been given. Now, when any feature of a language is ascribed to foreign influence, the onus probandi distinctly rests with those who advance or uphold this view. They must show, on the one hand, that there is a need for such an assumption—that the language would not, naturally and out of its own resources, have developed the feature in question without any influence from without; and they must, on the other hand, bring positive evidence to show that the particular foreign language did exercise the influence ascribed to it. In the present case neither condition has been fulfilled.

* Cf. White, Preface to the Ormulum (1852); ten Brink, Geschichte der englischen Literatur; Schipper, Englische Metrik, i. 89; Englische Studien, x. 192; Paul's Grundriss, i. 1047; Morley, English Writers (1888) iii. 233; Maclean, Old and Middle English Reader (1893), p. lxx., &c. &c. Schipper discusses the whole question thoroughly.

* Orm's language was considerably influenced by Scandinavian, and there is abundant internal evidence in his poem that he was well acquainted with Latin.

† Cf. further Prof. Jespersen's letter in the ACADEMY for December 9 (p. 512).

A. S. NAPIER.

P.S.—I hope, if the editor of the ACADEMY will allow me, in another letter to discuss somewhat more fully the French element in the vocabulary of the Chronicle, 1122-31, and of the Ormulum.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE general meeting of the Association for the Improvement of Geometrical Teaching is to be held at University College, Gower-street, to-day (Saturday), January 13. At 11 a.m. the report of the council will be read and the new officers will be elected. A new undertaking will be proposed by the council, namely:—the establishment of a Journal of Elementary Mathematics, to appear three times a year, and to be specially devoted to such subjects as are usually taught in secondary schools. In the afternoon, at 2 p.m., the following papers will be read: "The Herbartian View of the Place of Mathematics in Education," by Mr. W. J. Greenstreet; "The Eccentric Circle of Boscovich," by Mr. E. M. Langley; and "A School Course of Mathematics," by Mr. T. Wilson. All interested in the objects of the association are invited to attend.

At the meeting of the Linnean Society, to be held on Thursday next, the Rev. George Henslow will read a paper on "The Origin of the Structural Peculiarities of Climbing Stems by Self-adaptation in response to External Mechanical Forces."

At the meeting of the Indian section of the Society of Arts, to be held at the Imperial Institute on Thursday next, Mr. R. D. Oldham, Superintendent of the Geological Survey of India, will read a paper on "The Petroleum Fields of India: their Present Condition and their Probable Future," illustrated with lime-light views. The chair will be taken by Sir Charles Bernard, sometime Chief Commissioner of British Burma, where the most important of the petroleum fields are situated.

On February 6, Prof. Haeckel will celebrate his sixtieth birthday; and it is proposed to celebrate the occasion by placing a marble bust of him in the Zoological Institute at Jena.

MR. W. WARDE FOWLER has printed, in pamphlet form (Oxford: Blackwell), a paper which he read last November before the Oxfordshire Natural History Society upon the Marsh Warbler (Acrocephalus palustris). He first studied the bird in Switzerland, where it is not uncommon. He was afterwards fortunate enough to identify it, both by its peculiar song and by its nest, near his own house in Oxfordshire. We need hardly add that he did not kill the bird; but in view of the depredations of village boys, and also for scientific purposes, he did not hesitate to transfer the nest and eggs to the University Museum. We have here a most charming and picturesque account of an authentic addition to the Avi-fauna of England.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

INVITATIONS have just been issued for the International Congress of Orientalists to be held at Geneva this year, from September 3 to 12, under the presidency of M. Edouard Naville. Subject to future modification, it is proposed that there shall be seven sections, as compared with ten at the London Congress of 1892: India and the Aryan languages, the Semitic languages, the Muhammadan languages, Egypt and the languages of Africa, the Far East, Ancient Greece and the Levant, geography and ethnology. A committee of organisation has been formed at Geneva, and also a general committee for Switzerland. The two secretaries are M. Ferdinand de Saussure, professor of Aryan languages at the university of Geneva; and M. Paul Oltramare, deputy-professor—both representatives of well-known Genevese families.

MR. T. G. PINCHES, of the British Museum, will deliver a series of lectures on "The Language and Literature of Assyria and Babylonia," in the rooms of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, 37 Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, on Wednesdays, at 4.30 p.m.

THE November number of the Indian Antiquary (Kegan Paul & Co.) contains an important paper by Prof. Bühler on what are called the New Edicts of Asoka: that is to say, on those inscribed at Sahasram and Rupnath, and in a fragmentary state also at Bharhat, to which special interest attaches, because yet another version of them has quite recently been discovered in Mysore. On the present occasion, he says little about the Mysore version, which he is going to publish later in the Epigraphia Indica. He states, however, that the new discovery confirms the view that the Devanam Piye of these edicts can be none other than the King Piyadasi, or Asoka, of all the others. With the help of rubbings and paper-casts—of which a facsimile is given—he now prints a revised edition of these edicts, in parallel columns, with copious critical notes. As compared with his former edition, published nearly eighteen years ago, he maintains that the text requires very few corrections, as the language comes to be better understood. One emendation, derived from a closer study of the facsimiles, is of some historical importance. It proves that Asoka has become a convert to Buddhism upwards of eight years before the date of these edicts, and therefore in the twenty-ninth year of his reign. We may further mention that a comparison with a photograph taken by the late Sir A. Cunningham shows that the Sahasram rock has suffered considerably from exfoliation. To the same number Miss C. Mabel Duff contributes an ingenious note on the chronology of the Kakatiya dynasty of Orangal, in Southern India.

RECENT numbers of the Journal of the Mahabodhi Society have been mainly filled with reports of the proceedings at the Chicago parliament of religions, in which Mr. H. Dharmapala took part. His eloquent addresses seem to have made a convert to Buddhism, in the person of Mr. C. T. Strauss, a Jew by birth. For ourselves, we have been more interested in the account of Lama Ugyen Gya Tsho, who has several times visited Tibet for purposes of geographical research, and who is now assisting Baba Sarat Chandras Das in the compilation of a Tibetan-English Dictionary. Last October, the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal conferred upon him the title of Rai Bahadur; and the Khillat, or mark of distinction, presented on the occasion, consisted of a Buddhist rosary.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

ARISTOTELIAN.—(Monday, Dec. 18.)

SHADWORTH H. HODGSON, Esq., president, in the chair.—Mr. E. C. Benecke was elected a member.—Papers were read by Mr. R. J. Ryle, Mr. C. C. J. Webb, and Mr. A. F. Shand, on the subject, "Is Religion pre-supposed by Morality or Morality by Religion?"—The papers were followed by a discussion.

(Monday, January 8.)

SHADWORTH H. HODGSON, Esq., president, in the chair.—Mr. H. W. Carr read a paper on "Mr. F. H. Bradley's Appearance and Reality." The starting-point of the theory of the nature of reality expounded by Mr. Bradley is the contention that in the criterion of reality, which all judgment pre-supposes, we already possess substantive knowledge of reality. It was urged against this that a mere criterion such as the real is self-subsistent, does not give any positive information, and so cannot serve as a basis for constructive theory. The paper then examined the argument that reality is the absolute as individual and a system, and that its content is sentient experience, and particularly criticised the distinction between experience and consciousness, and between feeling and thought. It was contended against Mr. Bradley's view that it does not succeed in avoiding the inconsistency of the thing-in-itself. Against the whole theory it was urged that the concept of the absolute is a pure abstraction, and that to describe it as the one reality, and at the same time to consider it as directly connected with each and every aspect of the world, and as enriched with all its diversity, as the reality which appears, cannot enlighten us; but it is mere assumption, so long as we can only say it must be so, and cannot explain how it is so.—The paper was followed by a discussion.

INSTITUTE OF BRITISH ARCHITECTS.—(Monday, Dec. 18.)

MACVICAR ANDERSON, Esq., president, in the chair.—A paper by Mr. William Simpson, on "The Classical Influence in the Architecture of the Indus Region and Afghanistan," was, in his absence caused by illness, read by the secretary, Mr. W. H. White. Mr. Simpson said that it was doubtful whether any other known style of architecture carried so many aliases as that in question. There existed in the old architecture of the Indus Valley details which must have been derived from a classical source. Was the influence Greek or Roman? Formerly, in writing upon the subject, he had accepted, without due consideration of the matter, that it was Greek. He now sought to show that it was not Greek but Roman. He adduced slight evidence tending to show that the Greek influence, which had been generally accepted, and which even Fergusson supposed as coming from Bactrian Greeks, was very doubtful. Details pointed to Palmyra as the source through which the classical influence reached the north of India, and he suggested that when it reached the Indus it went from that region into Afghanistan. To his mind an examination of the details showed that none of them belonged to Greek architecture.

HISTORICAL.—(Thursday, Dec. 21.)

SIR M. E. GRANT DUFF, president, in the chair.—The following were elected fellows of the society: Alice Gibbons, Ernest E. Wild, W. A. Shaw, A. W. Andrews, J. Bonwick, Luigi Schiapparelli.—A paper was read by Mr. C. R. Beazley on "The Colonial Empire of the Portuguese to the Death of Albuquerque."—A discussion followed; in which Mr. Morse Stephens, Major Martin Hume, and Dr. Wells, of Harvard, U.S.A., took part.

FINE ART.

THE ENGRAVER OF RUBENS.

Lucas Vosterman. Par Henri Hymans. (Brussels: Bruylant-Christophe.)

THE learned author of this volume, on one of the most important of the engravers after Rubens, has taken the widest and most generous view of that which a Catalogue Raisonné ought to be; for he has been biographical as well as critical and descriptive, and he has pressed into his service a certain number of illustrations. That widest view can only be taken—at all events, can only be acted on—when the subject of the volume is no longer among the living; for, though criticism of the living is possible, biography, exhaustive and final, is obviously shut out. The thoroughly painstaking and elaborate fashion in which M. Hymans has performed his task, almost assures us that it has been in very great measure a labour of love. But, indeed, for a Catalogue Raisonné to be a labour of love is no new thing: rarely could it be undertaken for such modest pecuniary reward as can alone fall to it. The Catalogue Raisonné comes generally from the connoisseur who is likewise a collector, an approved and genuine lover of the work of that master with whom he is concerned. That was the case with the Chevalier de Claussin, who, in the sale room, piteously begged that, in virtue of his services as well as of his age, he might be permitted the undisputed acquisition of a rare Rembrandt which he had long coveted, and which could hardly again, within his lifetime, re-appear at an auction. It was the case, too, with Wilson, the Chevalier's English successor. And it has been the case, habitually, since Wilson's day. Nor is M. Hymans the first person who, dealing officially with engravings (he is the Keeper of the Brussels Library), has been minded not only to "keep," but to chronicle, certain of the treasures confided to his charge. Carpenter, who to this hour has scarcely been superseded as the authority upon the prints of Vandyke, was Keeper of the Prints and Drawings at the British Museum. That M. Hymans, in a kindred position in the land of Rubens, should have engaged especially in the study of the engravers closely associated with Rubens, seems to me very natural. He is the author, I may be permitted to remind people, of a valuable work on the engravers of that school generally, and now he gives us, upon one of them in particular, a comprehensive and admirably considered monograph. Of, and for, Lucas Vosterman, the last word, as the result of M. Hymans's industry and acumen, has now surely been said. In saying it, M. Hymans has fulfilled a service to art, and has engaged successfully in a work of patriotism.

It will not be thought, I hope, that because one pays this well-deserved tribute to a piece of sound and useful and arduous work, unfalteringly accomplished—it will not be thought, I hope, that one is claiming for Vosterman a measure of interest such as the English student of his art cannot in justice be expected to accord him. Vosterman, by the very reason that his work (with somewhat insignificant exceptions) is reproductive instead of original, cannot possibly be in the first flight of etchers and engravers. The honours bestowed upon Mantegna and Dürer, upon Schöngauer and Lukas of Leyden, upon Aldegrever and the Behams, upon Rembrandt, Claude, Vandyke, Turner, Méryon, and Whistler, can never in the nature of things be bestowed upon Vosterman. But he takes his place, or at the least may aspire to take his place, in that honourable line where Marc Antonio, the interpreter of Raphael, stands with our own masters of eighteenth century mezzotint—with Earlom, the interpreter of Hogarth, Claude, and Van Huysum, with McArdell, the interpreter of Reynolds. And, even there, though Vosterman's place of distinction may have been fairly won, it can scarcely be a place of equality with those engravers whom I have just now mentioned; for the method of Vosterman, with all his skill and labour, did not suggest Rubens as well, for instance, as that of Marc Antonio suggested Raphael. The line of Marc Antonio, it is true, left something unsaid, but at least it said nothing but that which was accurate—work the most economical on the part of the engraver did manage to suggest Raphael's contours, expression, spirit, as well, of course, as his composition. Now, Vosterman's burin work, in which pure line is so often lost—in which it is indeed rarely sought to be preserved—yet loses this line without much compensating gain in "colour" and tonality. Rubens's colour, Rubens's texture, is not, as far as I can see, either reached, approached, or even frequently hinted at, by prints which are yet remarkable for spirit and for care. Mezzotint would in reality have been the medium in which to render Rubens—that or such etching as has been practised by Unger or by Waltner. And, in saying this, I have already answered, by anticipation, any possible query as to why one cannot hold Vosterman to have been quite the equal of those great masters of mezzotint who translated so much of the work of our best English painters. Mezzotint, be it remembered, is more suggestive than anything else of a painter's touch, of a painter's brush-work, and of the gradations of light, shade, and colour which have made, in all probability, so much of the charm of the original canvas. But one admits, of course, that where firmness of modelling is the thing to be mainly valued and preserved, line engraving—it may be even the intentionally broken and obscured line of Vosterman and his contemporaries—is the medium that is desirable. Thus, to consider the matter in the concrete—to take particular instances—while one would choose mezzotint as the medium through which to receive Titian or Etty, one would choose line engraving as the medium through which to receive Holbein or Ingres.

So much for general considerations—it was well perhaps to try to make some of these things clear, both for one's self and for one's readers, before speaking in even the briefest detail of Vosterman's life and of the extent of his labour.

The birthplace of the engraver is not known to this day, and it is but comparatively lately that chroniclers of his fortunes have been able, in assigning the year in which his birth took place, to come within measurable distance of accuracy. He was born, it seems, in 1595 or 1596—M. Hymans gives the earlier of the two dates, but adds that Vosterman in 1636 declared himself forty, which would point more probably to the later of the two being the correct one. Though we do not know where Vosterman was born, we know that it was not in the place wherein he chiefly practised his art, for we find him in his young manhood claiming to be admitted to the privileges of Antwerp citizenship. Soon afterwards he became a member of the Guild of St. Luke, and he seems to have insisted particularly on receiving the letters patent of a dealer. In this matter he resembled many men of his own period, and resembled yet more the men of the eighteenth century, very many of whom, at all events with us in England, were at once engravers and printsellers. Vosterman was still young when he began to be engaged on the plates after Rubens. His success with them was tolerably prompt, but his work upon them was not continued very long; for in 1622 the painter is found declaring that the engraving of his pictures is interrupted by reason of the "trouble intellectuel" of his engraver. In other words, Vosterman had, for the time being, lost his reason—a matter of which Mariette takes account by mentioning, à propos of "The Fall of the Rebel Angels," that Rubens had exercised the greatest care in directing the method of the engraver, and that this poor man had applied himself so unremittingly to the task that his mind had thereby become weakened. Vosterman seems, thereupon, to have considered Rubens as an active enemy, and to have conducted himself towards him not without a measure of violence. The engraver, in course of time, regained his mental balance, and—work to some extent failing him in Antwerp—he proceeded, as ample records show us, to England, where Lord Arundel was among his patrons, and where he stayed a considerable time. It is believed that he passed through Paris on the way to these shores; but this is not certainly known. What is known is, that after a very prolonged absence he returned to Antwerp, took up his work again there to some extent, was for a while at least of such a position that his portrait was engraved by Hollar (a man, it is true, who, like Vosterman, experienced the reverses of fortune); then fell into quite dire poverty, and, having witnessed the death of his son—an artist like himself, if of lesser gifts—died, tended indeed affectionately by his daughter, but the recipient of the not too lavish charities of his guild.

It was extremely natural that a person holding one of the most important of official positions in the world of art, in the country of Rubens and of his engravers, should have selected that quite remarkable engraver, Vosterman, as the theme of what must certainly be called a treatise as well as a catalogue. And it is most creditable to M. Hymans that he has executed his task with a rare and satisfactory completeness. Nothing more about Vosterman remains, or can remain, to be said. The collector and the historical student of art are alike provided for. Yet, as I may have implied already, I do not anticipate, so far as England is concerned, any great revival of enthusiasm over the subject of M. Hymans's monograph. Even we, however, with our many and reasonable inducements to study art in others of its developments than that of the Antwerp school of engravers, must be thankful from time to time to have access to a volume of authority upon one of the most accomplished members of a group which formed at least a connecting link between the earlier Italian engraving and that engraving which in the eighteenth century is beheld in England in the achievements of Basire and Woollett, and in France in the productions of Laurent Cars and Tardieu, of Massard and Philippe Le Bas.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

THE NEW ASSOCIATES OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

VERY seldom has the Royal Academy to elect three Associates at a sitting. It did so last Tuesday, and, on the whole, with judgment. Mr. G. Frampton's claim—though by no means inadequate—was perhaps one which was not very pressing at the moment. Only the other day we recorded that he had been selected as the sculptor of the new statues to be placed round the spire of St. Mary's Church at Oxford, and also as the designer of the Winchester quingentenary medal. Mr. Frank Bramley had clearly established a right to prompt election, not so much by last year's work, with its laudable enough intention to reconcile artistic aim with homely observation of life, as by the yet earlier successes of "Hopeless Dawn," and of that picture which almost immediately followed it and which represented, so to say, a human derelict—a Spanish woman washed up by tempest on a strange shore, and coming to herself as the centre of wondering fisher-folk in a Cornish cottage. The third choice—or, rather, we have no doubt, the first of the three—fell upon Mr. John Sargent, who could never in fairness have been passed over by a body whose business it is to take account of brilliant technique and of the presence of a virtuoso. Mr. Sargent has in his time exhibited canvases which to the wisest and most comprehensive criticism have seemed harsh, garish, and offensive, if, like the portrait of Mr. Robert Louis Stevenson, they were not actually funny. But these are the exceptions; and though Mr. Sargent is not at all a faultless colourist, and is regarded as the ideal painter only by those whose conception of the ideal does not rise above what is clever, he is a highly trained and remarkable draughtsman, a keen and somewhat original observer, and a painter whose brush-work is of absolutely extraordinary deftness. The influences which, as we suppose, have most inspired him, outside that of his admitted master, M. Carolus Duran, are the influences of Velasquez, of Franz Hals, and of Mr. Whistler. Even where he has not been altogether satisfactory, Mr. Sargent has never failed to be vivacious and interesting. We have ever been among those who have enjoyed his talent. It is well—and was indeed inevitable—that he should belong to the Academy.

OBITUARY.

WE have to record the death of Mr. Clark Stanton, R.S.A., which occurred at Edinburgh on January 8. Born at Birmingham in 1832, he was educated there at the King Edward School and the Art School; and he began his artistic career as a designer and modeller for Messrs. Elkington. While working for this firm, he designed many figure and decorative subjects, to be carried out in metal; among the rest a silver table, which was presented to the Queen by the Prince Consort. While still young, he studied for a time in Florence; and during this period he received sittings from Garibaldi, of whom he executed a bust. On his return, about 1855, he settled in Edinburgh; and in 1855 began to exhibit at the Royal Scottish Academy, showing ten works, including his busts of Profs. Dick and Laycock, and a fine statue, titled "The Ivy Wreath," executed for Messrs. Elkington. During his earlier days he executed many illustrations for the Edinburgh publishers; and to the end of his life he combined the practice of graphic with that of plastic art, and worked skilfully in both water-colours and oils, though chiefly known as a painter by his work in the former medium. In 1864 he designed the Caledonian Challenge Shield, the chief volunteer prize at the Edinburgh Rifle meetings. One of his best works in the round is "The Strayed Reveller," dating from 1861. He also executed several groups at the base of the Prince Consort Memorial, several of the statuettes on the Scott Monument, and some of the figure-subjects in relief on the panels of the Duke of Buccleuch's monument—all in Edinburgh. His works are distinguished by much grace, sweetness, and dexterity; but he had never the opportunity of executing any single work of sufficient importance to secure very extended and abiding fame. Personally, Mr. Stanton was one of the gentlest, most modest and lovable of men, but of a singularly retiring disposition. He was elected an associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1882, and a full member in 1885. Since 1881 he had been curator of the Life School, a position in which his winning personal qualities greatly endeared him to the students under his charge.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE exhibitions to open next week include: the first public exhibition, by Mr. Harry Quilter, of pictures, sketches, and studies, at the Dudley Gallery, Piccadilly; and two collections at the Dowdeswell Galleries, New Bond-street—of marine pictures and studies in oil, by Mr. Edwin Hayes, painted on the coasts of England, Holland, Italy, and Spain; and of drawings in water-colour, by Mr. Claude Hayes, representing scenes in Essex, Berkshire, and Surrey.

THE following have been elected associates of the Royal Society of Painter-Etchers:—Prof. Le Gros and Messrs. F. Boberg, G. W. Eve, A. Hartley, H. Macbeth-Raeburn, H. C. Massey, W. Monk, C. M. Pott, and E. Stamp.

MR. W. FRANK CALDERON proposes to open, in April, a school of animal painting in Baker-street, provided that he receives the names of a sufficient number of pupils. Among those who have promised him their support are Messrs. Briton Rivière, H. W. B. Davis, and Heywood Hardy.

THE will of the late Lady Eastlake contains the following legacies:—A bust of her husband (Sir Charles Eastlake), by Gibson, and an unfinished portrait of Lady Calcott, by Sir T. Lawrence, are bequeathed to the National Portrait Gallery; a picture by Sir Charles Eastlake, entitled "Ippolita Forelli," is bequeathed to the National Gallery; and the sum of £100 to the Artists' General Benevolent Institution.

THE large collection of Japanese art in the South Kensington Museum has been rendered more available to students by the publication of a catalogue of the illustrated books and prints. It has been compiled by Mr. Edward F. Strange, from translations furnished by Mr. G. Kowaki. The principal system of classification is according to subjects; but details are given of the varied contents of the albums of xylographic prints in colour, and there is also a copious index of artists' names. A second part will deal with the original drawings, photographs, and books relating to Japanese art.

THE last number of the American Journal of Archaeology (Kegan Paul & Co.) is of less interest than usual. Prof. Allan Marquand, of Princeton, gives a further report of his visit to Italy in search of unidentified works of Luca della Robbia. He here deals with certain terracotta medallions on the outside of Or San Michele at Florence, one of which (now published for the first time) he claims to have proved to be the latest dated work of the artist; and with the altar-pieces and other decorative work in the little-known Tuscan town of Impruneta. Prof. A. C. Merriam, of Columbia College, discusses a series of Cypriote heads in the Metropolitan Museum of New York, tracing Egyptian influence, as shown in the arrangement of the hair, by comparison with a statuette of Apollo from Naukratis. Mr. T. G. Pinches, of the British Museum, describes a Babylonian tablet, dated 539 B.C., which is interesting as showing the figure of a humped ox, referred to in the inscription on the other side of it. Mr. W. C. Poland, of the American School at Athens, writes about a sepulchral inscription of the early part of the fourth century, recording that Euthylla dedicates it on the grave of her friend, Biote; and further details are given about the excavation of the Heraeum at Argos. Finally, we may mention a letter by Mr. William Mercer about Montefalcone in Umbria, and its painter, Francesco Melanzio, a pupil of Perugino.

THE STAGE.

MR. SYDNEY GRUNDY is one of the very few contemporary writers for the stage who can reasonably claim that their work is possessed of such literary quality as would in any way hold its own were it to be devoted to novel, or short story, or first-rate newspaper article, instead of to plays. And it is this literary quality—this and the presentation of certain amusing types—that distinguishes and gives some value to his new piece, "An Old Jew," at the Garrick. Otherwise the piece is not, perhaps, altogether one of Mr. Grundy's strongest. The story—not a thing we are wont to be very exacting about—is somewhat too slow in developing; nor, however much "truth" may be "stranger than fiction," can we be reconciled to its likelihood. Mr. John Hare, who, in his own art, is one of the neatest of genre painters, here plays a very leading part—that of the "old Jew" himself. A part so important must needs have variety; and we prefer Mr. Hare in those passages in which he is called upon to display his powers of dainty observation, and his finish of performance as a light comedian. Less convincing is he in those passages which call upon the actor for pathetic expression. In a part of unusual importance, Mr. Gilbert Hare—the son of the popular manager—is a little over-weighted. Mr. Anson exhibits his own forcible style with peculiar success. Mrs. Theodore Wright has, as we have before had occasion to recognise, a somewhat impressive personality, hitherto displayed chiefly in that limited artistic effect which is known as "suppressed emotion." Miss Kate Rorke is rarely without spontaneity and feeling, and, one may say, never without charm. So the piece is, on the whole, well acted.

ADMIRABLE as was the Viola of Miss Ellen Terry, eight or nine years ago, at the Lyceum, the Viola of Miss Kate Terry, presented fully a quarter of a century ago, at the Olympic, was, we consider, the best Viola whom the middle-aged playgoer has seen. The Viola of Miss Ada Rehan, just proffered us at Daly's, is entitled to respect: nay, more than that, notwithstanding certain notable and even inexplicable mistakes of method, it is worthy of recognition as a sometimes impressive effort of art, and as, of course, the expression of a gifted, and to some extent, varied nature. The piece generally is well enough played, and will doubtless sufficiently serve its purpose, though we could wish that the text were treated with something of the respect which we have claimed for the leading actress. A really long run is somehow seldom accorded to "Twelfth Night;" we may almost say never. And it has been interestingly pointed out that the occasion for the piece's revival has generally been the desire of an important actress to appear as Viola, or even sometimes of an important actor to appear as Malvolio, Sir Toby Belch, or Sir Andrew Aguecheek. We are surprised at the circumstance. For though several characters are fairly attractive to the comedian in "Twelfth Night," no one character dominates. From a purely stage point of view, the play has certainly its defects.

THE Sunday Popular Debates at the Opera Comique, under the direction of Mr. J. T. Grein, will be inaugurated on Sunday next, January 14, at 8 o'clock p.m., by Mr. Sergius Stepniak, with a lecture on "The Russian Drama." Mr. W. Archer will occupy the chair.

MUSIC.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Old English Popular Music. By William Chappell. In 2 vols. (Macmillans.)

It is now nearly sixty years since the late William Chappell began to collect materials for a work on Old English music, which appeared in 1840, and was republished in 1855 and again in 1859. In the present edition important changes have been made: many of the ballads since printed in the "Roxburghe" collection and other similar publications have been reduced to one or two stanzas, and more attention has been concentrated upon the music, rightly described as "the most important element of the work." With regard to the music, the reasons for various changes which have been made are set out in the preface.

There is no doubt that, in putting modern signatures to tunes written in old modes, and in adding accompaniments with modern harmonies, the late Sir G. Macfarren went too far; and yet we cannot but feel that he was right in attempting to establish a difference between the music of the church and that of the people. The conquest of Spain by the Arabs and the wars of the Crusades—not to speak of other influences—familiarised the West with a tonality which first modified, and finally overthrew, the ecclesiastical scales. Herr Emil Naumann and Mr. J. F. Rowbotham, in their Histories of Music, state that the minstrels and troubadours were among the first to introduce life into the formal church modes, which bore but little resemblance to the Greek modes out of which they were, after a fashion, evolved. The Tonus Peregrinus and the Musica Ficta of the middle ages show the strong influence from without on the Church, which in music, as in other matters, never led, but always followed public opinion. Many of the old popular tunes were noted down by ecclesiastical, or skilled musicians, but probably transcribed—i.e., presented, not as sung by the people, but in the tonality ordained by the priests. Mr. Wooldridge says:

"The popular treatment of them [i.e., of the ecclesiastical modes] differed in no essential respect from the ecclesiastical; and the nameless authors of the ballad tunes, for anything their work shows to the contrary, might well have been the very men whom we know and honour as composers for the Church."

With the latter part of the sentence we agree; "Sumer is i-cumen in," the earliest example in our book, was written down by John Fornsete, a monk of Reading in the thirteenth century; and again of the old song of Agincourt it is remarked:—"Whether in this song of Agincourt we have another example of a popular melody embellished and added to by a scholastic composer, it is impossible to say." But if these scholastic composers embellished and made additions to popular melodies, surely it is possible that they may also have removed certain accidentals which savoured too much of the secular. The priests cannot have been well disposed towards the minstrels, for the people, then as now, loved amusement better than instruction; and the following from the books of the Stationers Company (1560):—"Item, payd to the preacher, 6s. 2d.; Item, payd to the minstrell, 12s."—represents fairly well the respective value attached to their services. In connexion with this matter the remarks on "Walsingham," vol. i., p. 69, may be read with advantage; also footnote to p. 81. Or, on the other hand, it may have been the general practice to write in the ecclesiastical modes, and for the people, in singing, to make chromatic alterations, according to instinct, or, more probably, according to tradition. It is only since the beginning of this century that written music represents actually what was intended by the composer. Sir G. Macfarren went too far in modernising; but to read the mere letter of old music is also, in the opposite direction, a fault, though one less misleading. The past cannot be restored; but to the old text, as given in the present edition, anyone, according to knowledge of the past, or fancy, can add what he pleases.

Then, again, there is the question of accompaniment to the old tunes which, originally, had none. Mr. Wooldridge rightly concluded that modern harmony would not suit old melody, and has therefore excluded many of Sir G. Macfarren's settings. With regard to the very early tunes, Mr. Wooldridge has arranged the accompaniments "according to the practice of the English musicians of the latter half of the sixteenth century," feeling that "to present old melody without accompaniment is to expose it to the risk of being misunderstood by the modern hearer." To this no objection can be taken, since the original melodies remain untouched. Late accompaniments, with one exception, have been arranged for pianoforte, while of the settings for virginals, fourteen have been given in their original form.

But we must now give a very brief description of the contents of the two volumes. First we have old popular music from the thirteenth to the sixteenth century, with interesting descriptions of the minstrels, "Fydelers, sytolys, and trompo-teres." Then comes the period of the earlier ballads, of the harp, lute, and virginals. How the ladies of that day passed their time is told in the following lines:

"This is all that women do,
Sit and answer them that woo;
Deck themselves in new attire,
To entangle fresh desire;
After dinner sing and play,
Or, dancing, pass the time away."

One of the most striking ballads is "O Death, rock me asleep"; the independent lute accompaniment, given in piano score, is of special interest. The next part is devoted to dance tunes; and "The Crooke," a very early instance of the musical form known as "Air and Variations," deserves the attention of students.

The second volume includes songs, ballads, and dance tunes down to the eighteenth century. Space will only allow us to notice one tune, Arne's "Rule Britannia." Regarding this, it is stated that, though printed at the end of the masque of "The Judgment of Paris," it was composed for the masque of "Alfred." It might have been mentioned also that there are differences in the two versions.

Old English Popular Music is not only a work of great interest, but of permanent value. The importance of national music is every day becoming more and more recognised, and this noble collection will be welcomed not only by scholars, but by musicians who know how important a part England has played in the development of the art of music.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

BLACKWOOD'S EDUCATIONAL WORKS.

COMMENTARIES ON THE HISTORY OF ENGLAND.
From the Earliest Times to 1865. By MONTAGU BURROWS, Chichele Professor of Modern History in the University of Oxford; Captain R.N.; F.S.A., &c.; "Officier de l'Instruction Publique" of France. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

BY PROFESSOR MINTO.
MANUAL OF ENGLISH PROSE LITERATURE.
Third Edition. 7s. 8d.

CHARACTERISTICS OF ENGLISH POETS.
New Edition. 7s. 6d.

PLAIN PRINCIPLES OF PROSE COMPOSITION.
Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.

BY DR. MACKAY.
MANUAL OF GEOGRAPHY.
Eleventh Thousand. 7s. 6d.

ELEMENTS OF GEOGRAPHY.
Fifty-fifth Thousand, Revised, 8s.

INTERMEDIATE GEOGRAPHY.
Seventeenth Edition. 2s.

OUTLINES OF GEOGRAPHY.
One Hundred and Ninety-first Thousand, Revised to date. 1s.

BY DR. PAGE.
INTRODUCTORY PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY.
Twelfth Edition, Revised and Enlarged by Professor LAPWORTH. 2s. 8d.

ADVANCED TEXT-BOOK OF PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY.
With Engravings. Revised and Enlarged by the Same. Third Edition. 6s.

INTRODUCTORY TEXT-BOOK OF GEOLOGY.
With Engravings. Twelfth Edition, Revised and almost entirely Rewritten by the Same. 3s. 6d.

ADVANCED TEXT-BOOK OF GEOLOGY.
Sixth Edition, Revised and Enlarged, with Glossary. 7s. 8d.

BY PROFESSOR NICHOLSON.
MANUAL OF ZOOLOGY.
Seventh Edition, Rewritten and Enlarged. Post 8vo, with Engravings, 18s.

TEXT BOOK OF ZOOLOGY.
Fifth Edition, Enlarged. Crown 8vo, with Engravings, 10s. 6d.

INTRODUCTORY TEXT-BOOK OF ZOOLOGY.
Sixth Edition. With Engravings. Crown 8vo, 8s.

OUTLINES OF NATURAL HISTORY FOR BEGINNERS.
Third Edition. 1s. 6d.

STORMONTH'S DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.
Etymological and Pronouncing. The Pronunciation Revised by the Rev. P. H. PHELP, M.A. College Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. School Edition, 2s.

DR. CURRIE'S ENGLISH PROSE COMPOSITION.
Fifty-fourth Thousand. 1s. 6d.

ADITUS FACILIORES: an Easy Latin Construing Book, with Complete Vocabulary. By Dr. POTTS, and Rev. C. DARNELL, M.A. Tenth Edition. 3s. 6d.

ADITUS FACILIORES GRAECI: an Easy Greek Construing Book, with Complete Vocabulary. By the SAME AUTHORS. Fifth Edition. 3s.

PRACTICAL RUDIMENTS OF THE LATIN LANGUAGE.
By JOHN ROSS, M.A. Third Edition. 1s. 6d.

GREEK TESTAMENT LESSONS.
With Notes and Essays. By Rev. J. HUNTER SMITH, M.A. 6s.

STONYHURST LATIN GRAMMAR.
By Rev. JOHN GERARD. Second Edition. 3s.

JOHNSTON'S CATECHISM OF AGRICULTURAL CHEMISTRY.
From the Edition by Sir C. A. CAMERON. New Edition, Revised and entirely Rewritten by C. M. AIKMAN. With Engravings. 1s.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS,
EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW LIST.*NEW BOOK

by the AUTHOR of
"OBITER Dicta."

Ready on January 15th.

In Foolscap 8vo, tastefully printed, and bound in olive cloth, uniform with "Obiter Dicta," price 5s.

Also 50 Large-Paper Copies, price 21s. net.
ESSAYS ABOUT MEN, WOMEN, AND BOOKS. By AUGUSTINE BIRRELL, Q.C., M.P.

CONTENTS.

SWIFT.
BOLINGROKE.
STERNE.
JOHNSON.
RICHARD CUMBERLAND.
ALEXANDER KNOX AND THOMAS DE QUINCEY.
HANNAH MORE.
MARIE BASHKERTSEFF.
SIR JOHN VANBURN.
ROGER NORTH'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY.

JOHN GAY.
BOOKS: OLD AND NEW.
BOOKBINDING.
POETS-LAUREATE.
PARLIAMENTARY CANDIDATES.
THE BONA-FIDE TRAVELLER.
HOURS IN A LIBRARY.
FREE QUOTATIONS.
AUTHORS AND CRITICS.

NEW VOLUME OF THE BOOK-LOVERS' LIBRARY.

In foolscap 8vo, tastefully printed on antique paper, and bound in olive cloth, gilt lettered, price 4s. 6d.; hand-made paper, Roxburghe binding, 7s. 6d. net; large-paper Roxburghe binding, 21s. net.

BOOK-SONG, an Anthology

of Poems of Books and Bookmen from Modern Authors. Edited by GLESON WHITE, Editor of "Ballades and Rondeaux," "Garde Joyeuse," &c., &c.

In crown 8vo, handsomely bound in cloth, price 5s.

A THREEFOLD*MYSTERY:

A Tale of Monte Carlo. By CONSTANCE SERJEANT.

Tastefully printed in demy 8vo, cloth, price 10s. 6d. Copiously illustrated with Sketches and Photographs.

ROUND THE WORLD BY DOCTOR'S ORDERS.

Being a Narrative of a Year's Travel in Japan, Ceylon, Australia, China, New Zealand, Canada, United States, &c. By JOHN DALE, J.P., Scarborough.

Tastefully printed and bound in cloth, price 3s. 6d. With Illustrative Diagrams.

A SIMPLE HISTORY OF ANCIENT PHILOSOPHY.

By W. R. SCOTT, M.A., Trinity College, Dublin. Author of "An Introduction to Cudworth's Treatise concerning Eternal and Immutable Morality."

CONTENTS:—The Three Earliest Schools—The Philosophy of Change—The Claims of Man—Socrates—Plato—Aristotle—The Characteristics of the Last Period of Greek Philosophy—Epicurus and his Followers—Scepticism in the New Academy—Electicism—Neo-platonism—Index of Terms and Glossary—Index of Names and Chronological Table.

UNPOPULAR POLITICS:

Being Non-popular Aspects, Political and Economic, of some Prominent Contemporary Questions. By G. EDWARD TARNER.

CONTENTS:—State-provided Education—Combinations in Restraint of Trade—The Progressive Transfer of Political Power to the Largest Class.

LONDON:

ELLIOT STOCK 62, PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

By Mrs. Lovett Cameron.

A TRAGIC BLUNDER.

By the Author of

"In a Grass Country,"
"Jack's Secret," "A Sister's Sin,"
&c. 2 vols. [At all Libraries.

"Our compliments to Mrs. Lovett Cameron on 'A Tragic Blunder.'"
"Mrs. Cameron's well-wrought story... is brightly and pleasantly told."—CORRY GENTLEMAN.

"In all that Mrs. Lovett Cameron writes there is a charm of gracefulness and womanly feeling, with an undertone of power and intellectuality, that places her novel as a rule far above the average, and insures her a popularity, which, so far, has not failed. In the book before us, these characteristics are not wanting... There are the same tender touches, the same good taste and feeling... The book bears the impress of her taste and genius."—LIFE.
"The story is agreeably written, and there are some amusing personages in it."—ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

By Florence Marryat.—THE HAMPSTEAD MYSTERY.

By the Author of "My Sister the Actress," "The Heart of Jane Warner," "Under the Lilies and Roses," &c. 3 vols. [At all Libraries.

"Miss Marryat's novel illustrates her usual strong points with much effect; she has ingenuity and narrative power, and her style has always vitality and directness."—STANDARD.
"There is good stuff in 'The Hampstead Mystery.' The result is a lively and stirring novel of the sensational domestic kind."

"It is an entrancingly clever story, one well worthy of the author, and is full from end to end of the most thrilling interest."
"The force and fidelity to nature of much that is here set down must be apparent to all."—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

By A. Perrin.—INTO TEMPTATION.

2 vols. [At all Libraries.

By the late Lady Duffus Hardy.—A

BURIED SIN. By the Author of "Beryl Fortescue," "Paul Wynter's Sacrifice," "A Dangerous Experiment," &c. 3 vols. [At all Libraries.

"This charming story displays all the grace of style, lightness of touch, and sprightliness of humour which characterised Lady Hardy's earlier works of fiction... The plot is well constructed, and affords abundant opportunity for the development of clever and striking characterisations. Dialogue and descriptive matter alike sparkle with 'good things.'"—DAILY TELEGRAPH.
"...the author has been skilful enough to work up a story of considerable attraction... a very taking story that will please many, and most certainly offend none."—PUBLIC OPINION.

By B. M. Croker.—A THIRD PERSON.

By the Author of "Two Masters," "Interference," "Proper Pride," &c. 2 vols. [At all Libraries.

"'A Third Person' is a bright, clever, and amusing story—carrying the reader along through a natural narrative of love..."—ATHENÆUM.
"...there is a great deal of 'go' in 'A Third Person.' The story is told with readiness and vivacity... the 'go' aforesaid carries you through the two volumes in a very short time."—ACADEMY.
"Any one with a fit of the blues, or who, from some reason or another, requires to be brought back to a more hopeful view of things in general, can be recommended to ask for the author's entertaining and wistful clever novel... the love-tale is sympathetically told. Altogether the book is full of bright character-sketches and genuine humour."

"'A Third Person' is at once a highly entertaining novel... There is not a dull page in the whole book... Mrs. Croker's delightful story is told with a genial vivacity and engaging spontaneity... The book positively teems with convincing character-studies, delineated with exquisite delicacy of touch and careful observance of artistic unities."—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

By Florence Warden.—MY CHILD and

I. By the Author of "A Young Wife's Trial," "A Wild Wooing," "A Witch of the Hills," &c. 3 vols. [Immediately.

By Mrs. Hungerford (Author of "Molly

Bawn"),—LADY PATTY. (Third Edition.) In picture boards, 2s. [At all Booksellers and Bookstalls.

By Mrs. Oliphant.—THE SORCERESS.

By the Author of "The Heir Presumptive and the Heir Apparent," "The Son of his Father," &c. Cloth, 3s. 6d. [At all Booksellers and Bookstalls.

By Hume Nisbet.—A BUSH-GIRL'S

ROMANCE. By the Author of "The Haunted Station," "The Queen's Desire," &c. (With Illustrations by the Author.) Cloth, 3s. 6d. [Immediately.

A CHEAPER EDITION OF
John Strange Winter's Popular Novel.

ONLY HUMAN. (Fourth Edition.) In picture boards, 2s. [Immediately.

F. V. WHITE & CO.,
14, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND, W.C.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE.

Just published, price 1s.

A REJOINDER TO PROF. WEISMANN.

By HERBERT SPENCER.

Also, recently published, price 1s.

THE INADEQUACY OF NATURAL SELECTION

By the SAME AUTHOR.

TRANSACTIONS OF THE ROYAL IRISH ACADEMY.

Just published, VOL. XXX., PART X.

On a Syriac MS. of the New Testament belonging to the Earl of Crawford and Balcarres, and on an inedited version of the Apocalypse therein contained.

By the Rev. JOHN GWYNN, D.D., D.C.L.

With Plate, price 8s. 6d.

14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden; and at Edinburgh.

F. NORGATE & CO.'S RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

Just published, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

CHRISTIAN CREEDS AND CONFESSIONS: A Short Account of the Symbolical Books of the Churches and Sects of Christendom and of the Doctrines dependent on them. By Prof. G. A. GUMMICH. Translated by L. A. WHEATLEY.

Also in 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 1s.

PATRIOTIC POETRY: a Selection of Readings and Recitations on English History, Love of Country, &c. (250 copies printed on fine paper, half-vellum, 3s. 6d.)

44, SHAFTESBURY AVENUE.

Just published, 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

THE GREAT PESTILENCE

(A.D. 1348-9).

Now commonly known as the Black Death.

By FRANCIS AIDAN GASQUET, D.D., O.S.B.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co., Limited.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALE PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. ON CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, AND ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows Interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

To H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,*SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also.

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,*TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other*SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

PREMIER*"VINOLIA" SOAP

FOR THE HOUSEHOLD COSTS

4d. A TABLET.

BREAKFAST—SUPPER.

E P P S 'S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

C O C C O A

BOILING WATER OR MILK.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

*Subjects for the Cambridge Local Examinations, December, 1894.THE ELEMENTS of ENGLISH GRAMMAR.

By ALFRED S. WEST, M.A., Trinity College, Cambridge. 2s. 6d.

THE CHURCH CATECHISM EXPLAINED.

By the Rev. A. W. ROBINSON, M.A., Jesus College, Cambridge, Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Wakefield. 2s.

PROSPER MERIMÉE.—COLOMBA. Edited by

ARTHUR B. ROPES, M.A., late Fellow of King's College, Cambridge. 2s.

CASIMIR DELAVIGNE.—LOUIS XI. Edited by H. W. EVE, M.A., Headmaster of University College School, London. 2s.

KLEE.—DIE DEUTSCHEN HELDENSAGEN

(HAGEN und HILDE und GUDRUN). Edited by H. J. WOLSTENHOLME, B.A. Lond. 3s.

GUTZKOW.—ZOPF und SCHWERT. Lustspiel in fünf Aufzügen. With a Biographical and Historical Introduction, English Notes, and an Index. By H. J. WOLSTENHOLME, B.A. Lond. 2s. 6d.

CAESAR.—DE BELLO GALlico. BOOK VII.

Edited by A. G. PESKETT, M.A., Fellow of Magdalene College, Cambridge. 2s.

VERGIL.—AENEID. BOOK IX. Edited by

A. SIDGWICK, M.A., Tutor of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. 1s. 6d.

LIVY. BOOK VI. Edited by the Rev. H. M.

STEPHENSON, M.A., late Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge. 2s. 6d.

CICERO.—DE SENECTUTE. Edited by J. S.

REID, Litt.D., Fellow and Tutor of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge. 3s. 6d.

XENOPHON.—ANABASIS. BOOK IV. Edited by A. PRETOR, M.A., Fellow of St. Catharine's College, Cambridge. 2s.

EURIPIDES.—HECUBA. With Introduction and

Notes, by W. S. HADLEY, M.A., Fellow of Pembroke College, Cambridge. [Preparing.]

HERODOTUS. BOOK VI. Edited by E. S.

SHUCKBURGH, M.A., 1st Fellow of Emmanuel College, Cambridge. 4s.

PLATO.—CRITO. Edited, with Introduction,

Notes, and Appendix, by J. ADAM, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Emmanuel College. 2s. 6d.

PLATO.—EUTHYPHRO. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by J. ADAM, M.A. 2s. 6d.

PITT PRESS SERIES.Books suitable for Examinations in 1894.ARISTOPHANES.—PLUTUS. With English

Notes and Introduction, by W. C. GREEN, M.A., late Assistant Master at Rugby School. 3s. 6d.

ARISTOPHANES.—VESPÆ. By C. E. Graves,

M.A., Classical Lecturer and Fellow of St. John's College. [Nearly ready.]

HERODOTUS. BOOKS VIII. and IX. Complete, with Introduction, Notes, and Map, by E. S. SHUCKBURGH, M.A., late Fellow of Emmanuel College. 4s. each.

PLATO.—PROTAGORAS. With Introduction and

Notes, by J. ADAM, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Emmanuel College, and A. M. ADAM. 4s. 6d.

PLATONIS APOLOGIA SOCRATIS. With Introduction, Notes, and Appendices, by J. ADAM, M.A. 2s. 6d.

SOPHOCLES.—OEDIPUS TYRANNUS. School

Edition. By R. C. JEBB, Litt.D., LL.D. 4s. 6d.

XENOPHON.—ANABASIS. By A. Pretor, M.A.

Text and Notes. Complete in 2 vols. Vol. I., TEXT, 3s. Vol. II., NOTES, 4s. 6d.

BOOKS I., III., IV., and V. 2s. each.

BOOKS II., VI., and VII. 2s. 6d. each.

CAESAR.—DE BELLO GALlico. With Introduction, Notes, and Maps. Edited by A. G. PESKETT, M.A., Fellow of Magdalene College. Books I., III., VI., and VIII. 1s. 6d. each. Books I.—III., 3s. Books II., III., 2s. Books IV., V., 1s. 6d. Book VII., 2s.

CICERO.—PHILIPPICA SECUNDA. With Introduction and Notes, by the same Editor. 3s. 6d.

CICERO.—DE SENECTUTE. With Introduction

and Notes, by J. S. REID, Litt.D., Fellow and Tutor of Gonville and Caius College. 3s. 6d.

CICERO.—PRO MURENA. With Introduction

and Notes, by W. E. HEITLAND, M.A., Fellow and Classical Lecturer of St. John's College. 2s.

THE PITT PRESS SHAKESPEARE.

A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Glossary, by A. W. VERITY, M.A., sometime Scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1s. 6d.

THE CAMBRIDGE MILTON FOR SCHOOLS.

MILTON.—PARADISE LOST. BOOKS I.-II.

Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Indexes, by A. W. VERITY, M.A. 2s.

MATHEMATICS.*ARITHMETIC for SCHOOLS. With or without Answers. By C. SMITH, M.A., Master of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge. 3s. 6d.

EUCLID'S ELEMENTS of GEOMETRY.

BOOKS I.-VI. Edited by H. M. TAYLOR, M.A., Fellow and formerly Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 4s.

Books I. and II., 1s. 6d.; Books III. and IV., 1s. 6d.; Books V. and VI., 1s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY ALGEBRA. By W. W. Rouse

BALL, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 4s. 6d.

AN ELEMENTARY TREATISE on PLANE

TRIGONOMETRY. By E. W. HOBSON, Sc.D., F.R.S., Fellow and Tutor of Christ's College, Cambridge, and University Lecturer in Mathematics; and C. M. JESSOP, M.A., Fellow of Clare College. 4s. 6d.

PLANE TRIGONOMETRY. By S. L. Loney,

M.A., late Fellow of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge. 7s. 6d. Part I., up to and including the Solution of Triangles, is published separately. 5s.

MECHANICS and HYDROSTATICS for BE-

GINNERS. By S. L. LONEY, M.A. 4s. 6d.

ELEMENTS of STATICS and DYNAMICS. By

S. L. LONEY, M.A. Third Edition. 7s. 6d.

Part I.—ELEMENTS of STATICS. 4s. 6d.

Part II.—ELEMENTS of DYNAMICS. 3s. 6d.

HEAT: an Elementary Text-Book, Theoretical and Practical, for Colleges and Schools. By R. T. GLAZEBROOK, M.A., F.R.S. Assistant Director of the Cavendish Laboratory. [Immediately.]

ARISTOPHANES.—PLUTUS. With English

Notes and Introduction, by W. C. GREEN, M.A., late Assistant Master at Rugby School. 3s. 6d.

ARISTOPHANES.—VESPÆ. By C. E. Graves,

M.A., Classical Lecturer and Fellow of St. John's College. [Nearly ready.]

HERODOTUS. BOOKS VIII. and IX. Complete, with Introduction, Notes, and Map, by E. S. SHUCKBURGH, M.A., late Fellow of Emmanuel College. 4s. each.

PLATO.—PROTAGORAS. With Introduction and

Notes, by J. ADAM, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Emmanuel College, and A. M. ADAM. 4s. 6d.

PLATONIS APOLOGIA SOCRATIS. With Introduction, Notes, and Appendices, by J. ADAM, M.A. 2s. 6d.

SOPHOCLES.—OEDIPUS TYRANNUS. School

Edition. By R. C. JEBB, Litt.D., LL.D. 4s. 6d.

XENOPHON.—ANABASIS. By A. Pretor, M.A.

Text and Notes. Complete in 2 vols. Vol. I., TEXT, 3s. Vol. II., NOTES, 4s. 6d.

BOOKS I., III., IV., and V. 2s. each.

BOOKS II., VI., and VII. 2s. 6d. each.

CAESAR.—DE BELLO GALlico. With Introduction, Notes, and Maps. Edited by A. G. PESKETT, M.A., Fellow of Magdalene College. Books I., III., VI., and VIII. 1s. 6d. each. Books I.—III., 3s. Books II., III., 2s. Books IV., V., 1s. 6d. Book VII., 2s.

CICERO.—PHILIPPICA SECUNDA. With Introduction and Notes, by the same Editor. 3s. 6d.

CICERO.—DE SENECTUTE. With Introduction

and Notes, by J. S. REID, Litt.D., Fellow and Tutor of Gonville and Caius College. 3s. 6d.

CICERO.—PRO MURENA. With Introduction

and Notes, by W. E. HEITLAND, M.A., Fellow and Classical Lecturer of St. John's College. 2s.

HORACE.—EPISTLES. BOOK I. With Notes and Introduction, by E. S. SHUCKBURGH, M.A., late Fellow of Emmanuel College. 2s. 6d.

LIVY. BOOK IX. With Notes and Introduction,

by Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A. 2s. 6d.

VERGIL. COMPLETE WORKS. Edited by A.

SIDGWICK, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. In 2 vols. Vol. I., TEXT and INTRODUCTION, 3s. 6d. Vol. II., NOTES, 4s. 6d.

OR, IN SEPARATE BOOKS—

AENEID. Books I.-XII. 1s. 6d. each.

BUCOLICS. 1s. 6d.

GEORGICS. Books I., II. 2s.

GEORGICS. Books III., IV. 2s.

GRADUATED PASSAGES from GREEK and LATIN AUTHORS, for First Sight Translation. Selected and supplied with Short Notes for Beginners, by H. BENDALL, M.A., Head Master, and C. E. LAURENCE, B.A., Assistant Master of Blackheath Proprietary School. Crown 8vo.

Part I. EASY. 1s. 6d.

" II. MODERATELY EASY. 2s.

Part III. MODERATELY DIFFICULT. 2s.

" IV. DIFFICULT. 2s.

MOLIERE.—LE BOURGEOIS GENTILHOMME.

(1670) Edited by Rev. A. C. CLAPIN, M.A. Revised Edition. 1s. 6d.

HAUFF.—DIE KARAVANE. Edited, with

Notes, by A. SCHLOTTMANN, Ph.D., late Assistant Master at Uppingham School. 3s.

SCHILLER.—WILHELM TELL. Edited, with

Notes, by KARL HERMANN BREUL, M.A., Ph.D. 2s. 6d. Abridged Edition, 1s. 6d.

GEOGRAPHY, ELEMENTARY COMMERCIAL.

A Sketch of the Commodities and the Countries of the World. By H. R. MILL, D.Sc., F.R.S.E., Librarian to the Royal Geographical Society. 1s.

AN ATLAS of COMMERCIAL GEOGRAPHY.

Intended as a Companion to the above. By J. G. BARTHOLOMEW, F.R.G.S. With an Introduction by Dr. H. R. MILL. 8s.

LONDON: C. J. CLAY &amp; SONS, CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.

Printed by ALEXANDER &amp; SHEPHEARD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published by the Proprietor, HENRY VILLERS, 27, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1133.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JANUARY 20, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

WORKS BY

JOHN OLIVER HOBBS

IN THE PSEUDONYM LIBRARY.

SECOND EDITION.

A BUNDLE OF LIFE.

DAILY NEWS.

It abounds in epigrams, and is full of sentiment and satire. The characters are drawn with a deft touch, the dialogue is swift and pointed, the setting is delicately artificial.....The book is full of felicities of phrase, of shafts of wit.....

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The style will be found to exhibit the same polish and frigid glitter as before. It is the story which is so poor and disappointing.... Nor is the character-drawing very felicitous, for although John Oliver Hobbes says very shrewd things about her personages, she seems hardly to have interpreted them to herself. If only this indubitably clever writer would forego the luxury of writing for a twelvemonth!

ATHENAEUM.

It is like entering a new world to suddenly come across a book by John Oliver Hobbes.....There is hardly a page on which at least one epigram does not occur, or some admirably phrased description: the whole very cynical and pessimistic of course, but somehow all the more amusing for that.....Though some of the women are hardly dealt with, at least one and possibly two are charming.....This book must certainly be placed very high among the books which have given the Pseudonym Library its reputation.

FALL MALL GAZETTE.

John Oliver Hobbes must be careful.....A Bundle of Life will not do. ....All her characters talk the talk that never was in drawing-room or smoking-room.....The story is hardly interesting, and the passion will not bear analysis. Some of the descriptions are clever, however, and the rest have an air of being clever, and John Oliver Hobbes is an undeniably clever writer, but she must be careful.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

A Bundle of Life is amazingly clever, and shows the faculty of beating out character by a few swift strokes of dialogue.... It says much for John Oliver Hobbes that he can make the situations even plausible, and to do him justice he does much more than that.....The scene between Wicke and Lady Mailinger is really most admirable.....The doings of these astonishing people are full of entertainment.

NATIONAL OBSERVER.

If John Oliver Hobbes could but make up his (or her) mind to be less vastly clever than he (or she) is, or essays to be, it would be an excellent thing for her (or his) work. The little book reeks with unbidden smartness.....it is nothing to you that some of the epigrams are good.....who shall thrive by sugar-plums alone?

T. P. in the WEEKLY SUN.

What a tremendous amount of ability.....John Oliver Hobbes has packed into her latest book!... Wonderful vivid, piquant, and brilliant.

METHODIST TIMES.

The book contains a great deal of 'clever' writing for those who care for such a thing; but if this be a picture of 'life,' life is in truth hardly worth living.

SCOTSMAN.

The book gives a sense of life in the highest society, and has abundant cleverness, whether in the structure of the plot or in the complex characters of men and women who, with much worldliness, manage to keep some sort of hold upon ideals.....The women in the story are specially excellent.

NATIONAL REVIEW.

I should like to say something more than 'Don't read it' about that one—A Bundle of Life—for it was an exasperating book.

ENGLISH EDITIONS.

Some Emotions and a Moral (Published Sept. 24, 1891) 21st Thousand.
The Sinner's Comedy ... (Published May 10, 1892) 11th Thousand.
A Study in Temptations ... (Published Feb. 22, 1893) 20th Thousand.
A Bundle of Life ... (Published Dec. 4, 1891) 15th Thousand.

TOTAL... 67 Thousand.

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

Paper, 1s. 6d. each.
Cloth, 2s. each.

WARD & DOWNEY'S NEW BOOKS.

MOLTKE. A Biographical and Critical Study. By W. O'C. MORRIS, Author of "Napoleon." With Portraits, Maps, and Plans. 21s.

"Is a careful, lucid, and deserving work, very useful as a manual to its subject, and is illustrated with particularly excellent maps."—Army and Navy Gazette.

THE GHOST WORLD. By T. F. THISELTON DYER, Author of "Church Loro Gleanings." 10s. 6d.

"The literature of what may be called ghost-lore is familiar to him. So far as we know, there is no book in our own or any other language which exactly corresponds with Mr. Dyer's book."—Notes and Queries.

VARIA: The Smallest Church in England (Greenstead, Essex). Benvenuto Cellini—Childhood's Drama—Samuel Pepys, &c. By JOHN ASHTON, Author of "Social England under the Regency." With numerous Illustrations. 1 vol., demy 8vo., 10s. 6d. [Ready next week.]

LADIES in the FIELD. Edited by Lady GREVILLE. Articles on Sport by the Duchess of Newcastle, Lady Greville, Diane Chasseresse, Mrs. Chaworth Musters, Miss Austruther, Mrs. Martelli, Miss Leale, Lady Boynton, Mrs. Jenkins, Mrs. E. R. Pennell, Miss S. Salaman. Crown 8vo, price 6s. [Ready next week.]

SOCIAL STUDIES. By Lady WILDE, Author of "Ancient Legends of Ireland." 6s.

"Lady Wilde's 'Social Studies' is a clever book of essays."—Saturday Review.

NEW NOVELS NOW READY.

NEW NOVEL BY THOMAS TERRELL.

A WOMAN OF HEART. By THOMAS TERRELL, Author of "The City of the Just," &c. 2 vols.

"Once more the author of 'The City of the Just' has shown his skill in producing strong situations out of every-day episodes—or what pass for such—of London social life." Scotsman.

NEW NOVEL BY MABEL COLLINS.

JULIET'S LOVERS. By MABEL COLLINS, Author of "The Prettiest Woman in Warsaw," &c. 3 vols.

"The book has qualities which entitle it to distinction amongst the fictional works of the day."—Daily Telegraph.

"The plot is full of life, vivacity, and fascination, everything conspiring to make the novel a thoroughly successful one."—Liverpool Mercury.

NEW NOVEL BY JOHN DAVIDSON.

BAPTIST LAKE. By JOHN DAVIDSON, Author of "Perfervid," "Fleet Street Eclogues," &c. 1 vol., cr. 8vo. 3s. 6d. [Now ready.]

NEW NOVEL BY F. C. PHILIPS.

ONE NEVER KNOWS. By F. C. PHILIPS, Author of "As in a Looking Glass." 3 vols.

"'One Never Knows' displays him in the act of wielding the satirical lash with all his wonted vigour."—Daily Telegraph.

"They are all live men and women, and there is not a marionette among them."—Daily Chronicle.

THE QUARRY FARM. By T. S. FLETCHER, Author of "Mr. Spivey's Clerk," "When Charles the First was King," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"The story has a charming rural air, and its characters are natural, as well as simple. A reader who likes country stories ought to read this."—Scotsman.

"The simplicity and directness of this story will be a surprise to the reader. . . . The tale is certainly very pretty."—Liverpool Mercury.

THE TWILIGHT of LOVE. Being Four Studies of the Artistic Temperament. By CHARLES H. BROOKFIELD. Price 3s. 6d.

"One is charmed throughout with the profound knowledge of human nature, the keenly humorous, even where scornful, appreciation of character, and the terse, bright style of the author."—Saturday Review.

WARD & DOWNEY, Ltd., 12, York Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PAGE

THE STORY OF TWO NOBLE LIVES, by Judge O'CONNOR MORRIS	49
FRANCIS ADAMS'S THE NEW EGYPT, by PERCY ADDLESHAW	51
MISS HILL'S HISTORY OF ENGLISH DRESS, by Mrs. ERNEST RHYS	52
GREENWOOD'S THE LOVER'S LEXICON, by R. BAINLEY JOHNSON	53
NEW NOVELS, by J. A. NOBLE	54
SOME BOOKS ON THE OLD TESTAMENT	55
NOTES AND NEWS	56
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	57
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	57
ORIGINAL VERSE: "A SHADOW ON SCAFFOLD," by the Rev. H. D. RAWNSLEY	57
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	57
TENNYSONIANA, I., by P. E. N.	57
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	58
CORRESPONDENCE—
The North British Inscriptions, by the Rev. A. L. Mayhew and Gilbert Goudie; The Name of Golspie, by E. W. B. Nicholson; Tibetan "Trees of the Law" and Asoka Pillars, by L. A. Waddell; Dante's "Young King," by the Rev. Wentworth Webster; Unacknowledged Sources, by Dr. W. Knighton	58
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	60
GREEK PAPYRI IN THE BRITISH MUSEUM, by B. P. GREENFELL	60
CORRESPONDENCE—
The -s Plurals in English, by Prof. Napier	62
SCIENCE NOTES	62
PHILOLOGY NOTES	63
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	63
OLD MASTERS AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY, II., by CLAUDE PHILLIPS	64
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	65
RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	66

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & Co., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

TYPE-WRITING.—All kinds of Copying. AUTHORS' MANUSCRIPTS, Pedigrees, &c. Home Work. Terms: 1d. per folio (72 words); or 5,000 words, and over, 1s. per thousand.—Miss NIGHTINGALL, The Avenue, Stevenage, Herts.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS

115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List:—115, Fleet Street, London.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STOCKER, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

THE TRUTH about STAMMERING.—Any one interested will receive the latest information and important books on the cure, on loan, post free, without charge, from THURILL, Messrs. Deacon's, 154, Leadenhall Street, E.C.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to best University or Army Tutors, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained (free of charge) by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. BEEVON, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

MR. KIRWAN.—LESSONS in SPEECH Illustrated Dramatic Readings (a combination of speech, pictures, and music). Selections. Literary Lectures.—Address, 4, Vernon Place, W.C.

BYRON—SHELLEY—KEATS: IN MEMORIAM ENDOWED YEARLY PRIZES for the BEST ESSAY in ENGLISH, written by a Woman of any nation. Third set. With Portrait of Foundress and "Gossip." 1s. 1d.—For rules, send addressed halfpenny wrapper to Rose Mary CRAWSHAY, Bwlch, Breconshire.

WANTED, a TEACHER of MODERN and ANCIENT GREEK. Must be able to speak Greek and be also well versed in the literature. Apply by letter, Central School of Foreign Tongues, Howard House, Arundel Street, Strand.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS &amp; NORGATE,

Importers of Foreign Books,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN

AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

PERSONS wanting BOOKS on IRELAND, or having such for sale, should communicate with us. Catalogue of Irish and Miscellaneous Books just ready.—Honzus, Figgis & Co., Limited, Grafton Street, Dublin.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN &amp; CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE: a Narrative of the Events of his Life. By JAMES DYKES CAMPBELL. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

LADY WILLIAM. By Mrs. Oliphant. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

RICHARD ESCOTT. By Edward H. Cooper, Author of "Geoffrey Hamilton." 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

PUNCH.—"I like "Richard Escott," says the Baron."
STANDARD.—"A book that will not easily be put down till it is finished."

MARION DARCHE: a Story without Comment. By F. Marion CRAWFORD. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s.

SATURDAY REVIEW.—"Charming in style, and very easy to read."

SYLVIE and BRUNO CONCLUDED. By Lewis Carroll. With Illustrations by Harry Furniss. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

SCOTSMAN.—"The book is likely to be as great a favourite with children as any of its author's former productions. For readers who are grown up—he must be a misanthropical, bilious, and abandoned wretch whom its whims, fancies, and follies will not heartily amuse."

The GROWTH and INFLUENCE of CLASSICAL GREEK POETRY

Lectures delivered in 1892 on the Percy Turnbull Memorial Foundation in the Johns Hopkins University. By R. C. JEBB, Litt.D., M.P. Crown 8vo, 7s. net.

GUARDIAN.—"It contains much refined and delicate criticism."

MORNING POST.—"It is impossible to part from Dr. Jebb's work without a word of hearty commendation on account of the masterly style in which it is written. His long and living familiarity with the exquisite beauty of the Greek literary style has clearly influenced his own."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"Nothing but this easy mastery of the whole subject, arising from long and detailed study of every section of it, could have made it possible for him to give a survey at once so fresh and so complete."

TIMES.—"We know of no book upon the same subject and upon the same scale which is of equal excellence."

EXPERIMENTAL PROOFS of CHEMICAL THEORY for BEGINNERS. By WILLIAM RAMSAY, Ph.D., F.R.S., Professor of Chemistry in University College, London. Second Edition. Pott 8vo, 2s. 6d.

ELECTRIC WAVES: being Researches on the Propagation of Electric Action with Finite Velocity through Space. By HEINRICH HERTZ, late Professor of Physics in the University of Bonn. Authorized Translation by D. E. JONES, B.Sc. With Preface by Lord KELVIN, P.R.S. Illustrated. 8vo, 10s. net.

NATURE.—"This subject is of immense importance; the work described is of the highest order of experimental investigation; the results obtained have contributed more than any other recent results to revolutionise the view taken by the majority of scientific workers as to the nature of electromagnetic actions.... The whole work is most interesting, and well deserves the best attention of all interested in the greatest scientific advance of the last quarter of the nineteenth century."

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

THE COLONIAL COLLEGE and TRAINING FARMS (Limited),

Hollesley Bay, Suffolk.
For the Training of those destined for Colonial Life, &c.
The College owns and farms for the instruction of its students a fine Seaside Estate of 1,800 acres.
Prospectus on application to the RESIDENT DIRECTOR.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE
DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Chelsea, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Truro, &c.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

GOUIN'S SERIES METHOD

(Oral and Written).

CENTRAL SCHOOL OF FOREIGN TONGUES, HOWARD HOUSE, ARUNDEL STREET, STRAND, W.C.

New Beginners' Classes, French, German, Italian, Spanish, Russian, now forming. Also Hebrew and Greek shortly.—Apply SECRETARY.

MINERALOGY.

MR. G. SYNGE, F.G.S., is willing to take a FEW STUDENTS in his LABORATORY for the following ELEMENTARY COURSE, to begin on FEBRUARY 1st, and finish JUNE 30th.—Chemical Analysis (Qualitative), Microscopic Analysis, Spectral Analysis, Blowpipe Analysis, Crystallography, Determination of Hardness by Specific Gravity, Magnetic Properties, &c.

Special arrangements for Ladies wishing to Study the Elementary Branches of this subject.

For particulars and Syllabus of Course apply by letter, any time, to Mr. G. SYNGE, Addison Studios, Blythe Road, W. Kensington; or personally, any Wednesday morning between 11 and 1. Kindly enclose visiting card.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24 BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., are prepared to undertake the Printing and Publishing of first-class Newspapers, Magazines, Books, Catalogues, Pamphlets, Prospectuses, Articles of Association, Minutes of Evidence, &c., in the best style. Their offices are fitted with the latest improvements in Rotary and other Machinery, the most modern English and Foreign Type, and they employ none but first-class workmen. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 2759. Telegraph, "Africanism, London."

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.—The WINTER EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN till 6 p.m., and is lighted by Electricity at dusk and on dark days.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.—NOTICE

IS HEREBY GIVEN, that the President and Council will proceed to ELECT on TUESDAY, JAN. 30th, TWO TURNER ANNUITANTS. Applicants for the Turner Annuity, which is of the value of £50, must be Artists of repute, in need of aid through the unavoidable failure of professional employment or other causes. Forms of application can be obtained by letter addressed to the Secretary, Royal Academy of Arts, Piccadilly, W. They must be filled in and returned on or before Saturday, January 27th.—By order, FANNY A. EATON, Secretary.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.
N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.
Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.
LISTS GRATIS and POST FREE

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY,
10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;
211, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 45, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

DAVID NUTT, 270-271, STRAND.

JEWISH QUARTERLY REVIEW.

Edited by I. ABRAHAMS and C. G. MONTEFIORE.

Vol. VI. JANUARY, 1894. 3s.

THE JEWS in the WORKS of the CHURCH FATHERS.
III. By Dr. S. KRAUSS.

REFORMED JUDAISM. By OSWALD JOHN SIMON.

THE SECOND JEREMIAH. By G. H. SKIPWORTH.

MISS SMITH: a Protest. By Rev. DAVID FAY.

MISS SMITH: Notes in Reply. I. By I. ABRAHAM; II. By C. G. MONTEFIORE.

BELIEF, RITES, and CUSTOMS of the JEWS, CONNECTED WITH DEATH, BURIAL, and MOURNING.
By A. P. BENDEA.

MISCELLANEA LITURGICA. The עֲוֹנוֹתָי. By Dr. NEUBAUER.

CRITICAL NOTICES.—Joseph Jacobs's "The Jews of England in the Twelfth Century," by Prof. W. BACHER. M. J. Savage's "Jesus and Modern Life," by C. G. MONTEFIORE. H. Brody's Frances's "Hebrew Poetry," by G. MAAGOLLOUTH.

CORRIGENDA. By H. HIRSCHFELD.

LITERARY GLEANINGS.—X. Joseph Al-Ashkar; XI. The MSS. of the late Mosé Lattes. By Dr. NEUBAUER.

LATEST PUBLICATIONS.

H. H. ROMILLY. Letters from the Western Pacific and Mashonaland. With Memoir. Portrait and 16 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 400 pp., cloth, 7s. 6d.

Daily Telegraph.—"The most entertaining book that has been published in this country for many a day." Glasgow Herald.—"Extremely interesting records of a varied and adventurous career." Times.—"It is a relief to turn to such a character and career as those of this bright, frank, and generous young fellow." Daily News.—"A satisfactory feature of these letters is the kindly spirit they breathe towards the aborigines."

THE GOLDEN ASS of APULEIUS.

Translated by WILLIAM ADLINGTON. Anno 1566. With Introduction by C. WHIBLEY. Small 4to, xxx.—249 pp., half-buckram, 12s. net.

Pall Mall Gazette.—"May well stand next to the 'Arabian Nights' for imagination, variety, the fantastic, the exhilarating." St. James's Gazette.—"A book of books." Graphic.—"Delightful for its physical no less than for its spiritual qualities." Notes and Queries.—"A veritable treasure." Glasgow Herald.—"All lovers of literature will be grateful for this delightful edition." Athenæum.—"A volume fit for the epicure in books."

LOW TIDE on GRAND PRE. Poems by BLISS CARMAN. Small 4to, 116 pp., cloth, 5s. net.

Academy.—"All these Acadian lyrics are dominated by an overmastering sense of beauty, and permeated with a love of nature, for which there is no epithet so apt as the much misused and hackneyed word intense."

NEW EDITION OF MR. HENLEY'S POEMS.

A BOOK of VERSES. Fourth Edition. 16mo, 175 pp., cloth, top gilt, 5s. net.

LONDON VOLUNTARIES. Being the Second Edition of the "Song of the Sword." 16mo, 130 pp., cloth, top gilt, 5s. net.

* This Second Edition has been enlarged by the inclusion of "Arabian Nights' Entertainment," and Epilogue "Something is Dead."

MEDIÆVAL LEGENDS.—No. II.

THE WONDERFUL HISTORY of VIRGILIUS, the SORCERER of ROME, as Told by Men of High Germany, together with many Rimes, now first put into the English tongue.

* Issued in Two Forms: 16mo, 1s.; or, crown 8vo, with Frontispiece by Aubrey Beardsley, 3s. 6d. net.

The First Number of MEDIAÆVAL LEGENDS: THE LIFE AND DEATH OF DR. FAUSTUS, is still on sale, at 1s.

MR. MURRAY'S LIST.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW.—No. 355.

8vo, 6s.

Published on JANUARY 17th.—CONTENTS:

I. ANARCHIST LITERATURE.

II. HISTORY and FABLE.

III. CHURCH MISSIONS.

IV. OLD ENGLISH COOKERY.

V. SOME THEORIES of the ICE AGE.

VI. LATIN POETRY of the CÆSAREAN EPOCH.

VII. THE BIBLE in the BRITISH MUSEUM.

VIII. BETTERMENT and LOCAL TAXATION.

IX. "THE CHILTERN HUNDREDS."

X. ARTHUR PENRHYN STANLEY.

XI. THE PERIL of PARLIAMENT.

FERGUSON'S HISTORY OF ARCHITECTURE IN ALL COUNTRIES.

With 1,000 Illustrations. 2 vols., medium 8vo, £3 3s.

NEW EDITION REVISED.

ANCIENT AND MEDIÆVAL ARCHITECTURE.

Edited by R. PHENE SPIERS, F.S.A.

"Mr. Fergusson's beautiful and most popular books have superseded all other Histories of Architecture. It is not only that the extraordinary abundance of his illustrations gives him a special advantage over all his rivals or predecessors, but no other writer has ever had so firm a grasp of his subject, or has been so well qualified to deal with it in all its branches."—Saturday Review. [Just out.]

8vo, 16s.

THE PSALTER OF 1539.

A Landmark of English Literature.

COMPRISING THE TEXT, IN BLACK LETTER TYPE.

Edited, with Notes, by JOHN EARLE, M.A.,

Professor of Anglo-Saxon in the University of Oxford. [Just out.]

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE CHRISTIAN ETHIC.

By WILLIAM KNIGHT, LL.D.,

Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of St. Andrews.

With Portraits, 2 vols., 8vo, 32s.

SECOND EDITION OF THE

LIFE AND CORRESPONDENCE OF ARTHUR PENRHYN STANLEY,

Late Dean of Westminster.

By ROWLAND E. PROTHERO, M.A., Barrister-at-Law, late Fellow of All Souls's College, Oxford. With the Co-operation and Sanction of the Very Rev. G. BRADLEY, Dean of Westminster.

Crown 8vo, 9s.

SECOND EDITION OF

A MEMOIR OF H.R.H. THE LATE DUKE OF CLARENCE.

WRITTEN WITH THE SANCTION OF H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES.

By JAMES EDMUND VINCENT.

With Portraits and Illustrations by Wm. Simpson and others.

2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

SECOND EDITION OF

THE PAMIRS:

Being a Narrative of a Year's Expedition on Horseback and on Foot through Kashmir, Western Tibet, Chinese Tartary, and Russian Central Asia.

By the Earl of DUNMORE.

With Maps and Illustrations taken by the Author on the spot.

With Portraits, crown 8vo, 6s.

SECOND EDITION OF THE

LETTERS OF LADY BURGHES

(afterwards Countess of Westmorland) from Germany and France during the Campaign of 1813-14. Edited by her Daughter, Lady ROSE WEIGALL.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

A SKETCH of the LIFE of GEORGIANA, LADY de ROS, with some Reminiscences of her Family and Friends, including the Duke of Wellington. By her Daughter, the Hon. Mrs. J. R. SWINTON. With Portraits and Illustrations. [Second Edition shortly.]

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

A HISTORY of MARLBOROUGH COLLEGE DURING FIFTY YEARS, from its Foundation to the Present Time, 1893. By A. G. BRADLEY, A. C. CHAMPNEYS, and J. W. BAINES. With numerous Illustrations.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

LIFE in PARLIAMENT: a Record of the Daily Experiences of a Member of the House of Commons. From 1836 to 1892 inclusive. By Sir RICHARD TEMPLE, Bart., M.P., G.C.S.I., D.C.L., LL.D., &amp;c.

"An engaging and interesting memorial.....the tone of the book is admirable, frankly partisan, and yet fairly considerate of his opponents."—Academy.

Large crown 8vo, 9s.

THE CONVERSION of INDIA. From Pantænus to the Present Time, 183-1891. By GEORGE SMITH, C.I.E., LL.D., Author of the Lives of William Carey, Henry Martyn, John Wilson, and Alexander Duff. With Illustrations.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

AN INTRODUCTION to the STUDY of the GREEK TESTAMENT. A Work designed for Students possessing no previous knowledge of Greek. By THEOPHILUS D. HALI, M.A.

With Illustrations, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

GREECE in the AGE of PERICLES. By A. J. Grant, King's College, Cambridge, and Staff Lecturer in History to the University of Cambridge. Forming a Volume of MURRAY'S UNIVERSITY EXTENSION SERIES. Edited by Professor KNIGHT.

With Illustrations, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

CHAPTERS in MODERN BOTANY. By Patrick Geddes, Professor of Botany, University College, Dundee. Forming a New Volume of MURRAY'S UNIVERSITY EXTENSION SERIES. Edited by Professor KNIGHT.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

STANDARD WORKS for the LIBRARY

THE NAVAL HISTORY of GREAT BRITAIN. By WILLIAM JAMES. In 6 vols., crown 8vo, with numerous Portraits on Steel, 42s.

THE PRIVATE LIFE of MARIE ANTOINETTE. With Sketches and Anecdotes of the Courts of Louis XIV., XV., and XVI. By JEANNE LOUISE HENRIETTE CAMPAN. First Lady-in-Waiting to the Queen. A New and Annotated Edition. In crown 8vo, 6s., with a Portrait.

THE LIFE of LORD PALMERSTON. By the Hon. EVELYN ASHLEY, M.P. In 2 vols., crown 8vo, with Frontispiece to each volume, 12s.

THE FRENCH HUMOURISTS from the Twelfth to the Nineteenth Century. By WALTER BESANT, M.A., Christ's College, Cambridge, Author of "Studies in Early French Poetry," &c. 8vo, 15s.

A MEMOIR of the Rev. JOHN RUSSELL, of Tordown, North Devon. By the Author of "Dartmoor Days," "Wolf Hunting in Brittany," &c. In crown 8vo, with a Portrait, 6s.

RECOLLECTIONS of a LITERARY LIFE. By MARY RUSSELL MITFORD. In crown 8vo, with Portrait, 6s.

PROFESSOR MOMMSEN'S HISTORY of ROME to the TIME of AUGUSTUS. Translated by Dr. DICKSON. The POPULAR EDITION. In 4 vols., crown 8vo, 46s. 6d.

* Also sold separately as follows:—Vol. I. and II., 21s.; Vol. III., 10s. 6d.; Vol. IV., 15s.

THE ROMAN PROVINCES. Being the History of Rome from Caesar to Diocletian. By Professor MOMMSEN. Translated by Rev. P. W. DICKSON. In 2 vols., 8vo, with Maps, 36s.

DEAN HOOK: his Life and Letters. Edited by the Rev. W. R. W. STEPHENS, Vicar of Woolbeding, Author of "Life of St. John Chrysostom," &c. The POPULAR EDITION. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, with Index and Portraits, 6s.

THE LIVES of the ARCHBISHOPS of CANTERBURY. By WALTER FARQUHAR HOOK, late Dean of Chichester. ST. AUGUSTINE to JUXON. 12 vols., demy 8vo, £9. Each separately (with the exception of III., IV., VI., and VII.), 15s. The New Series begins with Vol. VI. Vol. XII. is the Index.

THE HEAVENS. By Amedee GUILLEMIN. In demy 8vo, with over 200 Illustrations, 12s.

THE LIFE of MARY, QUEEN of SCOTS. From the French of M. MIGNET. By ANDREW SCOBLE. With 2 Portraits. 6s.

THE LIFE of OLIVER CROMWELL. From the French of M. GUIZOT. By ANDREW SCOBLE. Crown 8vo, with 4 Portraits, 6s.

THE HISTORY of the THIRTY YEARS' WAR. From the German of ANTON GENDELY. By Professor TEN BROOK. In 2 vols., large crown 8vo, with Maps and Illustrations, 21s.

The LETTERS of HORACE WALPOLE, FOURTH EARL of ORFORD. Edited by PETER CUNNINGHAM, F.S.A. In 9 vols., demy 8vo, with Portraits, £5 5s.

THE HISTORY of the GREAT FRENCH REVOLUTION. From the French of M. THIERS. By FREDERICK SHOBRELL. With 41 Fine Engravings, and Portraits of the most celebrated Personages referred to in the Work, engraved on Steel by William Greatbatch. In 5 vols., demy 8vo, 36s.

THE HISTORY of the RISE and PROGRESS of the ENGLISH CONSTITUTION. By Sir EDWARD CREASY, late Chief Justice of Ceylon. A Popular Account of the Primary Principles and Formation and Development of the English Constitution, avoiding all Party Politics. Fourteenth Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

BLISS, SANDS & FOSTER.

A WINTER JAUNT TO NORWAY.

With Accounts (from personal acquaintance) of Nansen, Ibsen, Björnson, Brandes, &c. By Mrs. ALEC TWEEDIE, Author of "A Girl's Ride in Iceland," and "The Passion Play at Oberammergau." Fully Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 16s.

[Just ready.]

THE STORY OF MY DICTATORSHIP.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Just published.]

THE LATEST BOOK ON THE LAND QUESTION

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

"Interesting touches of reminiscence and appreciation of Lowell and of his contemporaries." Times.

By F. H. UNDERWOOD, LL.D.,
V.S. Consul at Edinburgh.

Crown 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 4s. 6d.

SPIRITUALISM.

The Autobiography of the greatest living Medium.

THE CLAIRVOYANCE OF BESSIE WILLIAMS

(Mrs. RUSSELL DAVIES).

With Portrait. Crown 8vo, 6s.

World.—"Full of interest and incident. There will be no better ghost stories published this Christmas."
Daily Chronicle.—"Remarkable statements."
National Observer.—"Droll accounts of visits from Catharine of Aragon and Anne Boleyn."

NEW NOVELS.

IN SCRUTABLE.

By ESMÉ STUART.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Next week.]

A MERCIFUL DIVORCE.

New Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s.

THE MODERN LIBRARY.

"Autumnal leaf" (titled hand-made paper, 1s. 6d.)

French says: "Bravo Pantalaureate! Excellent Dickensian description."
World says: "Very pleasant story."
Daily Telegraph: "A veritable mine of brilliant bon-mots and rattling repartees."
Scotsman: "Keeps a reader amused through its whole course."

PREVIOUS VOLUMES.

1. A LATTER-DAY ROMANCE.

By Mrs. MURRAY HICKSON.

2. THE WORLD'S PLEASURES.

By CLARA SAVILE-CLARKE.

LONDON: 15, CRAVEN STREET, STRAND, W.C.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's EDUCATIONAL PUBLICATIONS.

THE STUDENT'S CHEMISTRY. By R. L. TAYLOR, F.I.C., F.C.S., of the Central Higher Grade Board School, Manchester. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 860 pages, cloth, 5s.

"A valuable addition to chemical literature... Of especial service to those engaged in teaching elementary inorganic chemistry, while it is also sufficiently simple to assist and not to puzzle such students as are compelled to content themselves with self-culture." MANCHESTER COURIER.

CHEMICAL PROBLEMS with SOLUTIONS: being a Key to the Problems in Taylor's "Student's Chemistry," and "Chemistry for Beginners." By R. L. TAYLOR and S. PARRISH, A.R.C.S. Lond., Teacher of Chemistry in the Higher Grade School, Leeds. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

CHEMISTRY for BEGINNERS. Adapted for the Elementary Stage of the Science and Art Department's Examinations in Inorganic Chemistry. With Illustrations and over 200 Questions and Problems. By R. L. TAYLOR, F.I.C., F.C.S. Fifth Edition, thoroughly revised and partly rewritten. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

"Covers the whole ground of the Elementary Stage of the Science and Art Department's Examinations, and forms generally an excellent introduction to the study of Chemistry, the explanations of chemical phenomena being unusually full."—SCHOOL BOARD CHRONICLE.

ALTERNATIVE ELEMENTARY CHEMISTRY: being a Course of Lessons adapted to the requirements of the new Syllabus of Chemistry recently instituted by the Science and Art Department. By JOHN MILLS, of the Normal School, South Kensington. With a Preface by Professor THORPE, F.R.S. Illustrated with 65 Drawings. 101 pages. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d.

"It is a practical and businesslike manual, clear in its descriptions, and illustrated by a number of serviceable diagrams."—SCOTSMAN.

ANSWERS to the QUESTIONS on ELEMENTARY CHEMISTRY. Theoretical and Practical (Ordinary Course). Set at the Examinations of the Science and Art Department, South Kensington, 1887 to 1891. By JOHN MILLS. Fully Illustrated. In two crown 8vo volumes, 1s. each.

A SCHOOL COURSE in HEAT. Revised and Enlarged by W. LARDEN, M.A., Assistant Master in the R.N.E. College, Devonport, late Science Scholar, Merton College, Oxford. Fifth Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

A Text-book at Rugby, Clifton, Cheltenham, Bedford, Birmingham, Uppingham, and other eminent Schools and Colleges.

THE SHORTHAND of ARITHMETIC: a Companion to all Arithmetics. By JOHN JACKSON, F.E.I.S. For Teachers, Students, Middle and Upper Forms, and Candidates preparing for Examinations. With upwards of 1,700 Questions and two valuable Appendices on "Incrementation" and "How to Teach Arithmetic." Price 1s. 6d.

AN ENGLISH GRAMMAR with ANALYSIS and PROSODY. For the use of Teachers and the Higher Classes in Schools. By S. E. STRONGE, M.A., Q.U.I., Inspector of Schools, and A. R. EAGAR, M.A., T.C.D., First Senior Moderator, and sometime Professor of English Language at Alexandra College, Dublin. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s.

"The book is thoughtfully and carefully written; its explanations are clear; its views generally sound, and there is a refreshing absence of the numerous little slips so frequent in the definitions of even the best grammars."—EDUCATIONAL TIMES.

ALGEBRA for the USE of SCHOOLS and COLLEGES. By WILLIAM THOMSON, M.A., B.Sc., F.R.S.E., Professor of Mathematics, Stellenbosch College; formerly Assistant Professor of Mathematics in the University of Edinburgh. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.; with the Answers in one, 5s.; the Answers separately, 1s. 6d.

"The sets of examples, and the working out of the examples, evince the skill of a practised algebraist."—SATURDAY REVIEW.

THE THEORY and PRACTICE of HANDWRITING: a Practical Manual for the Guidance of Inspectors, School Boards, Teachers, and Students. With Diagrams and Illustrations. By JOHN JACKSON, F.E.I.S., Originator of the System of Upright Penmanship. Demy 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

Every Teacher who wishes to be acquainted with the modern development of the important art of Handwriting, and with the researches of Continental and English Specialists in that Department, should at once procure this Manual.

"Should not only be found in the library of every teacher, but on his desk for constant reference."—SCHOOLMASTER.

"This highly instructive and extremely interesting manual... deserves, as it receives from us, the very highest commendation." Schoolmistress.

"...Your book on writing is used as the text book on the subject by all my P.T.s and assistants. A copy of it lies on my desk and is in constant use in one part of the school or another when the work is writing..."—R. CLARK, Head Master, Seaham Harbour National School (one of the most successful teachers of Writing in Great Britain).

FULL CATALOGUES ON APPLICATION.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 20, 1894.

No. 1133, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Story of Two Noble Lives. By Augustus J. C. Hare. In 3 vols. (George Allen.)

THESE volumes will reach the hearts of many, but will have a peculiar charm and attraction for all that is best in the high life of England. They are a genuine biography of two noble women, fairest among the fair at the first Courts of Victoria, richly endowed with brilliant yet solid gifts—the one cut off in the prime of her years, the other reserved for an old age of honour, blessed with the reverence and love of all who knew her. The elder sister, Charlotte Lady Canning, had the more retiring and yielding nature, yet was destined to play a great part on the stage of events in a most troubled time. She was the fitting helpmeet of one of our best Proconsuls during the frightful crisis of the Indian Mutiny; and her steadfast self-reliance amid appalling trials, her trust in justice and right when assailed by calumny, and the princely charm of her manner and converse, have left memories that will long live at Calcutta. The younger sister, Louisa Lady Waterford, a singularly grand and original character, and possessing accomplishments of the rarest kind, was not placed in such a sphere of action. Her lot, splendid although chequered, lay rather in the secluded vale of life, and was often out of contact with the great world. But she nobly fulfilled a round of high duties; and it may be said of her that whatever she touched she adorned, and that her gracious and bounteous presence was the delight of troops of friends and of happy dependents. The sisters, too, held a prominent place in a circle of remarkable men and women—leaders of the social order of England, yet not wholly immersed in it—distinguished for wit and intellectual tastes, and for all the high patrician qualities which are the appanage of a great nobility. And these associations—extending from the reign of George II. to the present time, and uniting, in a series of living links, the world of Chatham with that of Gladstone, of Horace Walpole with that of Greville, of Louis XV. with that of the Third French Republic—are, perhaps, the most generally interesting parts of the work. The editor of the text has been happily chosen. Mr. Hare, a name not unknown in letters, had the privilege of the friendship of Lady Waterford; and he has compiled this “story of two noble lives” almost wholly from family papers, correspondence, diaries, and documents of the kind, giving the tale a real and lifelike aspect. These records, however, are connected by an orderly yet succinct narrative which gives the information a reader may require, and forms a thread for pearls of great price. We do not wish to carp where there is so much to praise; but we have noticed a good many misprints, and a second edition will soon, we hope, remove two or three rather glaring errors.

Charlotte and Louisa Stuart were the only children of Sir Charles, afterwards Lord Stuart de Rothesay, and of Elizabeth, a daughter of the third Lord Hardwicke. Their father was a grandson of the well known Bute, the favourite and minister of George III.; their mother blended the plebeian blood of the Yorkes—the great chancellor was a country attorney’s son—with that of the historic house of Lindsay, which has risen out of the wrecks of “the 45,” to spread far and wide in Scotland and England. Lady Hardwicke was one of three famous sisters, admired by Sheridan and Horace Walpole; and this venerable lady, alive until 1858, strangely connected the present with the distant past: Charles II. was “best man” at her grandfather’s wedding, and her father saw Preston Pane and Culloden. The first years of the life of the Stuart girls were passed in Paris, at the British Embassy—the town house of Pauline Borghese, the fairest scion of the tree of the Bonapartes; and under the superintendence of loving parents (who represented England with becoming dignity) the children beheld the last glories of the old régime, when, the dread usurper having disappeared and the Revolution being quelled for a moment, the sad majesty of the Duchesse D’Angoulême and the infantine grace of the Duchesse de Berry presided at the fêtes of the Tuileries, a pale shadow of the splendours of Versailles. Soon after the Revolution of July, Lord Stuart retired from his post as ambassador; and Charlotte and Louisa, now in their teens, and already rich in the promise of youth, spent the next few years in the great world of London, in the midst of kinsfolk of many noble houses, or in their secluded home at Highcliffe, once the country house of their chief Stuart ancestor. In 1835 Charlotte married Charles Canning, the only surviving son of the brilliant minister, even then a rising young man of mark—a member of a most distinguished set at Oxford, of which Manning, Gladstone, Roundell Palmer, and Lowe are probably the best remembered names—and who, had his life been prolonged, would have certainly passed from a throne in India to fill the highest place in the state in England. In this instance the course of true love did not run smoothly for some little time. Lord Stuart remembered the schism of 1827, and had no liking for the Canning family. But all ended at last well; and in the quaint phrase of Lady Charlotte Lindsay, “Papa, mama, lover, and lovee, one and all, played their parts to perfection.” Louisa Stuart remained for some years unmarried; but she was a conspicuous star amid a constellation of peculiar loveliness—Leveson Gowers, Villierses, Lennoxes, and many others—which shone round the throne of our then girlish queen. Her genius in art had already developed; and we may see her in more than one old Book of Beauty engaged with her palette and brushes, but princely in her noble and charming bearing. We shall not attempt a judgment of Paris, or venture to decide whether, if qualified, she would have been hailed as the Queen of Beauty at the famous passage of arms at Eglinton; but she won the heart of many a noble cavalier—like “his love and his arms, now alas! dust”—at that stately scene of the chivalry of the past.

In 1842 Louisa Stuart was married to the well-known Lord Waterford of fifty years ago. The majestic beauty of the bride, as she moved to the altar, is remembered by witnesses still alive, and is noticed in a graceful letter in this work from the pen of one of the Berry sisters. Lady Waterford’s heart went with her hand; yet the union seemed at first sight ill-assorted. Lord Waterford was a princely and gallant gentleman; but he might have been called the Last of the Mohawks. His chief occupation was country sport; and his somewhat arrogant bearing and manner might have been thought in ill-accord with the gracious refinement and the artistic tastes of his most gifted wife. Yet there never was a more attached pair; and if he continued to be the Irish Nimrod, the partner of his life wrought a great change in his nature, made him one of the best and wisest of landlords, and drew him into the paths of religion and art in which she had trod from earliest youth. It was a gay time in the neighbourhood when Lord and Lady Waterford made the noble domain of Curraghmore their home, and became leaders in the highest social life of the counties of Waterford and Kilkenny. A few of the bright circle of those days survive. We may refer to Frances, Lady Ormonde, the course of whose destiny has not been unlike that of Lady Waterford; and to Lady Louisa Tighe, perhaps the last living being who beheld the historic Ball at Brussels. Yet general society was not much to Lady Waterford’s taste. She liked to surround herself with a few choice friends; and her strong sense of duty and love of art made her devote herself chiefly to improving the immense but somewhat backward Waterford estates, and to doing good to the peasant masses upon them. Under her beneficent and thoughtful care Curraghmore soon put on a new aspect: plantations, shrubberies, and walks were laid out in the vast yet rather neglected park; and a scene, grand in its outline, yet uncouth and rude in its lesser features, was ere long transformed into one of exquisite and almost perfect beauty. Schools, too, and working clubs were set up for the benefit of the humbler classes; an attempt to establish a manufacture of cloth was made; and hundreds of labourers were daily employed in works of draining, enclosure, and the best farm husbandry. Lord Waterford took a zealous interest in these fruitful and prosperous tasks; and, if he was still foremost in the flight of the chase, he became a country magnate of the first order, owing in the main to his wife’s example. The Great Famine of 1846-7 found the Waterfords engaged in these works of good; and the pair, like many others of high rank in Ireland, left nothing undone to mitigate the effects of a visitation like that of the Destroying Angel. Their noble acts of charity are still remembered, yet for a moment the peasantry appeared ungrateful. In the revolutionary movement of 1848, it proved not difficult to stir up the wild Celts of the Commeraghs against "the bloody Beresfords," chiefs of Protestant ascendancy in bygone times; and their benefactors were for some weeks in danger.

The lives of Lord and Lady Canning had, during these years, flowed in a different and more strongly marked channel. He had become Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs in the great administration of Sir Robert Peel, and took part, not without distinction, in the delicate negotiations with France of those days. He was, indeed, much prized by his chief, Aberdeen; and had Peel continued long in power, he would probably have been made head of the Foreign Office. Lady Canning, meanwhile, had become one of the great ladies of London society; and though never a Queen of Fashion—her sensitive and fastidious nature would have shrunk from the thought—she held a foremost place in the glittering world of which the Duchess of Sutherland and Lady Jersey were the highest ruling spirits. Those who remember the time have noted the contrast she presented to her husband's sister, Lady Clanricarde; the one charming, but rather shy; the other flashing with the wit and malice of Canning. Lady Canning was often in waiting on the Queen from about 1842 onwards; and the sketches she has left of the Royal Family, and of the round of their life at Windsor and Osborne, and of the kingly and queenly personages they met at Laerken and other places, are singularly life-like, graceful, and happy. She travelled also a good deal at this period; and, though not a great artist, like her more gifted sister, her landscapes of French and Italian scenery are not without excellent taste and merit. In 1855, came the most important turn in the fortunes of Lord and Lady Canning, a turn that led to high honour, yet proved tragic. Lord Palmerston was now at the head of affairs; and, loyal to the memory of a great departed chief, he sent the son of Canning to India, to succeed Dalhousie as Governor-General. "I will follow him like a dog," the true wife wrote, though she felt misgivings about the future; and never did a wife do her duty better. The diary and letters of Lady Canning during her reign in India fill a large part of this work; and they will amply repay a careful perusal. Her accounts of the grandeur of nature in the East, and of its strange civilisation of the past, are admirable for insight and graphic skill; and the same may be said of her thoughtful sketches of Oriental life and habits. But a terrible time was already at hand; and the outburst of the great Mutiny of 1857 threw Lord and Lady Canning into a sea of troubles. His despatches have passed into the domain of history; but her brief descriptions of some of the scenes of the rising, and of the feelings and passions of the ruling caste at bay, are certainly the best we have ever read. Yet the most striking features of these records of the time are her absolute confidence in the triumph of our arms, when the courage of many had given way; her inestimable worth in the hour of peril; her perfect sympathy with the wise policy of clemency and justice pursued by her lord; and above all, perhaps, her calm pride in confronting the torrent of calumny let loose against him. The end of these illustrious lives was, however, near. In the sixth year of her rule in India, and when home seemed in sight from across the ocean, Lady Canning sickened of fever and died. Her husband, already broken in health, and borne down by his irreparable loss, just lived to see the shores of England again; but he was soon laid in the grave of Canning. "You are going to Charlotte" were nearly the last words that soothed the agony of the dying man; they were more to him than national honours and the welcome he had received from the highest in the state.

A terrible accident had, before this time, deprived Lady Waterford of the stay and the pride of her life. A perfect horseman, but of great weight, Lord Waterford had had dangerous falls in a very difficult hunting country; but a mere stumble caused his untimely death. The funeral was remembered for years for its immense and sorrowing concourse. We may drop a veil over the grief of the widow. Lady Waterford left Curraghmore for ever; and, though still in the glory of superb womanhood, almost withdrew herself from the great world during the long years of honour that remained to her. Her husband had left her Ford Castle, then a rude manor by the Cheviot Hills, and Higheliffe passed to her on the death of her parents; and her life was chiefly spent at these two secluded spots, where, in her own words, she was "a calm seeker for good." Her exquisite taste displayed itself in numberless creations of use and beauty. Ford was transformed from a false Gothic structure into a pile worthy of the feudal Herons; a village admirably planned rose beside the gates and gave happy homes to many poor dependents; and the traveller who visits the field of Flodden, within the precincts of the old chase, marks with pleasure how Marmion's well has been restored, and the whole tract laid out with reverence for the past. There was less room for the amending hand at Higheliffe; but here, too, the encroaching sea was kept out, and beautiful gardens and rich parterres attest the assiduous care of a nobly gifted mistress. Yet these were not Lady Waterford's chief labours. She devoted hours of each passing day to doing good to a world of dependents; and the schools she founded, the homesteads she built, the improved comfort and habits that, by degrees, grew up among the poor at her bidding, are perhaps the best monuments of her most fruitful life. Art, too, engrossed the greater part of her leisure. She became a painter of remarkable power; her genius in form and colouring was really striking, if somewhat wanting in exact finish, and the frescoes from her hand on the school walls at Ford are beautiful both in design and outline. And so peaceably flowed on a great life of good works, diversified only by rare visits to Windsor, Osborne, and great country palaces, and occasionally to the world of the capital: for Lady Waterford, wherever she moved, remained the charm of the social hour, and was especially liked by the Queen and her family. Meanwhile a gradual but marked change had passed, as it were, over her inner nature. Louisa Stuart had been what is called High Church, but as age advanced she felt how true it is that organisation is not life; for her the shrine became little, the Divine all, and she sought Christ through the dust of systems and creeds, a faith strong enough to retain a noble character in the path of the highest duty and virtue, if perhaps insufficient for weaker creatures. In this way the end of time for her on earth drew near; and during the last space of a life thick strewn with blessings, Louisa Waterford humbly sat by the pool waiting until the angel should move the water. She passed quietly away in the spring of 1891, and in her case the image of the earthy put on the image of the heavenly in a scarcely perceptible change.

In this slight sketch we have been compelled to pass by the innumerable anecdotes that overflow in this work. They extend over a vast tract of time, and to notable personages of every degree. We have space only for two samples. The following, we think, will surprise our readers:—

"The Duchesse de Berry thought of marrying George IV. after her Duke was dead. People began to talk to her about marrying again. 'Oh, dear, no,' she said, 'I shall never marry again; at least, there is only one person—there is the King of England. How funny it would be to have two sons, one King of France, and the other King of England; yes, and the King of England the cadet of the two.'"

This story, too, about Lady Anne Barnard, a sister of Lady Hardwicke, and still known as the author of the ballad of "Old Robin Gray," is very amusing and good of its kind. The elevation of the Host was probably an unknown wonder for a Scotch woman of the House of Balcarres; but Lady Anne had no taste for Gallic admirers:—

"Lady Anne Barnard was at a party in France, and her carriage never came to take her away. A certain Duke who was there begged to have the honour of taking her home, and she accepted, but on the way felt rather awkward, and thought he was too affectionate and gallant. Suddenly she was horrified to see the Duke on his knees at the bottom of the carriage, and was putting out her hands, and warding him off, when he exclaimed, 'Taisez-vous, Madame, voilà le bon Dieu qui passe!' It was a great blow to her vanity."

Nor can we attempt to trace the descriptions of high social life and the affairs of Europe, which give these volumes perhaps their chief general interest. The sisters Berry in witty and pointed phrases revive the men and women of Horace Walpole's day, and many who stand out on the canvas of Reynolds. Lady Hardwicke brings before us the Ireland of Lord Clare and of Emmett, the last scenes of the court of George III., the somewhat tawdry state of the Regency, and memories of the Napoleonic empire strangely blending with those of the restored Bourbons. We see glimpses of a world for ever vanished, when an Emperor of Austria wedded an Adriatic bride; when Pius VII., forgetting a past of trouble, deemed the temporal crown of the Fisherman secure; when Charles X. put his trust in Polignac; when the Citizen King gossiped in the Tuileries; when Caesarism without a Caesar was set up in France. Perhaps the most attractive picture we meet is that of the Queen and the Royal Family: lives of majesty yet of domestic virtue, rich in intelligence and the finest culture, yet simple and zealous of good works, lives that justify Tennyson's song of praise, and that will long stand out in our English story. Yet to a thoughtful observer of the present age, the most striking feature of the book is, that it indicates surely what an immense change has passed gradually over our aristocratic orders in the course of the last seventy years. The contrast which the Hyde Park of half a century ago, with its stately processions of a few grand carriages, presents to the Hyde Park of this day, in which all kinds of vehicles jostle each other in reckless confusion and wild disorder, is a faint visible sign of the wide difference between the upper classes of England at the two periods. We are not undiscerning flatterers of the past; but the dignity and charm of the best patrician life of the first Victorian era have suffered from the influx of new wealth, from the increasing commingling of many social grades, from the growing extravagance of tastes and habits, from ostentation, and coarse, frivolous luxury. Much good, certainly, is to be set against this; but the English aristocracy of 1840 differs scarcely less from that of 1893, than the circle of Louis XIV. at Versailles differed—absit omen—from that of Louis XVI. People in high places should think on these things: the two noble lives of which we have sketched the features were at least a protest against the many blemishes which disfigure what is called Society in this day.

WILLIAM O'CONNOR MORRIS.

The New Egypt. By Francis Adams.
(Fisher Unwin.)

MR. LONGSDON, in his introduction to this posthumous volume, says "it was the strong desire to help the nationalist movement in Egypt," that gave Mr. Adams the strength "to battle so long against disease." There are unmistakable signs, both in the fashion and language of the book, that it was written in a hurry: also in a bad temper. The feeblest attempt is made to be fair to all parties. Mr. Adams held a brief for the Khedive and his subjects; therefore he is sparing neither of rhetoric nor of abuse in the advancement of his cause. Errors of taste stain every chapter, and it is only in some singularly beautiful interludes—for example, his account of the Nilotis—that the style is free from faults. For the most part Mr. Adams was content to imitate the methods of the smartest of smart "leader" writers, and the effect is at times not a little depressing. But the book was well worth writing, and is eminently worth reading; for its author was shrewdly in earnest, and earnest men have a knack of saying memorable things. It were easy to raise many objections to the arrangement of the chapters, to the omission of an index, to the bestowal of almost offensive nicknames, to the inclusion of journalistic "interviews" into what poses as a serious contribution to political literature. But no purpose would be served thereby; and candour compels one to admit that, after all, the arrangement is fairly adequate and the interviews not without dramatic effect.

An unique merit, too, enhances the value of Mr. Adams's work—a merit which no other recent book on Egypt has possessed. Even Mr. Milner's excellent and statesman-like England in Egypt almost forgot one aspect of the question, which Mr. Adams saw clearly, though in Cairo but a few months. We are grown accustomed to believing—and the authorities who have schooled us are responsible—that the problem before us is: Shall France or England be all powerful in Egypt? Whether or not Egypt should be left to herself, is a question with which only Radical members who wish to annoy the Government concern themselves. Such, at least, is the popular superstition. But Mr. Adams realised that herein lay the gist of the whole matter; and he set himself to prove that, in the interests of humanity and progress, the English troops should evacuate the barracks of Ras-el-Tin and Abasseyah.

"Now in no other country in the world is the administration so powerful for good or for evil, for in no other country in the world has it at its almost absolute disposal the means of the material prosperity of the nation. Egypt is 'the gift of the Nile,' and the Nile can be made the gift of the administration. Had the government been based on this theory, and had everything else been held subsidiary to it, Egypt to-day would be the model of nations. Nowhere has democracy such an opportunity as here; nowhere could the dream of the Socialist and Communist be realised as it could here. The first administration that is in any degree democratic will open out for Egypt an incommensurable future."

On this supposition Mr. Adams bases his whole case, and, of course, the first step he advocates is the withdrawal of the British red-coats. It is not necessary to argue whether democracy be a good or bad thing. The practical statesman would hardly take the trouble to discuss the point. Clearly what is good for one country may be bad for another; though it must be confessed that, as a rule, democrats are slow to acknowledge the truth. Mr. Adams possibly might have been able, though the task would not have been too easy, to make out an impregnable case in favour of the democracy of his own colony or of England. But in supporting the same principles with reference to their power for good in an Eastern country, he has avoided mentioning the difficulties he dared not face. Popular government of a sort was tried in Egypt: Ismail was fond of experimenting in Western manners, and was a conspicuous failure. Oriental peoples prefer a strong administrator, and are not, as a rule, anxious to govern themselves. And Mr. Milner points out that "many of England's reforms in the Nile Valley are in the direction of the ideal the Nationalist party had at heart."

What this popular party failed to do, the English servants of the Khedive have accomplished. Mr. Adams, bitterly spiteful towards Lord Cromer's policy, could not deny, though loath to acknowledge, the success it had achieved. His scornful references to "the pledged honour of England" might make for applause in a debating society; yet is it far from certain that our honour has been soiled because the "army of occupation" still remains in the country. What Lord Granville wrote in his famous 1882 despatch was, that the government of Great Britain had for its object "the establishment of an order of things possessing the elements of stability and progress." Manifestly, to use our author's favourite word in clinching an argument, if our ministers believe that order and progress are not yet assured, they have no alternative but to continue the protectorate. To imitate the tirades of the frantic Franco-Egyptian press, as was his delight, does not convince us of the opposite.

Now Mr. Adams, with the charming inconsistency of a democrat, spoke to the greater people of the country on this matter of evacuation. He interviewed Riaz, Tigrahe, and Abbas II., recording with superb satisfaction their disgust at our policy. It requires only a small knowledge of Egyptian history and a lively recollection of reforms initiated by the English to explain their anger. He also interviewed Lord Cromer that he might the more vehemently exclaim, "Lord Cromer's opinions, when they have to deal with unusual types of character, are generally noteworthy for being quite wrong." But the fellahin are, I think, not ungrateful for our rule. It may be well in most cases to let a nation govern herself; but assuredly not when alien government means sufficient food, relief from forced labour, diminution of taxation. All this, and more, has been acquired by English guidance; the peasants realise that neither Turkish Pachas nor a boy prince could do as much. Mr. Adams can only refer to the "hazel eyes" and "lace-ups with soft leather tops," to the indignant "a promise is a promise. . . . The pledged honour of England. . . . It is impossible" of the Khedive; to the rare qualities of courage and honesty that distinguish Riaz; to the fidelity of Tigrahe. And this is not enough to convince sober people that we should wash our hands of Egypt. Also, there is something parochial in his disregard of a still graver question that confronts us. If we left Egypt, would no other nation step into our place? This, indeed, is a matter to be solemnly considered.

Nations, like individuals, must often find themselves in difficulties they have striven to avoid. "The empire," as Mr. Adams declares satirically, "is a great and magnificent fact." And it is childish to attempt to bind an empire by rules that were sufficient to control a vestry. There is nothing more certain than that England shirked the danger that dogged the footsteps of interference. The unenviable position of peace-maker was thrust upon her. Out of chaos she was bidden to restore order and quiet. Readers of Mr. Blunt's vigorous books are familiar with every reason that can be alleged in favour of Arabi and the Nationalists. The late Khedive's gratitude to England was founded on admiration for the work, almost miraculous, that was done through her advice and active help. Having toiled, it is fair she should reap some harvest. Complete unselfishness in a nation is often the most profound selfishness. Nor is it an exorbitant demand that in one quarter of the world leading to India she should insist that peace shall be maintained. Again, it has been aptly pointed out that the only effective Arabists Egypt has ever known are some of the British officials in the Khedive's service. It is perhaps too much to ask a special pleader to consider fairly the facts that tell against him. But readers of The New Egypt must be cautioned not to forget them. Once more, to quote soberly what Mr. Adams wrote, apparently in anger, it is not unnatural for Englishmen "to glow with enthusiasm over the nobleness and unselfishness of our work in Egypt." For Egypt has many enemies, the worst of them masquerading as her friends. Only English prestige can keep them impotent.

Indeed, there is already an enemy within her gates, to whom Mr. Adams refers more than once, of whose evil influence he speaks wisely. The Greek tradesmen, for whom scarcely a good word can be said, is powerful for harm in every street of every city and township in Egypt. In the furthest villages he is to be found, carrying with him poisonous beverages, a sturdy disregard of morals, an immature taste for Western manners. Greedy, covetous, dishonest, he feeds on the misfortunes of the fellahin and grows rich on their poverty.

"All, or nearly all, retain a sense of their superiority to the 'Arabs,' and this sense comes out more distinctly in the villages than in the towns. The Greek feels but little personal affinity with the fellah, with the agriculturist, the patient, industrious worker, on whose tax-smitten shoulders the grievous burden of the government is laid. The Greek has for his present business to entirely eat up and supersede the more sympathetic Arab of the town."

Much more has he to tell us about these Greeks; but, curiously enough, he failed to see what was the best, the only, check to the evil. If, as Mr. Milner has shown, the people are better off, the finances of the country stable, irrigation improved, there is some chance of the Arab escaping from the "old man of the sea," who now squats on his shoulders. By the withdrawal of English influence, Greek influence of the most fatal kind would increase. Not only as petty tradesmen and money-lenders, but as government officials, they would remain an irremovable curse, blocking progress and pressing ruin.

Mr. Adams has written a useful and a very able book; but its usefulness is owing to the facts he has collected and his accurate commentaries on lesser known phases of Egyptian life, not at all on account of the conclusions he has drawn. The failure was, I think, inevitable. It is very difficult, luckily, to argue against facts. Sympathies are sometimes admirable, always humane and often dangerous. The problem he tried to solve is confused and confusing.

"It has one radical defect—that it is never simple; it has one ineradicable charm—that it is never commonplace." So that, however valuable in helping one to work to a solution such a book as The New Egypt may be, it cannot be final. Even so clever a man as Mr. Adams, must sometimes—nay, generally—be wrong. The safest thing is to leave the matter in the hands of those trained to adjust the balances; and the result will be fairer to all parties if sentiments and sympathies be kept out of the scales.

PERCY ADDLESHAW.

A History of English Dress, from the Saxon Period to the Present Day. By Georgiana Hill. In 2 vols. (Bentley.)

MISS HILL has given us in these two volumes much delightful material for that study of the art and philosophy of dress, which all of us pursue, and so few of us understand. Strange problems abound in her pages: as, indeed, the history of English dress brings together all manner of incongruities, hard to reconcile, impossible to account for.

Miss Hill wishes, as she tells us, "to describe the changes in the fashion of our apparel since the days of the Roman occupation of Britain." The Romans, it seems, found a trousered, and left an untrousered, people, it being a mark of advancing civilisation to discard the braccae. We can still trace the Roman influence in the dress of the later Saxon period, especially in that of the women, which was beautiful in its rich simplicity.

"It was in two pieces, the tunic and the gown, the latter generally concealing the tunic with the exception of the sleeves, which were close and came down to the wrist finished off with a bracelet or a band, while the sleeves of the gown were wide. . . . The mantle, of some contrasting colour, was of no particular shape, apparently, but a wide piece of stuff that could be wrapped about the form, in several ways, like a man's cloak. Ladies of rank had their gowns and mantles elaborately embroidered, working wonderful devices upon the cloth in silk and gold thread."

This simple tunic and gown were allowed to fall loosely, and confined at the waist by a girdle. The costume of the men was a short tunic to the knee with "leg-bandages" and strong boots of leather, the tunic being richly embroidered and ornamented in the case of a man of rank.

When, however, the Saxon period merges in the Plantagenet we bid farewell for many centuries to costume so happily related to custom. Fresh elements enter now; richer materials are woven, more ingenious ways of fashioning them discovered; and this before any corresponding improvement had been made in the art of living:

"Imagine the ladies in their trailing gowns stepping gingerly over the damp and often dirty rushes in the hall, sitting in carpetless, curtainless rooms on benches—for a chair was a special luxury—with the rain and the wind blowing in through the lattices. One would expect to find every one dressed in thick serge or coarse calico, with short gowns and strong serviceable boots; instead of which, the ladies and gallants of that period were extravagantly fond of costly stuffs, long trains, and fantastic shoes."

It will occur here, as elsewhere, to the amateur, that the last lesson to be learned is a sense of fitness and proportion. For this one need only remember the Norman gentleman with his lengthened toes chained to his knees, or the Whitechapel girl with her feathered hat, or Queen Elizabeth in her wheel farthingale and ruff, supping her soup with a spoon two feet long, or—to take an opposite extreme—the modern gentleman disfiguring gorgeous assemblies by his waiter's uniform. One is not, therefore, surprised to find that in these earlier centuries nothing was so much admired as the unsuitably fantastic; and here we may again quote Miss Hill, who is apt, as this passage proves, to abandon her own better and clearer style for a more interjectional note.

"With these pointed shoes they are wearing very brightly coloured hose, crossed up the leg with a kind of garter. . . . But some of the gallants are gayer still: they have one leg green and another red, well displayed under their short tunics. Those who wear a longer gown have slit it up the side as far as the thigh to exhibit their hose. . . . Those rich tunics, made of that fine silky stuff called sicaton, brought from the East, with the jewelled girdle and small ornamental dagger hanging from the clasp in front, those splendid mantles shining with gold thread, are decidedly fair-weather garments. They were never meant for our sultry skies. And what will become of those crisply curling ringlets and jaunty caps in a shower of rain? There are no carriages; every one must either ride or walk. . . . The edges of their tunics and sleeves are all jagged. Very fantastic they look and very uncomfortable they will feel when the wind rises, with all those pendants flapping in the air."

Miss Hill, alluding then to the miller in "The Reeve's Tale," says he wore his sleeve streamer or "typet" "wound about his head," a method so obviously uncomfortable that it might have led her to further inquiries. Planché says that "typet" was a term applied to three different articles of apparel; and one of these was "the cape of the hood which was sometimes bound about the head by the long tail or typet in various fantastic shapes."

Until the middle of the fifteenth century, women continued to dress with greater restraint and fewer changes of fashion than men.

"There was a time when women showed far less disposition than men to adopt new fashions. Because in the present day men have chosen to affect a certain rigour in dress which does not admit of much variation, they are pleased to forget the quality of their toilet in the past, the number and mutability of their fashions, the elaboration and costliness of their attire, which equalled, nay exceeded, that of women. . . . With the influx of foreign goods and foreign fashions, and the growing taste in Western Europe for novelties and display, the classic simplicity of female costume was corrupted. Women began to dress to match the men. The French ladies succumbed earlier to the influences of the times and, as most of our Queens came from France, it was inevitable that great ladies should follow the example of the lords and gallants, and deck themselves in the new modes that seemed to have been gathered from all quarters of the world."

Then followed centuries of extravagant changes in fashion; both sexes began to use padding and buckram more and more lavishly, until dress assumed the architectural proportions of Elizabeth's reign. France mainly set the fashions and invented the newer monstrosities. Here, again, one is led to wonder how long our British reverence for French pre-eminence in dress will survive? It is curious that the nation which invented crinolines and head-dresses half a yard high, and is quite ready to revive them, should be ever quoted as the one possible leader of fashion, English and European.

When farthingales grew at length enormous, there came the inevitable revulsion, resulting this time in the beautiful and graceful dress of the Stuart period, over which Miss Hill grows enthusiastic. She doubts, in fact, whether the graces of such court beauties as Nell Gwynne were responsible for the costume, or the costume for the graces.

"Fortunately," she says, "the period that produced them was a period of glorified simplicity of costume. As we look from one to another of them, it is appalling to think how they would have appeared encased in all the panoply of Tudor dress."

Not but that they could still be guilty of an occasional extravagance, as we may learn from a sisterly indictment preferred against "Lady Gansbourn" in the summer of 1686, who wore, it seems,

"Sutch a dress as I never saw without disput. Her engan manto is the worst of the kind, it is purpell and a great dell of green and a letel Gould and great flours, ther is some red with the green, and noe lining which lukes most abomenable!"

Miss Hill certainly understands the art of quotation, and her quotations go far to make her book what it is. Her own style, as has already been shown, is clear and vigorous; and her book is, at any rate, a good substitute for that ideal book on dress which yet remains to be written. The illustrations, we should add, though they might perhaps sometimes be more representative, are excellent even when they are ugly. Among those which may fairly be so qualified, one of the hapless "L. E. L." does not help to reconcile one to her poetry, though it might be held to explain some of its qualities.

GRACE RHYS.

The Lover's Lexicon: A Handbook for Novelists, Playwrights, Philosophers, and Minor Poets; but especially for the Enamoured. By Frederick Greenwood. (Macmillans.)

THE title of this work resembles an entry that once caught our eyes in the catalogue of the British Museum Library: "Women: their faults and imperfections considered alphabetically." Mr. Greenwood's treatment is alphabetical, passing to "wife" from "abhorrence," and strictly masculine, though he dwells rather on charms and virtues than on faults and imperfections. He analyses the language of emotion, and teaches love-making by system. His work, indeed, is not, strictly speaking a lexicon, for its definitions extend to brief essays or lecturettes from an imaginary she-Professor of the Tender Passion. The sub-title is more accurately descriptive, and all the persons there mentioned may profit by the study of these pages. Here are soul-dissections for the novelist or the playwright, epigrams for the philosopher, warnings for the minor poet, and rules of conduct for the enamoured. To the last-named, who may in a moment become any or all of the other four, Mr. Greenwood primarily addresses himself, and, for the most part, in tones of sympathy.

The lover, halting for words before the dazzling beauty of his beloved, will rejoice to hear from so polite and learned an authority that—

"not only is love preferentially mute, it is most eloquent in that condition; as all its poets declare, and as we know of ourselves. And it is to be observed that the language of love as known to grammarians has an extremely meagre vocabulary, which could hardly have happened had it not perfected a speech of its own in prelingual times. Invention is the child of necessity. Already provided in other ways love had little need to share in the invention of words, when that business began, finding it enough to draw here and there from the fund of common speech for mechanic uses. Many a trade of fifty years' growth could furnish a fuller word-manual than one of the oldest and most inspiring of the passions. This comes of a long-derived superfluity of eloquence in muteness."

Comfortable, sapient teaching! recalling it, we throw a world of meaning into our eyes and are happy.

Words there are, however, in the lover's vocabulary, and assuredly "Sweetheart" is

"the prettiest, honestest, wholesomest word of all its kind; the one most full of meanings; and its meanings as clear as a brook, as sweet as thyme on the banks of the brook, and all in a winding, low, incessant harmony, like the honey-making bees in the thyme. For music, for significance, for fitness, for completion, where else did two such syllables come together?"

"Spouse" and "wife," again, carry their own meanings with them—useful, pleasant-sounding syllables.

Less willingly can we acknowledge the couplet fiancé, fiancé ("which might have come from the confectioner's with other apparatus in aid of domestic insufficiency"), but at present we have no choice. His or her "intended" is truly a barbarism, and "it is clear that 'plight' is the word that poets should work upon." The superiority of the words for parting over those for meeting, provides us with another complaint against the language. "How d'ye do?" is a poor lame greeting.

"Who will compare it with 'adieu,' which is 'goodbye' in the voice of a dove? On English lips there is hardly a word that fills with more of music and meaning than 'farewell'; while as to 'goodbye,' give but the occasion, and 'good' is a sob and 'bye' the tear that follows."

And poets have sung for ever of lovers' partings, but seldom of any meetings save the first.

But Mr. Greenwood has other than merely verbal lessons for the lover. He would have him lament the decay of gallantry and noble passion:

"for there have been such prose-and-verse celebrations of lurid dreams, purpling brows, quivering bosoms, swooning senses, languors hollow-eyed, kisses that sting, ditto with blood and foam, burnings, faintings, and similar delights, that 'passion' has become almost a blush-word."

He would urge on him the truth that "affection is never without a warmth of good-will which, interchanged between man and wife on an automatic supply system of spontaneous origin, corresponds to a total exclusion of draughts"; and warn him against "the peach-bloomed maid with angel eye, surnamed a doll," "the pretty, light, laughing little girl" coming towards him "in fluttering muslin and ribbons." "Coquetry," it seems, is dying out with other womanly pursuits, but may still be dreaded in those "of a brown complexion, bright-eyed, red-lipped, with two rows of that particular kind of teeth which seem to have an own gift of smiling. There are fair coquettes too—of the brilliant and sunny kind of fairness; but it is thought that they are fewer than the brown, and more liable to languish in the way when hotly pursued."

Distinctions, which to persons not in love may seem super-subtle, are here drawn between "addresses," "advances," and "attentions"; "dalliance" and "encouragement"; "flirtations" and "love-making"; between "admiration," "adoration," and "fondness"; "affection" and "attachment"; "ecstasy" and "rapture"; "calf-love," "child-love," and "first-love"; between "love-pledges" and "love-tokens"; "amours," "amourettes," and "tendresse"; and finally between "prettiness," "beauty," and "loveliness," of which the last, being largely dependent on character, is pronounced most noble.

Of beauty, according to our authority, there are three types—

"stately beauty, which may be either fair or dark; the angelic fair; the dreamy or the sparkling brown. There is another type, 'the village rose' it might be called, as delightful as any; but, with all the charm of beauty, it lacks the distinction which confers the name. The beauty of the devil is also in three varieties, but each is more strongly marked. There is 'the darkly brilliant, the sumptuous fair, and the angelic fair'; of these 'the third is all deceit; the superlative of subtlety in treachery.'"

Readers there may be who will tire of this lexicon, urging the frivolity of its subject-matter and the inconsequence of its methods; but "for the onamoured" every page will contain some welcome addition to his "idea of the 'eternal feminine,' which is attraction in all its various embodiments and manifestations."

REGINALD BRIMLEY JOHNSON.

NEW NOVELS.

Marion Darche. A Story without Comment.

By F. Marion Crawford. In 2 vols. (Macmillans.)

The Hoyden. By Mrs. Hungerford. In 3 vols. (Heinemann.)

Christine. By Adeline Sergeant. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

The Star Gazers. By G. Manville Fenn. In 3 vols. (Methuen.)

A Witch's Legacy. By Hesketh Bell. In 2 vols. (Sampson Low.)

The Petrie Estate. By Helen Dawes Brown. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

A Prisoner of War. By F. A. Inderwick. (Sampson Low.)

A LADY, seeing a number of brightly-coloured books in three and two volumes upon a reviewer's shelves, asked the reviewer what he found to say about all those rubbishy novels. The reviewer's answer was possibly inadequate, and it need not be reported at length; but among other words of wisdom he let fall the remark that a mere rubbishy book is not necessarily the least suggestive of critical comment. Mr. Marion Crawford, for example, never wrote—never could by any possibility write—a book to which either ordinary incompetence or sane malignity could apply the depreciatory epithet; but he has for once written a book about which it is very difficult to say anything worth saying. Marion Darche is a story of present-day life in New York; and The Three Fates, clever as it undoubtedly was, sufficed to prove that Mr. Crawford's work does not touch its best possibilities when it treats of the unromantic situations of contemporary society. Still, the book just named has a tangibility which does not belong to Marion Darche: it was graspable and it stood upon solid earth, whereas the new novel seems, to one reader at any rate, elusive and up in the air. Marion Darche, her eminently objectionable husband, and the loyal Brett, who saves her from making herself a beggar for the sake of a scoundrel, have all the look of being ordinary human beings; but somehow, to use a convenient colloquialism, we never get hold of them. John Darche's cantankerous brutality is inexplicable, because unrealisable; still more so is the devotion of the woman, who commits a crime to rescue from justice the man whose death she regards as the greatest blessing of her life. It need not be said that these things are unnatural, but simply that Mr. Crawford does not show them as natural: he doubtless holds in his mental conception an explanatory key, which, however, he fails to produce. Intangible as is the narrative itself, the long conversations of fence and banter are still more so. They beat about the bush and never start the hare: they are full of cloverness, but it is irrelevant and ineffective, and we read them not with satisfaction but with bewilderment. Marion Darche is, indeed, a novel which is pre-eminently noteworthy, as showing how great may be the failure of a distinguished and delightful writer when he wilfully leaves the line along which his genius ravel with least resistance.

Mrs. Hungerford has made a mistake which has had a curious result. She has imperilled her artistic reputation, and in doing so has given herself an unimpeachable moral testimonial. In the character of Marian Bethune she has tried to give lifelikeness to the portrait of a thoroughly bad woman, and her imagination has broken down utterly under the strain to which it has been subjected. That the novelist has succeeded in making Mrs. Bethune as repulsive as she well could be made, is true enough; but the male or female villain of fiction does not live by repulsiveness alone, and in this detestable woman all other constituents of vitality are wanting. The wicked Marian has so little discretion or finesse, that all her depravity would have been as ineffective as a flagrantly clumsy attempt to cheat at cards, had not the folly of her victim, Sir Maurice Rylton, been as conspicuous as her own wickedness; and the young baronet gives himself away in such an imbecile fashion, that the unequal contest—if contest it can be called—becomes intolerably flat. Mrs. Hungerford should leave both feminine devilment and masculine fatuity, and stick to the open-hearted, clean-minded, plain-spoken girls of whom, since the days of Molly Bawn, she has given us such a pleasant assortment. There is not, perhaps, any great variety among them; but as novel-readers have short memories, and as the kind is a good one, this does not really matter very much. Tita Bolton may not be so irresistible as some of her predecessors—especially the Hibernian ones—but she is very charming nevertheless. Her friend and ally Margaret Knollys, the foil to Mrs. Bethune, is not only socially but aesthetically satisfactory; and in the impecunious and feather-headed Randal Gower we have one of those light-hearted youths whom Mrs. Hungerford always makes entertaining. It need hardly be said that the English of The Hoyden leaves much to be desired; but this is a world where, as a well-known epitaph says, "we cannot have all things to please us"; and the book—when Marian Bethune is out of the way—is distinctly readable.

Miss Adeline Sergeant seems to have taken a holiday in Egypt, and Christine is the result of it. There is, however, so little local colour in its pages, that the author might have followed the example of two of her feminine characters who, in sight of the pyramids, spend their time, not in romantic raptures, but in the unoriental game of poker. With the exception of a half-caste scoundrel and a midnight native concert, which is utilised to bring about the crisis of the story, there is hardly a character or a situation which might not have figured as appropriately in London as in Cairo; and in all other respects the novel is constructed on very familiar lines. The hero and the heroine are drawn into the usual misunderstanding by the machinations of the villain who, having apparently established a claim to Christine's property, is anxious to annex Christine herself. He is aided by Miss Daisy Touchwood, a young woman of that peculiar quality of vulgarity known as

"up-to-dateness," who has similar designs upon Gilbert Greville, and who so arranges things that the young man shall unwillingly compromise her, and still more unwillingly propose marriage. Then Daisy is entangled in a second scrape—innocently, this time—and in order to save the reputation of her married sister, sacrifices her own, and with it her fiancé. She now develops rapid consumption, and becomes a changed character: the trouble concerning the scandal is proclaimed by a farcical young American preacher, who has dangled after her through the story; Daisy dies in the odour of sanctity; and Christine and Greville are married and live happily ever afterwards. The novel is a fairly creditable pot-boiler; but it is rather a pity that Miss Sergeant should take to pot-boiling.

Why Mr. Manville Fenn has called his rather wild story The Star-Gazers is hard to say. It contains only one star-gazer, who has very little to do with the tale, and who might be more appropriately described as the wool-gatherer, so unfortunate is the result produced on his intellect by astronomical pursuits. There are also some poachers, and there is a profligate squire who behaves rather badly to several young women, though neither his motives nor those of any of the other characters are very clear. Mr. Fenn has had a good deal of practice in story-telling, and he ought by this time to be an adept in the narrative art; but The Star-Gazers is characterised by that general confusion which the novel-reader of experience has learned to regard as the trademark of the amateur. Even the briskness which always characterises Mr. Fenn's work cannot compensate for the lack of form and coherence.

The adventures in Mr. Hesketh Bell's novel are fairly good; the love story, which seems to be thrown in as a concession to the rigid conventions of fiction, is not a thing of much account, and the author himself evidently regards it with a very tepid interest. The legacy left by the West Indian witch to Jack Moresby is simply a piece of information; but, as it concerns the whereabouts of a buried treasure, it is a very valuable legacy to the impecunious young planter. The treasure is found in a chapter which is, perhaps, a little too suggestive of Poe's story of "The Gold Bug," but it is immediately stolen; and the pursuit of the thieves by Moresby and his faithful henchman Bret provides the substance of the kind of tale which depends for its attractiveness on rapid sequence of incident. There is nothing very striking in A Witch's Legacy, but it is by no means a bad novel of its kind.

The single volume novel as well as the short story is among the things that they manage better in America, and The Petrie Estate is an admirable example of perfect management. The more narrative outline is simple and even conventional. Richard Waring, the young New York journalist, has always been supposed by himself and by his friends to be the heir of James Petrie; but, when the old man dies no will is found, and his great property descends to his next-of-kin, Charlotte Coverdale, the head assistant mistress of the Mill Hill Seminary, and a girl of high aspirations. Of course, even the simplest-minded reader does not need to be told that the will is found, or what is the conclusion of the whole matter; but this kind of narrative scheme which, in the hands of the amateur, is so unspeakably flat and tiresome, provides for the artist the best possible opportunity for freshness of grouping and fine finish of detail. Miss Brown has the happy knack of using a group of subordinate characters in a fashion which is at once interesting in itself, and effective as a background against which the more important characters in the little drama stand out in clear and yet natural and harmonious relief. The prim Aunt Cornelia, with her old-fashioned conventionalities; Mrs. Bisbee, the unconventional Shaksperian philosopher; Miss Devine, the society elocutionist; and the members of the curiously assorted Hathaway household—all are daintily executed sketches; but not one of them obtrudes itself: each enriches the design, and gives saliency to its more important members. The Petrie Estate is by no means an ambitious story, but in its quiet way it is a very satisfying performance.

There was no need whatever for the apologetic tone in which Mr. Inderwick speaks of his pretty story, A Prisoner of War. "I am afraid," he says, "that this little tale offends somewhat against the canons of modern taste"; but if such offence there be, the canons of modern taste must be very unreasonable. The story which has for its place Romney Marsh and for its time the early years of the present century, cannot even be called slight, for it has a good substantial body of character and incident; but a much slighter tale than this would be made pleasantly attractive by Mr. Inderwick's graceful and picturesque handling. The narrative moves along with what may be described somewhat paradoxically as a quiet briskness; the old-world atmosphere is rendered with real skill; and as it is delightfully printed and illustrated, it appeals agreeably to the eye as well as to the mind.

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

SOME BOOKS ON THE OLD TESTAMENT.

The Praises of Israel; an Introduction to the Study of the Psalms. By W. F. Davison, D.D. (Charles H. Kelly.) This tastefully got-up little volume forms part of a new series of Bible handbooks of Wesleyan origin. The author is tutor in systematic theology at Handsworth College, and combines essential orthodoxy with an intelligent interest in critical study. He seeks to make the Psalter more interesting, and the Christian interpretation of the Psalms more reasonable without being less reverent. But he has made one great fault which, in the interests of his not too educated readers, we must regret. He has but 287 small pages to fill; and instead of devoting these entirely to the literary and religious aspects of the Psalter, he has ventured to include a controversial treatment of the higher criticism. Now, to do this with any success in the space at his disposal would have taxed the skill of the greatest living scholar, and Dr. Davison has certainly not succeeded. One thing indeed he might have done. He might have endeavoured to correct some of the mistakes and misrepresentations which swarm in our recent orthodox literature. He might have frankly stated that, after a discussion of nearly sixty years, some fixed results have been reached—e.g., that the Psalter in its present form is a work of the post-Exilic age, and that there are as yet no critical means for detecting Davidic or pre-Exilic portions of possibly composite post-Exilic Psalms. Mr. Davison has unfortunately acted otherwise. He confuses the question at issue in the most aggravating way; tries to prejudice his readers against consistent criticism, and repeats the old taunt about the diversities of critical opinion, as if Ewald, whose opinions were formed as long ago as 1835, must not necessarily have differed from critics of the present day. But probably the chief reason for this attitude of the author is indicated in the following sentence. "It is often assumed by writers of a certain school that spiritual religion of a high type was impossible as early as the time of David. The literary analysis of Old Testament documents and the analogy of nations are supposed alike to point to a development in the history of Israelitish religion which makes Davidic psalms impossible." The author is afraid, that is, of a particular form of the doctrine of historical development, which seems to him to leave no room for inspiration and revelation (or, let us say, in non-religious language, for the creative faculties of religious genius). He also questions the propriety of treating the Hebrew records just as one would treat the records of any other religion. We hasten to express our conviction that the author is a seeker after truth, and sincerely wishes to be fair; but why does he (on p. 109) repeat a misrepresentation of a critical argument of which he ought to have seen the correction in a reply addressed to himself and another in the Thinker for April, 1892 (p. 331)? And why does he give such an unrecognizable account of the more advanced critical theory of the Psalter? These are not pure inadvertences, like the statement on p. 71 (note) respecting Bickell, who will be taken by the reader to have just begun to distinguish himself by textual reconstruction. Dr. Davison is, of course not dependent on Dr. Dillon's popular article on Bickell in the Contemporary Review. But we fear that his general view of Psalter criticism will not seem to the best judges either fair or adapted to the purposes of education.

The Twelve Minor Prophets. Expounded by Dr. C. von Orelli. Translated by J. S. Banks. (Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark.) Again a Wesleyan scholar presents the theological student with a useful handbook, this time, however, not as author, but as translator. Mr. Banks's former translations of Orelli were wooden and unsatisfactory; in the present volume his hand appears to have become more used to the work. Orelli is an excellent linguistic scholar, but his narrow theological views have hindered him in both the great departments of criticism; nor can one even say that he is a complete master of the literature of his subject. Still, his book is commendably free from the controversial spirit by which the book just noticed is unfortunately distinguished, and it is briefer and much more recent than Keil. There was no strong necessity to translate it, but it may be provisionally useful, though it shows very little comprehension of critical problems. It is wonderful to find that Orelli thinks the psalm of Jonah quite a natural effusion for a man in the belly of a fish, and inclines, with some slight hesitation, to accept the "extraordinary event" as historical.

The Book of Job. Critical Edition of the Hebrew Text, with Notes, by C. Siegfried. English translation of the Notes by R. E. Brünnow. (Leipzig: Hinrichs; London: David Nutt.) Prof. Paul Haupt's bold attempt to bring the present state of Old Testament study distinctly before the public by a new "Bible-work," cannot pass without notice in the ACADEMY. A really critical translation, in which the results of the literary analysis are presupposed, and with notes devoid of all pedantry, will be a novelty. We are now informed that, in order to make the basis as clear to the Hebrew scholar as the superstructure will be to the English reader, the Hebrew text adopted by the several translators will be printed, with critical and explanatory notes, in a luxurious but cheap form. The first part of the Hebrew edition lies before us, and for three shillings Hebraists and students of the higher criticism may obtain one of the most useful and stimulating handbooks. Some of them may be surprised to find parts of the Hebrew text printed in colours. This follows from Siegfried's fundamental theory that the poem has received numerous additions, having been one of the most popular productions of Hebrew literature. The English edition will give a compact account of the grounds for this theory, which in some shape is held by all critics. The text-critical notes in this edition are highly condensed, but will repay study. Even if the critic has often only given us what might have been written by the poet, he has done good service to the cause of Hebrew literature. But why has Siegfried so entirely neglected Bickell, who has just produced his final reconstitution of the Hebrew text of Job on the basis of the pre-Hexaplaric text of the Septuagint, and when Carmina Veteris Testamenti metricè has been before the world since 1882?

Kritische Bearbeitung des Jobdialogs. Von G. Bickell. (Wiener Zeitschrift für die Kunde des Morgenlandes.) Seldom has a German critic found so able and so enthusiastic a champion as Bickell has found in Dr. Dillon, whose account of the present work in the Contemporary Review for last July makes any further explanation of its origin superfluous. Certainly this is a production of a higher order than Siegfried's, judged from a text-critical point of view, because the author has a definite theory as to the metrical form of the poem of Job, and a more complete and, as one would fain hope, more solid critical basis. It does not, of course, follow that Siegfried has not often seen further than Bickell, especially in the field of the higher criticism. Nor can one as yet venture to pronounce a verdict on the success of Bickell's work as a whole. The Transactions of the Berlin Academy for 1890 contain a discussion of the whole question raised by Bickell, and (to some extent independently) by Hatch, with an unfavourable result (see article, "Dillman on the Text of Job," Expositor, March, 1891). This should by all means be read and carefully compared with the present work. The same Wiener Zeitschrift contains a reconstitution of the text of Proverbs, with an appendix on the strophic system of Ecclesiastes. The author has also ready for press a similar reconstitution of the text of Lamentations. Uncertain as the details of Bickell's scheme may often be, it is impossible to deny that through his efforts the question of Hebrew metric has passed into a new phase.

Alttestamentliche Kritik und Christenglaube. Ein Wort zum Frieden. Von Eduard König. (Bonn: Weber.) We commend this Eirenikon to those who are seeking for a new compromise between tradition and science (in the widest sense) in England. Herr König deserves warm thanks for his defence of the rights of criticism in the Christian Church. There is here, as in all his works, a seriousness of tone and a learning which command respect—one regrets to add, a cumbrousness of style which even for a German theologian is now somewhat excessive. That many critical students will be able to pause at his own comfortable resting-place is, however, extremely improbable. The Church at large cannot rest satisfied with so illogical a theory and so incomplete an examination of the facts of the Old Testament, nor can scholars take even Herr König's Einleitung, helpful as it is linguistically, as an adequate exhibition of the nature of sound criticism.

Geschiedenis van den godsdienst in de oudheid tot op Alexander den groote. Door C. P. Tiele. (Amsterdam: van Kempen & Zoon.) Should there be any room amid the strifes of churches and sects for the historical study of the religions of the distant past, this handbook, translated, will find its way into the hands of many buyers. The reputation of Prof. Tiele (author of the article "Religions" in the Encyclopædia Britannica, and of a well-known historical sketch of ancient religions) places this work above ordinary criticism. Suffice it to say that its lucidity and compactness are equal to the minute accuracy of its facts, though, of course, the learned author would be the first to recognise that "accuracy" can have only a relative application to subjects in course of gradual transformation through fresh discoveries. It is an entirely new work which we have before us, and one in which the historical principle is much more completely carried out than in the sketch to which we have referred. After an introduction of fourteen pages, we are introduced in successive books to religion in Egypt, religion in Babylonia and Assyria, religion in the land between the Euphrates and the Mediterranean, excepting Asia Minor. The third book contains the important chapters on the Arameans, the Hittites, the Canaanites, and the Israelites. Undoubtedly, this portion suffers much from want of space. In particular, the examination of the different possible theories for accounting for the development of post-Exilic Jewish religion somewhat lacks precision of statement. On the other hand, the lower elements in the pre-Exilic religion of Israel are treated as fully as one could reasonably expect, and due attention is paid to the Tell-el-Amarna tablets in connexion with the history and religious beliefs of early Canaan. "It is altogether impossible," says Prof. Tiele, "to determine when the Hebrew tribes entered Canaan and effected a settlement there." But "the tradition that their journeys first began after the death of Moses is well founded." The bibliographical appendix contains lists of books, with useful remarks. High praise is given to the Gifford Lectures of the new Master of Balliol, Prof. Caird.

Versuch einer Reconstellation des Deborahliedes. Von Carl Niebuhr. (Berlin: Nauch.) It is difficult to treat this elaborate "attempt" seriously; the methods and the results are alike opposed to those of previous critics. Sisera becomes an Egyptian king of the family of the "heretic" Chuenaten; and Deborah, a personification of the population of the town of Dabrath (Josh. xix. 12) by Mount Tabor. Against this we may refer to Mr. G. A. Cooke's History and Song of Deborah (Oxford, 1892), who places himself at the point to which criticism appears to have brought us, and is thus able to throw much light on the Song. Let the student put the two views side by side, and judge.

MR. SAMUEL BERGER—author of a History of the Vulgate in the early middle ages, which was reviewed in the ACADEMY of October 7, 1893—has reprinted from the Notices et Extraits des

Manuscripts de la Bibliothèque Nationale a paper entitled "Sur Quelques Textes Latins Inédits de l'Ancien Testament" (Paris: Klincksieck). After a brief introduction and a bibliography, he proceeds to quote passages from MSS. in various libraries, which show traces of readings different from and earlier than those of the Vulgate. The feature common to almost all of them is that they seem to belong to the group of old versions known as the Italian. Among the MSS. examined are the Codex Complutensis, now at Madrid, written in a fine Visigothic hand of the end of the ninth century; the Codex Gothicus Legionensis (dated 960), also in Spain, from which M. Berger cites a passage from the Fourth Book of Esdras—a subject to which the late Prof. Bensley had devoted so much attention; a MS. at St. Gall, of the eighth century, which contains a number of miscellaneous extracts, including a portion of the Book of Job according to the Septuagint version; and a MS. written in Bohemia as late as 1420, and now at Einsiedeln, which gives in the margin a variant of the Song of Hannah, almost identical with that in the Codex Gothicus Legionensis. It is hardly necessary to say that M. Berger has treated his subject not only with masterly erudition, but also with no less masterly lucidity.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE first work of the late Prof. Jowett's to appear after his death will be a reissue of his Notes and Dissertations on the Epistles to the Thessalonians, Galatians, and Romans, together with the essay on the Interpretation of Scripture, which originally appeared in Essays and Reviews. It will be in two volumes, edited and condensed by Prof. Lewis Campbell, and will be published by Mr. John Murray.

MR. JOHN MURRAY also announces the Autobiography of Sir William Gregory, sometime governor of Ceylon, edited by his widow.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & Co. have in the press a book by Mr. John Nevile Maskelyne, of the Egyptian Hall, entitled Sharps and Flats, which claims to be a complete disclosure of the methods of cheating practised at the present day in games of chance and skill. It will have numerous illustrations.

Two volumes on Big Game Shooting will be published in the "Badminton Library" next month. Among the contributors are—the Earl of Kilmorey, Sir Henry Pottinger, the late W. Cotton Osell, Col. Percy, and Messrs. F. C. Selous, W. G. Littledale, C. Philipps-Wolley.

MESSRS. SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & Co. will publish before the end of this month Glimpses of the French Revolution, by Mr. J. G. Alger, a resident in Paris, who has already written more than once about this period of history and the part played by Englishmen in France.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL announce for immediate publication a new book by Lieut.-Col. A. B. Ellis, of the West India Regiment, whose name has recently been before the public in connexion with the "deplorable incident" in Western Africa. It is entitled The Yoruba-speaking Peoples of the Slave Coast: their Religion, Manners, Customs, Laws, Language, &c.

MESSRS. WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS will publish immediately a volume of South Sea Yarns, by Mr. Basil Thomson, with full-page illustrations.

THE seventh volume of Book Prices Current, giving the results of the auction sales of 1893, will be issued by Mr. Elliot Stock immediately.

The usual review of the year's business and a copious index will accompany the volume.

MR. JOHN DAVIDSON'S Baptist Lake, the publication of which has been delayed for several months, to make way for the author's Random Itinerary and Sentences and Paragraphs, will appear next week. We understand that the story, which is of a fantastic and humorous nature, deals with the adventures of a Scotch family in London. The publishers are Messrs. Ward & Downey.

A NEW novel, containing an original study of the maternal instinct, will shortly be published by Messrs. Hutchinson & Co., in three volumes, under the title of A Yellow Aster.

MR. JOHN PENDLETON'S book on Our Railways: their development, enterprise, incident, and romance, will be published by Messrs. Cassell & Company early next month.

MR. JOSIAH FLYNT, a young American, who has already published some articles in the magazines upon the causes, career, and cure of the Tramp, is now engaged on a book treating the same subject at length, and giving individual instances of tramp life and adventure.

A POPULAR edition (being the sixth) of Mrs. Oliphant's novel, The Cuckoo in the Nest, will be issued immediately by Messrs. Hutchinson & Co.

MESSRS. ASHER & Co., of Bedford-street, Covent Garden, have been appointed agents in this country for the sale of the publications of M. Calmann Levy, including the two popular series of standard French authors known as "Collection Michel Levy" and "Bibliothèque Contemporaine." They are also agents for the sale of the Revue de Paris.

AT the meeting of the Elizabethan Society, to be held at Toynbee Hall on Monday next, Mr. Edmund Gosse will read a paper on "Donne."

THE Friday evening discourse at the Royal Institution next week will be given by Mr. Alfred Perceval Graves, on "Old Irish Song," with musical illustrations by Mrs. Hutchinson and Mme. Marie Biéna.

THE January number of Poet-Lore (Boston, U.S.) contains extracts—to be continued in future numbers—from a series of unpublished letters of George Eliot. They are written between 1840 and 1842, and addressed to a Miss Lewis. Here is a quotation from one of them:—

"Have you, dear Patty, read any of T. Carlyle's works? He is a great favourite of mine, and I venture to recommend to you his Sartor Resartus. His soul is the shrine of the brightest and purest philanthropy, kindled by the live coal of gratitude and devotion to the Author of all things. I should observe that he is not orthodox."

WE have received the Bulletin of the Société Ramond (Bagnères de Bigorre, Hautes Pyrénées), containing an interesting paper by the Rev. Wentworth Webster upon the popular dramatic representations of the Basques, called "Pastorales." They have, it seems, a very close resemblance to the Breton mysteries; for they include episodes, not only from the Bible and ecclesiastical history, but also from mediæval romances. To some extent, they are derived from tradition, largely modified by the chap-books of colporteurs. Of many, the authors—or rather the redactors—are known; and occasionally modern changes can be detected. Among other curious features are—the rigorous separation between the two sexes of actors, the prominent part always assigned to Satan and the King of the Turks, and the combination of music and dancing. Mr. Webster has made his paper yet more instructive by his constant references to analogies in the ancient Greek drama.

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

THE February number of the Idler will contain the opening chapters of a serial story by Miss Sarah Jeannette Duncan, entitled "Vernon's Aunt"; an interview with M. Jan van Beers, with illustrations by himself; and a story of African love and courtship, by Mr. Herbert Ward; while "Q." (Mr. Quiller Couch) will give an account of his first book, with a strong protest against those who bring a bagman's estimate to the pursuit of letters.

THE February number of the Sunday Magazine will contain an illustrated article from the pen of Canon T. Teignmouth Shore on Worcester Cathedral; and also a description of the "Truth" toy show held recently at the Albert Hall, with photographic views of the stalls, &c.

IN the February number of Cassell's Magazine, Mr. Arnold White will open a discussion on the question, "Shall our sons emigrate?" taking the affirmative view.

A SERIAL story, by Mr. Andrew Home, entitled "Disturbers of the Peace," will commence in No. 72 of Chums, published on January 24.

A NEW serial story entitled "In an Iron Grip," by L. T. Meade, commences in this week's number of Cassell's Saturday Journal.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

IN Convocation at Oxford next Tuesday, it will be proposed to confer the degree of D.C.L. upon Mr. Henry Goudy, the new regius professor of civil law—who announces for this term a course of historical and doctrinal lectures, with special reference to the Institutes of Gaius; and also to authorise a grant of £100 from the Craven fund to Mr. T. W. Allen (a former Craven fellow), to enable him to complete his researches among Greek MSS. in Italian libraries.

UNDER the auspices of the Common University Fund, Mr. W. E. Crum, of Balliol, will deliver a course of six lectures at Oxford, during this term, upon "Egyptian History and Antiquities"—which is, so far as we know, the first recognition of Egyptology at either of the two great universities. We may also mention that Prof. Cheyne announces a course of lectures, postponed from last term, upon "The Bearings of Egyptian Discoveries upon the Study of the Old Testament."

MR. RENDELL HARRIS, university lecturer in palaeography at Cambridge, announces two introductory lectures on "The Palaeography of Glosses in Greek MSS., with special reference to the Codex Bezae."

THE Rev. J. E. B. Mayor, professor of Latin at Cambridge, is lecturing this term, three days a week, upon "Tertullian's Apologia."

MR. J. E. PURVIS, of St. John's College, has been appointed assistant to the professor of chemistry at Cambridge (Prof. Liveing), in succession to Mr. Henry Robinson, who died on January 4, in his fifty-third year.

PROF. R. S. POOLE has made arrangements for two courses of archaeological lectures at University College during the present term. He will himself lecture at the British Museum, with illustrations from the monuments, on Wednesdays at 11.30 a.m., beginning on January 24, when his introductory lecture on "Alexander the Great and the Museum of Alexandria" will be free to the public; while Prof. Roger Smith will lecture on Fridays, at five p.m., on "Roman Buildings and their Decoration."

THE last number of the Eagle, a magazine supported by members of St. John's College, Cambridge, contains some further details about Wordsworth's room, recently demolished in the course of alterations made in the kitchen. It appears that the window is still preserved, and that two fellows of the college have filled it with stained glass, bearing a memorial inscription. As usual, the obituary notices are prominent, among those here commemorated being C. E. Haskins, H. D. Darbishire, C. A. M. Pond, and L. Blomefield (Jenyns). A playful paper, which was found among Darbishire's MSS., entitled "Why We Talk," is also printed. A large number of his classical and philological books have been presented to the college library. Dr. Donald MacAlister contributes a German rendering of "Crossing the Bar," from which we quote the first stanza:—

"Die Sonne sinkt, die Abendsterne glühen,
Ein heller Anruf fordert mich ins Meer;
Sei mir gewährt es brause kein Gestöhn
Am Hafenausgang wenn ich seewärts kehr'."

THE third annual issue of Minerva (Strassburg: Karl Trübner)—which is a sort of universal university calendar, and something more—contains several new features. In place of a sketch of the academical system of the different countries, we now have, by way of introduction, a list of the universities and learned institutions of the world, according to geographical distribution. Under Australia, only two universities are recognised—Melbourne and Sydney. The (examining) University of New Zealand is nowhere mentioned, nor its affiliated colleges at Auckland, Canterbury, and Otago. So, too, under Edinburgh, we miss any reference to the two great libraries of the advocates and the writers. The statistics of students are so compiled as to be almost worthless for purposes of comparison. But it seems that Paris comes first (with 10,164 students in its various faculties); then follow Berlin (7771), Madrid (5830), Vienna (4904), and Naples (4891). Athens appears to have more undergraduates than Oxford, and Cambridge, Mass., than Cambridge, Engl. Among examining bodies, Madras apparently takes the lead with 7907 candidates for matriculation, as compared with about 6000 at London. The present volume is rendered permanently valuable by a portrait of Pasteur, etched by Manesse, following after the portrait of Mommensen last year. May we take the liberty of suggesting Lord Kelvin for 1894-95?

ORIGINAL VERSE.

A SHADOW ON SCAPELL.

In Memoriam Prof. A. Milne Marshall, of Owens College, Manchester, who died by a fall from the crags above Lord's Rake on Scafell, 31st December, 1893.

CLEAR shines the heaven above our New Year's Day,
The sunlight gleams by Wastdale's desolate shore
And streams o'er grassy Gavel, and the floor
Of Derwentwater glitters gold and gay.
But one great shadow lingering seems to stay
Dark on Scafell, beneath its summit hoar—
Shadow more deep than gloomy Mickledore,
Shadow no New Year's sun can charm away.

For he who climbed so many crags of fear,
Sounded such deeps, such heights of knowledge won,
But never over-passed our heights of love,
Has vanished in a moment—gone to prove
Those peaks beyond our seeing—and we hear
Far up the cleft a brave voice: "Follow on."

H. D. RAWNSLEY.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE January number of the Jewish Quarterly Review (David Nutt) opens with a further instalment of the valuable series of articles by Dr. S. Krauss, upon "The Jews in the Works of the Church Fathers," dealing with Jerome. He gives extracts, throwing light upon the social and political life of the Palestinian Jews in the fourth century, upon their relations with the Christians; and he quotes Jewish traditions preserved by Jerome. Incidentally, he refers to the well-known passage in which Jerome describes the inhabitants of five towns in Egypt as speaking "Canaanitish," and explains this to mean Coptic. Mr. G. H. Skipwith, who confesses that he is ignorant both of Hebrew and German, boldly raises the problem of a "Second Jeremiah," who is the author of iii. 16-18, xxx., xxxi., xxxiii., 14-26, l., 4-7 and 17-20, as well as some other interpolations. Mr. A. P. Bender writes about the beliefs and customs of the Jews, with regard to death, burial, and mourning, as illustrated by the Bible and later Jewish literature. Practical questions connected with reformed Judaism are discussed by Mr. Oswald Simon and the two editors. Mr. Joseph Jacobs's monograph—we use the word deliberately—on the Jews in Angevin England is reviewed at great length by Prof. W. Bacher, of Budapest, who accepts most of the author's ingenious identifications of early Jewish personages, though naturally he does not dwell upon the importance of the book as revealing a new chapter in English history.

THE Theologisch Tijdschrift contains a valuable but too short article on Dionysius the Areopagite and his influence on Christian theology, by Dr. Rovers, and critical studies on the Samson Legends in Judges xiv.-xvi., by Dr. A. Van Doorninck, whose early work on the text-criticism of Judges i.-xvi. received just praise from some competent authorities. Dr. W. Scheffer, writing on altruistic morality, condemns it for its want of a metaphysical foundation. Among the reviews of books we may notice those of Benrath's "Bernardino Ochino," by Dr. S. Cramer, and of Drescher's work on the significance and the right of individuality by Dr. van Bell; and among the shorter notices, those of Holzinger's excellent introduction to the Hexateuch, and of the Jewish Quarterly Review by Prof. Oort. It is worth a student's while to learn Dutch—if no longer to follow Kuenen in his preparation for important works, yet to make the acquaintance of Kuenen's school.

THE New World for December contains an article on the Babylonian Captivity, by Prof. Wellhausen.

TENNYSONIANA.

I.

MR. FRANCIS TURNER PALGRAVE lately presented to the British Museum one of six copies of Lord Tennyson's two first written "Idylls of the King" in the original form of "Enid and Nimue: the True and the False." This copy, which is supposed to be the only one now extant, is a small octavo volume, consisting of ninety-eight pages, with numerous corrections and additions by the author.

In the Forster Bequest Library at South Kensington, there is another early copy, probably unique, entitled "The True and the False: Four Idylls of the King"; and bound up with it is a very early revise of the poems, with many corrections and additions in the poet's handwriting. The Idyll of Merlin and Vivian is entitled "Nimue," in the revise; but wherever this name occurs it has been struck through with the pen and "Vivian" written in its place.

From the above it will be seen that we have now accessible for the study of the text three early copies, viz:—

1. The first "revise," at South Kensington.*
2. A later one with the title of "Enid and Nimuë: the True and the False," in the British Museum. This is dated 1857.
3. A late revise entitled "The True and the False; Four Idylls of the King," at South Kensington. This is dated 1859, the same year that "The Idylls of the King" was published.

The poems, as they stand in the earlier revises, lack some of the most beautiful lines of the first and later editions. For instance, we do not find "If Enid errs, let Enid learn her fault," &c., "Rest! the good house, tho' ruined, O my son," &c., "So grateful is the noise of noble deeds," &c., "Make me a little happier, let me know it," and several others.

One other fact connected with these early revises is worth noting here. The story of Enid, it is well known, is taken from the tale of "Geraint son of Erbin," as translated from the Welsh of the so-called Red Book of Hergest by Lady Charlotte Guest, and published in 1838, with other stories from the same MS., under the title of "Mabinogion." In this book Geraint's death is described, and the locality named where it was supposed to have occurred:

"At Llongborth was Geraint slain
A valiant warrior from the woodlands of Devon
Slaughtering foes as he fell."

In Lord Tennyson's published version we simply read that he "fell

Against the heathens of the Northern sea
In battle, fighting for the blameless king."

In the "revises" at South Kensington and the British Museum the text keeps closer to the original:

"And fell
At Longport, fighting for the blameless king."

P. E. N.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- AUSCHER, E. S. Etude critique sur la manufacture de porcelaines de Sèvres. Paris: Michélet. 2 fr. 50 c.
- FALKENBERG, Baron v. Politische Schriften. Berlin: Boll. 3 M.
- FAASCHE, H. Kultur- u. Reisebilder aus Nord- u. Mittel-Amerika. Magdeburg: Rathke. 10 M.
- TOUDOUZE, Gustave. Un Arête (Roman). Paris: Victor-Havard. 3 fr. 50 c.
- WAGNER, B. Die Meistersinger v. Nürnberg. Fests.-Ausg. des Textes. Mainz: Schott. 12 M. 50 Pf.
- WANDERMÄLDE, die mittelalterliche, im Grossherzog. Baden. Hrg. v. F. X. Kraus u. A. v. Oechelhaeuser. 1. Bd. Darmstadt: Bergsträsser. 85 M.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- KAUFMANN, H. E. Die Anwendung des Buches Hiob in der rabbinischen Agadab. 1. Thl. Frankfurt-a.-M.: Kauffmann. 1 M. 20 Pf.

HISTORY, ETC.

- BONNEVILLE DE MARSANOV, L. Le Chevalier de Vergennes: son ambassade à Constantinople. Paris: Plon. 15 fr.
- HILLER, F. v. Geschichte d. Feldzuges 1814 gegen Frankreich. Stuttgart: Kohlhammer. 6 M.
- KOLBE, K. Die Verdienste des Bischofs Wolfgang v. Regensburg um das Bildungswesen Süddeutschlands. Breslau: Händel. 1 M.
- SCHUBERT, R. Geschichte der Pyrrhus. Königsberg-I.-Pr.: Koch. 7 M.
- URKUNDBUCH, mecklenburgisches. 16. Bd. 1336—1870. Schwerin: Bürensprung. 16 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- ARNOLD, E. Kritische Excursus in Gebiete der Kant-Forschung. Königsberg: Beyer. 12 M.
- FORSCHUNGSBERICHTS, aus der biologischen Station zu Plön. 2. Thl. Von O. Zschabitz. Berlin: Friedländer. 7 M.

* This would almost appear to have been the first "proof," for there are several obvious compositors' errors to be found in it. "Droon" for "Devon" (p. 22) is an instance in point.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- GRIMM, J. u. W. Deutsches Wörterbuch. 4. Bd. 1. Abth. 2. Hälfte. 10. Lfg. Bearb. v. B. Hildebrand u. K. Kant. 2 M. 8 Bd. 11. Lfg. Bearb. unter Leitg. v. M. Heyne. 2 M. Leipzig: Hirzel.
- SACHS, K. Französisch-deutsches Supplement-Lexikon. Berlin: Langenscheidt. 10 M.
- SCHMITZ, W. Commentarii notarum tironianarum cum prolegomenis ad notationibus criticis et exegeticis notarumque indices alphabetici. Leipzig: Teubner. 40 M.
- STRASSMAIER, J. N. Babylonische Texte. 11. Hft. Leipzig: Pfeiffer. 12 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE NORTH-PICTISH INSCRIPTIONS.

Oxford: January 10.

One would dearly like to know what Celtic scholars think of Mr. Nicholson's translations and explanations of the North-Pictish inscriptions. By Celtic scholars I don't mean Irish or Scotch antiquaries, but trained philologists who have made the Celtic branch of the Indo-European languages in all its periods and in all its dialects the serious business of their lives. I imagine that to comparative philologists, to those who have been trained in the severe discipline of linguistic science as it is now studied, Mr. Nicholson's statements will, generally speaking, appear to be a mixture of daring assumptions and glaring inconsistencies. He seems to have gone to Sutherland and been caught in a Scotch mist: like Ossian's Colma he might say: "It is night, I am alone, forlorn, on the hill of storms" (or the "Rock of Destruction"); like Damon, if he were candid, he might cry: "Ut vidi [sc. inscriptiones], ut perii! ut me malus abstulit error!"

The subject of Mr. Nicholson's communications is "Pictish" Inscriptions. "Pictish," not merely because these inscriptions are found within the borders of the old Pictish kingdom, but because they appear to him to be for certain more or less Pictish in point of language. There are frequent references in the two letters to "Pictish" phonology and phonetic representation, such as Pictish c = ai, Pictish v = bh. Unfortunately for scientific precision of statement, the name "Pictish" is a very ambiguous term; to the student of language it stands, like x in algebra, for an unknown quantity. There is nothing like an agreement among Celtic antiquaries or linguistic scholars as to what the relations of the Pictish language really were. So far is this the case, that we are still quite in the dark as to whether it belongs to the Indo-European family or not. On this point I may quote the words of Mr. Whitley Stokes in his paper on "The Linguistic Value of the Irish Annals":

"As to the linguistic and ethnological affinities of the Picts, four irreconcilable hypotheses have been formed. The first, due to Pinkerton, is that the Picts were Teutons and spoke a Gothic dialect; the second, started by Prof. Rhys, is that the Picts were Non-Aryans, whose language was overlaid by loans from Welsh and Irish; the third, the property of Mr. Skene, is that they were Celts, but Gaelic Celts rather than Cymric; the fourth, and, in my judgment, the true hypothesis, favoured by Prof. Windisch and Mr. A. Macbain, is that they were Celts, but more nearly allied to the Cymry than to the Gael."

Mr. Nicholson seems to favour a fifth hypothesis, namely, that "Pictish" is a marvellous conglomerate of the oldest Celtic and the most modern Irish and Scotch Gaelic. On the one hand, we are led to infer that the "Pictish" of the inscriptions is extremely archaic—so archaic as, according to Mr. Nicholson, to contain proto-Celtic phenomena. He tells us that the s of cerrocks on the Burrian Stone is the s of the gen. sing. (nom. carrie "a rock," a fem. noun of the i-declension, see W. Stokes, Celtic Declensions, p. 19). But we know that this s of the gen. sing. disappeared so early in Celtic, that there is no trace of it in any declension in Old Irish—a statement which may be verified by reference to Zeuss, W. Stokes, and Windisch. On the other hand, "Pictish" is so modern that it appears, if we may believe our new guide, to share many sound-laws with modern Irish; and whenever Mr. Nicholson is in any doubt about the meaning of a form that he thinks he has found in an inscription, he always consults some dictionary of modern Irish or Scotch Gaelic, and to his joy always imagines that he has found a satisfactory explanation.

All through this investigation Mr. Nicholson does not appear to see the supreme importance of chronology. He has never asked himself the question: At what date did such a sound-change begin to operate? Has he really tried to ascertain by scientific inferences, historical or linguistic, the approximate dates of these inscriptions? The Earl of Southesk has made the attempt in his Origins of Pictish Symbolism. On reasonable grounds he holds that these inscriptions belong to a period between the middle of the seventh century and the middle of the ninth century. If this conclusion be accepted—and Mr. Nicholson is so supremely indifferent to chronological data that I hardly think he will deem it worth while to protest—a good number of his explanations of alleged readings from the inscriptions will have to be given up. For instance, we are told that on the Golspie Stone v = bh, and that on the Burrian Stone u = v = mh. That is to say, according to our guide, at this early date the sounds b and m had already passed through the aspirate stage bh and mh, and fallen together in one sound: a sound like our v or w, it is not quite certain which. But it is absolutely impossible that, so early as the ninth century the m, if infected, could have been represented by a symbol of the value of u or v. Zeuss and Windisch both tell us that the aspirated sound had no symbolical expression whatever in early Irish MSS. (which would most of them be certainly later than these inscriptions), and that in later MSS. the sound of the aspirated m was represented by a dot over the m (m̃), certainly not by u or v (see Zeuss, Gram. Celt., p. 42; Windisch, Ir. Gram., § 68). I should be much obliged if Mr. Nicholson would give us a clear irrefutable instance of a word in an inscription or a MS. earlier than the year 1000 having u written for mh.

On the Newton Stone Mr. Nicholson reads RENNIPUAROSIR, and translates "In front of the district 'Place of Laughter.'" It is explained as a Highland pronunciation of a Gaelic ibh—a word found in O'Reilly's Dictionary in the form ibh, and said by O'Reilly to mean "country." Mr. W. Stokes has pointed out long ago, in a note which appears on p. 300 of Max Müller's Science of Language, on M. Pictet's etymology of Ivernia, that there is no such word as ibh = "country" in the Irish language; and that this ibh is one of the many blunders and forgeries that disfigure that dictionary: it arose simply from the dat. pl. ending -ib appearing in many names of countries. For instance, in Old Irish ó Laignib "from Leinster," means literally "from the men of Leinster," the nom. pl. of Laignib being Lagin. In later times Laignib ceased to be recognised as a plural, and the ib came to be explained as a substantive meaning "country." And now at last Mr. Nicholson has given ibh "Pictish" citizenship, and placed it in the form ir on the Newton Stone!

I should like now to be allowed to draw attention to an explanation of Mr. Nicholson's, in which a matter of Teutonic scholarship is involved. The words are Nakhtvddaðss datrr alleged to be found on the Bressay Stone, and said to be Norse, meaning: "daughter of the doer of ill-deeds by night." Mr. Nicholson says quite correctly that Norse nitt must have been nait at an earlier time.

The original Scandinavian h is regularly preserved in Middle English loan-words, such as slahter = Icel slátr (see Sweet, H. E. S., § 567). But this being so, dattr cannot = Icel. dóttir from the primitive Norse sohtir, since the old Scandinavian h would have been retained in this word, as it was in naht. The Old Norse sohtir = "daughters" may be seen on the Tune Stone (see Noreen, Altisländische Grammatik,<sup>2</sup> p. 265). It is strange that an explanation, involving the hypothesis of such a glaring inconsistency in the treatment of two similar Norse words in juxtaposition, should have commended itself to so laborious and ingenious an investigator as your correspondent.

It will be seen that Mr. Nicholson explains many words which he reads in the inscriptions as names of places. For instance, he takes Bernises to be bair (battle) + neas-ais (headland), and so "Battle-headland," and explains Lotel as lot (destruction) + ail (rock), and so "Destruction-rock." These are impossible Celtic compounds. In Celtic names of places the qualified always precedes the qualifying element. In Teutonic names of places the converse is the rule. The city in which I live is in English Oxford < Oxena-ferd, i.e., "the ford of Oxen"; this in Welsh is rendered Rhyd (the ford) + ycain (of oxen), Rhydycaïn. Compare the Irish names: Glencullen = the glen of the holly; Kildare = the church of the oak; Ballyknock = the town of the hill; Dunaille = the fortress of the cliff.

There is one other little criticism I should like to add on a small matter connected with Welsh phonology. Mr. Nicholson says "the Welsh ll is hl pure and simple." Is it so? I wonder if any Welshman would agree to this positive statement. In any table of Welsh mutations it will be seen that ll is not placed among the aspirates, but among the radicals. Prof. Rhys holds that Welsh ll is the voiceless liquid to which l is the corresponding voiced sound, adding that ll : l :: th : dd (see Lectures on Welsh Philology,<sup>3</sup> p. 39).

There are many other points which appear to me to need the friendly attentions of Celtic philologists. I hope that it will not be very long before we are favoured with a critical examination of Mr. Nicholson's explanations from those who have made these languages a life-long study.

A. L. MAYHEW.

Edinburgh: Jan. 13, 1894.

I have seen Mr. Nicholson's reading of the Scottish Ogam's communicated to the ACADEMY. I am mainly interested in those from Shetland, as as these all, with the exception of the Brassey Stone, were brought to light, and their discovery described, by myself, at the time when they were deposited for preservation in the National Museum in this city.

I do not propose to enter upon a further discussion of the readings of these inscribed stones, which have vexed the souls of such experts as Sir Samuel Ferguson, Prof. Rhys, Lord Southesk, Mr. Nicholson and others, who are still unable to arrive at unanimity in their verdicts. My purpose is merely to advert to one or two minor points of possible misconception, for Mr. Nicholson's further consideration, as he does me the honour to refer to my connexion with the discovery and description of these monuments.

I. In the case of the Brassey Stone "the place where it was found at the ruined chapel of Cullinsbrough, by the side of a quiet small bay, is not readily recognisable as a "Battle-headland" (Bair-nisais, according to this reading). A battle at some time or other may, or may not, have taken place there; but to assume such an unrecorded event as "morally certain," and as having stamped its imprint upon the place and the inscription, seems scarcely to be warranted from anything at present known.

II. Again, as regards the Cunningsburgh fragment, read as Ehtecon Mor, which Prof. Rhys is disposed to look upon as "the oldest inscribed stone in the Northern isles," it must be kept in view that the name of the hamlet of Aith, to which Mr. Nicholson referred (Old Northern Eið, an isthmus) is purely Scandinavian, and to suggest its equivalence to the Pietish Ehte (or ait) of the Ogam inscription cannot but be regarded with some suspicion. Cunning, in the name of the parish of Cunningsburgh, Mr. Oman and Mr. Nicholson may rest assured, is simply the Old Northern konungr, king, or chief, and need not be referred for derivation to Celtic etymology.

III. In reference, finally, to the St. Ninian's Ogam. While, as I pointed out in describing its discovery in 1878 (Proceedings of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, vol. xii. p. 20), the small isle of St. Ninian's, with the site of the chapel dedicated to that saint, where the stone was found, is a grazing ground, and the lowing of cattle, the screech of sea-fowl, and the monotonous breaking of the waves the only sounds now heard on the spot; yet this new reading of the inscription, making it the recording mark of a "Cow-Killing Enclosure," is somewhat staggering to simple natives and others, who have been accustomed to recognise a richness of hallowed tradition and sentiment clinging to an ancient sacred site as this of St. Ninian, the apostle of the Picts, undoubtedly is. But if this latest version be the true one, magna est veritas et prevalebit, and we shall say no more. I may venture, however, to point out to Mr. Nicholson, for whose learning I have great respect, that the St. Ninian's Stone is incomplete, the beginning of the inscription being lost, owing to the fracture of the stone at one end. It is therefore impossible to say what may have preceded the letters read as besmeq-quanamorroef; and in the absence of the knowledge of this, to formulate a definite reading seems a somewhat doubtful experiment.

Those Ogam-inscribed monuments in the northern isles of Scotland, which have come down to us as waifs, mostly fragmentary, from a remote antiquity, are unquestionably of enormous interest—linguistic, racial, religious; and Mr. Nicholson's critical examination of them, though under the disadvantage of his not being familiar with the stones themselves, or the places of their discovery, is an important contribution to their study.

GILBERT GOUDIE.

THE NAME OF GOLSPIE.

Bodleian Library, Oxford: Jan. 14, 1894.

Sir Herbert Maxwell's comparisons are interesting; but there is no record of the one old chapel at Golspie till 1330, when it is called the chapel of S. Andrew of Goldespy; and before 1619 the parish kirk was at Kilmalie. If Goldespy = cill espuiq "bishop's chapel," surely the accent would have been on the e; and then it has to be explained why that accented vowel was lost—and lost so early that we get Golspi in 1448.

Ol = il is conceivable; for we have Kilmalie spelt Colmalie; and, for aught I know, -uig might become -y. But it would still have to be shown how the d in Goldespy came in, and how the G arose out of C. If it arose from C in the Gillespie in Galloway, that would doubtless be through confusion with the personal name Gillespie—a reason which would not apply to Goldespy.

The pronunciation Gheispie referred to by Sir Herbert Maxwell I suspect to have been evolved from Gouspy, which is found as early as 1456.

E. W. B. NICHOLSON.

TIBETAN "TREES OF THE LAW" AND ASÓKA PILLARS.

London: Jan. 13, 1894.

It seems a far cry from Asóka pillars to prayer-flags; but it is not improbable that they are related, and that the Trees of the Law so conspicuous in Lamaism are perverted emblems of Indian Buddhism, like so much of the Lamaist symbolism.

Everyone who has been in Burma is familiar with the tall masts (tagün-daing),* with their streaming banners, as accessories of every Buddhist temple in that country. Each mast is surmounted by an image of one or more Brahmani geese, and the streamers are either flat or long cylinders of bambu framework, pasted over with paper which is often inscribed with pious sentences. The monks whom I asked regarding the nature of this symbol, believed that it was borrowed from Indian Buddhism.

Now the resemblance which these posts bear to the Asóka pillars is certainly remarkable. Both are erected for the purpose of gaining merit and displaying aloft pious wishes or extracts from the Law; and the surmounting geese form an essential feature of several Asóka pillars. The change from pillar to post could be easily explained. Great monoliths were only possible to such a mighty emperor as Asóka; but everyone could copy in wood the pious practice of that great and model Buddhist who had sent his missionaries to convert them.

Such wooden standards may have been common in Indian Buddhism, as some Burmese believe, and yet, from their perishable nature, have left no trace behind. At most of the old Buddhist sites in Magadha I have seen sockets in the rock, some of which may have been used for such standards, although many of the smaller sockets were doubtless used for planting umbrellas to shelter the booth-keepers in their sale of flowers and other offerings for the shrines. Most also of the clay models of Chaityas in relief, dug out of the earlier Indian Stupas, show streamers tied to the top of the Chaityas.

Lamaism, which, more than any other section of Buddhism, has substituted good words for the good works of the primitive Buddhists, eagerly seized upon all such symbolism. The decided resemblance of its "prayer-flags" to the tagün-daing of the Burmese is not more striking, perhaps, than the apparent homology which they present to the Asóka pillars. The planting of a Lamaist prayer-flag, while in itself a highly pious act which everyone practices at some time or other, does not merely confer merit on the planter but benefits the whole countryside. And the concluding sentence of the legend inscribed on the flag is usually "Let Buddha's doctrine prosper"—which is practically the gist of the Asóka inscriptions.†

* Mr. St. A. St. John kindly informs me that the etymology is ta, something long and straight + gun, bark or husk + daing, a post.

† These instances seem something more than the simple cloths and banners as propitiatory offerings which, of course, are found in most animistic religions—from the "rag-bushes" of India to the shavings of the Upper Burmese and the Ainos. And the hypothetical relationship between the Burmese and the Tibetans based on the Tibeto-Burmese group of languages does not count for much, as no real racial affinity has yet been proved to exist.

‡ As the legend usually bears a lion and a tiger in its upper corners, while below are a garuda-bird and dragon (nāga), it seems not impossible that these may be related to the surmounting lion and the so-called geese of Asóka's pillars. The rites related to the erection of the Lamaist standard are somewhat suggestive of the Vedic rite of "raising Indra's banner"; and Asóka's pillars seem to have been somewhat of the nature of the Jayastambha.

Two other conspicuous objects in Lamaist ceremonial are undoubtedly perverted symbols of Indian Buddhism—namely, the "prayer-wheel" and the Mandala offerings. The Lamas strive after a coarse materialism, which brings them by physical means and by faith and good words into direct relation with the fictitious celestial Buddhas, believed to be the spiritual fathers of the historical Buddha. And the Lama, in his desire to become at once a full-blown Buddha on his own account, imitates the conventional attitudes and externals of the Buddha, a leading epoch in whose life was, of course, his commencing to preach or, as it is expressed, "to turn the Wheel of the Law." The Lamas, therefore, invented the machine, which Europeans call the "prayer-wheel," by which every individual, even the merest child, can "turn the Wheel of the Law" conveniently by himself.

It is almost a matter of history how the Emperor Asoka thrice presented India to the Buddhist Church, and thrice redeemed it with his treasure. But it does not seem to be known that the Lamas systematically ape Asoka in this particular gift; and they are much more magnificently generous than he. For every day, in every temple in Lāmadom, the Lamas offer to the Buddhas (as well as to the saints and demons) not only the whole of India, but the whole universe of Jumbudvip and the three other fabulous continents of Hindu cosmogony, together with all the heavens and their inhabitants and treasures. Although this offering is made in effigy, it is, according to the spirit of Lamaism, no less effective than Asoka's historic gifts, on which it seems to be based.

L. A. WADDELL.

DANTE'S "YOUNG KING."

Sare, par St. Jean de Luz: Jan. 10, 1891.

The story of "The Young King" is interesting from another point of view than that of your correspondents. It shows clearly what a different estimate natives and foreigners sometimes take of the same personage. Bishop Stubbs, in The Early Plantagenets ("Epochs of Modern History," 1876, p. 98), writes of his death:

"Before Limoges was taken, the wretched man—for at eight-and-twenty he was a boy, no more—sickened and died at Martel, and left no issue. He passed away like foam on the water, no man regretting him; lamented only as his father's enemy, and by that father who, with all his faults and mismanagement, loved his sons far more than they deserved."

Compare this with the following passage from the Auctarium Roberti de Monte (Migne's Patrologia, tom. clx., p. 542, col. 1):

"Obiit Henricus tercius karissimus dominus noster, juvenis rex, filius Henrici secundi apud castrum Martel, 3 Idus Junii, in festivitate beati Barnabe Apostoli, vir per omnia plaudendus, non solum quia erat filius karissimi domini nostri Henrici excellentissimi regis Anglorum secundi, verum etiam quia erat pulcherrima facie, honestus in moribus, dapellis in muneribus, super omnes quos in nostra etate vidimus, qui terram nondum haberet assignatam."

M. Léon Cledat, Du Rôle Historique de Bertrand de Born (Paris, 1878), p. 27, writes, apparently after Giraldus Cambrensis and Brompton:

"Henri était éloquent et rusé, c'était l'Ulysse de la famille. Il avait reçu en partage les qualités les plus aimables: plus disposé à pardonner qu'à condamner, il oubliait vite les injures et savait gagner tous les cœurs. La douceur de son caractère n'enlevait rien à ses vertus guerrières. Le casque en tête, il n'était plus le même. Les chroniqueurs ne tarissent pas d'éloges sur son compte, et ceux même qui, pas exception, ne lui sont pas favorables, sont obligés, comme Guillaume de Newbridge [Newburgh?] de convenir qu'ils ont tout le monde contre eux. On chanta aussi ses louanges en vers latins:

"Omnia honoris honos, decor et decus urbis et orbis,
Militiae splendor, gloria, lumen, apex;
Julius ingenio, virtutibus Hector, Achilles
Viribus, Augustus moribus, ore Paris."

And again on p. 53:

"Jamais homme n'avait rencontré autant de sympathies, chez ses ennemis même, que le jeune Henri; et Bertrand de Born fut en cette circonstance l'interprète ému du deuil général."

The serventis in which Bertran de Born mourned the loss of "The Young King" are certainly among the best of his poems. They are VI. and VII. of the Poésies Politiques of the edition of M. Antoine Thomas (Toulouse, 1888), beginning respectively:

"VI. Mon chan fenise ab dol & ab maltraire . . .
VII. Si tuit li dol elh plor elh marrimen . . ."

These are undoubtedly among the finest elegies of the Middle Ages, and seem to have the note of sincerity; but I hardly know whether they are not exceeded in pathos by the words which wrung pardon from the old king:

"Sire, dit Bertran, le jour où le vaillant jeune roi, votre fils, est mort, j'ai perdu lesens, le savoir, et la connaissance." (Thomas, Preface xxxi. and p. 43.)

Men do not speak thus of an utterly worthless son to an angry father.

Has any adequate explanation been given why Dante made such a terrible example of Bertran de Born in the Inferno? After all his fighting and political and amorous intrigues Bertran became a monk, was very liberal to the church, and apparently died in the odour of sanctity.

Setting this aside, and considering only the Young King, the above citations give a singular instance of opposite appreciations of the character of the same man at home and abroad.

WENTWORTH WEBSTER.

UNACKNOWLEDGED SOURCES.

In reference to a letter under this heading which appeared in the ACADEMY of December 23, we have received the following apology from Dr. William Knighton:—

"Jan. 12, 1894.

"Dr. Knighton regrets that his obligations to the Quarterly Review of October, 1865, were not fully acknowledged in his paper on 'The Sporting Literature of Ancient Greece and Rome,' and he desires now to rectify the omission as far as possible."

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, Jan. 21, 7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Character in Relation to Social Problems," by Mr. B. Bosanquet.

MONDAY, Jan. 22, 5 p.m. London Institution: "The Roman Wall in Northumberland," by Dr. T. Hodgkin.

8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Painting," V., by Mr. J. E. Hodgson.

8 p.m. Aristotelian: "Renouvier's Classification des Sciences," by Mr. A. Boutwood.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "The Detection and Measurement of Inflammable Gas and Vapour in the Air," I., by Dr. Frank Clowes.

TUESDAY, Jan. 23, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Locomotion and Fixation in Plants and Animals," II., by Prof. C. Stewart.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Morocco and Its Races," by Capt. Charles Rolleston.

8 p.m. Civil Engineers: "The Tunnels of the Dore and Chintley Railway," by the late Percy Rickard.

8.30 p.m. Anthropological Institute: Anniversary Meeting.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 24, 8 p.m. Geological: "The Ooliferous Fissures in the Valley of the Rhine, near Ightham, Kent," by Mr. W. J. Lewis Abbott; "The Vertebrate Fauna collected by Mr. W. J. Lewis Abbott from the Fissure near Ightham, Kent," by Mr. E. Tully Newton; "The Genus Naiadites, as occurring in the Coal-formation of Nova Scotia," by Sir J. W. Dawson.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "American Carriages," by Mr. G. Herbert Thrope.

THURSDAY, Jan. 25, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Life and Genius of Swift," II., by Canon Ainger.

7 p.m. London Institution: "A Talk about the Orchestra," by Prof. Bridge.

8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Painting," VI., by Mr. J. E. Hodgson.

8 p.m. Electrical Engineers: "Notes of a Trip to the United States and to Chicago, 1893," by Mr. W. H. Preece.

8 p.m. United Services Institute: "The Coast-Lands of the North Atlantic," III., by Mr. H. J. Mackinder.

8 p.m. Elizabethan: "John Donne," by Mr. Edmund Gosse.

8 p.m. Viking Club. 8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.

FRIDAY, Jan. 26, 5 p.m. Physical: "A New Mode of Making Magic Mirrors," by Mr. J. W. Kearten; "Some Observations on Diffraction," by Mr. W. E. Croft; "A New Photometric Method and Photometer," by Mr. J. W. Spurge.

8 p.m. Amateur Scientific: "Planetary Evolution," by Mr. F. A. Holiday.

9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Old Irish Song," by Mr. Alfred Percival Graves.

SATURDAY, Jan. 27, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "English Schools of Musical Composition," II., by Prof. W. H. Cummings.

3.45 p.m. Botanic: General Fortnightly Meeting.

SCIENCE.

Catalogue of Greek Papyri in the British Museum. Vol. I. Texts edited by F. G. Kenyon. Vol. II. Facsimiles. (Printed by order of the Trustees.)

IN these magnificent volumes we have a complete edition of all the non-literary Greek papyri acquired by the British Museum up to 1890, accompanied by the most elaborate and successful series of facsimiles that has yet been produced of Greek cursive writing on papyrus. Many of the texts presented in this edition have been published before—Nos. I.-XLIII. by Forshall, and most of Nos. XLIV.-CXIII. by Dr. K. Wessely and others—in foreign periodicals. Mr. Kenyon has carefully revised the texts, while his introductions and notes are, so far as they go, a great help in elucidating the Greek. We could only wish the historical notes were longer and more frequent, as many difficulties are left unexplained. But the addition of a full commentary would have postponed the issue for some years; and by their forwardness in publishing their recent acquisitions of non-literary as well as of literary papyri, and, still more, by procuring from the Autotype Company these splendid facsimiles, the authorities of the British Museum have put themselves far in advance of continental museums. The Berlin papyri are, indeed, in process of publication, but without a commentary and without facsimiles; while the systematic publication of the great Rainer collection has not yet begun.

Non-literary papyri are of value both to the historian, who will find in these texts an important contribution to the rapidly increasing material for a history of Egypt under Greek and Roman rule; and to the palaeographer, who now, for the first time, has before him a really admirable set of facsimiles, illustrating the development of Greek cursive writing on papyrus from the earliest known examples of it in the third century B.C. to the latest in the eighth century A.D., just before it was transferred to vellum and became the literary hand as well. Mr. Kenyon has, in his arrangement of the book, tried to satisfy both parties. The papyri are classified according to subjects, while the order of the papyri in each subject, and the order of the subjects are, more or less, chronological. This is on the whole the most convenient arrangement, though for those who wish to study the development of the handwriting, the insertion of a list of the papyri arranged chronologically, apart from differences of subject, would be useful. The editor himself recognises that chronological considerations are sometimes the most important, for he groups together the Fayum papyri which all belong the same period, in spite of the variety of their subjects.

The first section consists of the Serapeum documents, which are chiefly concerned with the grievances of the famous twin-sisters Thaues and Thaus. Many other documents belonging to the same series are in foreign museums, and Mr. Kenyon supplies an interesting introduction, showing the place occupied by the British Museum papyri.

The next section contains a number of papyri belonging to the Ptolemaic period. The fragments which compose No. xv., identified by Prof. Wilcken as belonging to some papyri at Berlin, form an instructive contrast in the handwriting to the nearly contemporaneous documents of the previous section. The British Museum is fortunate in possessing three specimens of the third century B.C. On account of the roughness and irregularity of the writing, these, as well as a few similar specimens on the continent, were until lately ascribed to the first century B.C.; but the discovery of the Petrie papyri, which belong to the third century B.C., by affording a basis of comparison, has now rectified the mistake. The first century B.C. still remains a blank, at any rate so far as Greek cursive writing is concerned, since no dated example of it has yet been found.

Magic forms the contents of the third section, which is interesting as throwing light on the state of thought in Egypt in the second, third and fourth centuries, with its strangemixture of Egyptian, Hebrew, Greek, and Gnostic superstitions. For palaeography the magical papyri are less interesting, because the writing is generally of a formal character; and therefore in the present condition of uncertainty with regard to all Greek uncial writing, whether on papyrus or on vellum, they are difficult to date, except on other evidence than that of the handwriting.

Of the horoscopes which make up the next section, the first, No. xcvi., is too much mutilated to be of great interest by itself, but it is important because it enables an approximate date to be assigned to the Funeral Oration of Hyperides, which is on the verso. Coptic scholars, too, will be interested in the facsimile of the curious writing at the end of the papyrus, where the Greek alphabet is applied to the Egyptian language, probably the earliest known example, as Goodwin has remarked, of the system from which the Coptic language developed.

In these four sections, as in the sixth and seventh, Mr. Kenyon's work on the text has been chiefly confined to revising the transcriptions of his predecessors, but in the fifth section, which contains accounts and is by far the most difficult to decipher, the work is almost entirely his own; and no praise is too high for his skill in deciphering these crabbed documents, often mutilated and rubbed, and all abounding in abbreviations and symbols, many of which are new. In this section the papyrus which will naturally excite most interest is that which contains on the verso the Ἀθηναίων Πολιτεία.

The sixth section comprises all the Fayum papyri which had found their way to the Museum up to 1890. Their number appears very small when compared with the large collections at Vienna and Berlin, but the deficiency has been partly made up recently by a collection which contains numerous dated papyri of the first four centuries A.D. The papyri published here, however, which all belong to the Byzantine period, are good representatives of the writing of the sixth and seventh centuries. For the fifth century, with the exception of a few dating from the last two decades of it, there is still almost as great a blank as there is for the first century B.C., though the gap will be filled up when the Viennese collection is published. Of the questions raised by the discovery of the Fayum papyri, that concerning indictions is one of the most important. Mr. Kenyon, in his introduction to this section, gives an excellent summary of the results gained by the controversy on this subject. The year in which the system of dating by indictions began, 312 A.D., the peculiar indiction year for Egypt which varied in its beginning from year to year according to the rise of the Nile, and the general connexion of indiction cycles with taxation, are now established. But the relation of the peculiar Egyptian indiction to the ordinary Byzantine one, which began regularly on September 1, and the connexion of indiction cycles with previous cycles of taxation, are still matters of dispute.

In the last section the most important document is the lengthy will of Abraham, bishop of Hermonthis, which in spite of its late date (Mr. Kenyon assigns it to the eighth century) recalls in many respects the earlier and better style of Byzantine writing.

One of the most valuable features of the work is Mr. Kenyon's introductory sketch of the history of Greek cursive writing on papyrus. This, and the remarks of Mr. E. Maunde Thompson in the tenth chapter of his Introduction to Greek and Latin Palaeography, form the most important contributions to this branch of Greek palaeography that have yet been made. Of course, any attempt to give criteria for distinguishing the handwriting of different centuries must be quite provisional, at any rate until much more has been done in publishing facsimiles on the continent. The main characteristics of the three periods into which Greek cursive writing on papyrus falls—the Ptolemaic, the Roman, and the Byzantine—are easily recognisable, and may be described more or less definitely. But criteria for distinguishing different centuries, in the last two periods especially, are generally only trustworthy so long as they are vague. Mr. Kenyon is on firmest ground when speaking of the Ptolemaic period, of which nearly all the known documents have, if not wholly, at least in part been facsimiled. On the Roman and Byzantine periods Mr. Kenyon rightly declines to commit himself very far; but his remarks are always suggestive, and, just because the difficulty of the subject has deterred most of those who have studied Greek papyri from writing on it, all the more precious, even though the increase of knowledge may require some of his statements to be modified. Evidence drawn from the form of a particular letter is nowhere more liable to mislead than in the case of Greek cursive, for dating which the general appearance of the hand is probably the best criterion. For instance, Mr. Kenyon in his account of the Roman period, when discussing the characteristics of the first two centuries, says:

"the single letters which form the best guide are  $\eta$  and  $\sigma$  . . . for a comparatively short time, mainly from about A.D. 60 to about A.D. 150 (but sporadically even later), a  $\eta$  shaped  $\eta$  is found in common use . . .  $\sigma$ , which at the beginning of the first century is a simple upright semicircular curve, sometimes with flattened top, develops a tendency in the later years of the century to tumble more and more forward."

But the  $\eta$  shaped  $\eta$  occurs once in Brit. Mus. Pap. cxxviii. (acquired after 1890), which is certainly Ptolemaic, and probably belongs to the end of the second century B.C., often in papyri which belong to the reign of Tiberius, and is not rare in third century papyri. As the extreme limits at which this letter is found are more than 300 years apart, its occurrence, however common, would seem to be of little avail for fixing the century of a papyrus; indeed, the appearance of this peculiar  $\eta$  in No. cxxviii. shows that it is not even a characteristic letter of the Roman period. Again, Brit. Mus. Pap. cccxv., which probably belongs to the end of the second century B.C., shows that the down curving of the  $\sigma$ , when joined to a following letter, had already begun then, and is, therefore, not necessarily a mark of the later part of the first century A.D. This papyrus is also remarkable for containing several instances of the  $\epsilon$  shaped  $\epsilon$ , a form which Mr. Kenyon puts among the characteristic letters of the Roman period, when, so far as is known, it became very common, though it occurs once in a papyrus of the year 131 B.C. in the present volume of facsimiles, No. xv. (5) l. 4, . . .  $\theta\epsilon\upsilon\sigma$ .

Mr. Kenyon justly insists on the special difficulty of dating papyri which belong to the Byzantine period. The conservatism of the court was reflected in the handwriting. Moreover, traditions of the better style of writing may have lingered much longer in some districts than in others. It is noteworthy that some papyri recently presented to the British Museum by the Rev. A. C. Headlam, which belong to the earlier years of the seventh century, resemble the firm and upright writing of more than a century before, much more than the sloping and degenerate hand usually found in seventh-century documents, and that these papyri come not from the Fayum, where most papyri of this period have been found, but from Apollonopolis Magna in Upper Egypt, not far from the place where the will of Abraham was discovered, the peculiarities of which have been already mentioned.

In conclusion, a special word of praise is due to the elaborate indices to this work, classified under several heads. The index of symbols and abbreviations particularly will be of the greatest service.

A study of many of the originals published in these volumes, together with Mr. Kenyon's transcriptions, suggested to me a few slight variations from his text, which I should wish to submit to his judgment, if they are anything more than corrections of misprints.

In No. XVIII. (b), l. 3, for τους μηνας, I should suggest τον μηνα. No. XXIII., l. 2, for επειδοκα, επειδοκα. No. XXXIII., l. 29, for αξιωμεν, αξιουμεν. No. XLI. verso, l. 5, for καθηκυης, καθηκουσης. No. LXXVII., l. 38, for υπερρχομενων, παρρχομενων. No. XXV. verso, l. 9, for βω, βω (= 2800).

B. P. GRENFELL.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE S-PLURALS IN ENGLISH.

Oxford: Jan. 8, 1894.

In my letter on the English s-plurals which appeared in the ACADEMY for November 11, 1893, I alluded to the language of the Peterborough Chronicle for 1122-31 and of the Ormulum, drawing attention to the very insignificant number of French words used by their authors. As this point is an important one for the question of the origin of the English plural ending, I should like to discuss the French element in the vocabulary of the two works named somewhat more in detail.

It will, I think, be allowed that any influence of French on English inflexions—supposing such influence to have been exercised—could only have been exerted after the Conquest, when the two peoples were brought face to face on English soil. Such influence would only be possible when the two languages had actually come into close contact, after the Normans had begun to try to speak the language of the conquered people, and had, we may perhaps suppose, in doing so, occasionally introduced into their English French words with the French inflexions, or when Englishmen were accustomed to hearing the inflected forms of connected French speech, i.e., after the Conquest. No such influence was possible before. The few isolated Romance words introduced in pre-conquest times came over in what I may call an "uninflected" form, i.e., they were not heard in England with French inflexions, and consequently could have no influence on English endings. In view of the present question, therefore, we may restrict ourselves to the period after the Conquest, to the influence exerted by French on English subsequently to that event; and hence, in using the proportion of French words in any given work as a measure of this influence, we may exclude all words which can be proved to have been borrowed before 1066.

Let us now turn to the consideration of the Romance element in Orm's vocabulary. The words of French origin are: bikochenn, buttenn, buttenn, cariteb, flumm, gyn (cf. ACADEMY, March 15, 1890, p. 188), primm-sezenn† (if a post-conquest loan-word, it must rather be from O. Norm. primseigneur than from O. Norse primsigna), profete, sefffenn. To these we should perhaps add bezzannz, crunc, * They number slightly more than I stated in my letter of November 11. Taking into account the great length of the Ormulum, this small addition does not affect the question at issue.

† It is not at all impossible that, just as in O. Norse, there existed in O. English a similar term, primseignian.

and skarn, although all three present considerable difficulties (as regards the second, cf. Behrens, Französische Studien, V. 20, "die Form crunc geht schwerlich auf das Altfranzösische zurück." Onskarn, cf. ibid p. 92; Brate, Paul und Braune's Beiträge x. 56; Kluge, Paul's Grundriss i. 840). The name Ormin (Dedication l. 324) besides Orm (Preface, l. 2) may also be mentioned here as influenced in its form (cf. Zupitza, Guy of Warwick, EE. T.Soc. 1875-6, p. 136). Orm's rime, in the sense of "measure, metre," though a genuine English word (O. E. rīm), has been influenced both in form (in the addition of the final e) and in meaning (O. E. rīm only means "number") by the Old French rime (cf. Zupitza, Anzeiger für deutsches Alterthum ii. 15). Similarly in wileas, "devices, guile," the modern English wiles, we have another instance of French influence on the meaning. This word is the Old English wigel, wigl, wil, "divination, sorcery," which in Middle English appears as wizel, wiel, wil. The first of these we find, for instance, in Lazamon, where it occurs both in the older meaning of "magic art, sorcery" (l. 19,250) and in the later sense of "deceit, guile" (l. 16,256, cf. also L.'s wizelful, "guileful"). This latter meaning is, no doubt, due to the Old French guile, wile (cf. Zupitza, Trans. Cambr. Phil. Soc. 1881-2, p. 253). Custell, in the N. E. sense of "castle" (l. 18,113), also shows French influence on the meaning.* And, lastly, the possibility must be mentioned that in temmple, mazzstre we have Romance influence in the replacement of the O. E. endings -pel, -ster by -ple, -stre (cf. Sachse, Das unorganische e in Ormulum, pp. 23 and 72). This, I believe, exhausts the list of words borrowed from or influenced by the French.

The verbs turrnenn,† temmprenn, are sometimes cited as further instances; but they are the O. E. turnian, temprarian in use in Ælfric's time, being old Latin loan words (cf. Pogatscher, Lehnworte im Altenglischen, p. 95). Orm's funtt, with its short vowel, cannot be from the Norman French funt (which regularly gave M. E. fūnt fount, N. E. fount), but presupposes an unrecorded O. E. fūnt (besides the recorded funt, font) from Latin fontem, just as Orm's mūnt comes from O. E. mūnt, from Lat. montem. Our mount, like fount, is a postconquest re-borrowing. The connexion of Orm's scorrenenn with excoricare is very doubtful indeed (cf. Skeat, Etym. Dict., Addenda to 2nd ed., s.v. scorch). Orm's hurrtenn cannot well be from O. Fr. hurter (cf. Müller, Etym. Wb. d. engl. Spr. i. 616). The curious bripell (l. 6770) seems to be a contamination of O. E. brifeald with Latin tripulus. The word triple was not borrowed until much later.

If we now turn to the Peterborough Chronicle for 1122-31, it would certainly at first sight appear as if the Romance words were, in proportion, more numerous than in the Ormulum. The following are all that I have noted (the accompanying numbers denote the year): canonie 1123, -nius 1129, capitelet† 1123, cardinal 1125, cellas 1129 (perhaps taken direct from Latin; cf. Murray, New Engl. Dict., s.v. cell), conceite 1125, due 1129, legat 1123 (or from Latin?), and possibly prior§ 1123, and castel|| 1123.

* Orm otherwise uses custell, custellum in the O. E. sense (cf. below).

† The short root vowel is probably due to influence of O. N. turna (cf. Kluge, P.Gr. i. 866).

‡ Or have we in the form in question ("in hero capitelet") not the O. Norm. French capite, but the dative of capitel = O. E. capitol, -el (an old Latin loan word)?

§ Prior is probably not French, but a direct borrowing from the Latin. It occurs soon after the Conquest (cf. Thorpe, Diplomatarium, pp. 445-6, from the Worcester Charters).

|| Castel was adopted direct from the Latin

Words like canceler 1123, and market 1124, although the first is undoubtedly and the second possibly from the French, I exclude from the list, as we find them in documents of Edward the Confessor's time.* Latin loan-words like fuls 1125, sotsceipe 1131, which were introduced before the end of the tenth century, are, of course, excluded.

There thus remain from four to nine words borrowed from the French after the Conquest, which is, of course, a much larger proportion than in the Ormulum; but they are all new political and ecclesiastical terms, which would inevitably become known to the conquered English almost immediately after the Conquest, while as yet no influence on the language was possible. An English monk of the end of the eleventh century, who could not speak or understand a word of Norman French, and whose language was still as pure native English as it had been before William came, must have been perfectly conversant with such technical terms; while in a Chronicle of this period the use of them was unavoidable.

If we look at the Romance words in the Ormulum we see at once that they are of a different character: most of them are what I may call words of every-day life, not technical terms; most of them have replaced native English expression for the same ideas. But unless I have overlooked anything, there is not a single word of this kind borrowed from French in the Chronicle for 1122-31.† Leaving, as I think we justly may, such new technical terms out of consideration, the vocabulary of the Chroniclers who wrote the annals in question may be fairly described as untouched by French influence.

A. S. NAPIER.

P.S.—In drawing up the above lists I have endeavoured to do full justice to the French element, and to over-estimate rather than to under-estimate the number of Romance words. Of course, I may have overlooked one or other, but in any case I do not think that sufficient can have escaped me materially to affect the question. On the other hand, there is the possibility that some of the words quoted may, although not recorded, have been adopted before the Conquest or that, as suggested in the notes, some of them were taken from Latin.

SCIENCE NOTES.

MR. J. WHITAKER HUNT, president of the Royal College of Surgeons, has been appointed to deliver the Hunterian oration next year.

THE medals and funds to be given at the anniversary meeting of the Geological Society on February 16, have been awarded as follows:—The Wollaston medal to Prof. Karl A. von Zittel; the Murchison medal to Mr.

before the end of the tenth century in the sense of "village," cf. Matthew xxi. 2; Mark vi. 6, &c. The form in the Chronicle is rather this Old English word influenced in its meaning by the French, than a post-conquest re-borrowing (from Norman French).

* On canceler, cf. Murray, N.E.D. ii. 261. Market occurs in Kemble's Codex Diplom. iv. 209, and gearmarket ib. iv. 291; the form has been explained as Picardic (cf. Pogatscher, p. 174). But it is also very possible that the word came to us from a Flemish or Low German source (cf. Grimm, Deutsches Wörterbuch, vi. 1614). It must be mentioned that the MSS. containing these words are not contemporary, but post-conquest; still, as they seem to be derived from contemporary documents, and as, in the case of canceler, the office was established by Edward the Confessor, they may perhaps be accepted as pre-conquest loan-words.

† The only English word of this nature which has been influenced by French is wiles 1128. Cf. above.

W. T. Aveline; the Lyell medal to Prof. John Milne; the balance of the proceeds of the Wollaston fund to Mr. A. Strahan, that of the Murchison fund to Mr. G. Barrow, that of the Lyell fund to Mr. William Hill, and a portion of the proceeds of the Barlow-Jameson fund to Mr. Charles Davison.

THE following is the text of a letter received by the president of the Chemical Society, in reply to his recent letter of congratulation to the Russian Chemical Society; the letter is signed by D. Mendeleeff, as president, and D. Konowalow, as secretary:—

"In the name of Russian chemists we tender to you our hearty thanks for the congratulations and the sentiments expressed by you in your letter of November 15, 1893, in the name of the London Chemical Society.

"The possibility, suggested by you, of a closer tie between the eminent London Chemical Society and the young Russian one was received with greatest applause. We hope, as well as you, that the time is not far off when this closer connexion will take place. We desire it the more as we expect to gain the more by it."

We quote the following from the New York Nation:—

"The American Psychological Association held its second meeting on December 27 and 28 at Columbia College. Papers were read on the first day by Prof. Fullerton, of Philadelphia, on the 'Psychological Standpoint'; by Prof. Royce, of Harvard, on 'The Case of John Bunyan' (an attempt to throw into the categories of modern alienism the mental perturbations of the period of insistent impulse and incipient illusion of Bunyan's early life); by Mr. H. C. Warren, of Princeton, on 'Experiments on Visual Memory' (showing by interesting curves the relative reliability of the memory of a large number of male and female students for simple square figures after intervals of ten, twenty, and forty minutes); by Prof. Murray, of Montreal, on the question of the occurrence of tastes in dreams; and by Prof. Butler, of Columbia College, on Mr. Fiske's doctrine of the 'Meaning of Infancy.' Prof. Cattell, Prof. Münsterberg, and Dr. Scripture gave accounts of the work done during the past year in the laboratories at Columbia, Harvard, and Yale respectively. Perhaps the most interesting item from a practical and educational point of view was the description, by Prof. Münsterberg, of a new device for producing stereoscopic visual effects from plane figures without any of the usual aids from mirrors or prisms. The effect is secured by throwing pictures prepared for each eye separately into the eyes in succession separately. By means of a simple rotating apparatus the ordinary zootropic effects may be added to the stereoscopic effect. This opens up the possibility of showing by lantern slides animals, machines, &c., not only in lateral motion, but at the same time in relief, and also in motion to and from the plane of vision. This, with other of the Harvard results, as well as part of the paper of Prof. Royce on Bunyan, are to be noted in the Psychological Review for January. On the second day papers were read by Dr. Hyslop, of Columbia, Mr. Mead, of Michigan, Mr. H. R. Marshall, of New York City, Dr. Scripture, Prof. Miller, of Bryn Mawr, and Prof. Pace, of the Catholic University at Washington. Among those who contributed to the discussions were Profs. Dewey, of Michigan, James, of Harvard, Strong, of Chicago, and Starr, of the New York College of Physicians and Surgeons. The next session is to be held during the Christmas recess, 1894-95, at Princeton, with Prof. James as president and Prof. Cattell as secretary."

MESSRS. WILLIAM WESLEY & SON, of Essex-street, have issued a catalogue of the Paracelsus Library formed by the late Dr. E. Schubert, of Frankfurt. It consists of 194 editions of the writings of Paracelsus, arranged, so far as possible, in chronological order, of which it is said that eighty are not to be found in the British Museum; 548 works relating more or less closely to Paracelsus, including Dr.

Schubert's own MS. collections, classified under the authors' names; and 351 works on alchemy. The last will be sold separately, the Paracelsus Library only as a whole. Apart from Browning's poem, the only student of Paracelsus in this country that we know of is Prof. J. Ferguson, of Glasgow, who has printed in two parts (1875 and 1885) an elaborate bibliography, criticising the work of Dr. F. Mook.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

M. PAUL MEYER has been elected president of the Académie des Inscriptions for the current year. We may add that M. Louis Havet was recently elected a member, in the place of the late M. Rossignol, his most serious competitor being M. Collignon.

VILH. THOMSEN—whom we assume to be the professor of comparative philology at Copenhagen, and the author of the Ilechester Lectures delivered at Oxford in 1876—has submitted to the Royal Academy of Denmark one more attempt to decipher the Yenissei inscriptions. He begins, of course, with a brief survey of the literature of the subject, paying due honour to the magnificent publications of Donner and Radloff, and accepting the improved version of the Chinese inscriptions due to Prof. G. Schlegel, of Leiden. These Chinese inscriptions prove that the monuments in question were erected in memory of two princes of a Turk dynasty which ruled in those regions circa 730. Turning to the other inscriptions on the same monuments, in an unknown alphabet, Prof. Thomsen first establishes that they should be read downwards, and also from right to left, as in Chinese. Radloff, who had originally supposed that the order of the columns was from left to right (as in Mongol), seems now to have come to the same conclusion. For the purpose of decipherment, Prof. Thomsen leaves out of account the Chinese; for it is evident that the two sets of inscriptions are not bilingual. Nor does he attempt to affiliate the characters with any already known. His only assumptions, which have also been made by others, are that the words are for the most part separated; and that the characters are so numerous (38) as to be not strictly alphabetical. His first step was to distinguish three characters, which, from their frequent recurrence and their combination with other characters, he identified as the vowels ü, i, and i; while a is found occasionally at the end of words. As for the consonants, he could only conclude that the characters represented not single ones but combinations of them. He then proceeded to guess at some of the words which occurred most frequently. One of these he reads as tünri = "heaven, god" in Turkish; another as kül[köl]-tigin = the prince K'inch-ti-k'in of the Chinese inscriptions; a third as türk. Having got thus far, it was not very difficult to draw up a complete table of the characters, and to apply it to the inscriptions, which turn out to be written in pure Turkish. The present paper is only preliminary; but we may give one example of the results of Prof. Thomsen's decipherment. It is the complete title of the Divine Kagan (Donner, 54; Radloff, 77)—tünritüg tünridü bolınyş türk bilgü gagan = the wise Kagan of the Turks, who has been in heaven, who resembles heaven [or god].

WE have just received the eighth of the admirable series of linguistic bibliographies, compiled by Mr. J. G. Pilling, of the American Bureau of Ethnology, and published at Washington by the Smithsonian Institution. It relates to the group of languages here called Salishan, spoken by tribes in Oregon and British Columbia, whose more familiar name is that of Flathead. Though not very numerous or otherwise important, it happens that these languages have been a good deal studied by missionaries. The earliest vocabularies were published in the first year of the century by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, after whom the Mackenzie river is named. In 1842, the Rev. Elkanah Walker compiled spelling and reading lessons in the Spokan language, which claims to be the third book printed west of the Rocky Mountains. A considerable element of these languages enters into the Chinook jargon. Dr. Franz Boas has made large MS. collections. Quite recently a French missionary has invented a species of shorthand, which the Indians are said to take to much more readily than they do to Roman characters. Of this, three facsimiles are here given. For its fulness of detail and painstaking accuracy, this bibliography deserves the same praise as its predecessors. What would we not give for similar studies of the vernaculars of the East Indies?

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

ANGLO-RUSSIAN LITERARY SOCIETY, IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.—(Tuesday, Jan. 2)

E. A. CAZALLET, Esq., president, in the chair.—After the annual accounts and a vote of thanks for successful management had been passed, the president announced that Polonsky, Grigorovich, Weinberg, and other Russian literary men had joined this society, in consequence of their sympathy with the formation of a Shakspeare society at St. Petersburg. The president then read his paper, entitled "An Impostor Czar," in which he gave an historical sketch of Gregory Otrepiev, who, in the beginning of the seventeenth century, feigned to be the son of Ivan the Terrible, murdered, as was supposed, by the usurper Czar Boris Govounoff. The lecturer next reviewed the dramas of Schiller, Pushkin, and General Alexander, in which the impostor is the central figure; and extracts were read in German, Russian, and English. Schiller's "Demetrius," it was observed, was an incomplete and posthumous work. The monologues and dialogues are very fine, and the personages picturesque; but they are not in touch (if it be allowed to criticise so great a master) with Russian life and national feeling. Strange to say, in treating Russian questions, this is no uncommon failing of German authors, although in most other matters they are pre-eminently learned. Pushkin, on the other hand, had saturated his mind with the spirit of ancient Russian lore and monastic chronicles, and that study imparted simplicity and grandeur to his language and imagery. He brings out in bold relief the higher qualities of the Russian mind, and the special traits of character which stamp the various classes of society. The language recalls ancient days, and yet it is not obsolete, but possesses the sparkle and the conciseness of the most vigorous style of modern times: it has, perhaps, never been surpassed in Russian literature. Praise was given to General Alexander's masterly treatment of his subject in his dramatic sketch, "Dmitri," which shows literary power, philosophical analysis, and shrewd insight into the varied motives of human action. A brief sketch was then given of the troubled times through which Russia subsequently passed. She nearly succumbed to the sway of Poland, until finally the Romanoff dynasty ascended the throne in 1613, when the young Michel became Czar, and his father Fedor, the Patriarch of the Orthodox Church, signed the Ukazes conjointly with his son. It is perhaps some vague traditions of humiliating dissension and anarchy during the preceding period that almost unconsciously conduced to establish cohesion and stability in the inert masses of the vast Russian empire, and attached the bulk of the people, whose instincts are conservative, to the Orthodox faith and the Romanoff dynasty, which through nearly three centuries have consolidated and centralised the power, while further extending the frontiers of the state.—It was announced that on the first Tuesday in February Major-General Tyrrell would read a paper upon "The Russians in Eastern Warfare"; and that on the first Tuesday in March Mr. Anichkof would contribute a paper on "May Feasts in Shakspeare."

FINE ART.

OLD MASTERS AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

II.

THE few Flemish and German works of the fifteenth and early sixteenth centuries are of very high quality, and will be seen again with pleasure, although many of them have recently appeared at either the Burlington Fine Arts Club or the Guildhall. The "Virgin and Child" (Earl of Northbrook) attributed to Jan van Eyck is clearly of his school, and may have been derived in its origin from the master himself; it lacks, however, both his wonderfully searching draughtsmanship and his strong suggestion of life. The "St. Giles" (same collection) was seen and discussed at the Flemish Exhibition of the Fine Arts Club. It is one wing of a diptych, or perhaps triptych, of which the other is the so-called "Celebration of High Mass," which, on the sale of the Dudley pictures, was coveted both by the Louvre and the National Gallery, but nevertheless fell into the hands of a private collector. The merits of the two panels are the same: naïveté of conception, brilliant enamel-like colour in a high, clear key, and masterly elaboration of multitudinous detail. In dealing with the human physiognomy, the anonymous Netherlander curiously fails where so many of his contemporaries and fellow-countrymen attained the highest success, and he cannot therefore be placed in the first rank with the best of them. The well-known "Virgin and Child enthroned," by Mabuse (same collection), is one of the finest extant examples of the master in his earlier, but not earliest, manner. In execution the picture is a marvel; it vies in this respect with almost any of the preceding creations of Flemish art. The conviction, however, of the fifteenth century has at this stage already in part evaporated. Mr. J. P. Heseltine's "Virgin and Child" is a delightfully fresh and ingenious production of the Flemish School, in respect of which we must follow the discretion of the owner, who attaches to it no special name; above all, the treatment of the divine Infant is delightful in its subtlety and truth to nature. The picture comes nearest in treatment to the Patinir group, but is clearer and purer in colour than the works of this class. The "Vision of St. Ildephonsus" (same collection) is another Netherlandish work furnishing a puzzle peculiarly worthy of solution on account of the excellence of the picture. The scene is the interior of a church, the architecture of which shows to a marked degree the character of the Flemish Renaissance. The Virgin appears above an altar, a gracious vision, draped in ample dark robes which are held up by angels; she is about to vest the kneeling saint with a red chasuble. Behind St. Ildephonsus kneel three monks, witnesses of the miracle, and a procession winds its way through the body of the church. This panel belongs apparently to the second quarter of the sixteenth century, and shows traces of the influence of Gheerhardt David; it must for the present be put down in the category of works to which the name of Jan Mostaert has been attached. Nearly allied to this in technique, but both less masterly and less significant, is Lord Northbrook's "Virgin and Child," given to the Netherlandish School. The architectural throne on which the Virgin sits, holding the child, is of much the same Flemish Renaissance style as the interior of the church in the "St. Ildephonsus." The "Call of St. Matthew" (same collection) is a characteristic and, in execution, unusually refined production from the brush of Jan van Hemersen, that strong, often brutal realist, who belongs to the Antwerp group following immediately upon Quentin Matsys. The famous "St. Jerome" (same collection) attributed to Antonello da Messina has been as much discussed as any work of its style and period, and yet it still remains more or less of a puzzle. It has at various times being ascribed to Jan van Eyck, to Meinlinck, to Jacopo de' Barbara (!), and with more probability to the Venetian Jacometto, only known through the mention of his name as a painter of panels on a small scale in the Anonimo of Morelli. Though it does not exactly agree in technique or aspect with any thing that Antonello has left us, it is nearer to his Flemish-Venetian manner than to that of any master at present known to us by his works; and it would not serve much purpose to disturb the attribution until we have, on some solid grounds, another and a better to put in its place.

The Flemings of the seventeenth century are on the whole well represented, though Rubens can only be said to be here pour la forme. Genuine, as it appears to us, but in its present state not a satisfactory example of his powers, is the "Portrait of a Lady" (Chas. Butler, Esq.), inscribed, though not in the hand of the painter, with the title "Virgo Brabantina." It may well, as the catalogue suggests, represent a sister of the painter's second wife, the fair Helena Fourment. The two large decorative pieces "Dead Game" (Earl Amherst) and "The Fig" (Lord Windsor) are both put down to that familiar combination "Rubens and Suyders"; but in neither instance is the hand of Rubens himself to be traced. Van Dyck comes off better, since there are here examples of three out of his four styles. His so-called Genoese manner is shown in the splendid full-length "Andrea Spinola, Doge of Genoa." The vast canvas is, on the face of it, a great show-piece for high days and holidays, and as such, has not, perhaps, the interest of some portraits of the Italian time, such as, for instance, the famous "Cardinal Bentivoglio" of the Pitti, or the "Portrait of a Lady of the Balbi Family" at Dorchester House. Quite characteristic of the Genoese time is the peculiar sang de bœuf hue of the Doge's robes; it still further accentuates the swarthy pallor of the sitter. Equally characteristic of the English period, with its clearer and more delicate harmonies, is the full-length "James Stuart, Duke of Richmond and Lennox" (Earl of Leicester), an interesting work, though not so fine as the full-length of the same nobleman which, from Lord Methuen's collection at Corsham, passed into that of Mr. Marquand, of New York. The same personage is represented in the well-known half-length in the Long Gallery of the Louvre, wearing no mantle or vest, but a curious undress consisting of an ample white shirt and crimson breeches—perhaps his tennis-court costume. The full-length "Robert Rich, Earl of Warwick" (same collection), though a production of the Van Dyck studio, is by no means equal to its companions. A capital performance is the "Lady and Child" (Chas. Butler, Esq.), by Cornelius de Vos, the most capable of Rubens's contemporaries outside his own immediate circle, and one of the few who, without altogether repudiating his influence, managed to preserve a distinct individuality. The picture, which is dated 1624, well illustrates De Vos's power of combining the maximum of inner life with the minimum of outward action. The attitudes of the lady and child approach nearly to those of the painter's wife and child in the family picture of the Brussels Gallery, which counts among his finest and most distinctive productions. No better or more instructive instance of the brush-power of Teniers the younger could be desired than the familiar "Interior of a Guard-Room" (C. J. Wertheimer, Esq.), which the painter himself would have called, from the figure in the background, "St. Peter delivered from Prison." It is firm, dexterous, brilliant to a degree that it would be difficult to surpass; but at the same time empty and trivial, even as a rendering of the semi-realistic incidents making up the picture. How far deeper into his subject does Adrian Branwer get in this "Interior" (Constantine Ionides, Esq.), in which, with less bravura, but with a technical skill at least as consummate, he represents one of the familiar incidents of Netherlandish art. This precious little work, and the still richer example in the Dulwich Gallery, are about the best Branwers in England. It is a pity that up to the present he should have remained unrepresented in the National Gallery. Of the two pieces of genre by Adrian van Ostade, the more interesting is the "Hurdy-Gurdy Player" (C. Ionides, Esq.); the "Boor and his Wife," from Buckingham Palace, is of the all too familiar type, and its surface, moreover, appears to have suffered injury. This is certainly not a Rembrandt year; at which we can hardly complain, seeing that he was the hero of last winter's exhibition. The "Abraham, Hagar, and Ishmael," signed and dated 1640, is not one of the most interesting productions of the type to which it belongs. Very curious is the little landscape with figures, "Shepherds and Herdsmen resting at night," dated 1647 (National Gallery of Ireland). It is a veritable impression, the main motive of which is the artificial glow of the fire, round which the figures are gathered, battling with the enveloping blackness of the air; a gleam of moonlight enlivens the dark sky above. We must confess to being rather puzzled by "The Dismissal of Hagar" (T. Humphry Ward, Esq.), which makes a first appearance, and is attributed to Rembrandt. There are many things in the picture which strongly suggest his hand: the tawny, rather hot colour which belongs to his middle time, the sombre landscape with its half-revealed figures in the middle-distance, the steely gleam on the dark horizon. On the other hand, there are some glaring defects, such as the huge, lifeless feet of the Hagar, and the ear (perhaps retouched) of the Ishmael. Besides this, the conception is unusually superficial, and devoid of the real emotion which a painter of even less than Rembrandt's deep-rooted humanity might naturally have drawn from the pathetic subject. Should the panel ultimately obtain acceptance among the master's works, it would certainly not enhance his reputation. The slight touch and clever superficial hand of Rembrandt's late pupil and imitator, Aart de Gelder, are well shown in the signed canvas, "Bathsheba entreating King David" (Arthur Ray, Esq.)—one of the very few of this painter's works to be seen in England. Two splendid and little-known canvases by Frans Hals are contributed to the exhibition by Lord Amherst. The "Portrait of a Young Man" is dated 1636, and therefore belongs to the Haarlem master's very finest period. A young man, whose refined and sympathetic aspect contrasts strongly with the unrestrained exuberance of most of Hals's sitters, fronts the spectator, posing with a frankness and ease that are quite free from self-assertiveness. His honest eyes, half-shadowed by the large black hat so gracefully worn, have an expression of dreaminess, yet not of melancholy. The execution of the whole—of the finely-modelled features; of the sober, elegant costume of black sparingly relieved with blue; of the closed hand with its transparent white cuff—is masterly in the extreme, and, at the same time, more reticent in its mastery than, for instance, the brilliant "Portrait of a Cavalier," of 1624, in the Wallace collection. The other picture is the "Portrait of a Burgomaster," a notable specimen of Hals's almost excessive ease of handling in his quite late time. The "Portrait of a Man" (Major Flood Page), dated 1620, belongs to Michael Janse Mirevelt, or his entourage; but we fail to recognise either his hand or style in the curious, ugly "Portrait of a Lady" (Lord Belhaven). The "Lady at a Spinet" (T. Humphry Ward, Esq.), by the now fully appreciated Jan Vermeer, of Delft, comes, like the recently acquired picture in the National Gallery, from the collection of Bürger (Théodore Théré), who did so much to revive the interest in an artist then more than half forgotten. It does not belong to the richest and most generous style of the artist, like the masterpieces in the Czernin and Six collections, and the pictures at Dresden, The Hague and in the Louvre; but it is nevertheless in its way a consummate piece of work, which extorts admiration by the skill with which the awkward unattractive accessories deliberately chosen are combined into a harmonious whole. A De Hooch of the most exquisite quality is the "Garden Scene" (John Walter, Esq.), showing in a well-clipped formal garden of pleasant aspect a number of richly and gaily dressed ladies and gentlemen taking their pleasure in quiet and measured fashion. Absolutely open-air subjects like this one are rarities in the œuvre of De Hooch; a larger example of far less brilliant execution is that, with numerous portraits, in the Academy of Arts at Vienna. The real motive, the real poem of the picture is the luminous pearl-grey sky, casting its veiled radiance over the whole scene, and controlling all the vivid hues of the dresses. So great is the pictorial strength of the work, that it causes a fine Hobbema hard by (S. Montagu, Esq.) to look dull and leaden. No Netherlander is on this occasion so well represented as Jan Steen. In "Saying Grace" (Charles Morrison, Esq.) we find him in an unfamiliar mood of quiet, restrained pathos without sentimentality, treating a subject such as the Dutch painter of to-day loves to depict. The execution is surprisingly fine and true, notwithstanding a certain characteristic hardness. Rendered with rare truth is especially the flood of grey daylight admitted through the wide open window, and illuminating evenly the homely personages and the not less homely accessories of the scene. It is a wide leap from this to the technically no less admirable "A Glass of Wine"—one of the coarsest productions of a wilfully gross painter. A sly-looking personage of middle-age has provided a succulent repast for a fresh and robust young blonde, and sits ministering to her wants, and intently watching her, jug in hand, as she drinks. The satyr-like expression of the man is realised with an extraordinary subtlety and truth, for which it would not be easy to find a parallel in Steen's life-work. Capable of realising facial expression as he here shows himself, he is the less to be excused for the perfunctoriness with which he repeats, and goes on repeating, his own uninviting visage, the portraits of his family, and his immediate surroundings. Well known is the large canvas, styled "The Violin," from Buckingham Palace. The "Dutch Family Merry-making" (Corporation of Glasgow) is a good original replica of the famous picture in the Cassel Gallery, slightly smaller, it would seem, than the original. Among several examples of the art of Jacob Ruysdael the most interesting, though not the most important in dimensions, is the "View of the Town of Katwyk" (Corporation of Glasgow), one of those pathetic pieces of realism which are worth all the showy "Cascades" so popular among collectors. The composition is perfect in its simplicity; the foreground, with its sober harmony of grey and green, of the rarest charm. "The Windmill" (the Queen, from Buckingham Palace) is full of fine passages, but not so coherent as a whole. Among the Cuyps the most imposing is that lent by Mr. T. Humphry Ward; it has passages of great beauty in the middle and far distances. A jewel of the purest water is Adrian Van de Velde's little "Landscape with Cattle" (Captain Holford), a nothing in subject, which acquires supreme distinction from its simplicity and style. Why does the charm of this consummate "little master" so entirely evaporate when he works on a large scale, as in some dreary canvases at Munich, and in the Fitzwilliam Museum at Cambridge? The unusually brilliant Nicholas Berchem, nicknamed "Le diamant de la curiosité" (Captain Holford), no doubt won its curious cognomen in virtue of the sharpness and exquisite precision of the execution. The galleries contain, besides the works already enumerated, landscapes by Van Goyen, Hobbema, and Aart van der Neer, seascapes by Willem van de Velde, an admirable early Terborch, "The Smoker," a good Jan van Ochtervelt, a Jan David de Heem, a Wouverman, a Frans van Mieris, and portraits by Ravenstein, Cornelius Janson, and Gerbrandt van den Eeckhout.

CLAUDE PHILLIPS.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THIS week's elections at the Royal Academy, though quite reasonable, are not altogether so notable as those on which we commented in the last number of the ACADEMY—the most notable thing about them being the circumstance that within seven days there has been an addition of about one-sixth part of its total force to the rank of the Associates. Mr. Swan and Mr. Arthur Hacker are the newly elected. Mr. Swan is something of a colourist; he is, to boot, a not bad modeller of animals—his works show not only observation, but some personal quality not easy to define; and again, as a pure draughtsman of animals, the current number of The Art Journal proves his talent, though any one who takes the trouble to compare Mr. Swan's beasts with the extraordinary Rembrandt lion, in the same number of the magazine, will have at least sufficient evidence before him of the gulf which in the essential matters of distinction and style separates the great seventeenth century artist from even one of the most creditable of our day. Mr. Arthur Hacker is not unnaturally more popular than Mr. Swan, for he is more dramatic. He is likewise even obviously clever, and his dexterity and charm in the rare accomplishment of a painter of the flesh are things which may fairly be insisted on. The elections, on the whole then, are not unsatisfactory; and when the Academy shall have seized an opportunity for adding to their ranks Mr. Solomon Solomon and Mr. Alfred East, and—shall we say? Mr. J. J. Shannan as a representative of portraiture, and Mr. Frank Short as a representative of engraving, both interpretative and original, it will have done, for the time being, nearly all that it is expected to do.

THE following exhibitions will open next week: water-colours, by Kate Greenaway, and black-and-whites, by Mr. Alfred Parsons, at the Fine Art Society's; water-colours, by Mr. Tristram Ellis, illustrating "A Summer in Norway," at the Japanese Gallery—both in New Bond-street; and a complete collection of engravings after Rosa Bonheur and Mr. Alma Tadema, at Mr. McLean's Gallery in the Haymarket.

THE subject of Mr. J. E. Hodgkin's lecture at the Royal Academy, on Thursday next, as professor of painting, will be "Stothard and his Works."

THE work on Greek Vase Paintings, by Miss Jane Harrison and Mr. D. S. MacColl, which has been so long announced, will be issued next Monday by Mr. T. Fisher Unwin. A third edition of Miss Harrison's Introductory Studies in Greek Art will appear at the same time.

The trustees of the British Museum lately acquired by purchase a large and valuable collection of Japanese illustrated complimentary cards, commemorative of the various festivals and holy days of the year. A selection of these has now been arranged in a showcase in the King's Library, and illustrates the picturesque style and graceful fancy peculiar to this branch of Japanese art.

AT the London Institution, on the afternoon of Monday next, Dr. T. Hodgkin will deliver an illustrated lecture upon "The Roman Wall in Northumberland."

THE Glasgow Archaeological Society have taken the lead in issuing a protest against the destruction of a portion of the Antonine Wall, near Falkirk, which is in process of being caused though building operations. It appears that General Pitt-Rivers, as inspector of national monuments, is unable to intervene.

THE Glastonbury Antiquarian Society have issued an appeal for subscriptions, in order to enable them to continue the excavation of the now famous lake village, under the superintendence of Mr. Arthur Bulleid. The greater part of the field in which the village is situated has been presented to the society by its owner, and the British Association have made a grant of £40. It appears that about fifty dwelling mounds and nearly the whole of the village border still await examination.

HAMDI BEY, of the Imperial Museum, Constantinople, has presented Colonel Watson with a set of photographs of the Sidon sarcophagi, with special permission to publish them. Colonel Watson has placed them for that purpose in the hands of the committee of the Palestine Exploration Fund.

THE Royal Geographical Society, which printed Prof. W. M. Ramsay's monograph on the historical geography of Asia Minor, has just issued, in its series of "Supplementary Papers" (John Murray), Modern and Ancient Roads in Eastern Asia Minor, by D. G. Hogarth and J. A. R. Munro, illustrated with three maps, and incorporating a number of mile-stone inscriptions. Mr. Hogarth is responsible for the larger share of the work, treating the passes of the Eastern Taurus and Anti-Taurus, and the military road from Caesarea to Melitene on the Euphrates; while Mr. Munro contributes notes, on roads ancient and modern, in the Vilayet of Sivas.

WE are glad to see that our old friend L'Art has, after an existence of nineteen years, determined to reduce its proportions to a more convenient size. It has already done enough, perhaps too much, for glory; and it has long been evident that it found a difficulty in "living up" to its grand ideal, which has taxed its powers of illustration to the breaking point. It would have been too much to expect that it should come down at once to so handy a form as the Gazette des Beaux-arts; but it has dropped to the size just abandoned by the Portfolio, and all its readers will be delighted at the change from twenty columns to eighty-eight comfortable pages, and the illustrations remain of the same size. The most important of number are on "de Lemud, the original" some Verrières de Bernard Van Orley," by M. Alphonse Wauters. To subscribers (only) are also issued a large etching, by M. Charles Giroux, of Mr. Hitchcock's celebrated picture of "Maternité," and a lithograph, by M. Alfred Bahuet, after M. Charles Cazin's picture of "Ismaël."

Printed by ALEXANDER

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

MR. HENSCHEL resumed his Symphony Concerts on January 11, when M. César Thompson played Goldmark's Violin Concerto. The Andante contains some pleasing music, though the work generally lacks meaning and soul. There are many showy passages for the solo instrument, but the ornamentation is tawdry. This Concerto is not likely to become popular. M. Thompson displayed excellent qualities—a full tone and firm technique; but he was heard to still greater advantage in an Adagio by Max Bruch. As a show-piece he played a Paganini Fantaisie, and his execution was as fine as the music was flimsy; his performance was a real tour de force. The programme included Schubert's Unfinished Symphony; the performance, under Mr. Henschel's direction, was good, though not the best he has given. There was a tendency to linger over the sublime beauties of the Andante; the con moto ought to warn composers of this danger. Why those perpetual regrets at the unfinished state of the work? The music in itself is complete; the work is only unfinished because it has not, according to convention, four movements. The programme included two Wagner excerpts. Saint-Saëns's Pianoforte Quartet in B flat major (Op. 41) was performed at the last Monday Popular Concert. It is an interesting, but unequal work. Saint-Saëns, like his predecessor Haydn, is always able to invent and develop a theme, but—and in this he again resembles the older master—his material is not always fresh and attractive. The Quartet opens with an Allegretto, in the leading theme of which the composer seems to be asking a question, and by the manner of its development this impression is still further strengthened; the second theme is expressive and in good contrast. The whole movement is interesting and grateful to the performers. The working of the Choral in the Andante maestoso which follows is clever, though formal; in Mendelssohn's day Chorales were more in fashion than they are in ours. In the third movement, practically a Scherzo, the composer gives us some of his most characteristic music. Now we have Eastern, now French colouring, and the effect produced by the piece generally is remarkably vivid. The Finale is dry. The performance, by Miss Fanny Davies, Lady Hallé, and Messrs. Gibson and Piatti, was excellent. Miss Davies played for her pianoforte solo Schumann's "Humoreske" (Op. 20), a long piece which is seldom given in its entirety; Mme. Schumann herself has set the example of curtailing it. What was passing in the mind of the composer when he wrote it? That is the question which one cannot help asking while it is being played. Why those sudden changes of mood? Now the music is soft and pensive, now loud and passionate; and it is always melancholy. If ever a piece required a programme it is this "Humoreske." Composers often give explanations when they are scarcely needed, and omit them where they would be most welcome. When music throws the listener into a certain mood, say of joyfulness or sorrow, he is content to form from the tones his own picture; and when the composer forces him now in one direction, now in another he is inclined to ask "Why?" Miss Davies played the work with taste and feeling, yet did not seem altogether at her ease. Miss Emily Squire was the vocalist, and was well received.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

Ready this day, at all Libraries, Booksellers, and Bookstalls

MEMORIES of the MUTINY

By FRANCIS CORNWALLIS MAUDE, V.C., C.B., late Colonel Royal Artillery, and formerly commanding the Artillery of Havelock's Column. With which is incorporated the Personal Narrative of JOHN WALTER SHERER, Esq., Companion of the Star of India, formerly Magistrate of Cawnpore, Author of "Who is Mary?" &c. 2 vols., demy 8vo, handsomely bound, with Map and Illustrations, 30s.

A few Copies to be had on Special Paper, at £2 12s. 6d.

MEMORIES OF THE MUTINY.
MEMORIES OF THE MUTINY.
MEMORIES OF THE MUTINY.
MEMORIES OF THE MUTINY.
MEMORIES OF THE MUTINY.
MEMORIES OF THE MUTINY.
MEMORIES OF THE MUTINY.

By FRANCIS CORNWALLIS MAUDE, V.C., C.B.,

late Colonel Royal Artillery, and formerly commanding the Artillery of Havelock's Column. With which is incorporated the Personal Narrative of JOHN WALTER SHERER, Esq., Companion of the Star of India, formerly Magistrate of Cawnpore, Author of "Who is Mary?" &c.

2 vols., demy 8vo, handsomely bound, with Map and Illustrations, 30s.

A FEW COPIES TO BE HAD ON SPECIAL PAPER at £2 12s. 6d.

REMINGTON & CO., LIMITED.
LONDON: KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN; AND SYDNEY.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows Interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

ESSAYS, RECOLLECTIONS, AND CAUSERIES.

By the Hon. LIONEL A. TOLLEMACHE.

1. SAFE STUDIES.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 5s.

2. STONES OF STUMBLING.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

"Altogether, we can give very hearty praise to the book, and that is something in the case of matter which has not the charm of novelty to the reviewer, and with a good deal of which he disagrees in opinion. Mr. Tollemache can tell an excellent story (such as that of the young lady who, having spoken enthusiastically about a clergyman, and being asked if she referred to any sermon of his, said, 'No; oh! no. But he hates mayonnaise, and so do I.') He manages, though he himself is very frequently in presence, and the subject of discussion, never to be unpleasantly egotistic. His work has the literary flavour throughout, without being merely bookish, and he can argue a thesis like a craftsman and a master of his craft."

SATURDAY REVIEW.

"The volumes are witty and interesting, and besprinkled throughout with the dew of wide and unusual reading. Particularly in his resort to apt classical quotation does Mr. Tollemache preserve an honourable literary tradition in a way which now seems a little old-fashioned, though agreeable from its very quaintness as well as its frequent pungency.....The 'Recollections of Pattison' are thoroughly delightful. Based upon a long friendship, and upon a certain affinity, they are altogether charming in their mingled analysis and reminiscence, narrative and anecdote.....We take pleasure in commending these books for their biographical interest, which in parts is of the greatest, as well as for the refinement and learning that pervade them throughout."—THE NATION (New York).

*. * The volumes are sold AT COST PRICE. A slip giving further Press Notices sent on application.

LONDON: WILLIAM RICE, 86, FLEET STREET, E.C.
the brush on the BRENTANO, 17, Avenue de l'Opéra, Paris, and 3, Union Square, New York; often brutal realist, who Dresden; VIEUSSEUX, Florence; PITHOEYER, Rome.]

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER'S LIST.

Second Edition, demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

ARBORICULTURE;

Or, a Practical Treatise on Raising and Managing Forest Trees, and on the Profitable Extension of the Forests of Great Britain.

By JOHN GRIGOR, The Nurseries, Forres.

"A writer who can support his theories by facts, and can point to lands worth less than a shilling an acre when he found them, now covered with ornamental plantations, and yielding through them a revenue equal to that of the finest corn-land in the country.....His book has interest both for the adept and the novice, for the large proprietor and him that has but a nook or corner to plant out."—Saturday Review.

Crown 8vo, 5s.

THE CHURCH AND SOCIAL PROBLEMS.

By A. SCOTT MATHESON,

Author of "The Gospel and Modern Substitutes."

"We have read few books of late years that so admirably fulfil their purpose as does this one of Mr. Scott Matheson's. It is a most judicious and comprehensive survey of the whole social field."—Daily Chronicle.

Fifteenth Thousand. Cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

BUNYAN CHARACTERS.

Lectures Delivered in Free St. George's Church, Edinburgh.

By Rev. ALEX. WHYTE, D.D.

The British Weekly says: "We cannot too warmly welcome this very beautiful and amazingly cheap reprint of Dr. Whyte's lectures. The book will take a permanent place in Bunyan literature."

* * A Second Series of "Bunyan Characters" is in the press.

Post 8vo, antique laid paper, 2s. 6d.

THE COVENANTERS of the MERSE:

Their History and Sufferings as Found in the Records of that Time.

By the Rev. J. WOOD BROWN, M.A., Gordon.

"Will receive a hearty welcome from all who appreciate painstaking and praiseworthy historical work concerning a period so eventful as that of the 'killing times' in Scotland."—Scotsman.

THE LAST SCOTTISH MARTYR.—Post 8vo, 2s. 6d.

LIFE AND LETTERS OF JAMES RENWICK.

The Last Scottish Martyr.

By Rev. W. H. CARSLAW, M.A., Helensburgh.

With Vignette and Facsimile Letter.

"Mr. Carslaw has been fortunate in securing so many of the original autographs, and in making his work reliable beyond all its predecessors, both in point of completeness and accuracy. Renwick's story is one of which Evangelical Scotland may well be proud."—Freeman.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER,
LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL.

By PERCY RUSSELL.

With Prelatory Remarks by Mr. GLADSTONE.

Sixth Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s.

With Portrait.

The WESTMINSTER REVIEW says: "A very complete manual and guide for journalist and author. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense.....We have little else but praise for the volume."

DIGBY, LONG & CO., PUBLISHERS,
18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON.

Just published, 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

THE GREAT PESTILENCE

(A.D. 1349-50).

Now commonly known as the Black Death.

By FRANCIS AIDAN GASQUET, D.D., O.S.E.

London: SIMPSON, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & CO., Limited.

PREMIER

"VINOLIA" SOAP

FOR THE HOUSEHOLD COSTS

4d. A TABLET.

THE ROUSING OF MRS. POTTER.

By JANE NELSON.

[Next week.]

Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

[Next week.]

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW.

No. 367.—CONTENTS.

- I.—MEMOIRS OF CHANCELLOR PASQUIER.
- II.—THE ECONOMY OF HIGH WAGES.
- III.—THE POETRY OF RURAL LIFE.
- IV.—RECENT EDITIONS OF TACITUS.
- V.—POPULAR LITERATURE OF MODERN ITALY.
- VI.—THE LAST CAMPAIGN OF MONTROSE.
- VII.—THE RESULTS OF THE CRUSADES.
- VIII.—AMONG THE HAIRY AINU.
- IX.—ADDRESSES of the late EARL of DERBY.
- X.—THE PROGRESS OF ANGLING.
- XI.—THE SESSION of 1893.

London: LONOMAX, GREEN & CO.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW.

No. CLXII. JANUARY, 1894.

Price 4s. Annual Subscription, 12s. 6d., post free.

CONTENTS.

- I.—DR. PUSEY'S LIFE AND WORK.
- II.—LOWELL'S LETTERS.
- III.—JOHN RUSKIN: a Study in Development.
- IV.—MASHONALAND.
- V.—PEOPLE'S BANKS.
- VI.—CAPTAIN LUGARD in EAST AFRICA.
- VII.—MODERN APOLLOGETICS.
- VIII.—SHORT REVIEWS and BRIEF NOTICES.
- IX.—SUMMARIES of FOREIGN PERIODICALS.

London: CHARLES H. KELLY, 2, Castle Street, City Road, E.C., and 66, Paternoster Row, E.C.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process For the reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost. Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by HOLL, R.A., Oulless, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photogravure from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided and are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing nearly 70 Miniature Photographs of notable autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

New Pamphlet, "Autotype a Decorative and Educational Art," free on application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

THROAT AND COUGH

Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use

EPSS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.

In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing.

Sold only in boxes, 7½d., and tins, 1s. 1½d., Labelled:

JAMES EPSS & CO., Ltd., Homoeopathic Chemists, LONDON

ROBINSON & CLEAVER, BELFAST,

Were awarded the Grand Diploma of Honour—Highest Award for Irish Damask Table Linen, Edinburgh, 1890
Two Prize Medals, Paris, 1889.

IRISH DAMASK TABLE AND HOUSE LINEN.

Fish Napkins, 2s. 11d. per doz. Dinner Napkins, 5s. 6d. per doz. Table Cloths, 2 yds. square, 2s. 11d. 2½ yds. by 3 yds., 5s. 11d. each. Kitchen Table Cloths, 11½d. each. Strong Huckaback Towels, 4s. 6d. per doz. Frilled Linen Pillow Cases, from 1s. 2½d. each.

IRISH CAMBRIC

Embroidered Handkerchiefs, in all the latest styles, from 1s. to 20s. each.

Children's Bordered, 1s. 3d. per doz.
Ladies' " 2s. 3d. "
Gentlemen's " 3s. 3d. "

Hemstitched:
Ladies', 2s. 9d. per doz.
Gents', 3s. 11d. "

IRISH LINEN

Illustrated Price-Lists and Samples Post Free to any part of the World.

POCKET HANDKERCHIEFS.

COLLARS: Ladies' and Children's 2-fold, 3s. 6d. per doz. Gents' 4-fold, 4s. 11d. per doz.
CUFFS for Ladies, Gentlemen, and Children, from 6s. 11d. per doz.

BY SPECIAL APPOINTMENT

ROBINSON & CLEAVER,

Printed by ALEXANDER

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

NEW AND RECENT BOOKS.

Recent Part (CONSIGNIFICANT—CROUCHING), 12s. 6d.

New Section (CROUCHMAS—CZECH), 4s.

A NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY ON HISTORICAL PRINCIPLES.

Founded mainly on the Materials collected by the Philological Society.

Edited by JAMES A. H. MURRAY, LL.D.

NOTICE.—The present position of the Work is as follows:—

Vol. I., A and B. Edited by Dr. MURRAY. Imperial 4to, half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d. [Published.]

Vol. II., C. Edited by Dr. MURRAY. Imperial 4to, half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d. [Published.]

* The Parts comprised in Vols. I. and II. are still sold separately.

* The colossal nature of Dr. Murray's undertaking and the monumental thoroughness of his work are attested by the fact that this (the second) volume of no less than 1,308 pages is devoted to the letter Calone, and that the space this letter requires will even be surpassed by the letter S. On the other hand, nine of the smaller letters, X, Z, Y, Q, W, J, N, U, and V, will only require the same amount of space.—Times.

Vol. III., D and E.

D. Edited by Dr. MURRAY. [In the Press.]

E. Edited by HENRY BRADLEY, M.A.

E—EVERY. 12s. 6d. [Published.] | EVERYBODY—EZOD. [Shortly.]

Vol. IV., F, G, and H. F. Edited by HENRY BRADLEY, M.A.

THE OXFORD ORIENTAL SERIES.

Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

A BURMESE READER: being an Easy Introduction to the Written Language, and Companion to Judson's Grammar. For the Use of Civil Service Students and others who wish to acquire the Language quickly and thoroughly. By R. F. ST ANDREW ST JOHN, Hon. M.A., Member of the Royal Asiatic Society, Teacher of Burmese in the University of Oxford and University College, London, and late Deputy-Commissioner in Burma.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

GRAMMAR of the BENGALI LANGUAGE, LITERARY and COLLOQUIAL. By JOHN BEAMES, Bengal Civil Service (Retired), Author of "A Comparative Grammar of the Modern Aryan Language of India," &c. [Shortly.]

RULES OF INDIA.—New Volume.

Crown 8vo, with Map, 2s. 6d.

HAIDAR ALI and TIPU SULTAN, and the Struggle with the Muhammadan Powers of the South. By LEWIN BENTHAM BOWRING, C.S.I. "Mr. Bowring's portraits are just, and his narrative of the cautious military operations of the period full and accurate."—Times.

Parts I., II., and III., A-'LOBH'A. Imperial 4to, 21s. each.

A CONCORDANCE to the SEPTUAGINT and the other GREEK VERSIONS of the OLD TESTAMENT (including the Apocryphal Books). By the late EDWIN HATCH, M.A., D.D., and HENRY A. REDPATH, M.A., assisted by other Scholars.

Until the publication of PART V., but not afterwards, subscriptions may be paid in advance at the price of £4 4s. for the Six Parts.

"The accuracy of the Hebrew words, as well as the figures for the quotations, is marvellous."—Guardian.

"A work on which this generation may well congratulate itself."—Record.

Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

PRIMER of ITALIAN LITERATURE. By F. J. Snell, M.A., Balliol College, Oxford.

"Will be valuable to any student who wishes to have a quick and general survey of the whole ground."—Scotsman.

Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

LATIN HISTORICAL INSCRIPTIONS. Illustrating the History of the Early Empire. By G. McN. RUSHFORTH, M.A., St. John's College, Oxford.

"It is the ideal book to place in the hands of students while they are attending a course of lectures about the period with which it deals."—Athenaeum.

Small 4to, 8s. 6d. 1st ed.

Only 250 Copies have been printed on Large Paper.

MILTON'S PROSODY. An Examination of the Rules of the Blank Verse in Milton's Later Poems, with an Account of the Versification of "Samson Agonistes," and General Notes. By ROBERT BRIDGES.

"A learned monograph by an author who has valid claims to be regarded as an authority on metrical rules."—Times.

HISTORY AND ENGLISH CLASSICS.

The STUDY of MEDIAEVAL and MODERN HISTORY.

Lectures by WILLIAM STUBBS, D.D., Bishop of Oxford, late Regius Professor of Modern History, Oxford. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

"Of altogether exceptional value."—Times.

BOSWELL'S LIFE of SAMUEL JOHNSON. Including Boswell's "Journal of a Tour to the Hebrides," and Johnson's "Diary of a Journey into North Wales." Edited by GEORGE BIRKBECK HILL, D.C.L., Pembroke College, Oxford. With Portraits and Facsimiles. In 6 vols., medium 8vo, half-roan, £3 3s.

"An edition which for splendour, accuracy, and completeness exceeds that of any other English classic."—Westminster Review.

UNIFORM WITH THE ABOVE.

LETTERS of SAMUEL JOHNSON, LL.D. Collected and Edited by GEORGE BIRKBECK HILL, D.C.L. With a Facsimile. In 2 vols., medium 8vo, half-roan, 28s.

"All lovers of Johnson will appreciate the scholarly manner in which Dr. Hill has discharged his editorial task. We cannot but congratulate him on his fresh addition to the stately Johnsonian edifice he has raised with so much skill and labour."—Times.

"Excellent reading."—Standard.

"Full of charm."—Daily Chronicle.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

QUINTI SEPTIMI FLORENTIS.

TERTULLIANI DE PRAESCRPTIONE HAERETICORUM. AD MARTYRAS: AD SCAPULAM. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by T. HERBERT BINDLEY, B.D., Merton College, Oxford, Principal of Codrington College, Barbados, and Examining Chaplain to the Lord Bishop.

"A scholarly edition of certain tracts of Tertullian, specially chosen to illustrate particular characteristics of his method and style."—Times.

By the SAME AUTHOR.

TERTULLIANI APOLOGETICUS ADVERSUS GENTES PRO CHRISTIANIS. Edited, with Introduction and Notes. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"We welcome this scholarly edition with especial pleasure. The plan and execution are both good, the annotations being an advance upon anything of the kind we have seen in English."—Spectator.

"A good edition of one of the most interesting documents of the early Church. Mr. Bindley has read up his subject thoroughly, and gives the result of his studies in a compact and serviceable form. For examination purposes nothing more could be desired."—Saturday Review.

Just ready, Vol. XLI., Part III. BOOKS V., VI., and VII. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d.

SACRED BOOKS of the EAST. Edited by F. Max Muller. The SATAPATHA-BRAHMANA, according to the Text of the Mithyandina School. Translated by JULIUS EGGELE.

Crown 8vo with Map, 5s.

A SHORT ACCOUNT of the LAND REVENUE and its ADMINISTRATION in BRITISH INDIA. With a Sketch of the Land Tenures. By B. H. BADEN-POWELL, C.I.E., F.R.S.E., M.R.A.S., late of the Bengal Civil Service, and one of the Judges of the Chief Court of the Punjab.

"Mr. Baden-Powell is to be congratulated on the knowledge, skill, and care which has enabled him to bring within the compass of two hundred and fifty pages so clear and comprehensive a survey of land revenue administration in British India, and the forms of tenure on which it is based."—Speaker.

8vo, cloth, with Maps and Plans, 12s.

SELECTIONS from STRABO. With an Introduction on Strabo's Life and Works. By the Rev. H. F. TOZER, M.A., F.R.G.S., Honorary Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford.

"A very valuable and instructive series of passages from the writings of the Greek geographer, edited by a very competent scholar, who is also an experienced traveller in classic lands."—Times.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, 5s.

VOYAGES of the ELIZABETHAN SEAMEN to AMERICA.

Selected Narratives from the "Principal Navigations" of HAKLUYT. Edited by EDWARD JOHN PAYNE, M.A., Fellow of University College, Oxford. First Series: HAWKINS, FROBISHER, DRAKE.

"A book in which every one who is proud of the name of Englishman will delight."—Se temer.

Extra fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

SCOTT.—LORD of the ISLES. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by THOMAS BAYNE.

"The historical, and especially the philological, notes are valuable, and a special word of praise is due to the apt illustration of the poem by parallel passages."—Glasgow Herald.

FULL CATALOGUES POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

the brush... often brutal realist, who... LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS WARHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

R & SHEPHERD, Loxdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published by the Proprietor, HENRY VILLERS, 27, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1134.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JANUARY 27, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO.'S

NEW AND RECENT BOOKS.

Many Illustrated with Maps, Portraits, Plates, Cuts, or Diagrams.

ARNOLD, W. T. A MODEEN XANTHIPPE ...	s. d.
AVELING, EDW., D.Sc. INTRODUCTION to BOTANY ...	3 6
BAX, E. BELFORT. PROBLEMS of REALITY ...	6 0
BEVAN, G. PHILLIPS, F.G.S. HOME GEOGRAPHY. 12 Maps ...	2 6
BERDOE, EDW., M.R.C.S. THE HEALING ART ...	4 6
BONAR, JAS., LL.D. PHILOSOPHY and POLITICAL ECONOMY in their HISTORICAL RELATIONS ...	12 6
BOSANQUET, B., M.A., LL.D. HISTORY of AESTHETIC ...	10 6
CIVILISATION of CHRISTENDOM ...	10 6
BOWLEY, A. L., B.A. ENGLAND'S FOREIGN TRADE ...	4 6
BRADLEY, F. H., M.A. APPEARANCE and REALITY ...	2 6
BRENTANO, Prof. L. HOURS and WAGES of LABOUR ...	10 6
BRYANT, SOPHIE, D.Sc. STUDIES in CHARACTER ...	2 6
CAMPBELL, H. J., M.D. ELEMENTARY BIOLOGY ...	4 6
CHAMIER, D. MANUAL of ROMAN LAW ...	6 0
CHAPMAN, Rev. GEORGE: LIFE of ...	6 0
CICERO. PRO MILONE, PRO LEGE MINILIA &c. ...	4 6
CLARKE, H. B., M.A. HISTORY of SPANISH LITERATURE ...	1 6
CLARKE, MARCUS. TWIXT SHADOW and SHINE COMPANY, Prof. G. HISTORY of PEDAGOGY. 2nd Ed. ...	6 0
DADSON, A. J. EVOLUTION and RELIGION ...	6 0
DANTE'S INFERNO. Tr. by G. MUSGRAVE. 2s. 6d.; Large Paper ...	10 6
DE BAYE, Baron. INDUSTRIAL ARTS of ANGLO-SAXONS ...	21 0
DEFRIES, E. P. A BROWNING PRIMER. 4th Ed. ...	1 0
DEMARR, JAS. ADVENTURES in AUSTRALIA 50 YEARS AGO ...	6 0
DENSMORE, E., M.D. HOW NATURE CURES ...	7 6
ELLIS, T. MULLETT. REVERIES of WORLD HISTORY ...	1 0
THE BEAUTY of BOSCASTLE ...	5 0
EPPE, WM. LAND SYSTEMS of AUSTRALIA ...	2 6
ERDMANN, Dr. J. E. HISTORY of PHILOSOPHY. 3 vols. 8d Ed. ...	42 0
ERNST, WM. LIFE of LORD CHESTERFIELD ...	10 6
ESQUEMELING, J. BUCCANEERS of AMERICA ...	15 0
EVANS, ELIZAB. STORY of LOUIS XVII. ...	10 6
EVERITT, GRAHAM. ENGLISH CARICATURISTS ...	10 6
FLETCHER, A. E. [ed.] CYCLOPEDIA of EDUCATION. 3rd Ed. ...	7 6
GARNIER, R. M. HISTORY of ENGLISH LANDED INTEREST. 2 vols. ...	10 6
HATCH, F. H., F.G.S. TEXT-BOOK of PETROLOGY ...	7 6
HASCHEK, Prof. E. THE AMPHIOXUS ...	6 0
HAVILAND, Dr. GEOGRAPHICAL DISTRIBUTION of DISEASE ...	15 0
HAZLITT, W. C. COINAGE of EUROPEAN CONTINENT ...	21 0
HEBBART, J. F. THE SCIENCE of EDUCATION ...	4 6
HERTWIG, Prof. O. EMBRYOLOGY of MAN and MAMMALS ...	21 0
HOLYOAKE, G. J. THE ROCHDALE PIONEERS ...	2 6
HOPES, Rev. J. PAGE. DEATH a DELUSION ...	1 0
HULME, Prof. F. E., F.S.A. BIRTH and DEVELOPMENT of ORNAMENT ...	7 6
JERROLD, WALTER. OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES ...	2 6
KAYSER Prof. TEXT-BOOK of COMPARATIVE GEOLOGY ...	18 0
KEBBEL, T. E. THE AGRICULTURAL LABOURER ...	2 6
LANE, GEOFFREY. A SONG for the SEASON ...	2 6
LANGE, Prof. F. GERMAN CHRONICLES of WAR ...	3 6

LILLIE, ARTHUR. BUDDHIST INFLUENCE on PRIMITIVE CHRISTIANITY ...	s. d.
MODERN MYSTICS and MODERN MAGIC ...	2 6
MACLACHLAN, D. B. REFORMED LOGIC ...	6 0
MALET, LUCAS. THE WAGES of SIN. New Ed. ...	5 0
MAYET, Prof. L. AGRICULTURAL INSURANCE ...	6 0
MEILOR, C. THE DEATH PENALTY: a Modern Story ...	10 6
MIGULA, Dr. W. PRACTICAL BACTERIOLOGY ...	2 0
MOELLER, Prof. W. HISTORY of the CHRISTIAN CHURCH. 2 vols. ...	6 0
MOLINARI, G. DE. RELIGION ...	15 0
MORRIS (WM.) and BAX (E. B.). SOCIALISM: its Growth and Outcome, &c.; Large Paper ...	2 6
OGER, Prof. V. SELECT FRENCH READINGS ...	15 0
OSTROGORSKI, M. RIGHTS of WOMEN ...	1 6
OWEN, Rev. JOHN. SKEPTICS of ITALIAN RENAISSANCE ...	2 6
SKEPTICS of FRENCH RENAISSANCE ...	10 6
PALMBERG and NEWSHOLME, Drs. PUBLIC HEALTH and its APPLICATION ...	10 6
PARALLEL GRAMMAR SERIES. Edited by Prof. E. A. SONNENSCHN, M.A. (Oxon.). Full List on application.	21 0
PARSONS, HAROLD. HANDBOOK to WESTERN AUSTRALIA ...	1 0
PINKERTON, THOS. BLIZZARD, and Another Phantasy ...	2 6
"PLAIN TORY, A." JUSTICE for ENGLAND ...	1 0
TORY DEMOCRACY and CONSERVATIVE POLICY ...	2 6
PLAUTUS. COMEDIES. Tr. by E. H. SPODEN, B.A. B.Sc. ...	6 0
PUBLIC SCHOOLS YEAR BOOK. Fifth Year of Issue. 59 Schools, with 9 Appendices ...	6 0
REIN, Prof. W. OUTLINES of PEDAGOGICS ...	2 6
REINICH, ROBERT. SHORT STORIES ...	2 0
RELIGIOUS SYSTEMS of the WORLD. 3rd Ed. ...	10 6
RICHTER, E. PICTURES of the SOCIALISTIC FUTURE ...	3 6
RIEHL, W. H. DIE VIERZEHN NOTHELFER ...	1 6
RITCHIE, D. G., M.A. DARWIN and HEGEL, and other Studies ...	7 6
SALT, H. S. RICHARD JEFFERIES: a Study. 2s. 6d.; Large Paper ...	10 6
SCHAEFFLE, Dr. A. LABOUR PROTECTION ...	2 6
SCHULZE-GAVERNITZ, Prof. SOCIAL PEACE ...	3 6
SEYFFERT, Prof. O. DICTIONARY of CLASSICAL ANTIQUITIES. 2nd Ed. ...	21 0
SHAKESPEARE. RECITATIONS. Edited by JOHN MILLARD ...	2 0
SICHEL, EDITH. WORTHINGTON JUNIOR. 3 vols ...	31 6
SMITH, Dr. G. VANCE. THE BIBLE and its THEOLOGY ...	5 0
SOAMES, L. PHONETIC METHOD. Readers I. and II., each 4d.; III. ...	0 8
SONNENSCHN, A. GERMAN GRAMMATICAL READER. Preface by H. W. EVE, M.A. ...	3 6
STORY, A. T. WILLIAM BLAKE. 2s. 6d.; Large Paper ...	10 6
STRAHAN, J. A. K., M.D. SUICIDE and INSANITY ...	5 0
STRASBURGER and HILLHOUSE, Profs. PRACTICAL BOTANY. 3rd Ed. ...	9 0
SWANN, H. K. THE BIRDS of LONDON ...	2 0
THEAL, G. MCCALL. HISTORY of S. AFRICA. Vol. IV. (1831-48) ...	15 0
TUTT, J. W. RANDOM RECOLLECTIONS of WOODLAND, FEN, and HILL ...	3 6
VINES, Prof. S. H., D.Sc., F.L.S. THE STUDENT'S BOTANY. Part I. Illustrated ...	7 6
WAWN, Capt. W. THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDERS ...	15 0
WILLIAMS, E. ALDRED. FIRST BOOK of FRACTIONS ...	2 6
WILSON, G. R., M.D. DRUNKENNESS ...	2 6
WORTHINGTON, LOCKE, A.R.I.B.A. DWELLINGS of the POOR ...	2 6
ZIEHEN, Dr. T. PHYSIOLOGICAL PSYCHOLOGY ...	6 0

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EXAMINATIONS, 1894.

THE PITT PRESS SHAKESPEARE.

"For schoolboys of fourteen and upwards this edition is not to be beaten, and we can congratulate Mr. Verity and the University Press upon the publication of what will probably become the standard school edition of this play."—GUARDIAN.

A Midsummer Night's Dream. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Glossary, by A. W. VERITY, M.A., sometime Scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge. Second Edition. 1s. 6d.

THE CAMBRIDGE HILTON FOR SCHOOLS.

Milton.—Paradise Lost. Books I, II. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Indexes, by A. W. VERITY, M.A. 2s.

A NEW MANUAL for CONFIRMATION CANDIDATES. The Church Catechism Explained. By the Rev. A. W. ROBINSON, M.A., Jesus College, Cambridge, Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Wakefield. 2s.

PITT PRESS SERIES.

The Elements of English Grammar.

By ALFRED S. WEST, M.A., Trinity College, Cambridge. 2s. 6d. "Will soon become a standard text in elementary schools, and mark an epoch in the teaching of English Grammar."—GUARDIAN.

Prosper Merimée.—Colomba. Edited by ARTHUR R. ROPES, M.A. 2s.

Casimir Delavigne.—Louis XI. Edited by H. W. EVE, M.A. 2s.

Klee.—Die deutschen Heldensagen (HAGEN UND HILDE UND GUDRUN). Edited by H. J. WOLSTENHOLME, B.A., Lond. 3s.

Gutzkow.—Zopp und Schwert. Edited by H. J. WOLSTENHOLME, B.A., Lond. 3s. 6d.

Caesar.—De Bello Gallico. Book VII. Edited by A. G. PESKETT, M.A. 2s.

Vergil.—Aeneid. Book IX. Edited by A. SIDGWICK, M.A. 1s. 6d.

Livy. Book VI. Edited by the Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A. 2s. 6d.

Cicero.—De Senectute. Edited by J. S. REID, LL.D. 3s. 6d.

Xenophon.—Anabasis. Book IV. Edited by A. PRETOR, M.A. 2s.

Euripides.—Hecuba. Edited by W. S. HADLEY, M.A. [Preparing.]

Herodotus. Book VI. Edited by E. S. SHUCKBURGH, M.A. 4s.

Plato.—Crito. Edited by J. ADAM, M.A. 2s. 6d.

Plato.—Euthyphro. Edited by J. ADAM, M.A. 2s. 6d.

MATHEMATICS, &c.

Heat. An Elementary Text-book, Theoretical and Practical, for Colleges and Schools. By R. T. GLAZEBROOK, M.A., F.R.S., Assistant Director of the Cavendish Laboratory. 3s. [CAMBRIDGE NATURAL SCIENCE MANUALS.]

Light. By R. T. GLAZEBROOK, M.A., F.R.S. [Nearly ready.]

Arithmetic for Schools. With or without Answers. By C. SMITH, M.A. 3s. 6d.

Euclid's Elements of Geometry. Books I.—VI. Edited by H. M. TAYLOR, M.A. 4s. Books I. and II., 1s. 6d. Books III. and IV., 1s. 6d. Books V. and VI., 1s. 6d.

Elementary Algebra. By W. W. ROUSE BALL, M.A. 4s. 6d.

An Elementary Treatise on Plane Trigonometry. By E. W. HOBSON, Sc.D., F.R.S., and C. M. JESSOP, M.A. 4s. 6d.

Plane Trigonometry. By S. L. LONEY, M.A. 7s. 6d. Part I., up to and including the Solution of Triangles, is published separately. 5s.

Mechanics and Hydrostatics for Beginners. By S. L. LONEY, M.A. 4s. 6d.

Elements of Statics and Dynamics. By S. L. LONEY, M.A. Third Edition. 7s. 6d.

Part I. THE ELEMENTS of STATICS. 4s. 6d.
Part II. THE ELEMENTS of DYNAMICS. 3s. 6d.

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS,
CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PAGE

WINCHESTER COLLEGE, 1393-1893, by LIONEL JOHNSON . . .	73
MR. LELAND'S MEMOIRS, by WALTER LEWIN . . .	75
THE PARTISAN, by the Rev. M. G. WATKINS . . .	76
MISS SYMONDS'S DAYS SPENT ON A DOVE'S FARM, by REGINALD HUGHES . . .	77
NEW NOVELS, by WILLIAM SHARP . . .	78
SOME VOLUMES OF TRANSLATION . . .	79
NOTES AND NEWS . . .	80
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS . . .	80
ORIGINAL VERSE: "WINTER EXILE IN THE SOUTH," by SIR GEORGE DUFF GLAIS . . .	81
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS . . .	81
TENNYSONIANA, II., by P. E. N. . .	81
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS . . .	81
CORRESPONDENCE— The North British Inscriptions, III., by E. W. B. Nicholson; The Name of Golsipie, by Sir Herbert Maxwell . . .	81
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK . . .	82
THREE BOOKS ON THE THEORY OF FUNCTIONS . . .	83
THE GREEK MSS. USED BY ST. JEROME, by the BISHOP OF SALISBURY and the Rev. H. J. WHITE . . .	83
CORRESPONDENCE— The Prevalence of -s Plurality in English, by Prof. Earle . . .	84
SCIENCE NOTES . . .	81
PHILOLOGY NOTES . . .	81
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES . . .	85
TWO BOOKS ON INSCRIPTIONS . . .	85
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY . . .	86
NEW PANTOMIME, by F. WEDMORE . . .	86
STAGE NOTES . . .	87
RECENT CONCERTS, by J. B. SHERLOCK . . .	87
MUSIC NOTES . . .	87

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & Co., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS

115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List—115, Fleet Street, London.

TO PUBLISHERS.—A GENTLEMAN

of experience in Magazine and Weekly Newspaper management open to another ENGAGEMENT. Highest references.—"Bewick," Tree Cottage, Southgate Green, N.

A LADY has a superb collection of old OAK FURNITURE, FOR SALE, cheap, consisting of rare Cabinet, with genuine old date upon it, Corner Cupboard, Grandfather's brass-face Clocks, Dower Chest, massive Wardrobe, and Tam-o-Shanter Table; all richly carved; suitable for gentleman's mansion; seen here, or sketches forwarded.—"Lady," Cromwell House, Morton, near Northallerton.

WANTED, a TEACHER of MODERN and ANCIENT GREEK. Must be able to speak Greek and be also well versed in the Literature.

Apply by letter, Central School of Foreign Tongues, Howard House, Arundel Street, Strand.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL

MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private nursing, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STOKER, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to best

University or Army Tutor, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained (free of charge) by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. BEYER, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

MR. KIRWAN.—LESSONS in SPEECH

Illustrated Dramatic Readings (a combination of speech, pictures, and music). Selections. Literary Lectures.—Address, 3, Vernon Place, W.C.

BYRON — SHELLEY — KEATS: IN

MEMORIAL ENDOWED YEARLY PRIZES for the BEST ESSAY in ENGLISH, written by a Woman of any nation. Third set. With Portrait of Foundress and "Gossyp." 1s. 6d.—For rules, send addressed halfpenny wrapper to Rose Mary Crawshaw, Bwlch, Breconshire.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS

and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 23 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bow Court, Fleet Street, E.C., are prepared to undertake the Printing and Publishing of first-class Newspapers, Magazines, Books, Catalogues, Pamphlets, Prospectuses, Articles of Association, Minutes of Evidence, &c., in the best style. Their offices are fitted with the latest improvements in Rotary and other Machinery, the most modern English and Foreign Type, and they employ none but first-class workmen. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 2759. Telegraph, "Africanism London."

THE COLONIAL COLLEGE and

TRAINING FARMS (Limited),

Hollisley Bay, Suffolk.

For the Training of those destined for Colonial Life, &c.
The College owns and farms for the instruction of its students a fine Seaside Estate of 1,800 acres.
Prospectus on application to the RESIDENT DIRECTOR.

GRESHAM COLLEGE,

BASINGHALL STREET, E.C.

LECTURES on the GEOMETRY of CHANCE, by KARL PEARSON, M.A. (Gresham Professor of Geometry). TUESDAY, JANUARY 30, ON GUESSES and GESSING; WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 31, ON TESTOTUMS; THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 1, PROBLEMS in EVOLUTION; FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 2, EVOLUTION in MAN. The Lectures will be illustrated by Lantern and Diagram. They commence at 6 p.m., and are FREE to the Public.

ANCIENT ART.—TALFOURD ELY,

M.A., F.S.A., will give, in the LECTURE THEATRE, SOUTH KENSINGTON MUSEUM (by permission of the Lords of the Committee of Council on Education), at 8 p.m., on SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 10th, a PUBLIC LECTURE on "THE ARTS of EGYPT and ASSYRIA in their RELATION to those of GREECE." The Lecture will be illustrated by the Oxy-hydrogen Lantern. Mr. ELY will also give, at 2.45 p.m., on FEBRUARY 13th, 15th, 20th, and 22nd, DEMONSTRATIONS on ANTIQUITIES in the BRITISH MUSEUM (by permission of the Trustees). For details and for tickets (price 1s.; Teachers and Schools at half fee) write to Mr. ELY, 73, Parliament Hill Road, Hampstead, N.W. The Public will be admitted to the Introductory Lecture without payment or tickets.

MINERALOGY.

Mr. G. SYNGE, F.G.S., is willing to take a FEW STUDENTS in his LABORATORY for the following ELEMENTARY COURSE, to begin on FEBRUARY 1st, and finish JUNE 30th.—Chemical Analysis (Qualitative), Microscopic Analysis, Spectrum Analysis, Blowpipe Analysis, Crystallography, Determination by Hardness by Specific Gravity, Magnetic Properties, &c.
Special arrangements for Ladies wishing to Study the Elementary Branches of this subject.
For particulars and Syllabus of Course apply by letter, any time, to Mr. G. Syngé, Addison Studios, Blythe Road, W. Kensington; or personally, any Wednesday morning between 11 and 1. Kindly enclose visiting card.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.—The WINTER EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN (till 6 p.m., and is lighted by Electricity at dusk and on dark days.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS

promptly supplied on moderate terms.

CATALOGUES on application.

DULAU &amp; CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS &amp; NORGATE,

Importers of Foreign Books,

11, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN

AND

20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

This day is published, in 1 vol., price 4s.

THE DUBLIN UNIVERSITY CALENDAR

FOR 1894.

Also, price 4s.,

DUBLIN EXAMINATION PAPERS:

Being a Supplement to the "University Calendar for 1894."
HODGES, FIGGIS & Co., Ltd., Dublin. LONGMANS & Co., London.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY

74, New Oxford Street, London,

Is remarkable for its Display of Copies of Celebrated Works of

THE GREAT MASTERS.

Reproductions of the most important Paintings in the following Collections:—

NATIONAL GALLERY, LONDON,

BUCKINGHAM PALACE,

WINDSOR CASTLE,

UFFIZI, FLORENCE,

PITTI, FLORENCE,

ACADEMY OF FINE ARTS,

FLORENCE,

AMSTERDAM,

THE HAGUE,

LOUVRE, PARIS,

LUXEMBOURG, PARIS,

ROYAL GALLERY, DRESDEN,

HERMITAGE, ST. PETERS-

BURG.

PRADO, MADRID,

VATICAN, ROME,

HAARLEM,

FRANKFORT,

THE PARIS SALONS.

A LARGE COLLECTION of EXAMPLES of MODERN FRENCH and ENGLISH ART in SELECTED FRAMES suitable for HALL, LIBRARY, DRAWING-ROOM BOUDOIR, &c.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE of 181 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 68 Miniature Photographs of notable Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

AUTOTYPE: a DECORATIVE and EDUCATIONAL ART.

NEW PAMPHLET—FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

THE WEARIED CHRIST, and other

Sermons. By Rev. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

"Very frank in tone, and modern in application."

The Bookman.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

PAUL'S PRAYERS, and other Sermons.

"As striking and suggestive as any Dr. MacLaren has published.....The book is full of helpful thoughts."

Christian World.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

THE GOD of the AMEN, and other

Sermons.

"Replete with a keen spiritual insight, combined with an aptness of illustration and beauty of diction which cannot fail to both impress and charm the reader."—Methodist Times.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

THE HOLY of HOLIES: a Series of Sermons

on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other

Sermons.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, PUBLISHERS, 21 and 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.; and all Booksellers.

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL.

By PERCY RUSSELL.

With Prefatory Remarks by Mr. GLADSTONE.

Sixth Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s.

With Portrait.

The WESTMINSTER REVIEW says: "A very complete manual and guide for journalist and author. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense..... We have little else but praise for the volume."

DIGBY, LONG & CO., PUBLISHERS, 18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND &amp; CO.'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,

MAYFAIR, W.

PREMIER

"VINOLIA" SOAP

FOR THE HOUSEHOLD COSTS

4d. A TABLET.

BREAKFAST—SUPPER

EPPS'S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

COCOA

BOILING WATER OR MILK.

THE "BORDER" WAVERLEY.

READY FEBRUARY 1st.

ST. RONAN'S WELL. 2 vols.

TEN ETCHINGS by and after Sir GEORGE REID, P.R.S.A., W. HOLE, R.S.A., A. FORESTIER, and R. W. MACBETH, A.R.A.

Introduction and Notes by ANDREW LANG.

LONDON: JOHN C. NIMMO, 14, KING WILLIAM STREET, STRAND.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE,

No. 940.—FEBRUARY, 1894.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS.—THE RICH MISS RIDDELL, by Dorothea GEBARD.—DEAN STANLEY.—GHOSTS BEFORE THE LAW, by Andrew Lang.—SALMON-FLIES, by Sir Herbert Maxwell, Bart., M.P.—THE STORY OF MARGRÉDEL: BEING A FIFESIDE HISTORY OF A FIFESIDE FAMILY. Chaps. X.-XIII.—THE GOVERNMENT AND SCOTTISH AFFAIRS.—A SONO OF GLEN DUN.—COREYMERLA, by Moira O'Neill.—AYESHA—A WIFE OF THE PROPHET MUHAMMAD, by Walter B. Harris.—THIRTY YEARS OF SHIKAR—III., by Sir Edward Braddon.—THE RIGHT HON. EDWARD STANHOPE.—THE END.—ARMED EUROPE: SEA POWER, by General Sir Archibald Alison, Bart., G.C.B.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD &amp; SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

FEBRUARY.

THE LATE PROFESSOR TYNDALL. By HERBERT SPENCER. OXFORD REVISITED. By Prof. GOLWYN SMITH. FABIAN ECONOMICS. By W. H. MALLOCK. SCIENCE AND MONTE CARLO. By Prof. KARL PEARSON. ANTARCTICA: a Vanished Austral Land. By HENRY O. FORBES. A LONDON HOUSE OF SHELTER. By HAROLD BOULTON. THE ITALY OF TO-DAY. By AN OBSERVER. THE LIFE AND WORKS OF REMBRANDT. By WALTER ARMSTRONG. THE EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY BILL. By VAUGHAN NASH. THE RELIGION OF THE PIANOFORTE. By G. BERNARD SHAW. THE REVOLT OF THE DAUGHTERS. By Lady JECNE.

CHAPEMAN &amp; HALL, Ltd.

FEBRUARY, 1894. Price 1s.

THE NEW REVIEW.

Edited by ARCHIBALD GROVE.

CONTENTS.

THE CHILDREN OF NELSON. By "NAUTICUS." SOME IMPRESSIONS OF AMERICA. (Concluded.) By WALTER CRANE. IS THE HOPE OF OUR CENTURY AN ILLUSION? By the Hon. ALGERNON LEECH. HISTORIC DUELS. (Illustrated.) By EIGHTON CASTLE. THE PREACHING OF CHRIST AND THE PRACTICE OF HIS CHURCHES. (A Reply to Count Tolstol.) 1. By the Right Reverend the Bishop of Ripon. 2. By the Venerable the Archdeacon of London. 3. By the Rev. J. RICKAST, S.J. 4. By the Rev. J. GUINNESS ROGERS. THE THEATRE LIBRE OF PARIS. (Illustrated.) By MARIE ADLAIDE BELLOC. NIHILISM: as it is: a Reply. By STEFANIA. JOHN LOCKE'S POCKET-BOOK. (Illustrated.) By GEORGE WILLIAMSON, D.L. THE NATIONAL LIFEBOAT INSTITUTION and its CRITICS: a Reply. By CHARLES W. MACARA (Committee, National Lifeboat Institution). A COMMONPLACE CHAPTER.—I. By HUBERT CRACKANTHORPE. CHESS. (With Problems) By I. OUSGERS.

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

THE

ENGLISH HISTORICAL REVIEW.

Edited by S. R. GARDINER, M.A., LL.D.

No. 33, JANUARY.

Royal 8vo, price 5s.

1. Articles.
THE BATTLE OF HASTINGS. Part I. By T. A. ARCHER.
THE BATTLE OF HASTINGS. Part II. By Miss KATH NORDGATE.
PIETER CORNELISZON HOOFT. By the Rev. GEORGE EDMONDSON.
THE ROYAL NAVY UNDER CHARLES I. Part II. By M. OFFENHEIM.
2. Notes and Documents.—3. Reviews of Books.—4. Correspondence.—5. List of Historical Books recently published.—6. Contents of Periodical Publications.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.
New York 15 East 16th Street.

THE GEOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL.

SUMMARY OF CONTENTS. FEBRUARY. Price 2s.

KURDISTAN. By Captain F. R. MAUNSELL, R.A.
THE GEOGRAPHY OF MAMMALS. By W. L. SLATER, M.A., F.Z.S.
THE SOUTHERN PLATEAU OF BOLIVIA, By CHARLES M. S. PASLEY.
TWO BOOKS ON CENTRAL ASIA.
THE SIBERIAN SEA: the Nansen Expedition. By Capt. WIGGINS.
COMMERCIAL GEOGRAPHY. By Dr. MILL.
GEOGRAPHY at the CHICAGO EXHIBITION. By CHARLES T. CONNER, B.A.
ITALIAN EXPLORATIONS in the JUD BASIN. By E. G. RAVENSTEIN.
THE EASTERN MEDITERRANEAN.
THE MONTHLY RECORD.
CORRESPONDENCE: The Determination of Longitudes by Photography. G. SCHLICHTER.—The Sea Route to Siberia. J. PROCTER.
OBITUARY: Sir Samuel White Baker. By E. O. RAVENSTEIN.
MEETINGS OF THE ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY, SESSION 1893-94.—GEOGRAPHICAL LITERATURE OF THE MONTH.—NEW MAPS.

London: EDWARD STANFORD, 25 and 27, Cockspur Street.

MUDIE'S

SELECT

LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.
COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.
N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.
LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY,
10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;
241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of
HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,
the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronized by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.
Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

DAVID DOUGLAS'S LIST.

2 vols., demy 8vo, 32s.

FAMILIAR LETTERS OF
SIR WALTER SCOTT.

From Originals at Abbotsford and elsewhere.

"In perusing these fascinating pages we seem to live Sir Walter's life over again along with him."
Daily Telegraph.

2 vols., demy 8vo, 32s.; and 1 vol., crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE JOURNAL OF
SIR WALTER SCOTT."Reads like a romance."—Scotsman."As thrilling as any tragedy."—Times.

1 vol., crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

S A C R I F I C E :

ITS PROPHECY AND FULFILMENT.

The Baird Lecture for 1892-93. By ARCHIBALD SCOTT, D.D., Minister of St. George's, Edinburgh, Author of "Buddhism and Christianity: a Parallel and a Contrast."

2 vols., demy 8vo, Illustrated, 25s.

THE HEREDITARY SHERIFFS OF GALLOWAY.

Their "Forbears" and Friends, their Courts and Customs of the Times, with Notes of the Early History, Ecclesiastical Legends, the Baronage, and Place Names of the Province. By the late Sir ANDREW AGNEW, Bart., of Lochmaw.

In demy 8vo, Vol. I., now ready, 12s. 6d.

HISTORY OF THE SCOTTISH CHURCH.

By W. STEPHEN,

Rector of St. Augustine's, Dumbarton.

3 vols., demy 8vo, 45s.

CELTIC SCOTLAND:
A HISTORY OF ANCIENT ALBAN.

By the late WILLIAM F. SKENE, D.C.L., LL.D., Historiographer-Royal for Scotland. Second Edition, carefully Revised by the Author, with a new Index to the entire Work.

Vol. I.—HISTORY and ETHNOLOGY. 15s.

Vol. II.—CHURCH and CULTURE. 15s.

Vol. III.—LAND and PEOPLE. 15s.

3 vols., crown 8vo, 22s. 6d.

H O R Æ S U B S E C I V Æ.

By JOHN BROWN, M.D., F.R.S.E.

Vol. I.—LOCKE and SYDENHAM. Sixth Edition, with Portrait by James Faed, 7s. 6d.

Vol. II.—RAB and his FRIENDS. Fourteenth Edition, 7s. 6d.

Vol. III.—JOHN LEECH. Sixth Edition, with Portrait by Sir George Reid, P.R.S.A. 7s. 6d.

EDINBURGH: DAVID DOUGLAS, 10, CASTLE STREET
LONDON: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON,
KENT & CO., LIMITED.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

CONTENTS for FEBRUARY, 1894.

- I. A BEGINNER. By Rhoda Broughton. Chaps. IV.—VI.
- II. EARLY RECOLLECTIONS of TENNYSON.
- III. "CIASCUNA E CITTADINA D'UNA VERA CITTA."
- IV. THEOPHRASTE RENAUDOT.
- V. A WORD for HANNAH MORE.
- VI. A BIT of BLUE RIBBON.
- VII. IMPRESSIONS of RAJPUTANA.—I. JODHPORE.
- VIII. THE GREATER GLORY. Chaps. LIII.—LVIII.
- IX. THE GAUCHOS at HOME.
- X. AN INTERLOPER. By FRANCES MARY PEABD. Chaps. IV.—VI.

NEW WORKS.

FREDERIC HILL: an Autobiography of Fifty Years in Times of Reform. Being the Recollections of a Retired Civil Servant. By his Daughter, CONSTANCE HILL. 1 vol., demy 8vo, with Portrait, 16s.

"The pages teem with good stories and pieces of history, local and national, political and literary, all told with a charming simplicity and distinctness."

Birmingham Daily Gazette.

THE PRIVATE LIFE of NAPOLEON. From the French of Arthur Lévy, by STEPHEN LOUIS SIMEON, Translator of "The Youth of Frederick the Great," &c. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 23s.

"The author has collected with rare skill and industry, from a vast literature of correspondence and memoirs, the more amiable and magnanimous traits of the great Corsican.....He has produced a book of fascinating interest, and thrown vivid and various lights on the whole period of which he treats."—Mr. W. E. H. LECKY on "Napoleon Intime," in the Pall Mall Gazette.

THE CONVERSATIONS of JAMES NORTHCOTE, R.A. Recorded by WILLIAM HAZLITT. A New Edition, Edited, with an Essay on Hazlitt and a Note on Northcote, by EDMUND GOSSE. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW WORKS OF FICTION.

READY THIS DAY.

THE GREATER GLORY.

By MAARTEN MAARTENS,
Author of "An Old Maid's Love," &c.
3 vols., crown 8vo.

SECOND EDITION.

DIANA TEMPEST. By Mary CHOLMONDELEY, Author of "Sir Charles Danvers," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The brightness of Diana, her good sense, and her loyalty, make her worth a dozen of ordinary heroines. Altogether the novel will be found exceptionally entertaining, and fully meriting the popularity it is likely to obtain."—Graphic.

The VICAR of LANGTHWAITE
By LILY WATSON. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BRITOMART. By Mrs. Herbert MARTIN, Author of "Bonnie Lesley," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A truly beautiful story. It is the purpose of this delightful book to demonstrate the power of a pure and valiant woman to make the world better. 'Britomart' will rank among the most noteworthy literary productions of the year."

Daily Telegraph.

SPEEDWELL. By Lady Guen-DOLEN RAMSDEN. 1 vol., crown 8vo.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

LABOUR AND THE POPULAR WELFARE.

Crown 8vo, price 6s.

BY

W. H. MALLOCK,

Author of "Is Life Worth Living?" "Social Equality," &c.

Vol. I., demy 8vo, price 15s.

THE PRINCIPLES OF POLITICAL ECONOMY.

BY

J. SHIELD NICHOLSON,

Professor of Political Economy in the University of Edinburgh.

Crown 8vo, price 5s.

THE PROCESS OF ARGUMENT: A Contribution to Logic.

BY

ALFRED SIDGWICK,

Author of "Fallacies," "Distinction and the Criticism of Beliefs," &c.

Demy 8vo, price 21s.

A YEAR AMONGST THE PERSIANS.

BY

EDWARD G. BROWNE, M.A., M.B.,

Fellow of Pembroke College, and Lecturer in Persian to the University of Cambridge.

Crown 8vo, Illustrated, price 7s. 6d.

OUR LIFE IN THE SWISS HIGHLANDS.

BY

JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS

And his DAUGHTER MARGARET.

In 2 vols., post 8vo, price 25s.

THE REMAINS OF ANCIENT ROME.

BY

J. HENRY MIDDLETON,

Director of the South Kensington Museum.

Illustrated with 102 Wood Engravings and 4 Coloured Plans.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

WHERE TO GO ABROAD.
A Guide to the Watering-Places and Health Resorts of Europe, The Mediterranean, &c., and including a Trip through India.
Edited by A. R. HOPE-MONCRIEFF.

A. & C. BLACK, Soho Square, London, W.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

DOD'S PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, and KNIGHTAGE for 1894.

Crown 8vo, over 1,000 pages, handsomely bound, cloth extra gilt, gilt edges, 10s. 6d.

"Aims at giving a great deal of information in a small space, and signally succeeds in doing so. For purposes of rapid reference it has no competitor."—Athenaeum.

The ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER'S DIARY for 1894.

Arranged by RALPH HINDLE BAKER.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

"Mr. Baker has provided all that is necessary to an organist or choirmaster for keeping a record of everything appertaining to his church and choir, in the handiest possible form."—Daily Telegraph.

CHEAP EDITIONS AT ALL BOOKSELLERS.

Uniform crown 8vo Volumes, bound in cloth, HALF-A-CROWN per Volume.

DONALD ROSS of HEIMRA. By WILLIAM BLACK.

CRIPPS the CARRIER. By R. D. BLACKMORE.

JACK'S COURTSHIP. By W. Clark RUSSELL.

SECOND EDITIONS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE HANDSOME HUMES.

By WILLIAM BLACK.

In 3 vols.

"Told with all the grace and charm of Mr. William Black's familiar narrative style....A refreshing wholesomeness of thought and tone pervades Mr. Black's excellent book."—Daily Telegraph.

THE EMIGRANT SHIP.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL.

In 3 vols.

"Movement and incident crowd in every chapter, and the prettiest little love-story flows as an undercurrent among these billows of adventure."—Pall Mall Gazette.

NEW NOVELS AND STORIES

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

The WAY THEY LOVED at GRIMPAT

By E. RENTOUL ESLER. 1 vol., 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"Should score one of the most solid literary successes of the season."

"A book of peculiar charm."—Speaker. [Daily Telegraph].

A PRISONER of WAR.

By F. A. INDERWICK, Q.C. Author of "Sidelights on the Stuarts," &c.

Illustrated after Drawings by William Padget. Small post 8vo, 3s.

"A graceful product of a busy man's leisure hours, and well deserves the small expenditure of time it takes to read. The illustrations are very pretty."—Westminster Gazette.

CLAUDEA'S ISLAND.

By Esmé STUART, Author of "Virginie's Husband," "Joan Vollaardt," &c.

1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"The story is finely conceived, most excellently told; while the book is further commended to the reader's approval by the superior style in which it is produced."—Manchester Courier.

WOE to the CONQUERED, B.C. 53.

By ALFRED CLARK, Author of "A Dark Place of the Earth."

2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

"The story is eminently readable."—Scotsman.

A WITCH'S LEGACY.

By Hesketh J. BELL, Author of "Obeah: Witchcraft in the West Indies," &c.

2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

THE TRIUMPH of THERESA: a

Novel. By JEFFREY ARDEN. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

"A book to be read....There are some cleverly drawn characters, and some interesting situations."—Daily Telegraph.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE.

FEBRUARY NUMBER.

CONTENTS.

EDWARD BURNE-JONES. Cosmo Monrehouse. Illustrations from Pictures by Mr. Burne-Jones.

JOHN MARSH. SOUTHERNER. GEORGE W. CANE. Chapters VIII.—XV. (To be continued.)

"THERE IS NO OTHER LIFE BUT THE ETERNAL" (Last written words of Phillips Brooks.) Mrs. JAMES T. FIELDS.

THE SCHOOLMASTER. (Illustrated.) JAMES BALWIN. (The Seventh Article in the Series on "Men's Occupations.")

MR. LOWELL on ART-PRINCIPLES. FRANK LOCKWOOD.

ORCHIDS. (Illustrated.) W. A. STILES.

ON PIRATE SHIPS: a Merchant's Voyages to the West Indies in 1805. PETER A. GROGAN.

A NIGHT SONG. ARTHUR SHERBURN HARDY.

DEEP as FIRST LOVE. MARY TAPPAN WRIGHT.

THE GLASS. M. L. FAR VORST.

THE SEA ISLAND ILLUSTRATIONS: the Devastation. (Illustrated.) JOHN CHANDLER HARRIS.

GUNDINGGIA.

THE PRAYER of the HUMBLE. (With Frontispiece.) PHILIP GILBERT HAMERTON.

AN UNSIGNED PORTRAIT. ROBERT HOWARD RUSSELL.

A LADY of the LINE. GEORGE I. PUTNAM.

&c. &c.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 27, 1894.

No. 1134, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Winchester College, 1393-1893. By Old Wykehamists. Illustrated by Herbert Marshall. Published in Commemoration of the 500th Anniversary of the Opening of the College. (Edward Arnold.)

THIS volume, whatever else be done in commemoration of the five hundredth anniversary of Winchester College, will always have an interest and importance of its own, in connexion with that happy event. Its editor has secured a pleasing variety and unity: the prose, the verse, and the illustrations, diversify agreeably the theme common to them all. The artist, Mr. Herbert Marshall, is not less successful in rendering the beauty of Winchester than he has shown himself in his treatment of London and of Eton. His thirty-three illustrations are chosen and designed with complete success. One might wish that he had given us a drawing of Hall to include the east end of the interior; but that is the only discoverable omission of any note. Wykehamists will thank him the more heartily in that he has worked so well to adorn a Wykehamical book, just as they would have it adorned, though himself but a guest among Wykehamists.

The first part of the volume contains twelve essays; the second, ten poems, three of them in Latin. The papers excellently carry out the design of the work in subject and arrangement. Lord Selborne writes upon "Wykeham's Place in History," Mr. A. F. Leach upon "Wykeham's Models," the Head Master upon "Wykeham's Conception of a Public School," Mr. Hardy upon "The College Buildings," the Dean of Winchester upon "Wykeham's Work in the Cathedral," the Bursar upon "Commoners until Dr. Burton," the Rev. W. P. Smith upon "Life in College in the Sixteenth Century," Mr. F. Haverfield upon "Winchester in the Seventeenth Century," Mr. H. A. L. Fisher upon "Winchester in the Eighteenth Century," the late Head Master of Wellington upon "Life in College about 1850," Mr. A. O. Prickard upon "Life in Commoners," and Mr. A. K. Cook upon "Hills, Meads, and Games."

The ground is very fairly covered, and very judiciously; the chief, perhaps the sole, omission is "Winchester in the Fifteenth Century." The period is no easy one to handle, nor the materials very ready to hand; but we should have welcomed an essay upon life and learning at Winchester in the boyhood of Grocyn, or of Stanbridge, or of Warham. It is unnecessary to speak of the papers by Lord Selborne, Dr. Fearon, and Dean Kitchin; the names speak for themselves, and for the writers' qualifications to say the right things in the right way. Mr. Leach's investigation into Wykeham's Models results in a certain novelty of view, which may not be wholly accepted by all. He has proved his point, that Wykeham found his models in the old collegiate churches; and his accounts of the Valley Scholars' College at Salisbury, of Merton College at Maldon, and of various other institutions, with their points of similarity to Wykeham's foundation, are of the highest interest. But it is something of an assumption to suggest that Wykeham's attitude towards monastic establishments and ideals was that of Bishops Oldham and Foxe more than a century later. To call monasticism, as it existed in and before Wykeham's day, "the newest method for stultifying human nature" is a prejudiced piece of strong language, inappropriate in a book of this sort. That the need of the times was for secular clergy of learning is clear enough; but writers, perfectly familiar with the technical meaning of "secular," yet often use the word as though it implied something less clerical and ecclesiastical than does "regular." Wykeham's "poor clerical scholars," who were to receive the prima tonsura clericalis in the first year, on pain of expulsion, and to have no bodily disqualification ad sacros ordines suscipiendos, were destined to be celibate priests, equipped by learning to be an active militia of the Church, with their human nature no less "stultified" than that of the monks. And there is some doubt about Mr. Leach's plausible contention, that the Priory School of St. Swithun was "a mere school for novices." He relies in part upon the use of the word "youths," not "boys," in the monastery documents. But Mr. Moberly, in his Life of the Founder, draws attention to a document, printed by Lowth, which at once confirms Mr. Leach in his statement that Wykeham did not "take over and enlarge" the Priory School in founding his College; and which also seems to show that boys (pueri) were trained in that school. The Prior's deed of institution for Wykeham's chantry makes distinct mention of pueri living in the Elemosinarium of the Priory. But Mr. Leach's paper is full of suggestion, and certainly valuable.

Mr. Hardy's account of the College buildings is concise, yet ample. The next paper, that of Mr. Kirby, the Bursar, is unquestionably the most important of the historical contributions. It practically puts "Commoners," in point of antiquity, upon a level with "College," tracing the fortunes and defining the status of extranei from the Founder to Dr. Burton, in whose headmastership "Commoners," in the full modern sense, began. The paper is compact and hard to summarise intelligibly. It is enough to say that it carefully notes and distinguishes all varieties of Commoners, whether Wykeham's ten extranei, who lived over Fifth Chamber, and became divided into commensales cum sociis and commensales cum pueris, or the headmaster's boarders, with their various places of residence. "Street commoners" (commensales extra collegium) and town day-boys are also explained. The paper is rich in information upon the least familiar topic of Wykehamical history.

The three next papers, if they contain less that is practically new, are written with great charm and skill. The Reformation and Counter-Reformation in England had no little effect upon Winchester. The college produced a singularly large number of Papal champions, and at least four martyrs. It is curious to reflect upon the domestic troubles which turned a Welsh Wykehamist into the Vicar-General of Saint Charles Borromeo at Milan; or to consider the fates of Saunder and Garnet, the fame of Stapleton, Harpsfield, Pits. It is a misfortune that the names of great divines and of the lesser men of letters in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries are not better known; otherwise Wykehamists would recognise more honourable and distinguished names than they commonly do among their predecessors. Mr. Smith, Mr. Haverfield, and Mr. Fisher have done all that is possible in brief space, each with his allotted century; and their pictures are pleasant, all things considered, to contemplate. We may note that Mr. Fisher is something less than just in mentioning but five Wykehamists among Peninsula heroes, of "San Sebastiano's And Badajos's town," as we used to sing: besides them there are Sir Andrew Barnard, Sir Burgess Carmac, Field-Marshal Sir Charles Yorke, to name but these. There is little positive greatness of any kind in the Winchester of the two last centuries; but it is striking to observe how strongly and tenaciously the College held its own, and refused to be permanently damaged by any amount of time-serving, or neglect, or sluggishness, or maladministration. It produces now Ken, Browne, Otway, Norris, Shaftesbury, Collins, names of unquestioned eminence; now such lesser men as Phillips, Somerville, Young, Whitehead, Pitt, or Zouch or Spence. In later times, Sydney Smith, and Ward, and Trollope may record their misery at school; but, at least, it was not enough to dull their powers of mind—it hurt them less than Eton, partly by his own fault, hurt Shelley. And, reading through the records and registers of Winchester, we cannot but take note of the many Wykehamists who, without brilliance of any kind, have perfectly fulfilled the Founder's wishes, and played their parts well in their generations. The writers of these three papers have felicitously drawn for us the Winchester of old times, no longer mediæval, but not yet modern, after the first revival of learning, and before the second, during which the Wykehamist spirit was at work, no less strongly and well than now, moulding the manners that make man. And the successive headmasters under whom Winchester flourished, aurea mediocritate, were Burton, Warton, and Goddard, three most honoured names—such a man with some positive genius for the work of an Informator.

The records of Mr. Wickham and Mr. Prickard deal with the College and Commoners of some forty years ago. Both papers, and especially the latter, fairly glow with genial affection and humour and loyalty. They are exceedingly minute and detailed: only a great love or a great loathing could have so faithfully remembered, what are trifles indeed, but capable of becoming most pleasant or painful recollections. It is hard to set the right value upon such reminiscences as materials of history. Here is a MS. letter in the present writer's possession: a refusal to attend the annual Wykehamist dinner in London:

"Sr. Wm. Maynard's compts. to Mr. Atwood and returns him the Ticket for the Winchester School Feast, as he has refused the Stewards the two preceding years, having so little claim to the honour of being deemed a Wykehamist, as his stay at Winchester School was exceeding short and when he was extremely young, and has not yet forgot the hardships he then felt.

"Grosvenor-square: Febr'y. 3, 1761."

Here is plain speaking; but others, who confess to having suffered greatly in their early school-days, see even their griefs and grievances under a pleasant light of association with youth and old companions and the days that were. "Faithful are the wounds of a friend": there can hardly have been a time at which the benefits of Winchester did not exceed the injuries. Certainly, Winchester life has, at all times, a way of making its least pleasant side seem easy and natural to bear, humorous and dear to look back upon. Since the days of which Mr. Wickham and Mr. Prickard write, great have been the changes, notably as to Commoners; but readers of a later day can find in these descriptions and recollections just the same tone and spirit as animated their own Wykehamical lives. In the words of the Bishop of Southwell:

"Debitis vicibus perennia usus."

Mr. Cook brings the first part to a conclusion with his delightful paper upon "Hills, Meads, and Games." He is unable to find earlier record of Saint Catherine's Hill, in connexion with the College, than the poem of Christopher Jonson, headmaster in the sixteenth century; but from at least 1550 to 1868, processions thither and games there were a characteristic feature of Winchester life. It would not be amiss if once or twice a year "College," if not Commoners, went sociati upon Hills, preserving the memory of an ancient custom. Mr. Cook traces the growth and formation of Meads; the development of cricket, which was of little importance till the second quarter of the century, or thereabouts, but which has occasioned many a Wykehamical triumph since then, and immortalised many a Wykehamical name; the history of Winchester football, with its singular and unique peculiarities; and he concludes with brief notice of fives and the river. An absolutely unathletic Wykehamist can enjoy this paper, with its fascinating antiquarianism, and its freshness of the open air. Even to those who never rose beyond "junior game" in cricket or football, life can scarcely bring anything of more breathless excitement than "Eton Match" and "Six and Six."

The second part opens with a Hymnus Wiccamicus, by the Bishop of Salisbury; and if any living Latinist should be able to write Latin hymns not unworthy of mediæval days, it is the editor of the Vulgate. The other Latin poems are by the Bishop of Southwell, both in hendecasyllabics. "Ad Meos" is of the happiest beauty:—

"O pars magna mei, quot intus olim
Et curae et mihi gaudio fuistis,
Ut patri suboles amans amanti,
(Prosit vos subolem vocasse amantem!)
Si quondam tolerastis imperantem,
Nunc concurrite nomina invocanti."

After this "names-calling," the poem plays a descant upon the theme of "Domum."

"Una voce canamus ad Penates Dulcem Wiccamicamque cantilenam."

The other poem by the same hand, "Ad Wiccamicos," is of greater length and weight: it surveys the long history of Winchester, noting the endurance of all essentials amid all change of accidents. It is rich in such terse lines as these, recalling the reigns of Henry VIII. and Charles I., with the storms of their times, which passed harmlessly over Winchester—

"Non illam impietas benigna regis,
Non regis pietas maligna movit."

Of the English poems, clearly the best are Mr. E. D. A. Morshead's "Evening on Hills" and Mr. J. B. B. Nichols's "Half a Thousand Springs." The former is a reverie of natural beauty and classic memories, and poetry, and heroism, enshrining the two names of Keats, whom the downs of Winchester inspired with his "Ode to Autumn," and of Lord Seaton, a Wykehamist veteran, better known as Sir John Colborne, hero of Orthez and of Waterloo. Perhaps the first lines may be detached for quotation without injury:

"Here, where the legendary height
Is plumed with beech and pine,
And the dim shadows lengthen, and the streams
Wane to the southward in the waning light,
And the skies grow from dreamy to divine—
Here for five hundred years
Have lived their little life Youth's hopes and fears,
Here, in the Land of Dreams."

Mr. Nichols's fine poem is much in the tone of the Eton poems in Ionica, those perfect expositions of the public school spirit. Witness these two stanzas:

"Fair her silver walls,
Fair her meads and trees,
Fairer even than these
Something no man sees,
Yet within her halls
Hears it when it calls.

"Nor in vain it cries
Still from year to year
Sweet command and clear
To the reverent ear;
Who can recognise
Honour's voice, replies."

Canon Moberly contributes seven sonnets commemorating "famous men," our benefactors and exemplars, and the scenes dear to them as to us. Mr. F. S. Parry sings of "Alma Nutrix" in verse patriotic and stirring. But we would gladly discover any proof, or even tradition, that "Harry of Agincourt, flower of thy glory," was a Winchester Wykehamist: it is sufficiently doubtful whether he was an Oxford Wykehamist, Queen's and Oriel both claiming him, as well as New College. Mr. J. A.

Fort celebrates in bracing verse the joys and healthy memories of "Gray November," with "the strong hot fiercely straining." Mr. C. J. Billson, in "Vestigia Retrorsum," turns his steps back to "Itchen's stream," and early friendship and youthful dreams, with the glamour of romance upon them all. A compendious account of the proceedings at the five hundredth anniversary closes the goodly volume with great propriety.

This festival in celebration of half a thousand years was kept by Wykehamists in India with extreme devotion; and the president of the Simla gathering, an officer of the Bengal Staff Corps, made a speech rich in memories of forty years ago, enthusiastically proud of Winchester, and as racy of Wykehamical soil in its terms and phrases as if the speaker had never left it. There is beyond doubt a genius loci, which lays this unfailing spell upon Wykehamists, and forbids them to forget. Probably few Wykehamists can be found who feel for their university, however great their love for it, anything like their love for their school: that is of an altogether unique and incomparable character, and of the nature of a religious faith and a native patriotism. This by itself is more than enough to establish the Founder's fame and to demonstrate his success. Apart from all technical matters of education, this in itself is an education, a discipline, and a strength. All the writers in this book, be their theme an historical period, or manners and customs, or personal emotions, be they older or younger, have a marked family likeness in their way of speaking. There is no wordy sentiment in the book, no mere conventional superlatives, but there is struck a distinct note of "loyal passion." There is no attempt to prove Winchester the mother of very great men at any time. Her just honours are claimed for her, and no more. But there is clearly shown the feeling that Wykehamists could not have a prouder and deeper love for Winchester, had Shakspeare and Milton, Nelson and Wellington, Bacon and Burke, been Wykehamists. The Unitas Fratrum, confirmed by centuries, is the great thing: not the production of great men. Places train and shape and influence great men, but do not make them. It was by the veriest chance, so to speak, that Newman was not a Wykehamist and a Cambridge man: had he gone to Winchester, Wykehamists would at last have got their indubitably great man, in whom to rejoice: but your great men and your great place are in some sense equals. It is the ordinary and average man, upon whom the great place has the greatest power. But for their training under a heightening and heartening influence, they might well remain upon a lower level of excellence: the great men have internal resources of their own, wherever they may be. It is the common crowd of Wykehamists, who are doing their best all the world over, that owe most to Winchester, and most gladly make their own the spirit, if not the letter, of old Harpsfield's grateful words: "Gulielmum Wickamum, ut optimum parentem agnosco, suscipio, colo, cui si quid in me doctrinae, virtutis, pietatis, et catholice religionis, maxime acceptum refero. Quippe qui ab ineunte aetate, in Wintoniensi primum, deinde et Oxoniensi eius collegio, ad omnem ingenii, doctrinae, et pietatis cultum capessendum institutus sim."

Stet res Wiccamica: or, as the Bishop of Salisbury has it:

"Proles futura Wiccami
Ne sit prioris degener!
Fide manente pristina
Fides manebit Numinis."

LIONEL JOHNSON.

Memoirs. By Charles Godfrey Leland. In 2 vols. (Heinemann.)

MR. LELAND offers his book as an example of a candid autobiography. He wrote it, he states, "with no intention that it should be published," but at the same time he had an idea it might serve as material for a life, to be written by a certain friend. Therefore, he says, "I wrote, as fully and honestly as I could, everything which I could remember which had made me what I am." Although various reminiscences of other people are contained in these pages, the book is essentially personal to the author. It is, primarily, an account of his own doings and sayings, and only incidentally an account of the doings and sayings of other people. Certainly it has the merit of candour so far as any book, written under such conditions, ever could be quite candid. It is not a chronicle of feelings and thoughts, but of incidents, and this gives it a better chance of being truthful; for a man can record the outward facts of his life much more faithfully than the subtle undercurrents of emotion and motive. It may, however, well be doubted whether there exists any complete autobiography excepting Pepys's Diary. In the way of any such complete self-revelation, stands the difficulty, amounting almost to an impossibility, of ignoring the world and so escaping the disposition to pose, as though the world were looking on. Marie Bashkirtseff tried to be truthful, but the consciousness of the world was with her all the time. John Stuart Mill was truthful, as a dissector is truthful who, in gathering and adjusting his facts, necessarily misses some realities. The Autocrat has told us that every man is a trinity of persons—namely, the man as he is, the man as he seems to himself, and the man as he seems to others. The man of an autobiography is the man as he seems to himself, toned, more or less, by considerations of how he will seem to others. "The world is too much with us" even when we are writing our private journals; and, as a consequence, we do not write down everything, and what we do write is liable to be glossed. Pepys wrote for himself alone; and he wrote simply—not trying to describe or reveal or explain himself, but methodically setting down mere facts. Whereby we are brought much nearer to the man as he was—with the smallest possible alloy of the man as he seemed to be, to himself or to others—than could have been possible under other conditions. There are no qualifications and no concealments.

In another sense, every book that is written is an autobiography to those who can read it thoroughly; and of this Mr. Leland's work is a notable example. It is free from all intentional reserve or misleading; and although outwardly a record of activities, and not a picture of the mind, it reveals with much clearness the character of its writer. It shows, first of all, self-confidence and self-reliance. It shows, moreover, that here self-confidence has not degenerated into self-sufficiency. Mr. Leland's manifest pride in his successes, in tokens that he is famous, in the appreciation expressed by persons he meets, betokens genuine modesty. Mock modesty would have bragged of its "unworthiness," its "poor efforts," and the like. Mr. Leland does nothing of the kind. When he thinks he has acted wisely or made a hit, he says so. When Tennyson welcomes him, or when Carlyle's insolence changes to respect, or when Messrs. Cope Brothers pay him the compliment of producing a "Hans Breitmann" brand of cigars, he is honestly pleased. Self-satisfied people are very irritating; but Mr. Leland's satisfaction with himself—to speak more accurately, with his achievements—does not offend, because it is so frank, because he has done things worth praising, and, above all, because he never lauds himself to the depreciation of anyone else. No book could be more free than his from malice, or envy, or ill-will of any kind. He accuses himself of being "by nature as vindictive as an unconverted Indian," but we must take leave to prefer the evidence of his book to his mere opinion on the point. A man vindictive by nature, if convinced that it was "vile and wicked," might, by strenuous effort, keep his nature in such subjection that he would never be guilty of a revengeful act. But some bit of spite or malice would surely exhibit itself in his narrative. The only man in whose favour Mr. Leland has nothing to say is the late Mr. John Camden Hotten, and in respect to him he is not malicious—not so malicious even as Mark Twain when he called him a Hotten-tot. Indeed, the tone of self-gratulation which runs through the book, so far from being irritating, gives it an added charm.

In other ways also it is a pleasant book—bright, chatty, well furnished with anecdote, and not wanting in acute and suggestive criticism of manners and of men. The present narrative closes with the year 1870, and there is something more than a half promise that it will be continued later on. We have here the journalist and politician, the soldier, the oil-explorer, the traveller, and the author, with some account of Mr. Leland's intercourse with the Indians. The treat in store will include the artist and designer, and best of all—as most people will think—the Gypsy episode.

It may be, as Mr. Leland suggests, a kind of compliment to an author to identify him with his own creations, as Mr. Leland has been identified with Hans Breitmann. But it is a compliment which has drawbacks. For one thing, it limits one's conception of the author's powers. The Breitmann Ballads have doubtless, more than anything else he has done, made Mr. Leland famous; but, if he had done nothing else, and nothing better, we should have been obliged to rank him with such mere "funny men" as Artemus Ward or Josh Billings, who, like Hans Breitmann, may have said some clever things, but few which would be thought worth reading in plain English. Mr. Leland had some feeling on the point himself; for, as he tells us, when an American insisted he should be called Hans Breitmann on account of his work, he protested, and asked him if he would familiarly accost Mr. Lowell as "Josh Biglow." He adds:

"If there is anything in the world which denotes a subordinate position in the social scale, or defect in education, it is the passion to call men 'out of their names,' and never feel really acquainted with anyone until he is termed Tom or Jack. It is doubtless all very genial and jocose and sociable, but the man who shows a tendency to it should not complain when his betters put him in a lower class or among the 'lower orders'" (vol. ii., p. 256).

That the identification was not always only of the author with his creation, but was sometimes still more personal, is shown by this anecdote. In the smoking-room of an hotel a stranger accosted Mr. Leland, and said he had heard the author of the Breitmann Ballads was in the room—would he point him out? Mr. Leland pointed to himself, at which his questioner was much surprised, and confessed that the person he had singled out in his mind as most likely to be the man he sought was "a great broom-bearded, broad-shouldered, jovial, intemperate, German-looking man" (vol. ii., p. 290). In this connexion it is amusing to note Mr. Leland's remark about the Emperor William:

"Frunch had . . . represented him as Hans Breitmann in a cartoon, deploring that he had not squeezed more milliards out of the French; and I, indeed, found in the original very closely my ideal of Hans, who always occurs to me as a German gentleman who drinks, fights, and plunders—not as a mere rowdy raised above his natural sphere, but as a rough cavalier. And that the great-bearded giant Emperor Wilhelm did drink heavily, fight hard, and mulet France mightily, is matter of history" (vol. ii., pp. 270-71).

The book contains—especially in its last chapters—several excellent literary and personal judgments. The fact that Mr. Leland believes George Borrow once played him a shabby trick does not (despite the "vindictive nature") prevent him from testifying generously to his merits, thus:

"What I admire in Borrow to such a degree that before it his faults or failings seem very trifling, is his absolutely vigorous, marvellously varied originality, based on direct familiarity with Nature, but guided and cultured by the study of natural, simple writers, such as Defoe and Smollett. I think that the 'interest' in, or rather sympathy for gipsies, in his case as in mine, came not from their being curious or dramatic beings, but because they are so much a part of free life, of out-of-door Nature; so associated with sheltered nooks among rocks and trees, the hedgerow and birds, riversides, and wild roads. Borrow's heart was large and true as regarded English rural life; there was a place in it for everything which was of the open air and freshly beautiful. He was not a view-hunter of 'bits,' trained according to Ruskin and the deliberate word-painting of a thousand novels and Victorian picturesque poems; but he often brings us nearer to Nature than they do, not by photography, but by casually letting fall a word or trait, by which we realise, not only her form, but her soul. Herein he was like Washington Irving, who gives us the impression of a writer who was deeply inspired with calm, sweet, sunny views of Nature, yet in whose writings literal description is so rarely introduced, that it is a marvel how much the single buttercup lights up the landscape for a quarter of a mile, when a thousand would produce no effect whatever. This may have possibly been art in Irving—art of the most subtle kind—but in Borrow it was instinct and hardly intentional. In this respect he was superior even to Whitman" (vol. ii., pp. 301-2).

After reading this masterly criticism, we can understand Mr. Leland's short, sharp judgment on Tegner: "I confess that I never cared much for Tegner, and that I infinitely prefer the original Icelandic Saga of Frithiof to his sago-gruel imitation of strong soup" (vol. ii., p. 134).

The same preference for authors who go to Nature, to those who obtain their material at second hand, is visible in Mr. Leland's remarks on George Eliot:

"I never detected in her any trace of genial humour, though I doubt not that it was latent in her; and I thought her a person who had drawn her ideas far more from books and an acquaintance with certain types of humanity whom she had set herself deliberately to study—albeit with rare perception—than from an easy intuitive familiarity with all sorts and conditions of men. But she worked out thoroughly what she knew by the intuition of genius, though in this she was very far inferior to Scott. Thus she wrote the 'Spanish Gypsy,' having only seen such gypsies two or three times. One day she told me that, in order to write 'Daniel Deronda,' she had read through two hundred books. I longed to tell her that she had better have learned Yiddish and talked with two hundred Jews, and been taught, as I was by my friend Solomon the Sadducee, the art of distinguishing Frailein Löwenthal of the Ashkenazim from Senorita Aguado of the Sephardim by the corners of their eyes" (vol. ii., p. 239).

This Mr. Solomon was a Jew Mr. Leland had met at Cape May during the War, who belonged to the sect which "took no part in the crucifixion," whose members "do not believe or disbelieve in a God—Yahveh or the older Elohim," and who "hold that every man born knows enough to do what is right, and that is religion enough." This, says Mr. Leland, was the first Agnostic he had ever met. He was, however, somewhat disappointed in Mr. Solomon, when he found he had "full faith in a Rabbi in New York, who was so learned in the Cabala that, by virtue of the sacred names, he could recover stolen goods." This leads Mr. Leland to remark that "the same spirit which induces a man to break out of orthodox humdrumness, induces him to love the marvellous, the forbidden, the odd, the wild, the droll—even as I do." Rather, perhaps, men feel that, though the present explanations are inadequate, there is much yet to be known and explained. Be this as it may, a severely critical scepticism often does exist side by side with totally uncritical credulity.

Of Abraham Lincoln we have a good anecdote and other interesting glimpses:

"Abraham Lincoln once remarked of the people who wanted Emancipation, but who did not like to be called Abolitionists, that they reminded him of the Irishman who had signed a temperance pledge, and did not like to break it, yet who sadly wanted a 'drink.' So, going to an apothecary, he asked for a glass of soda water, adding, 'An', doether dear, if yees could put a little whisky into it unbeknownst to me, I'd be much obliged to yees" (vol. ii., p. 30).

Lincoln's selection by the Republican party as their candidate for the Presidency caused much dissatisfaction at the time. He had been misrepresented, and when not wilfully misrepresented, was much misunderstood; and it was more through party loyalty than through affection for the man himself that he won the contest. Mr. Leland's "copperhead" friend indicated one source of dissatisfaction when he remarked: "I do wish we could have a gentleman for President for once." In the following year Lincoln not only "saved the Union," but proved himself an incorruptible statesman, and at the news of his death "men were weeping in the streets." At last they had found out that they had had a gentleman for President "for once."

WALTER LEWIN.

"FUR AND FEATHER SERIES."—The Partridge: its Natural History, Shooting, and Cookery. (Longmans.)

FEW volumes are so interesting to lovers of nature as books which treat in an informal manner of birds and beasts, scenery and flowers—books which may be conveniently classed as books of the country. Of late years an aesthetic appreciation of English fields and hedgerows has largely increased. A time of peace, cheap books, and the extension of education has borne its usual fruits. Although much sensibility for rustic charms may be found among the poets of the last century, the beginning of a deeper love for nature must be sought in Gray's Letters and the History of Selborne. At present, books which touch on sport amid the streams, woodlands, and moors of Great Britain are more popular than ever. Probably, encouraged by the success of the Badminton Library of books on English sport, Messrs. Longman have commenced a fresh enterprise—a series of monographs on game, birds, and animals. Mr. A. E. T. Watson is to act as editor, and a number of well-known names of men famous for their skill in natural history and shooting have engaged to write the different treatises. Good writing and careful editing will be set off by excellent illustrations. Indeed, these are to form a prominent feature in the series.

If the volumes to come maintain the same high level of writing and illustrations that is found in the first of the series, there need be no misgivings concerning their success. A prettier and better-printed book has seldom issued from the press. The dozen drawings of the partridge and its haunts are by Mr. A. J. Stuart-Wortley, Mr. A. Thorburn, and Mr. C. Whymper, all masters of their craft; and, if it be not invidious to particularise, those named "Courting" and "A Sunny Corner" are full of life and beauty. The rich browns of the plumage, together with their tender gradations, are admirably caught; and the atmosphere of peace in which the birds are set excellently reproduces the trustfulness of the partridge before September rudely destroys its idyllic confidence.

Different sections of each subject are with much advantage in this series to be entrusted to different authorities. Thus, the natural history of the partridge is carefully written by the Rev. H. A. Macpherson. He points out the limits of its range and its habits, its favourite haunts, its courtship and nesting, and the courage with which it defends its young ones: in short, the whole economy of the familiar bird's life before the deadly breechloader breaks in upon its quiet happiness. On the subject of poachers Mr. Macpherson naturally resigns his pen to Mr. Stuart-Wortley. His disquisitions on shooting the bird bring the subject up to the latest novelty in the way of sport to be obtained from the partridge. Needless to say, the respective merits of the drive and the walking-up of the birds are nicely balanced, and the rearing of them is fully described. Some of the largest recent records of sport on the most famous partridge-beats of England—Lord Walsingham's, Lord Leicester's, and Baronde Hirsch's—supply much food for reflection, both to sportsmen and political economists. It will surprise many men, who fancy that the great numbers of partridges now shot on a good manor are a modern development called into being for the sake of the breechloader, to be told that in some cases more were shot at the end of the last century. Mr. Stuart-Wortley exemplifies this fact from the Holkham shooting records, which show that in the years 1797, 1798, and 1800, more partridges were killed on the estate than in 1868 and 1869, the two best seasons of that decade. The same writer particularly impresses upon keepers the imperative need of care and vigilance from the very beginning when rearing partridges, and relates an anecdote of six young partridges being found last year drowned in the huge prints of a cart-horse's hoofs, after a heavy thunder shower. There are full accounts with diagrams of the novel partridge preserves laid out at Sandringham in 1892. The hint, too, is worth bearing in mind that these birds are not naturally found in turnips, though they may take refuge there after being disturbed. The novice may profit from the suggestion to go over in his mind at the end of the day all the incidents of the day's sport, field by field, and shot by shot, trying to remember how and where every brace of birds was killed, how many were lost, and where.

In the beginning of the eighteenth century it was matter of distinction if a sportsman could shoot a bird on the wing. Sir Roger, in the Spectator, says of one of his friends: "In short, he is a very sensible man, shoots flying, and has been several times foreman of the petty jury." Thanks to long stubbles, flint and steel, or even percussion guns, and untrimmed hedgerows, partridge-shooting remained in an unscientific condition until the first forty years of the present century had passed. Two friends would go out at break of day with a favourite setter or pointer and shoot what birds they found. Short stubbles and the era of high farming succeeded, which left little shelter for game. Breech-loaders then came into being to restore the sportsman's prospects. Country houses were filled, and large parties walked up their game, assisted by retrievers. Finally, driving was invented. Instead of walking up the birds, the sportsman now has them driven to him. This practice not only provides more difficult shots, but apparently furnishes more birds. Mr. Stuart Wortley illustrates this again from the Holkham shooting registers. The two best years of the first decade under the walking system yielded as follows: 1868, 3308 partridges, and 1869, 3385; whereas the two best years of the second decade, after driving became the exclusive practice, gave the following returns: 1885, 8100 partridges, and 1887, 7512. These figures, however, may only show that more birds escape under the system of walking up than of driving. "Half-mooning" is a modification of walking up the birds, for a full explanation of which the reader may be referred to this book. It is worth while to extract from it the highest figures made for a week of four days' shooting during 1891 and 1892, at The Grange, Lord Ashburton's seat: namely, 2422 and 2324 birds. These are far exceeded, however, by Baron de Hirsch's beats at St. Johann, Hungary, where no less than 17,048 partridges were killed in 1892.

Mr. Saintsbury's chapter on cooking a partridge fitly concludes the book. It views the subject as being nothing short of a branch of the fine arts. He would probably condemn Apicius unreservedly herein, for that worthy only treats of boiled partridges—proh pudor!—although he restores flavour to them by means of "pepper, cumin, parsley-seed, rock-parsley, sauce, carrot, honey, vinegar, wine," and many more ingredients. This process undoubtedly savours of waste of power. Most persons will agree with Mr. Saintsbury that the simplicity of a roasted partridge with its natural condiment, bread-sauce, cannot be excelled. Should unreasonable people however demand more recondite dishes, he humours them with perdreux aux choux, salmis of partridge, partridge soup and pie, perdreux truffé, and especially a chartreuse of partridge. Each of these, dressed according to his cunning directions, might well put a soul within the ribs of death. In short, when Mr. Stuart Wortley has killed the partridge in the most scientific manner, Mr. Saintsbury cooks it also in similar scientific fashion.

These remarks will show how needful this book is to all who love, or live in, the country. With the exception of three or four of Mr. Stuart Wortley's pages which are devoted to political declamation on poaching and the game-laws (and these can only be regretted because they might have been better filled with more good stories from his own experience), there is not a dull page in The Partridge from the first to the last. No partridge-shooter can henceforth complain that full justice has not been rendered to his favourite bird.

M. G. WATKINS.

Days Spent on a Doge's Farm. By Margaret Symonds. (Fisher Unwin.)

MISS MARGARET SYMONDS is altogether her father's daughter, and at every turn of the page she recalls the lamented author of The Italian Renaissance. She has the same quick eye for picturesque form, the same sensitive feeling for colour, the same minuteness which is not quite convincing, and the same naïve and confidential egotism. These qualities and defects of qualities are not so strongly developed in Miss Symonds, nor are they set off by her father's wealth of eclectic erudition; but to them her book owes its genuine charm. This is the less surprising, because it was, as she tells us, written for him and under his influence, and he had promised her an introduction, "in which he was going to deal in particular with Virgil's connexion with Lombard scenes." Mr. J. A. Symonds was indeed actually on his way to the Doge's farm, where he hoped to write the preface, when he fell ill. He died in Rome shortly afterwards, and now, she says:

"What I have written seems incomplete—a thing with the spirit gone out of it. But my father's marks are all over the manuscript, and because he liked the book, and took an interest in it, and wanted me to print it, I do so now, and give it back to him."

An unmistakably pathetic meaning is thus given to the lines from the Daisy, placed underneath the dedication:

"O love, we two shall go no longer
To lands of summer across the sea."

The book is, in effect, an album of pen and pencil sketches made at Vescovana, on the estate of an English lady residing in the Basso Padovano. The lady's husband—she is now a widow—belonged to the Pisani, one of the famiglie nobili of Venice, who, in the last century, conferred a Doge on the republic. These nobles spent most of their time in the city of the Lagoon, and most of their money on their Venetian palaces, so that these country houses were greatly neglected. The Pisani Doge never, in fact, came to Vescovana; and the title of Doge's Farm has, as the writer characteristically acknowledges, been bestowed more for the sake of its new and pleasing sound than for any special historical fitness. The country is, like so much of Lombardy, simply reclaimed marsh, and its fertility represents the lives and labour of many generations of contadini. Across it runs the Adige, not the noble blue river that swirls joyously through the piles of the Scala Bridge at Verona, but a breadth of sullen water, moving between high banks and on the high bed of alluvium brought down from the Alps.

"These banks are calculated to inspire something like panic in the mind of the ignorant observer. They rise to a height of from twenty-six to twenty-nine feet above the level of the land, and the church spires and houses which once commanded, are now shadowed by these mountainous banks. Standing on their summit you see the entire plain for miles spread like a map below you. Interminable fields of corn or maize, stretching between ditches hedged by mulberry and willow, with here and there a mud hut or a stable, now and then a small, thin campanile. In the far background faint shadows of the Alps arise, and on the breeze a suspicion of salt-air is borne from the invisible lagoon."

In the heart of this country lies Vescovana, whither, in 1850, the English Contessa came to a desolate home. The family had before lived on the ground floor. In the fine old palatial drawing rooms the linen hung on lines, among the family portraits; pigs wandered through the iron gates; the threshing floors were before the dining-room windows; hardly a tree or a flower was in sight. But one curious remnant of greatness remained—a lion's head carved in marble by the door, and under it the words, Bocca delle denoncie segrete: the political espionage of the Council of Ten, transferred to the petty jealousies of the Paduan farm. Now all is changed. There is a garden filled with tall chestnuts and catalpas. Grass and flowers cover the threshing floor; paths wind among syringa hedges, and tamarisks line the edges of the moat. A long-tailed tit builds in the Bocca delle denoncie segrete, and the lion's mouth is filled with down. Not less wonderful are the improvements in the land, on the farm, and in the great grey cattle, whose beauty makes Miss Symonds justly enthusiastic. The story of the transformation, which is due solely to the energy of the Countess, is told with great spirit; and the picture of this lady, at once so unusual and so admirable a figure, was well worth the painting. For her the Mass waits on Sundays; she orders physic to the sick oxen, she fixes the day for the harvest, the hour for the admission of the gleaners. And all this intensely modern activity has for setting, or background, a peasant life which, structurally, is altogether mediæval. Nothing, however, gives so profound an impression of her commanding personality, as the story of the saving of the fields during the great floods of a few years back. We ought to say that, though we are not left in much doubt as to the actor who plays the part of the dea ex machina, the authoress forbears to state positively that it was the Contessa Pisani. Miss Symonds must be allowed to recount this moving incident in her own words:

"It had poured and poured with rain for many days, and always it went on pouring. Up in the Alps the torrents had broken loose, and were hurling down their floods and boulders over the meadows.

"The Adige was swollen, yellow, ghastly; but still by its banks restrained. A dread and a terror was in the minds of the people on the plain. They went up in the evening to the top of the banks and looked. Then they crept down, for a shudder passed through them.

"And still it poured.

"At midnight a gig rattled up to the gates of a lonely villa on the plain.

"The river has broken on the Rovigo side," said the man inside. "The people are mad; they are coming across to open our lock, and let the flood into our land as well as their own. It's a horrible flood; but why should both sides perish?"

"The lady of the villa arose. She ordered her horses, and she drove through the dark and the blinding rain. At dawn she stood on the banks of the Adige beside her lock.

"She was a woman, but she stood there alone. And 'Shoot, then, shoot!' she cried to the men on the opposite bank of the river.

"They were all there, half mad with fear. They had their guns pointed at her, but they didn't shoot, and the flood went over their land and not over hers."

Not less graphic is the account of the fire on the Podere, and of the Contessa "in her gorgeous evening dress, hold up over a still more gorgeous petticoat, storming at the crowd collectively and individually," and then manipulating the hose with her own fair hands, while all around the millions of frogs sang on, and above was "such a heaven of quiet and indifferent stars."

No one can be more sensible to the beauty of the plain than Miss Symonds, but she seems still more impressed with its melancholy. The houses are clean, the people are sober and thrifty, without much beauty, indeed, except for the women's hair; but all of them possessing, she says, "that charm of lithe and easy motion which is so hopelessly lacking in the mountaineer." Perhaps, though, the question of race has something to say to this, for some of the mountain folk of the Venetian Tyrol are conspicuously graceful. But, anyhow, at Vescovana she noted that even at the joyous harvest time they were sad, and their very songs seemed weighted with misery. She mentions, too, the frequency of suicide, and quotes the explanation given of a suicidal youth, who did not care to live because "there is never anything new." The maladie du siècle seems to have overtaken these poor peasants with a vengeance when they court death on such grounds. Miss Symonds attributes it to the monotony of their lives, the immense ennui of the great green sea—"the waveless plain of Lombardy." We are inclined to think that the vera causa is simply endemic fever.

Miss Symonds is to be congratulated on the success with which the local colour is suggested in these rough but spirited sketches. They are all full of true Southern warmth, and appeal to us here with particular force, where every fresh winter makes us feel how right that savant was, who said that England had "no climate, only weather."

REGINALD HUGHES.

NEW NOVELS.

Tempe. By Constance Cotterell. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

Eyes Like the Sea. By Maurus Jókai. In 3 vols. (Laurence & Bullen.)

Steve Brown's Bunyip. By John Arthur Barry. (Remington.)

The White Islander. By Mary H. Catherwood. (Fisher Unwin.)

Seven Christmas Eves. By Several Authors. (Hutchinson.)

The Home of the Dragon. "Pseudonym Library." (Fisher Unwin.)

MISS COTTERELL'S first book, Strange Gods, was a novel of so much promise that many must have looked forward to its successor. In Tempe there is something of the same freshness of touch and frank individuality of outlook; and the story as a story is better. The most characteristic quality of the heroine of Strange Gods was winsomeness, and that again is what distinguishes Tempe

Rivers. In the portrayal of a girl's life, and in a vivid and sympathetic understanding of the partially veiled or hidden springs of action with maidens fancy free and fancy bound, Miss Cotterell is on her surest ground. She apprehends instinctively the difficulties which beset a straightforward young woman in her effort to be sincere in thought, speech, and action. One may smile at the seriousness with which Tempe Rivers, and others of her type, take certain poses, affectations, and absurdities on the part of "Mrs. Grundy," and opine that the author herself occasionally trembles a little at her own audacity; but it is useful to remember that in actual life the Tempes are more or less forced by circumstances to cope with Grundian littlenesses as though they were matters of vital moment. It is from this standpoint that I think Miss Cotterell has a particular pathway ready for her, in that wide domain of fiction where the highways are so overcrowded. Not in any depreciatory, but in a natural and indeed complimentary sense, she should become a charming and welcome champion of that much maligned being, "the young person." But lest this opinion be wrongly apprehended, let me hasten to add that there is no reason why the most exigent novel-reader should not take pleasure in so clever and outtaining a book as Tempe. It is brightened by many charming touches, and most of the subsidiary personages are as real as the chief characters. Do we not all know individuals like Miss Hilyatt, Tempe's aunt, who hold that "poor people's opinions never have any influence," and that "opinions will never do a young woman any good unless she can find a man who holds them too, and, moreover, likes her to hold them," which, as Miss Hilyatt adds, is not at all the same thing? In a word, this appalling though not unfamiliar type is the kind of person who, on the slightest provocation, says severely, "Explain yourself"; and that, as the author adds, "is what to say if you want to make it impossible for a person to obey you." The love-episodes, which are the heart and soul of a novel of this kind, are written with grace and verve, and no doubt the sympathies of most readers will be fairly divided between fortunate Brant and unfortunate Kurt. The scene of the greater part of the novel is laid in Stutzingen, in which many will recognise a bright and comely capital of Southern Germany; towards the close, however, the action changes to England. Miss Cotterell is unequal in her style. At her best she writes exceptionally well; but she is addicted to that inartistic apostrophising of the reader which is so common in fiction at the moment, and is, to put it reticently, so disenchanting. She is not so fortunate in passages where she deals with tragic issues or high-wrought emotion; or, at least, such passages are not sustained with the same equipoise as the lighter and less calculated parts of the narrative. Here and there she has been too pre-occupied with her subject-matter to attend to her style—noticeably, for example, in the latter part of p. 284 in the third volume, where a dramatic episode demands that there shall be no lack of grip in the writing.

The flaws, however, are mainly those due to inexperience and perhaps to a misconception of what constitutes a nervous and alert style. This novel is so good that we may reasonably expect Miss Cotterell's next to be of exceptional interest and attraction. Meanwhile Tempe ought to be one of the most popular books at the lending libraries.

Maurus Jókai is, no doubt, the most prolific novelist in Europe. Probably, no one but a Hungarian, and he or she an enthusiast, has read even two-thirds of his library of fiction; for "A Tengersgemü Hölgy," which Mr. R. Nisbet Bain has translated, under the title Eyes Like the Sea, is his hundred and fiftieth romance. Jókai has been much lauded of late, and we have all read of the honours that have been paid to him recently in his native land. I saw in an influential paper the other day a notice of him, wherein he was spoken of as not only to Hungary what Walter Scott was to Scotland, and Balzac to France, but as a great artist. This may be true, of course: I can say only that of the eight or ten books of his I have seen in English, French, or German, not one has indisputable evidence of genuine art. All are more or less formless, vague, haphazard. They have good qualities, but these are not displayed with control and careful heed for proportion in detail and in mass. His novels seem to be a mere aggregation of material. They are full of clever studies, brilliant scenes, dramatic episodes; they are interesting and suggestive, as are unfinished and miscellaneous sketches. The translator speaks of Eyes Like the Sea as one of the most brilliant and humorous of Jókai's many novels, and adds that in 1890 it was "crowned" by the Hungarian Academy as the best Hungarian novel. Before this statement one can only bow. The chief interest of the book for many readers will be the introductory pages of criticism and autobiography, where, amid much irrelevant matter, there is a good deal that is worthy of attention. The heroine of the story is a remarkable young woman, upon whom the entire interest centres. Bessy, as she is called, has divers matrimonial ventures. The fifth and last husband proves so unsatisfactory that she kills him. If difficult, and even perilous, to live with, this fair barbarian is delightful company when enjoyed vicariously. It is impossible not to admire her dauntless courage and endurance, particularly in the striking episode of her struggle in the forest with wolves when, disguised in male attire, she is hurrying upon an important political errand. If the book were less than a third of its length, and scrupulously the record of Bessy's varied experiences, it would be a much more memorable production. As an autobiography, its wahrheit is too greatly leavened with dichtung for acceptance as a trustworthy personal record: as a novel, it is too much an undigested mass of material. On the other hand, as the production of a genuine if uncontrolled imagination, Eyes Like the Sea is an alluring work into which to dip at random. But as controlled imagination is of the very essence of art, it seems, at least, to one reader of a portion of Jókai's work, that the famous Hungarian is a brilliant and versatile journalist in fiction rather than a great literary craftsman.

Old Australians will read with delight, and their English compatriots with exceptional pleasure, the collection of stories which Mr. John Arthur Barry has collected from the Australasian, the Queenslander, and other periodicals. It is the best series of Australian tales that has appeared, and has the further attraction that many of them are records of personal adventure, and that all are, in a sense, actual episodes. Mr. Barry has lived his stories, and the impress of direct experience is upon everything he writes. Whenever he has a tale to tell, he does so with a picturesqueness and vivacity worthy of his friend, Mr. Rudyard Kipling, who has prefaced the volume with some stirring quatrains of his own.

The White Island, if I remember aright, appeared serially last year in one of the American magazines. It is by a lady who won repute over sea by The Romance of Dollard. Picturesque as it is in its descriptions of the scenery of Lakes Michigan and Huron, and of White and Redskin life, the story fails to convince the reader of its verisimilitude. But it is written by one who has an eye for the beauty of nature, and a keen sense of the mystery and charm of "wild life"; and it is certainly a book to take up with pleasure, if, as a novel, not very enthralling. The illustrations suggest that, in some previous state, they were much more satisfactory.

Seven Christmas Eves is sub-titled "The Romance of a Social Revolution." Mr. Graves, Mr. Farjeon, Miss Florence Marryat, Mr. G. Manville Fenn, Mrs. Campbell Praed, Mr. Justin Huntly McCarthy, and Mr. Clement Scott, all lend their talent to the furtherance of a thankless task. The narrative is interesting in a way, but the whole procedure is radically inartistic. It is to be hoped that this is the last of these silly combination stories, which have about as much literary value as a picture painted by seven artists would have, or a symphony composed by seven musicians.

The "Pseudonym Library," which already comprises so many clever and entertaining stories, has added another attractive volume to its collection in the Tonquinese idyll, entitled The Home of the Dragon. It has much of the colour and something of the charm of "the yellow East."

WILLIAM SHARP.

SOME VOLUMES OF TRANSLATION.

Latin and Greek Verse. By the Rev. Thomas Saunders Evans, D.D. With Memoir, by the Rev. Joseph Waite. (Cambridge: University Press.) Many to whom the bulk of this book will hardly appeal at all, will read the prefatory memoir with great interest. Shrewsbury, Cambridge, Rugby have taught and seen many great teachers and remarkable men; but a more single-minded genius for scholarship, a more winningly unconventional man, than the late Canon Evans, they have not often produced. It scarcely needed the letters here quoted from the present Archbishop of Canterbury, the Provost of Eton, and Mr. Arthur Sidgwick, to tell scholars about Canon Evans's scholarship; but their sketch of the man is irresistibly attractive. No one who ever saw him, even in his later Durham days, could fail to recognise the eccentricity, the frequent absence of mind; but who could resist a master who, on a schoolboy replying that a certain king of England was famous for "vice and immortality," subjoined—"My boy, you are right to a t"? Of his ready and ingenious wit Dr. Waite gives various delightful examples; but he was a wit who was not proud of his faculty, and a scholar too absorbed in scholarship, for its own sake, to give out the full treasures of his mind. The Latin and Greek verses, original and translated, here printed, are admirable. We observe, in Dr. Waite's account of them, that he merely says that some here given have already been printed. But really a good many of them—e.g., those on pp. 267, 269, 166, 158, 154—have appeared in such well-known collections as Sabrinæ Corolla, and Arundines Cumi. On p. 250, in the passage from Browning's "Paracelsus," the eighth line is wrongly given—for "bitter" read "bitten." For the dwindling number of those who love such things, a comparison between Canon Evans's translation (pp. 175-192) of "Oenone," and that by Lord Lyttelton in Arundines Cumi, is full of interest: they were truly cantare pares.

The Tragedies of Sophocles; translated into English Prose from the Text of Jebb. By Edward P. Coleridge. (Bell.) Mr. Coleridge is indefatigable: it is really no light thing to have brought out, within a few years, complete versions of Apollonius Rhodius, of Euripides, and now of Sophocles. In the latter task, indeed, he has had, and amply acknowledges (Pref. p. viii.) his debt to, the version of Prof. Jebb as a guide for a considerable number of the plays. Whether for this reason, or because practice improves one in the art of translating as in other arts, Mr. Coleridge seems to us happier in Sophocles than in Euripides. The truth is, that Euripides is, very often, argumentatively prosy; and this style is apt to infect the translator who strives to be faithful, even where Euripides has shaken off his prosiness. We could not quite acquit Mr. Coleridge in this matter, with regard to Euripides; but we are glad to observe that, in translating Sophocles (who is never argumentatively prosy), he keeps a better level of style. Personally, we think a little more freedom would produce a little more poetry in the version; but we recognise that where the object is to facilitate the reading of the original, there is much to be said for not intruding alien beauties of literary equivalents. Sometimes—particularly, we think, in the graver speeches, but less often in the choruses—the English is adequate and impressive: here, for example, is part of the curse of Tiresias (Oed. Tyr. 415-23).

"Yea, and thou hast been a foe to thine own kin, tuere in the world below, and here on earth above, without knowing it; and one day shall a twofold curse, with footsteps dread—the curse of thy mother and thy sire—drive thee forth from this land, the light thou seest clearly now, turned then to gloom. And where wilt thy cries not find a resting-place, and will not all Cithæron soon re-echo them, when thou hast learnt the import of that marriage-hymn, which welcomed thee home to thy harbourless port after a prosperous voyage?"

Here, we think, is a satisfactory style of translating: yet, in l. 417, we feel that ἀμφιπλάξ is more than "twofold"—it suggests, with ἐλξ, a smiting and driving sword. And the phrase of "a resting-place for thy cries" certainly suggests their cessation, while Sophocles clearly means to imply their ubiquity. Hence some still prefer to take λιμὴν = actual bay or harbour. In the choruses Mr. Coleridge has a good many felicitous phrases; but he is apt unconsciously to slip into the minor rhythms of verse, and even into rhyme—e.g., Antig. ll. 340-7.

"And in the meshes of his nets he snares and takes the flocks of blithesome birds, the tribes of savage beasts, and ocean's brood that swims the sea, with man's exceeding subtlety."

It seems to us a considerable point, in writing prose-translations, to avoid forcing it into verse by the punctuation. It is the avoidance of this flaw that makes the following passage—the farewell of Ajax (p. 359)—creditably adequate:

"O Death, Death, come now, look on me; and yet with thee I shall hold converse in yon world also, face to face. But on thee I call, O light of day new brightly shed, and on the sun-god in his ear, for this last time of all, and nevermore henceforth. O light! O sacred soil of my own land of Salamis, whercon my father's hearth stands firm! Glorious Athens with thy kindred race! Ye springs and rivers flowing yonder! And you, ye plains of Troy! To all I say, 'farewell!' O ye that nursed my life! Hark! 'tis his latest word ye now hear Ajax utter; henceforth shall I speak with the dead in Hades' halls."

By a common, but most defacing, misprint, the Furies, at the top of this same page, are called "vengeful friends" instead of "fiends!" Mr. Coleridge's notes seem to us useful, and judiciously appended at the foot of the page—the wrong principle, we think, with a school text-book, the right one with a translation.

The First Part of Goethe's Faust. Translated by Anna Swanwick. Revised edition. (Bell.) This translation was first published (Pref. p. vi.) upwards of forty years ago; it is now revised by the hand that wrote it. After Mr. Hayward's prose version, it has probably guided more English readers through the first part of "Faust" than any other translation, unless Sir Theodore Martin's be its rival. Sir Theodore Martin is a better verse-writer, in our judgment, than Miss Swanwick; but we are not at all sure that he has seen the original "more steadily, or more whole," than Miss Swanwick has done. The new edition contains not only valuable prefatory matter (pp. ix.-xlii.), but also twenty-nine excellent illustrations from Retzsch's designs. Unlike most illustrations, these, we think, are distinctly helpful to the student, especially where the scene is fantastic, as in the Hexenküche, or on the Brocken, on Walpurgis night. One only seems to us misleading—that opposite p. 136, representing the Cathedral scene and Gretchen's remorse. Here the Evil Spirit whispering to Gretchen bears distinctly the lineaments of Mephistopheles himself; to us this appears a grave mistake. What has Mephistopheles to do with rousing penitence or remorse? He would not even understand—he nowhere shows the slightest capacity for understanding—the character of Gretchen. He can delude and mislead; but comprehend and appreciate he cannot. We may be sure that Goethe did not write "Böser Geist" as a mere synonym for Mephistopheles. The prefatory matter, though not containing anything unfamiliar or any original views as to the drift of "Faust," is yet very useful and well put together. The extraordinary intervals of time that divide the composition of some scenes from that of the rest, and the unmistakable relation of some portions of the poem to episodes in Goethe's own career, all combine to make such an Introduction as Miss Swanwick prefixes a necessity; even the little analysis (pp. xliii.-iv.) of the Intermezzo is required, if the reader is not to have, without understanding, this curious literary extravaganza interpolated into the heart of a tragedy. In the translation itself we note one recurring defect, which jars upon the ear that desires not to be reminded that the poem is a translation. It is the undue practice of inversion, like this (ll. 2497-9):

"And the casket,
Without one word of thanks, he kept,
As if of nuts it were a basket."

No one would write thus in original English composition; nor should it be allowed in a translation. Again (ll. 2769-70),

"Not that for thrift there is such pressing need;
Than others we might make more show indeed," and (ll. 1684-5),

"Grey is, young friend, all theory;
And green of life the golden tree"

show the same lack of style, under the exigence of rhyme. One would be inclined to say that the translation is made by one to whom verse-writing is easy but rhyme-writing difficult. Sometimes the rhyming itself is unsatisfactory—as, e.g., in ll. 1496-7:

"Mortal! the loftiest attributes of men, Reason and knowledge, only thus condemn";

but more often the order or the grammar is strained to secure the rhyme, as in the third stanza of the Dedication:

"Dispersed the throng, their severed flight now winging;
Mute are the voices that responsive rang.
For stranger crowds the Orphean lyre now stringing,
E'en their applause is to my heart a pang."

Here the last two lines are almost unintelligible, grammatically, unless one refers to the original. But where the fetters of rhyme are struck off, as in the "Forest and Cavern" scene (p. 115), the blank verse is impressive and powerful—

"When roars
The howling storm-blast through the groaning wood,
Wrenching the giant pine, which in its fall
Crashing sweeps down its neighbour trunks and boughs,
While hollow thunder from the hill resounds,
Then thou dost lead me to some sheltered cave,
Dost there reveal me to myself, and show
Of my own bosom the mysterious depths.
And when, with soothing beam, the moon's pale orb
Full in my view climbs up the pathless sky,
From crag and dewy grove, the silvery forms
Of bygone ages hover, and assuage
The joy austere of contemplative thought."

This is not unworthy of the noble original; though here too, in the eighth line, the instinct of inversion has too much indulgence. It may be worth noting that, in the Theatre-Prologue (ll. 127-8), the punctuation has gone bewilderingly astray.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. LONGMANS have in the press a study of the newly discovered Gospel of Peter, by the author of "Supernatural Religion."

THE Duchess of Buckingham and Chandos will shortly publish, with Mr. John Murray, Glimpses of Four Continents, consisting of letters written during a tour round the world in 1893. The volume will be illustrated from the author's own sketches.

MESSRS. GEORGE BELL & SONS will soon publish a fourth edition of the late Dr. Scrivener's Plain Introduction to the Criticism of the New Testament, under the editorship of the Rev. Edward Miller, sometime fellow and tutor of New College, Oxford, and recently rector of Auckland. Dr. Scrivener's third edition was a marvel of information upon the difficult subject of textual criticism; but the incessant activity of the last ten years has added much material to pre-existing stores, and the new edition will, in consequence, come out in two volumes. Mr. Miller has received valuable assistance from many experts in their several provinces.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will publish shortly, as the thirty-seventh volume in "The Story of the Nations," Japan, written by Dr. David Murray, who once filled the post of adviser to the Japanese Minister of Education. The author begins with the geography and the myths and legends, and follows the history consecutively to the period of the restored empire, in fifteen chapters. These are supplemented by lists of the emperors, the "year-periods," the Shōguns, and the laws of Shōtoku Taishi. The volume will contain thirty-five illustrations.

THE Rev. Charles Voysey will shortly publish with Messrs. Williams & Norgate, a new work entitled Theism; or, the Religion of Common Sense. It claims to be a plain and concise statement of the principles and beliefs of the Theistic Church, which was founded, in 1871, to establish a true religion on the grounds of reason, conscience, and love, apart from so-called revelation.

MR. JOHN MURRAY announces a new edition—in library form, and with considerable additions—of Sir Alfred Lyall's book on The Rise of the British Dominion in India.

THE next volume of Mr. Elliot Stock's "Camden Library," to be issued very shortly, will be West Irish Folk-Tales and Romances, edited by Mr. William Larminie. The tales have been collected orally by the editor, who gives the name of the narrator in each case. Several of them are printed in phonetic Gaelic for the use of students.

A NEW novel by Mr. Stanley Weyman will be published in a few days by Messrs. Cassell & Co., under the title of The Man in Black.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co. have in the press for immediate publication, in two volumes, a novel by Ada Cambridge, entitled A Marriage Ceremony.

MR. F. W. MAUDE, author of "A Merciful Divorce," has written a new novel entitled Victims, dealing largely with the social and political problems of the day, which will be published immediately by Bliss, Sands & Foster.

WE hear that Miss Marie Corelli's Romance of Two Worlds has been translated into Hindustani, under the title of "Pisānāi do-Jehān," and will be published early next month at Lucknow, which city still maintains its old reputation as a literary centre. The translator, whose work is a labour of love, is now engaged upon Barabbas. This latter novel, we may add, has been very popular on the continent in its Tauchnitz edition; and versions of it will shortly appear simultaneously in French, Italian, German, and Swedish.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON will publish next week a cheap edition, in one volume, of Mr. Frankfort Moore's novel, A Gray Eye or So.

WE have received a prospectus of the Revue de Paris, a new fortnightly review, of which the first number is to be published on February 1. As opposed to the Revue des Deux-Mondes and the Nouvelle Revue, it holds forth the promise that it will not have a regular staff, but will obtain contributions from all those entitled to speak with authority on their several subjects. We also note with approval that there will be no "bulletin financier." It is hardly necessary to say that the articles will be signed. The list of contributors includes almost every French writer of distinction. We understand that the two chief editors are: M. Ganderax, for the literary section; and Prof. James Darmesteter, for the historical—both of whom, it is pleasant to remember, possess a perfect acquaintance with England and English literature.

THE evening discourse at the Royal Institution next Friday will be on "Bookbinding, its Processes and Ideal," by Mr. T. J. Cobden-Sanderson.

MR. MARTINUS NIJHOFF, of the Hague, has sent us another of his admirable sale-catalogues, dealing with bibliographical works. The total number of entries is 1627, classified under no less than sixteen headings—such as palaeography, the invention of printing, the bibliography of the fifteenth century, catalogues of public libraries and private collections, copyright, and iconography. The press of the Netherlands is, of course, specially well represented; but the best English books on the subject likewise have their place.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

WE regret to hear from Oxford that the health of Prof. Sylvester is such that he is permanently disabled from the performance of his duties. As in the case of the late Prof. Moseley a few years ago, it is proposed to appoint a deputy, to perform his statutory duties during the continuance of his inability.

THE Hebdomadal Council at Oxford—whose acts are now reported in the University Gazette—has agreed to the following resolution:

"That the vice-chancellor be requested to summon a meeting of representatives (two from each college) to consider the time and arrangements for holding examinations for classical scholarships in colleges."

IN Convocation at Oxford next Tuesday, it will be proposed to confer the honorary degree of Doctor of Music upon Mr. James Taylor, organist of New College; and also upon Sir Walter Parratt, formerly organist of Magdalen, now at Windsor.

A COMMITTEE has been formed at Cambridge to constitute a permanent memorial of the late Prof. Bensly, by purchasing his valuable library of Syriac and other oriental books, and placing it as a special collection in the University Library.

AT the annual meeting of the Cambridge Philological Society, held on Thursday of this week, Dr. Postgate was elected president, in succession to Prof. Jebb. It was resolved to contribute £30 towards printing the unpublished philological papers of the late H. D. Darbishire in a memorial volume, which will also contain those of his papers already published by the society.

A GRANT of £25 has been made out of the Craven Fund at Oxford to Mr. B. P. Grenfell, the new Craven fellow, towards the expenses of his palaeographical investigations of Greek papyri in Egypt. Mr. Grenfell is at present in that country, in company with Prof. W. M. Flinders Petrie.

MR. J. W. CAPSTICK, of Trinity College, has been appointed assistant demonstrator at the Cavendish Laboratory, in succession to Mr. W. C. D. Whetham, who was recently elected to the Clerk Maxwell scholarship.

DR. SWETE, the regius professor of divinity at Cambridge, will lecture on Fridays during February on "Some Points in the History and Interpretations of the Apostles' Creed, with reference to Recent Controversy."

IN connexion with the teachers' training syndicate, Mr. J. Bass Mullinger will deliver a course of twelve lectures at Cambridge this term, upon "The History of Education."

MR. ERIK MAGNÚSSON, of the Cambridge University Library, announces a course of lectures on Icelandic literature, dealing specially with the Older Edda.

BARON ANATOLE VON HÜBEL, curator of the Museum of Archaeology and Ethnology at Cambridge, proposes to give a series of informal lectures on the collections in the museum, on Tuesdays at noon, and again on Thursdays in the evening.

MR. W. R. MOREHILL, reader in Slavonic at Oxford, was to deliver a public lecture on Friday of this week upon "The Patriarch Nikon and his Reforms."

WE learn from the Oxford Magazine that the late Mrs. Combe—who, during her lifetime, gave Mr. Holman Hunt's "The Light of the World" to Keble College—has bequeathed to the University twenty of her valuable collection of pictures by members of the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood.

SIR HENRY ROSCOE has been nominated by the Crown to fill the vacancy on the senate of London University, caused by the death of Sir William Smith.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

WINTER EXILE IN THE SOUTH.

O ALIEN flowers! unseasonable blooms,
That in this new translucent temperate air
Hide the sad truth, like garlands hung from tombs!
Winter within is winter everywhere:
And nothing me your heartless splendours stead,
Your aloe's scarlet, your magnolia's snow;
That, strange to that far clime where I was bred,
Speak not of home and friends and long ago.

GEORGE DOUGLAS.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

IN the Boletín of the Real Academia de la Historia for December, Padre Fita explodes an oft-quoted story of St. François Xavier refusing to go and say farewell to his mother, when starting on his great mission to the East. He proves from family documents that she had been dead some eight or nine years, and that it was her grave only that Xavier would not turn aside to visit. Antonio Sanchez Moguel tells of the discovery of the burying place of Suarez, who died on September 25, 1617, and was finally interred in the tomb of his disciple, Don Antonio de Castro, in the convent of St. Roque at Lisbon. Valuable materials for the Roman and Celtiberian archaeology of Spain are contained in a series of papers on the Roman roads between Alcalá and Zaragoza, and many useful hints are given for future explorers. Padre Fita has undertaken to report on Hübner's recent work, "Monumenta Linguae Ibericae."

TENNYSONIANA.

II.

IN my former notes mention was made of some early "revises" of Lord Tennyson's "Idylls of the King," which are preserved in the British Museum and at South Kensington. At the latter place there is also a copy of the first edition of the Poems (1849) by the late Laureate, containing a few MS. lines which have never appeared in print.

Among these occur the two following quatrains written at the end of "The Talking Oak":

"Ah! bring her often, let me greet
The maid with sounds and calls,
As when I rouse myself to meet
The sunlight ere it falls.

"When toward me, after sudden showers,
The sweeping beam declines,
And underneath you two grey towers
The leaded minster shines."

There is also an unpublished couplet in "Locksley Hall," and two of the verses that were afterwards printed in the "Second Locksley Hall" we find here in Lord Tennyson's own handwriting. The verses to which I allude are the seventh and eighth of the second poem:

"In the Hall there hangs a painting, Amy's arms about my neck,
Happy children in a sunbeam sitting on the ribs of wreck.

"In my Life there is a picture, she that clasped
my neck has flown,
I am left within the shadow, sitting on the wreck alone."

They are written in between the couplets beginning, "Many an evening by the waters," &c., and "O my cousin, shallow-hearted," &c., and were presumably written as long ago as 1849.

P. E. N.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- DESJARDINS, A. De la liberté politique dans l'état moderne. Paris: Plon. 7 fr. 50 c.
KANNENKÖRBER, A. Ketteler et l'organisation sociale en Allemagne. Paris: Lethielleux. 3 fr. 50 c.
MAZADE, Ch. de. L'opposition royaliste. Berryer, de Ville, de Falloux. Paris: Plon. 3 fr. 50 c.
SAMMUNG bibliothekwissenschaftlicher Arbeiten. Hrg. v. K. Dziatzko. 8. Hft. Leipzig: Spitzsch. 5 M.
STRAFFORELLO, G. Cenni storici e descrittivi della città di Roma. Rome: Modes & Mendel. 10 fr.
ZARLET, Maurice. Le Crime social. Paris: Perrin. 3 fr. 50 c.

HISTORY.

- HOFMANN, R. Reformationsgeschichte der Stadt Pirna. Glauchau: Peschke. 4 M.
SANTI, Giovanni. Federico di Montefeltro, Duca di Urbino. Hrg. v. H. Holtzinger. Stuttgart: Kohlhammer. 18 fr.
SOULANOU-BODIN, André. La diplomatie de Louis XV. et le pacte de famille. Paris: Perrin. 3 fr. 50 c.
WIRTH, A. Aus orientalischen Chroniken. Frankfurt-a.-M.: Diesterweg. 12 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- EGGER, J. O. Foraminiferen aus Meeresgrundproben, gelobt von 1874 bis 1876 v. S. M. Sch. Gazelle. München: Franz. 8 M.
FLOTHOW, C. v. Aus Kants kritischen Religionslehren. Königsberg: Koch. 1 M. 20 Pf.
STRASBURGER, E. Histologische Beiträge. 5. Hft. Jena: Fischer. 2 M. 50 Pf.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- HÉRODAS, les Mimes de, traduits en français, avec introduction et notes, par P. Risteliher. Paris: Leroux. 2 fr. 50 c.
KRETSCHMER, P. Die griechischen Vaseninschriften ihrer Sprache nach untersucht. Gütersloh: Bertelsmann. 5 M. 50 Pf.
RITTERMEYER, zwei altdenkmale. Moriz v. Craon, Peter v. Scaufenberg. Neu hrg. v. E. Schröder. Berlin: Weidmann. 3 M.
VENETIANER, L. Das Buch der Grade v. Schemtob b. Joseph ibn Falsquera. Berlin: Calvary. 3 M. 30 Pf.
ZIEGLER, Th. August Nauck. Ein Bild seines Lebens u. seiner Werke. Berlin: Calvary. 2 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE NORTH-PICTISH INSCRIPTIONS.

III.

Bodleian Library, Oxford: Jan. 21, 1894.

How innumerable are the ways of the controversialist! Mr. Mayhew, who has always been one of the friendliest of my friends, and who (living hard by me and working repeatedly of late in the same library) might easily have tested in conversation the justice of his criticisms, has preferred to empty on me suddenly and in public all the vials of his sarcasm. Mr. Goudie, on the other hand, living at Edinburgh, and not being even an acquaintance or correspondent of mine, sent me beforehand a copy of his letter, saying: "It is only courtesy to you to do so, and if you think there is anything in it that had better be suppressed I shall be glad to give it the best consideration. . . .

I have an aversion to acrimonious public controversy among men seeking for truth." O si sic omnes!

Mr. Mayhew, having quoted from Mr. Whitley Stokes a statement of the four pre-existing theories as to the character of the Pictish language, says that I seem "to favour a fifth hypothesis, namely, that 'Pictish' is a marvellous conglomerate of the oldest Celtic and the most modern Irish and Scotch Gaelic." I am proving up to the hilt that the theory so ably argued by the late Dr. Skene, the historian of Celtic Scotland, is the true one: that Pictish was a Goidelic language akin to Old Irish, its sister, and to modern Scottish Gaelic, its own daughter—and that the Gaelic of Scotland is not simply the modern corrupt state of a language imported from Ireland in the middle ages, but is lineally "descended from the ancient language of the soil in the same sense in which modern English is from Anglo-Saxon." If in Pictish inscriptions (of which one at least seems earlier than the Norse conquest of Shetland) I find a very occasional genitive in -s which is older than anything found in the Irish declensions, it is only to be expected; but Mr. Mayhew appears to have absolutely overlooked the quotation I gave from Brugmann, pointing out that this genitive is preserved in Ogam inscriptions. If, on the other hand, Pictish underwent some degenerations earlier than Irish, that again is only what we might expect: we know that in allied languages and dialects the march of phonetic change is very far from uniform. Icelandic, for instance, to quote Mr. York Powell's article in the Encyclopædia Britannica (xii., p. 627),

"presents the following anomalies:—on the one hand, it has a highly inflexional grammar, a pure vocabulary, and a simple syntax, points which would place it side by side with Gothic; but, on the other hand, it shows such strong marks of contraction and such deep phonetic changes, especially in the vowels, as can only be paralleled in the modern English."

If, indeed, Mr. Mayhew were able to show that these degenerations did not take place in Scottish Gaelic till recent times, the case would be very different. But "there is not a page of Gaelic written in any other dialect" than the Irish dialect of scholars, as distinguished from the common speech of the people, "before the middle of last century" (Dr. McLauchlan in the Encyclopædia Britannica, x., p. 7).

Mr. Mayhew says that I am "supremely indifferent to chronological data." He did not know that I have all along meant to give a separate letter, or separate chapter in the reprint of my letters, to the dates of all these inscriptions so far as deducible from their contents, language, palaeography, and all other available evidence. But he hardly thinks I shall deem it worth while to protest against Lord Southesk's conclusions, that "these inscriptions belong to a period between the middle of the seventh century and the middle of the ninth century," and asks for "a clear, irrefutable instance of a word in an inscription or a MS. earlier than the year 1000 having n written for mh."

I am glad he has mentioned Lord Southesk, because it gives me occasion to say that, without any approach on my part, Lord Southesk has sent to me, who was an entire stranger to him, books, photographs, and drawings of his own, with every information and friendly criticism in his power, although he knew that I was interpreting these inscriptions quite otherwise than he had done. But, if Mr. Mayhew had read my letter with proper care, he would have seen that I distinctly attributed the Newton inscriptions to the tenth or eleventh century, and stated that the Golspie one cannot be earlier than the tenth (it is probably much later). There is no Scottish Gaelic MS. (or Gaelic MS. written in Scotland) "earlier than the year 1000"; and the only two of the Pictish stones which have u = mh contain no proof as to their date: one has, indeed, a genitive in -s, but it is only in a place-name, and it no more proves that the inscription is of extreme age than the archaic form hit (= it) in "Uncle Remus" or in Col. Hay's dialect poem, "The Mystery of Gilgal," proves that those works were written several hundred years ago.

Mr. Mayhew says that "Mr. W. Stokes has pointed out long ago, in a note which appears on p. 300 of Max Müller's Science of Language . . . that there is no such word as ibh = 'country' in the Irish language." Dr. Stokes has, indeed, asserted—it would be hard to prove—that "there is no such word as ibh in the nom. sing., although it is to be found in O'Reilly's Dictionary. . . . The form ibh . . . is a very modern dative plural of ua, a 'descendant.' Irish districts were often called by the names of the occupying clans. These clans were often called 'descendants' (húi, hí, í) of such an one." Hence the blunder of the Irish lexicographer."

Dr. Stokes does not say in the 1891 edition in front of me, what Mr. Mayhew says, that ibh "arose simply from the dat. pl. ending -ib appearing in many names of countries," that is a totally different explanation, and a most improbable one, if only for the reason that it explains a form which O'Reilly does not give, instead of that which he does give.

Now I never knew of Dr. Stokes's note, but I did know that ibh was a dat. pl. of ua; and, as the dat. pl. is so commonly used as an abstract locative where we should use a nominative, I took that to be the origin of O'Reilly's ibh, "a country, a tribe of people"; consequently, although I rendered ip as "district," I only said "ip = Irish ibh . . . the Irish ibh postulates earlier ib, and the Highlander's tendency to sound b as p is well known"—I never said that ibh, ib, and ip were anything other than * dat. pl. used as abstract locatives. Mr. Mayhew may ask how, if ip = "descendants," we can have ip ua rosir = "district Place of Laughter." And my reply (until it can be shown that this also is a blunder of O'Reilly's) is that, according to him, ua also = "earth, clay . . . a district," and that consequently the dat. pl. ibh can mean "lands" as well as "descendants." I shall have more to say on ip in a future letter, as it occurs as a place-name in the St. Vigan's Stone, and apparently also twice in the Book of Deer; and, if O'Reilly turns out to be wrong all round, I conceive it possible that ip (= dat. pl. ib used as an abstract locative) meant first a family, and then with all plural sense lost (as in our word smallpox) a family-holding, just as in Scottish place-names we get "the word Teaghlach or family, corrupted into Tully and Tilly, as in Tullynessle, Tilmorgan, &c." (Skene, Celtic Scotland, iii. 225).

Mr. Mayhew next says that Nahhtvddaððs dattr cannot mean what I say (= Nightrogue's daughter), because, if this were an instance of the lost h in O.-Norse nátt, we should also have had the lost h of dattr preserved in the inscription. This is an exceedingly smart point, but it comes to nothing. For this lady's name, though in itself Norse, is merely part of a Pictish inscription; and you cannot expect a Pict to be more consistent with ht in Norse than in his own language. Now, we not only have the same Pictish word spelt in these inscriptions sometimes as chltt, &c., and sometimes as ett, &c., but in the Lunasting Stone, explained in my last letter, we actually get these two forms side by side.

Mr. Mayhew says that my derivations of Bernises and Lotel are impossible, because "In Celtic names of places the qualified always precedes the qualifying element." May I ask, then, what is the derivation of the following names which are derived in direct opposition to this theory on two consecutive pages of Johnston's Place-names of Scotland—Gairloch, Gareloch, Galcantry, Gamrie, Gargunnoch, Garioch, Garlieston?

I have now dealt with everyone of Mr. Mayhew's points except the pronunciation of Welsh ll. I learnt that thirty-seven years ago in North Wales, and have carefully studied its physiology. Some day or other, if Mr. Mayhew wishes, I will go into it with him, privately or in print; but it was not in the least material to my argument, and I think we had better not draw a Welsh herring across the Pictish scent.

I now pass to Mr. Goudie's letter. I have already answered it in private; but it was printed so quickly that, if he wished to alter anything, I do not think there was time.

I. I said that it was "morally certain" that Bernises (= Battleheadland) had been the scene of a battle, because it has the ruins of a broch, and a broch there seemed hardly likely to have been dismantled except after a fight. Perhaps I should have said "specially probable," instead of "morally certain."

II. I had corrected my mistake about the name Aith in a fresh letter, which was in the editor's hands before I heard from Mr. Goudie. I was delighted to find that Aith was not connected with ai(h)te, for now "Destruction-rock" can only be the seaside rock immediately behind the stone, the rock bearing the ruins of that very broch which, as I maintain, gave its name to the entire district (Conningsburgh = Fort of MacCon).

But Mr. Goudie says I may rest assured that the first part of that name "is simply the Old-Northern konungr, king, or chief." Well, konungr can hardly mean merely a chief, and, if it did, "chief's fort" would be an absolutely undistinctive name. Again, "king's fort" can hardly mean a fort built by a king, because there were no Pictish kings in Shetland to build brochs, and Norsemen never built them at all. And, although a Norse king might conceivably have lodged there, the great broch of Mousa, which was occupied for a long time by two different Norse jarls, did not acquire the name or title of either of them.

Moreover, long before Shetland passed back to Scotland the short form kongr had arisen, and in two Gazetteers and an Atlas which I have consulted I have not found a single Scandinavian place whose name now begins with Konungs-; it is always Kongs-. So that we should expect the name, if it meant what Mr. Goudie supposes, to have come down to us as Congsburgh.

Finally, although Old Norse has patronymics in -ing- which justify my derivation, I find no instance of konungr or its derivatives having i instead of u.

III. I can assure Mr. Goudie that I never dreamt of regarding Mr. e Nan's les as a "Cow-killing enclosure." I called it his enclosure in Bobhe; and I supposed that Bobhe, which means Cow-killing, was so called because at that spot some gang of Norse pirates, having seized the cattle of the natives, had, after their known custom, slaughtered them so as to embark the carcasses. And I only rendered les "enclosure" because it has so many meanings. In an offprint of my letter I had added the following quotations from O'Curry's Manners of the Ancient Irish: "The homestead of a Flath was called a Lis or Les" (i. p. cccv.), and "Each Flath had his Les" (ib., p. cliii.)—and had stated that, in the Glossary to Windisch's Irische Texte, the word is given as = a dwelling defended by an earthen wall running round it.

E. W. B. NICHOLSON.

P.S.—I have solved ua rosir at last! Fh being silent in Gaelic, and the Pictish inscriptions phonetic, rosir = ros-fhir gen. of ros-fher "wood-man." Ua is the regular gen. pl. of ua, "descendant," = O'. Render renn ip Ua Rosir "in front of [the] family-holding of [the] O'Roser's" (= descendants of woodman).

THE NAME OF GOLSPIE.

The Airlour, Whauphill, Wigtownshire:
Jan. 27, 1891.

May I crave the space of a paragraph in rejoinder to Mr. Nicholson?

In suggesting that Golspie might, like Gillespie in Wigtownshire, be a contracted form of cill esping, "the bishop's chapel," I am unable to support the hypothesis by documentary evidence; but I submit that there is nothing in Mr. Nicholson's triple objection hostile to that derivation.

1. That the accent would have remained on the e in Golspey. So it has. I have pointed out that the local pronunciation is Gheispy; the stress remains on the merged syllables as it does on the o in Worcester (Wòoster) = Wegara-ceaster, and in Clonròad, which is written in the Irish Annals Iuis-Cluana-ramhfròda (mh and fh silenced by aspiration), "the river pasture of the meadow of the long rowing or boat race."

2. How did the d come into Golspey? In the same way as it constantly did into Anglicised Celtic names, such as Kinloch ("at the lake-head"), which is often written Kindeloch and Cendelach in early MSS., e.g., a charter of certain lands in Forfar granted in 1273 by Elen la Zouche in favour of Johannes de Kyndelouch.

3. As for the change from c to g, nothing can be less unexpected in the vicissitudes of Gaelic names; for in that language the hard and soft consonants are frequently interchanged. Thus, in Wigtownshire, the first example that comes to mind is Lagganàrn, representing lagán nan cearn, "hollow of the cairns."

I freely admit, however, that the explanation hazarded of Golspie is a shot.

HERBERT MAXWELL.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- SUNDAY, Jan. 23, 7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Woman as an Industrial Competitor," by Mr. J. A. Hobson.
MONDAY, Jan. 29, 5 p.m. London Institution: "Religions, Mosques, Tombs, and Temples of India," by Mr. R. W. Frazer.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Advancement of Architecture," I, by Mr. G. Aitchison.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: Canon Lecture, "The Detection and Measurement of Inflammable Gas and Vapour in the Air," II, by Dr. Frank Clowes.
8.30 p.m. Geographical: "A Journey through Iceland," by Dr. K. Grossmann.
TUESDAY, Jan. 30, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Locomotion and Fixation in Plants and Animals," III, by Prof. C. Stewart.
8 p.m. Civil Engineers: "Tunnels on the Dore and Chindley Railway," by the late Percy Rickard; "The Transport of Petroleum in Bulk," by Mr. Boverton Redwood.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Adam Architecture in London," by Mr. Percy Fitzgerald.
8.30 p.m. Anthropological Institute: "The People of Morocco," by Mr. J. E. Budgett Meakin.
WEDNESDAY, Jan. 31, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Californian Wines," by Mr. Charles F. Oldham.
THURSDAY, Feb. 1, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Life and Genius of Swift," III, by Canon Ainger.
8 p.m. London Institution: "Som: Optical Phenomena," by Mr. Sheldford Bidwell.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Advancement of Architecture," II, by Mr. G. Aitchison.
8 p.m. Linnæan: "The Morphology of the Pedipalpi," by Mr. Malcolm Laurie; "The Freshwater Algae of the West Indies," by Mr. W. West.
8 p.m. Chemical: "The Liberation of Chlorine by the Interaction of Potassium Chlorate and Manganese Dioxide," by Prof. McLeod; "An Examination of some recent Freezing-Point Determinations," by Mr. S. U. Pickering; "The Salts of Dehydracetic Acid," by Dr. Collie and Mr. H. R. Le Sueur; "A New Method of Preparing Carbon Tetrabromide," by Dr. Collie.

* Indeed, in the inscription in question ip is preceded by the prep. renn, which governs a dative; but, if it had been understood as a dat. pl., it would doubtless have been iv. It must have been crystallised from ib before the termination of the dat. pl. changed from -b to -bh.

8 p.m. United Service Institution: "The Coast-Lands of the North Atlantic," IV., by Mr. H. J. MacKinder.
 8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.
 FRIDAY, Feb. 2, 7.30 p.m. Geologists' Association: Annual General Meeting; Report of Council, Election of Officers; Presidential Address, "Geology in the Field and in the Study," by Mr. Horace B. Woodward.
 7.30 p.m. Civil Engineers' Students' Meeting. "Survey of the Valley of the Vardar and the Plain of Karaferia in Macedonia," by Mr. H. C. B. Campbell.
 8 p.m. Philological: "The Evolution of Gaelic Grammar," by Dr. Hugh Cameron Gilles.
 8 p.m. Viking Club: "Norway and its People," by Mr. H. L. Braekstad.
 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Bookbinding, its Processes and Ideal," by Mr. T. J. Cobden-Sanderson.
 SATURDAY, Feb. 3, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "English Schools of Musical Composition," III., by Prof. W. H. Cummings.

SCIENCE.

THREE BOOKS ON THE THEORY OF FUNCTIONS.

Theory of Functions of a Complex Variable. By A. R. Forsyth. (Cambridge: University Press.)

A Treatise on the Theory of Functions. By J. Harkness and F. Morley. (Macmillans.)

On Riemann's Theory of Algebraic Functions and their Integrals: A Supplement to the Usual Treatises. By Felix Klein. (Cambridge: Macmillan & Bowes.)

WE have always looked upon Chrystal's Algebra (vol. i. 1887, vol. ii. 1889) as an epoch-making work; and, perhaps, one of the strongest reasons for our doing so was the admirable introduction (chapters xxix. and xxx.) to the theory of functions, so fully expounded in the treatises before us.

"The brilliant progress on the Continent of function-theory in the hands of Cauchy, Riemann, Weierstrass, and their followers has opened for us a prospect in which the symbolism of the Differential and Integral Calculus is but a minor object. For the proper understanding of this important branch of modern mathematics a firm grasp of the Doctrine of Limits and of the convergence and continuity of infinite lines is of much greater moment than familiarity with the symbols in which these ideas may be clothed."

Holding such views strongly, Prof. Chrystal, in the chapters we have indicated, paved the way for the study of recent works of continental mathematicians. These words were published in 1889, and matters have considerably advanced since that time. Dr. Hobson in his excellent Trigonometry has followed on the same lines. Now students in English and American Universities have in their own tongue an account of the splendid work of the mathematicians we have named above.

Dr. Forsyth is no neophyte; he has done well before, but here he has broken all his previous "records." He does not give a bare analysis of memoirs, but deftly threads his way through the mass of material hidden away in Transactions and Proceedings. His style is lucid, and he exercises great restraint over his pen in the choice of the parts of the subject he discusses in his present treatise. He does not obtrude himself on every occasion; but it is patent to a careful reader that there is much of his own in the text, if not always in the shape of original matter, yet in the modification and recasting of the proofs given by others. While writing on this subject, we must say that this stupendous work of 680 royal quarto pages is delightful to read on account of its material form, the admirable clearness and exactness of the numerous figures, which must have cost the author much time and thought in the first place to devise and draw, and on account of the clearness of the type. Indeed, the Pitt Press has rarely done better than in this production. In addition to a table of contents, there is a useful glossary of technical terms (German and English) used in the Theory of Functions, an index of authors quoted, and a full general index. The references to original memoirs are very numerous and exact, many of the chapters being prefaced with a note indicating the sources. Some have the note at the end of the chapter, and in every case it is given as the occasion for it arises. It would take up too much space to analyse the work in any detail, and so we content ourselves with a brief statement derived from Dr. Forsyth's preface. He leaves the theory for functions of a real variable undiscussed, and refers the reader to the work of Dini, Chrystal, Stolz, and Tannery in this direction. [The student will also now be able to supply this lacuna by a perusal of the second book on our list.] He lightly touches the theory of functions of more than one complex variable, but gives full references to enable the reader to follow the development more at length. His aim he states to be to deal with the general theory, and he does not profess to discuss special classes. His treatment is not limited so as to conform to any single one of the independent methods, due to Cauchy, to Weierstrass, and to Riemann, but he rather combines ideas and processes from them all.

In the lithographed specimen of Clifford's handwriting, facing the title-page of his Mathematical Papers, in which he gave an outline-sketch of a series of books on mathematics, to be written by himself and Prof. Henri in conjunction, the title of the last work is—"Theory of Functions of a Complex Variable; Algebraic Integrals." The plan of such a work might have been such as is presented to us in the second book under review. In this treatise the authors "aim at a full presentation of the standard parts of the subject, with certain exceptions." Three of these exceptions are stated. The theory of real functions of a real variable is given only so far as seems necessary as a basis for what follows. In the account of Abelian functions they seek "to induct the reader as simply and rapidly as possible into what is itself a suitable theme for more than one large volume." They also pass over the automorphic functions, which have lately occupied the attention of more than one English mathematician. In ten chapters Profs. Harkness and Morley consider, after giving a full and careful geometric introduction, real functions of a real variable, the theory of infinite lines, algebraic functions, integration, Riemann surfaces, elliptic functions, double theta-functions, Dirichlet's problem, and Abelian integrals. This summary of the headings of the chapters will clearly indicate to those students who are "in the know" the lie of the land. There has been hitherto a great dearth of English works on the subject; but, from some very clear hints, we may expect these pioneer books to be followed by two or three more. We hope they will be as well done as those before us. The second has a special collection of fifty-eight examples, a good index, and again a glossary of terms and a table of references. These last stud the pages of the text, and will be very helpful, as in the case of Dr. Forsyth's book.

To students of the branch of mathematics we have been considering one form looms large. Of Riemann it has been well said:

"Few as were the years of work allotted to him, and few as are the printed pages covered by the record of his researches, his name is, and will remain, a household word among mathematicians. Most of his memoirs are masterpieces—full of original methods, profound ideas, and far-reaching imagination."

In November, 1851, Riemann took his Doctor's degree; and the thesis he read on the occasion, which excited the admiration of Gauss, was the "Grundlagen für eine allgemeine Theorie der Functionen einer veränderlichen complexen Grösse." The last book under review is a translation of a pamphlet, by Prof. Klein, which grew out of a course of lectures delivered by him in 1881, which had in view, among other objects, the presentation of Riemann's theory of algebraic functions and their integrals. Miss Frances Hardcastle has, by her faithful and withal elegant translation, conferred a boon upon a large class of students to whom German is not so familiar as their native tongue. Riemann's brilliant lecture "on the hypotheses which lie at the bases of geometry" was introduced to English readers by Clifford (Nature, vol. viii., and Mathematical Papers, p. 55).

ON THE QUESTION OF WHAT GREEK MSS., OR CLASS OF GREEK MSS., ST. JEROME USED IN REVISING THE LATIN GOSPELS.

THIS question has been often asked; but no serious answer, based on any large collection of material, has to the best of our belief ever been offered. St. Jerome, in his epistle to Damasus, which is probably dated 383 A.D., distinctly states that the four Gospels, in the order Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, were emended by him by a comparison of Greek MSS., and those old ones ("euangelia . . . codicum graecorum emendata conlatione sed ueterum"). He goes on indeed to say that he had restrained his pen so as not to give offence to his readers, and had only corrected points in which the sense was changed; but if his words are to be taken seriously, he must have had access to, and used, Greek materials older than any MSS. which have come down to us. It is therefore of importance to determine their character.

We have now been for some years engaged upon a revision of St. Jerome's text of the Gospels with the aid of some six and twenty representative MSS.; and the conviction has been gradually forced upon us, especially in regard to the Gospels according to St. Luke and St. John, that Jerome's Greek MSS. exhibited a type of text which is not represented by any one Greek MS. or class of MSS., and sometimes not by any existing Greek MS. It is true that peculiar readings may be sometimes explained by carelessness on his part, sometimes by his desire to avoid unnecessary change from the text of the Old-Latin, and sometimes by very early corruption of the text after it left his hands; but these explanations do not cover all the phenomena.

We may tentatively class the readings which have produced the above conviction under the following three heads, under each of which we have given some examples. In doing so we have omitted trifling details and only expressed main but certain results.

- (1) Cases where Jerome has introduced into the Latin text readings which are not found, or are scarcely found at all, in Old-Latin MSS., and which do not occur in any Greek MSS. at present known. Such are:—

Mark ix. 5 (4) hic nos esse probably the Vulgate reading: the Greek is  $\eta\mu\acute{\iota}\nu\epsilon\varsigma\ \epsilon\iota\sigma\epsilon\iota\mu\epsilon\iota$ , the Old-Latin vary between nos hic esse and nobis hic esse.

Luke ix. 44 in cordibus uestris representing  $\epsilon\iota\varsigma\ \tau\alpha\varsigma\ \kappa\alpha\rho\delta\iota\alpha\varsigma\ \upsilon\mu\acute{\omega}\nu$ , but found in no existing Greek MSS.: in auribus uestris Old-Latin =  $\epsilon\iota\varsigma\ \tau\alpha\ \delta\epsilon\iota\tau\alpha\ \upsilon\mu\acute{\omega}\nu$  all odd.

Luke xxii. 55 erat petrus representing  $\eta\upsilon\ \delta\ \pi\epsilon\tau\rho\varsigma$ : but the Old-Latin have sedebat petrus, and all known Greek MSS.  $\epsilon\kappa\alpha\theta\eta\rho\tau\omicron\ \tau\omicron\ \pi$ .

John v. 45 moses in quo uos speratis representing ἐν τῷ : but the Old-Latin have nearly all in quem sp. and the existing Greek text εἰς ὃν ὑμεῖς ἠλπίζατε.

John vi. 12 ne pereant representing apparently μὴ ἀπόληται (sc. τὰ κλάσματα) : the Old-Latin have mainly ne quid pereat, ne quid pereat ex illis, ut nihil pereat, and the Greek text μὴ τι ἀπόληται (+ ἐξ αὐτῶν D).

John vii. 25 ex hierosolymis representing ἐξ Ἱεροσολύμων : the Old-Latin have ex hierosolymitanis, and the Greek ἐξ Ἱεροσολυμειῶν.

John ix. 38 et procidens adoravit probably = καὶ πεσὼν προσεκύνησεν αὐτῷ : the majority of the Old-Latin omit procidens, and no existing Greek MS. has πεσὼν.

John x. 16 Et alias oues habeo quae non sunt ex hoc ouili . . . et fiet unum ouile et unus pastor : The Vulgate thus reads ouile in each case; the Old-Latin have unus grex in the second case, except δ which has unum ouile uel pastorale; all our Greek MSS. have ἐκ τῆς αὐλῆς ταύτης . . . μία ποιμὴν εἰς ποιμὴν. Jerome (in Ezek. 46), proposing to translate atrium, distinctly implies that his Greek MSS. read αὐλή in each case. "Et alias oues habeo quae non sunt ex hoc atrio . . . et fiet unum atrium et unus pastor; hoc enim Graece αὐλή significat, quod Latina simplicitas in ouile transtulit" (ed. Vall. v. p. 584). Bishop Westcott considers this a case of St. Jerome's carelessness, but the facts are, we believe, more consistent with a Greek text which had αὐλή twice over.

- (2) Verses of which the Greek counterpart appears half in one family of MSS. and half in another.

John ix 9 alii autem nequaquam sed similis est eius; ille dicebat quia ego sum : The Vulgate MSS. are fairly unanimous here; but the readings of this passage do not agree consistently with any one Greek group.

John x. 29 pater meus quod dedit mihi malus omnibus est : here the Vulgate reading is perfectly sure; but quod dedit mihi is supported by the Greek S B* L, malus omnibus est by Gk. A, and, with variation of order, by B and X, against other known MSS.

- (3) Vulgate readings which have only partial and sporadic attestation in existing Greek MSS.

Luke ix. 4 inde ne exeatis : ne is omitted by the majority of the Old-Latin; the only Greek authority which has μή is 31.

Luke xi. 53 os eius opprimere is certainly a translation of ἐπιστομίζειν (3 MSS. in Tisch.), not of ἀποστοματίζειν : the Old-Latin have committere, etc. = συμβάλλειν D. 69.

John iii. 36 incredulus est filio apparently answering to ἀπιστῶν τῷ υἱῷ B. 69 al. pauc.; cf. non credit in filio majority of the Old-Latin : c, however, has non obaudierit filio, a indictobaudiens est filio (cf. Cypr. Test. ii. 27) = ἀπειθῶν τῷ υἱῷ the regular Greek reading.

John vii. 31, 36, viii. 21, xiii. 33. The Vulgate MSS. vary between quaeritis and quaeretur, the majority being usually on the side of quaeritis : the Greek reading throughout is ζητήσετε, 69 alone reading ζητεῖτε in every case, with somewhat suspicious consistency, but with support occasionally from Π (petropolitanus) and one or other of the Ferrar group (13, 69, 124, 346).

Our object in circulating this letter among our friends and colleagues engaged in similar work is to ask their kind help in looking up Greek MSS. at present uncollated or only insufficiently collated, in order that our conclusions on the subject, which will be published as part of the epilogue to the forthcoming fasciculus containing St. John, may be as sound as possible.

JOHN SARUM.
H. J. WHITE.

Salisbury, Christmas, 1893.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE PREVALENCE OF -S PLURALITY IN ENGLISH.

Oxford: Jan. 18, 1894.

As Prof. Napier will return to the Chronicle and the Ormulum, I will defer any reply I may have to make to that part of his argument until his complete statement is before me. And I am glad to be able to take this course, because it allows me to concentrate my attention in the present letter upon a very important aspect of the discussion to which Prof. Napier has justly given a very marked prominence.

This debate is in some danger of suffering from a kind of fallacy which has of late years been rather on the increase, a fallacy to which I know not whether the logicians have assigned any technical name, but which I will venture to call the Fallacy of Many Reasons. Some readers may be led to infer that the cause for which so much can be said is the right cause; the quality of the reasons may elude scrutiny by mere force of numbers. Beside those which Prof. Napier has stated or intimated in his two letters, there is a further series of reasons on the same side by Prof. Jespersen in the ACADEMY of December 9, so that with such a crowd of arguments against one, it is rather hard for a bewildered opponent to know where to begin. In this predicament I welcome the prominence which Prof. Napier has given to one part of his evidence, the more so as I believe it to be the strongest argument in his whole repertory. It is also one in Prof. Jespersen's series; so that in answering it I shall meet both the champions of the opposite cause. And I have a personal interest in combating this argument, because it is one by which I was myself (long ago) taken captive. Let me present Prof. Napier's argument in his own words.

"I pointed out that when the Chronicle and the Ormulum were written, the s-ending was not yet the universal plural inflexion in French. In fact, it was not a sign in number at all, but one of case. Take, for instance, the old French declension of murs 'a wall':

Singular, Nom. murs	Plural, Nom. murs .
" Obl. murs .	" Obl. murs .

How could any Englishman of the twelfth century possibly deduce from this that s is a characteristic sign of plurality? And if not, how could it influence English plurals?"

The argument is, that inasmuch as the -s of the nominative singular did not influence English usage, therefore it follows pari ratione that the -s of the accusative plural was equally unimportant. This is what we are asked to accept as if it were a necessary inference. In stating the considerations which I have to offer against this conclusion, I will speak of these two endings, as the first -s and the second -s.

(1.) At the time with which we are dealing, the first -s was not in equal vigour and vitality with the second -s; as is proved by the fact that in the next stage of French literature the first -s disappeared, while the second -s remained. Now we know that the orthography of literature follows the usage of living speech not close at its heels, but after a wide interval. Long before it was rejected by orthography, it had become unheard or faintly audible in talk. The question before us is not one of literary, but of colloquial influences. I venture to assert, and that without much fear of contradiction, that in the French of the market the first -s was unperceived, while the second -s made its weight and significance to be felt, as every commercial transaction would cause it to recur in all the fulness of its import.

(2.) I hardly know whether it is worth while to urge the well-known fact, that, in self-propagating force, the accusative is more powerful than the nominative. This consideration sinks into insignificance by the side of the foregoing, and still more so by the side of the following.

(3.) When two languages are brought into close and daily contact, the power (whatever it be) which one may have to modify the other is not evenly distributed in its action over all the parts and members of that other, but can only be exercised upon such parts as are predisposed by some antecedent harmony or similarity of form to catch a sympathetic movement.

Now if this general truth be admitted, I am entitled to conclude that, even if at the time of contact the first -s had been flourishing with the same force of vitality as the second -s, still it could not have exercised any influence upon English, because there was nothing in the English structure of the nominative to respond to its influence.

These considerations seem to obviate the difficulty of supposing that the French -s, though not yet exclusively used as a sign of plurality, did nevertheless impart a strong impulse to the extension of s-plurality in English, and in fact was the cause why it so rapidly became universal. And when Prof. Napier asks, "How could any Englishman of the twelfth century possibly deduce, &c.," I answer, that the influence for which I contend was not conducted through any process of deduction, but through the force of unconscious attraction. It was brought about, not by close meditation, but by the rough and ready intercourse of the market and the hunting-field.

J. EARLE.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE annual general meeting of the London Geologists' Association will be held in the botanical theatre of University College on Friday next, February 2, when the president, Mr. Horace B. Woodward, will deliver an address on "Geology in the Field and in the Study." The treasurer's accounts for last year show a surplus income of about £63, which has been duly invested.

AN extraordinary meeting of the Anthropological Institute will be held on Tuesday next, when Mr. J. E. Budgett Meakin will read a paper on "The People of Morocco," with lime-light illustrations.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

MR. CHARLES P. G. SCOTT has reprinted from the Transactions of the American Philological Association a lengthy list, illustrated with abundant illustrations, of "English Words which have gained or lost an Initial Consonant by Attraction."

"By Attraction, as here used, is meant an apparently accidental or unintentional transfer of a final consonant of a word, most commonly the article an or some definitive, to the beginning of the following word, or of an initial consonant to the end of the preceding word, usually the article a. A typical example of the first kind is an awl, taken as a nawl; of the second kind, a nauger, taken as an uger."

He supports Dr. Murray's explanation of cockney = "cock's egg"; but he carries the argument one stage further, by showing that the intrusive n is really the result of "attraction." In support of this, he quotes from the Morte Arthure

(l. 3281) a naye = "an egg." He also deals with the class of cases in which the final n of then, the old dative of the definite article, has been "attracted" to the following word: e.g., John a Nokes = John atten okes. Such is the explanation he would give of the colloquial expression "to the nines" = to then cyne. Mr. Scott displays great learning and ingenuity; but his exposition is not always very lucid, and the tone of his allusions to some English scholars might be more courteous.

WE have also received from America a copy of the dissertation which Mr. William Peters Reeves submitted for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy at Johns Hopkins University. Its title is "A Study in the Language of Scottish Prose before 1600," and it shows evident marks of original research among the few MS. materials that are available. The author gives considerable quotations from the Acts of the Scottish Parliament; from Hay's Buke of Batailles, of which the original is preserved in the library at Abbotsford; from the Buke of Luv, in the possession of Lord Talbot de Malahide; and from various other early MSS., some of which have never been printed. He adds two short discussions, on the phonology of the vowels and on grammar; and concludes with a useful bibliography.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

PHILOLOGICAL.—(Dictionary Evening, Friday, Jan. 12.)

BENJAMIN DAWSON, Esq., treasurer, in the chair.—Mr. Henry Bradley made his yearly report on the progress of his work in editing the E and F words for the society's New English Dictionary. He had long finished E, the last portion of which would soon be issued as a separate half-Part. Proof to "Female" had been sent out from Oxford, and copy to "Feral" sent in. Mr. Bradley said the Dictionary was a great co-operative undertaking; and he wished to thank most heartily all his helpers, who, to his regret, did not obtain due credit for their work, all of which went to the editors of the book. He then dealt with the following words: Nash and Florio use "haunting Fabian"; this is Englished from Latin licens Fabius, at the Lupercales. The slang "fake" does not really mean to steal: its earlier form is "feak, feague," Germ. fegen, to furbish up, to sweep, to plunder, ill-treat. Rowlands has "a feaguer of loges"; dramatists say "feague it away, sweep it away"; all the senses of "fake" are well given in Vaux's Slang Dictionary of 1812. The verb "fall" has twenty and a half columns and 100 numbered senses in Mr. Bradley's new Part; the noun "fall" has five columns. "Fall" is not connected with Greek σφάλαιον, and perhaps not with Latin fallere. "Falter" is not from "fault," whose i is late, but is perhaps allied to "felter," to stick, or "falden," to give way. The first sense of "family" in English is that of the Latin familia, a household of servants (slaves). The word was long used in India for a staff of officers. "Fan," O.E. fann, from Latin vannus, a shovel or basket for throwing corn up in the air to winnow it, did not get its notion of "blowing" till the sixteenth century. As to "fancy," though now used for the prize-ring, its first sense was "the perceptive power of the mind": "We know matters of Fact by the help of impressions made on the Fancy" (1722). "Far" was used with negatives in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries: "far unfit, far impatient." "Farce," a comic performance, was French farce, "stuffing," applied to words put between Kyrie and Eleison in the church services: Latin farciare, to stuff out, interlard. Farce was then shifted to the interpolated comic French words, or gag, put by actors into religious plays, and was lastly transferred to a purely comic performance. "Fare" has passed from the strong conjugation to the weak; its own strong past tense and participle died out, and their places were taken by the preterite and pt. part. of the weak O.E. verb feran, whose present tense likewise disappeared. "Farm," French ferme, Med. Lat. firma, a fixed payment (in which sense Chaucer uses it), also a signature (whence the business "firm"), is from firmare, to put on a firm basis, to settle; from "rent," farm passed to a lease, and to a tract of land held on lease to be cultivated. "Fated": Dryden's "his fated armour" was glossed as "protected by a decree of Fate": it is Ariosto's armi fatati, "enchanted arms." "Father": the d of O.E. fader lasted to the sixteenth century, though þ is used in two MSS. of the Cursor Mundi; the change to th is due to the fact that the sound of r made it easier to pronounce th before it than d, yet the scribes knew that the th was a voiced sound, and so they left d to avoid the sharp th of "path." "Fathom" is the space of the outstretched arms; Dekker has "thy Bride, she that is now thy Fadome." Curry "favel," now "favour": O.E. fauvel, a fallow-coloured horse, which was taken as an emblem of dishonesty. In the French "Roman du Fauvel," Fauvel is a "Reynard the Fox." "Fear," verb in O.E. meant to terrify; later, "fear" was (1) to frighten, (2) to frighten oneself of something, (3) to be afraid, (4) to be afraid of a thing. "Feck" (Scotch), shortened from "effect," the amount, bulk, whole: Chaucer, "My purchas is th' effecte of al my rent." "Fee": O.E. feoh, cattle, property, money, is obsolete: the doctor's "fee" is the fee simple, fief, feud, Latin feodum, which meant a stipend.—A hearty vote of thanks was passed to Mr. Bradley for his paper, and for his valuable services to the society's Dictionary.

RUSKIN SOCIETY.—(Friday, Jan. 12.)

J. ELLIOTT VINEX, Esq., in the chair.—Mr. Sydney Robjohns read a paper entitled "The Sanguine Stain—Things Visible and Faith." He said that the time had come when the conflict between theologians and men of science should cease. The two domains of thought were perfectly distinct; and there was no reason, in the nature of things, why a man should not be at once a theologian and a student of science. He referred to the presidential address of Prof. Burdon-Sanderson, before the British Association at Nottingham, and also to Dr. Martineau's reply to Tyndall's Belfast address. Infiniteness and eternalness are exclusively conceptions of faith. Dr. Huggins, in his address to the British Association at Cardiff, said that it was only through the collisions of dark suns that a temporary rejuvenescence of the heavens is possible, and that it is by such ebbings and flowings of stellar life that the inevitable end can, even for a little, be delayed. Our conceptions of that which is of faith, on the contrary, point to eternalness. Mr. Ruskin's teaching as to the relation of matter and spirit were that finiteness was over all material, that is, visible things; and that the loveliness of nature could only be perceived spiritually, and as a reflection of the Eternal Spirit. On revisiting Mont Blanc in 1845 he wrote:—

"O Mount beloved, mine eyes again
Behold the twilight's sanguine stain
Along thy peaks expire."

Mr. Ruskin sees over Nature, which he can scientifically analyse and intellectually grasp. When man thinks that he discovers a want of harmony, the fault is in himself. The astronomer reverently bows before the Eternal Truth, as he watches, in the loneliness of the night, the process of a sun in a state of consuming and expiring fire; the painter, as he depicts the hues of early morn, may realise, like Mr. Ruskin, the "Sanguine Stain" as a symbol and sign of the Eternal.

HISTORICAL.—(Thursday, Jan. 18.)

SIR M. E. GRANT DUFF, president, in the chair.—Mr. J. Tempest Blanch was elected a fellow.—A paper was read by Major Martin A. S. Hume, editor of the Calendar of Spanish State Papers (Elizabeth) on "Antonio Perez in Exile," in which the career of this remarkable man was traced with great minuteness from contemporary State Papers in English and Spanish archives. Major Hume has several new theories with regard to such questions as Perez's complicity in the political crime which led to his expulsion from Spain, his relations with Essex, and the exact value of his services to the French Government. The conclusions drawn by Major Hume are supported in each case by the evidence of original documents which have recently been discovered by him.

FINE ART.

TWO BOOKS ON INSCRIPTIONS.

Latin Historical Inscriptions illustrating the History of the Early Empire. By G. Rushforth. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.) It was a happy thought on the part of Mr. Rushforth to illustrate the history of the early Roman Empire by a small selection of inscriptions. Historians of the new school are not distinguished from their predecessors by any point so much as by the great use they make of epigraphical evidence. The use and value of this sort of evidence are likely to be further extended with time; and yet, till Mr. Rushforth's book appeared, there existed in English no elementary handbook of epigraphy. Wilmann's Exempla make rather too big a book to begin with; and English students had to be content with a French manual, Cagnat's Cours d'épigraphie latine. Mr. Rushforth's introduction, however, will now do much to familiarise readers with the "common form" of inscriptions; and his selected examples show both how the rules for reading these documents must be applied, and also how interesting is the matter recorded when put in a proper light. His "juicy" way of teaching (if we may be pardoned for a convenient Americanism) brings out all the flavour and interest which these old-world records contain; and readers new to the subject will be agreeably surprised to see how much history is wrapped up in half-a-dozen lines. Even the curious personality of some of the Roman emperors comes out in their official notices; and the patient labour of scholars, adding point to point, has discovered what is implied in a title or its omission, in the name of an officer or a flattering allusion to the senate. The shadowy L. Clodius Macer of Tacitus or Suetonius becomes a living, an ambitious, and, above all, a probable figure when the types and legends of his coins are taken into account. The selection of inscriptions is very considerably enriched by the inclusion of certain coin-legends. Mr. Rushforth must be congratulated on the great variety of topic, and therefore of interest, which he has contrived to represent within the modest compass of one hundred inscriptions. The foundation of the principate, military affairs, the establishment of communications throughout the Empire by road, municipal life, and some religious features of the age, are among the great subjects which his choice illustrates; and he has managed to include specimens of epitaphs, votive and honorary inscriptions, milestones, boundary-stones, inscriptions from other public works, legionary tiles, calendars, imperial edicts, and diplomata militaria. From the nature of the case, there is no great room for originality in treating these matters; but Mr. Rushforth shows care and lucidity in every page, and he has filled in a most satisfactory manner a gap in our classical literature. The use of the volume would be somewhat facilitated if the number of the inscription treated appeared at the top of each page.

De Rebus Thyatirenorum Commentatio Epigraphica. Thesim proponebat M. Clerc. (Paris: Picard; London: Nutt.) In the brief and mutilated stone-records of the town of Thyatira M. Clerc finds fresh evidence of the wonderful prosperity which Asia Minor enjoyed under the early Roman emperors. The site of the town, inhabited perhaps long before, was in all probability first regularly colonised by Macedonian supporters of Seleucus Nicator, and its happy situation has kept the settlement alive for something like two thousand three hundred years. Not even Turkish rule could quite destroy it. Indeed, at the present moment it has rather regained population; and this is the more strange because the old industry of the place, the crimson dye work (compare the Acts of the Apostles 16.14) has lately been killed by aniline dyes. But at no period was it so flourishing as about the date of Caracalla. Like nearly every Roman emperor of whom we know anything, even the worst, Caracalla found time to attend to the interests of the provinces, and for Thyatira in particular he did something—it is not clear what—to which grateful allusions are found in some of the inscriptions. Of these documents there are in all over a hundred, dating chiefly, of course, from the Roman period; and M. Clerc, classifying and sifting them, has made them supply varied, though fragmentary, information on the gods, the government, the commerce, and the public games of the people of Thyatira. The inscriptions, as he puts them together, also yield a probability that the town illustrates the usual Roman policy of leaving the control of local affairs in the hands of a limited number of families. A few wealthy houses seem to have been in something like hereditary possession of the offices and priesthoods. But the evidence is too incomplete for us to be sure. One thing is clear, that the name of the town was neuter plural, not (as Pliny wrote it) feminine singular. As to a few puzzling words or titles, about which M. Clerc confesses himself to be at a loss, it would have been easier for his readers to make conjecture if he had been able to print the inscriptions in full. M. Clerc's Latin is smooth, easy, and correct, although a critical taste might perhaps take exception to his constructions of ceterum and quominus.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

WE understand that Lord Dillon will be proposed next week as director of the Society of Antiquaries, in succession to the late H. S. Milman; and Prof. J. H. Middleton as the new member of council.

MR. JOHN MURRAY announces a new edition of his Handbook to Rome, brought thoroughly up to date and in great measure re-written by the Rev. W. H. Pullen. Classical archaeology has been treated by Prof. Lanciani; the sculpture galleries by Mr. A. S. Murray, of the British Museum; and the picture galleries, by Sir A. Henry Layard.

THE subject of Mr. G. Aitchison's course of lectures, as professor of architecture in the Royal Academy, which begin next Monday, will be "The Advancement of Architecture."

MR. TALFOURD ELY—of 73, Parliament-hill-road, Hampstead—will deliver a free public lecture at the South Kensington Museum on Saturday, February 10, at 8 p.m., on "The Arts of Egypt and Assyria, in their relation to those of Greece," illustrated by the oxyhydrogen lantern. The lecture will be followed by four demonstrations, to be given in the galleries of the British Museum, on Tuesdays and Thursdays at 2.45 p.m.

MESSRS. BOUSSOD, VALADON & Co. will have on view next week, at the Goupil Galleries in Regent-street, a collection of Japanese prints, formerly in the possession of M. Th. Duret, including examples of Haronobou, Hiroshigû, Hokusai, Kounyoshi, Kyonaga, Outamaro, Yeishi, and Toyokouni.

THE spring exhibition, to be held in the Walker Art Gallery at Liverpool during the months of February and March, will consist of three departments: (1) pictures in oil and water-colours by local artists; (2) decorative and applied art, including architecture, designs, embroidery, stone and wood carving, metalwork, ceramics, enamel, &c.; and (3) photographs and photographic appliances.

A SERIES of plates, produced in collotype, are being prepared for issue with the new serial edition of Cathedrals, Abbeys, and Churches of England and Wales, Part 1 of which will be published by Messrs. Cassell & Co. with the February magazines.

WE have received a circular letter from the Greek Syllogos of Candia, making an appeal for the preservation of the Gortyna inscription, which is described (without much exaggeration) as "the most famous of the epigraphical remains of Greek antiquity that have come down to us." It appears that this inscription is still left in the place where it was found in 1884—exposed not only to the weather and to the water of an irrigation channel, but also to the risk of destruction by an ignorant or malicious hand. To purchase the inscription, and to transport it to a safe and easily accessible place, will cost a sum estimated at frs. 10,000 (£400). Towards this, subscriptions are asked for; and there is offered, in return for each subscription of £25, a cast of the entire wall that contains the inscription.

WE quote the following from the Times :—

"The excavations now being carried out by the German School of Archaeology under the direction of Dr. Dörpfeld, beneath the slope of the Pnyx, have already resulted in a discovery of much interest. The remains of an ancient subterranean aqueduct have been laid bare, which Dr. Dörpfeld believes to have been constructed by Peisistratos, and to have been connected with the fountain Enneakrounos, which, in opposition to other authorities, he places near the Pnyx within the Akropolis. The discovery is of considerable importance, as it apparently solves the much-debated question with regard to the water supply of the ancient fortress, which has hitherto baffled archaeologists. Dr. Dörpfeld believes that during the progress of the excavations a passage cut through the rock of the Akropolis will be discovered."

THE S.P.C.K. has issued a little card on the coins of the New Testament, to which we call attention on account of the excellence of the illustrations, prepared by Messrs. Marcus Ward & Co. These consist of facsimiles of a mite, a farthing, a denarius, and a shekel, executed in high relief, both obverse and reverse. There are also representations of the golden candlestick from the Arch of Titus, and of the large bronze of Titus with the well-known legend, "Judaea Capta."

THE Illustrated Archaeologist for December (Charles J. Clark) is an admirable number, well carrying out the promise in the prospectus, that illustrations would be used really to illustrate. First, we have a coloured plate of portions of the mosaic pavement found by Prof. Flinders Petrie, at Tel el-Amarna, to which no description in words could do justice; then, an account, by Mr. Gilbert Goudie, of his excavation of a "Pictish" tower in Shetland, which equally demands photographs and plans; an ingenious theory of the mode in which the Celtic brooch was worn, by Mr. J. Romilly Allen; and a critical examination of prehistoric flint saws and sickles, by Dr. Robert Munro. Each of these articles is a valuable contribution to archaeology, made intelligible by means of abundant and excellent cuts.

THE STAGE.

NEW PANTOMIME.

ONE of the most important pieces in London, from the point of view of art, is the Lyceum pantomime. There is no pretentiousness about it, no manner of straining: it is not a melodrama that pretends to be a tragedy, nor a farce that would like, if it could, to be taken for a comedy. And it has now settled down to a run of great smoothness, being played twice every day. It is also a popular as well as an artistic success, Mr. Oscar Barrett, its organiser, having skilfully, last year at the Olympic, "laid his pipes" in the direction of a bigger enterprise—convinced critical people, whose opinions reached the paying public, that he knew how to combine what every one wants with what every one should grow the more tasteful for seeing. In this new order of pantomime, it may be a surprise to those who have not yet seen it to hear, the author is a person who really counts. The story is positively adhered to. Mr. Horace Lennard has written the "book," and has written it well. The music is good; it is excellently chosen, and, for the most part, excellently executed. The acting—yes, I will speak of the acting next, and leave to the last that wonderful matter of colour and stage-arrangement—the acting is, in several cases, of merit, and in all is, at least, blameless. Take, for instance, Cinderella's ugly and tyrannical sisters—parts which the public insists, and managers concede, shall always be played by men. Such parts are generally made of intolerable vulgarity. A couple of comic performers, whose uncomeliness is all their art, are wont to appear in skirts which they manage hideously, with the offensiveness, to begin with, of an inconceivable awkwardness, and, to boot, with the ugliest suggestions of the prudery of the respectable ignorant. The two actors, Mr. Victor Stevens and Mr. Fred Emery, who play these parts at the Lyceum, play them so blamelessly that I must needs bestow on the unfortunate gentlemen that negative praise, which, in parts like these, which I loathe altogether, is the nearest point to enthusiasm that I can ever hope to find myself capable of reaching. They really are not bad—they really are not bad at all. The characters are few. Mr. Charles Lauri, the "Black Cat," who in utter defiance of the Thirteen Club, brings luck to Cinderella, is as clever as he was last year at the Olympic, when the fortunes of the admirable beast were associated with those of Dick Whittington. Miss Clara Jecks, who, if she does not contribute to the merriment of nations, has certainly in her time made evenings at the Adelphi less dull, has but a small opportunity. Miss Minnie Terry, as the Sylph Coquette—an interpolation of Mr. Lennard's, I assume, but Mr. Andrew Lang will spot the mistake I hope, and correct me if I am wrong—Miss Minnie Terry then, as the Sylph Coquette, reminds me, after too long an absence, that she is the only child actress I ever cared for, except Miss Vera Beringer. She remains, one is glad to find, graceful; and her enunciation, how excellent, and her intelligence, how marked! Miss Ellaline Terriss plays Cinderella with a happy union of youthfulness and authority such as could perhaps hardly have come to her had she not been an actor's daughter. Miss Winifred Emery, the child of a delightful character-actor, had it, I remember, very early, the "authority," I mean: she could not help having the youth. And so had

Mrs. Kendal—the child of an excellent actress of comedy, who did at the very least her share towards making some people's boyhood less sad. One of the very first parts I ever saw Mrs. Kendal in was this very part of Cinderella. And now, in Mr. Lennard's version of it, it is played bewitchingly by Miss Ellaline Terriss.

All these things are very satisfactory to count over, and remember: they tell of a Saturday afternoon spent at least in a bien honnête endroit, as a French friend of mine ingeniously answered when I mentioned that I had espied him on the King's-road at Brighton. But these things are not all. It is much that there should be restored to us the order of pantomime that we knew a score of years ago, before the stage was tramped across by vast armies, or was made the scene for the display of that "riper humour" which we owe to "the Great Masters of the Music Halls." Yet the one thing really most memorable in the "New Pantomime"—for while much has been revived, this at least has been added—is the exhibition of an extraordinary taste and talent in the arrangement of colour, both as to the actual scenery and as to the costumes to which for the most part it is a background. The immensely improved arrangement of colour in costume—in great groupings as well as in the single figure—is due to same extent of course, to the improvement in dyes, and to the improvement in the general taste, and, as regards the boards, to the efforts of pioneers in this matter, such as Mr. Wilson Barrett, and Mr. Irving himself (perhaps most of all), whose theatre Mr. Oscar Barrett now occupies. But that is not everything. Only an eye singularly gifted, and singularly cultivated besides, could have devised and carried to perfection schemes of colour like two, at least, of those now executed at the Lyceum: first, the autumn scene, a wide forest glade in October—

"Green-golden, orange, vermilion, golden and brown,

The high years' haunting crown"—

if I may quote Mr. Robert Bridges; and secondly that fairy-boudoir, of rococo form, gold and sky-blue and rose-colour, such as might have ensured to François Boucher, for ever, the Pompadour's gratitude. I hail this latter scene as quite the most lovely realisation of "the bad period"—one does but quote it prae-Raphaelite—that we have seen in London; while, of the former, if Mr. Bridges's lines have not described it already far better, let me but soberly and more precisely say, that what with trees and falling foliage, and autumn-clad figures, there flies or flaunts across the stage in a sequence quite exquisite, every hue of oak and orange, of walnut and canary, of russet and cinnamon. These are some of the most thoroughly artistic pictures ever beheld on any boards.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

STAGE NOTES.

A NEW play by Mr. Robert Buchanan, called "The Charlatan," was produced some days since at the Haymarket, the chief characters being represented by Mr. and Mrs. Beerbohm Tree, Mr. Fred Terry, Miss Gertrude Kingston, Mr. Fred Kerr, Mr. Nutcombe Gould, and Miss Lily Hanbury.

MISS ANNIE ROSE's season at the Royalty has been signalled by the production of that which the learned in Scandinavian tongues assure us is an adaptation rather than a translation of a play by Björnson. Somewhere be who do not quite accept the decision that Scandinavia is the especial home of dramatic genius; but Björnson's novels have some degree of merit (as even the translations make plain), and one might have hoped for something not indeed great, but at least fairly interesting. But "outside the limited circle," says a contemporary, not without careful analysis, "A Gauntlet" will be looked on as a tedious moral charade, crudely set forth." It would seem, from this account, to have something in common with Ideala and The Heavenly Twins—two "viewy," not to say "faddist," stories, which have enjoyed an hour of popular success.

AT the Pioneer Club, next Monday afternoon, Mrs. Theodore Wright and Mrs. Osman Edwards are going to give readings from Björnson's plays in the visitors' rooms: visitors will be admitted on the members' tickets.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

A CONCERT performance of the two operas, "Pagliacci" and "Cavalleria Rusticana," at the Queen's Hall last Saturday afternoon attracted an immense audience. Anyone having seen those works given under proper conditions at the opera house could have foretold that the music alone, especially of the former, would prove singularly tame. Yet it is easy to account for the success of the undertaking. London is a large city, and no doubt many were drawn thither by curiosity. But there is a section of the public who will not enter an opera house, and yet see no harm in listening to an opera given on a concert platform. How they reconcile this with their conscience is a mystery which we will not attempt to fathom. If they enjoy music which loses nearly all its meaning apart from the stage, no one will grudge them that enjoyment. Miss Ella Russell and Messrs. Lloyd, Ben Davies, and Eugene Oudin were the principal vocalists, and acquitted themselves well. Signor Armando Seppilli proved an intelligent, if not brilliant, conductor.

Five of the new pianoforte pieces (Op. 118 and 119) recently published by Brahms, were played for the first time in England at the Popular Concert on Monday evening. Of modern pianoforte pieces there are many, but only a few have any real value. In Brahms, intellect and emotion are not always evenly balanced; and when the former prevails, the music becomes more or less dry. Yet it is always interesting, for the composer works up his material not with the empty pomp of a pedant, but with the skill of a master. The first of the pieces under notice is a Ballade, in which the softly meandering middle section contrasts admirably with the energetic principal theme. The Intermezzo opens in a restless manner, but the middle episode is both calm and graceful. A second Intermezzo contains some clever and characteristic thematic workings. A Romanze in F is remarkable for its simplicity and delicate charm: it is very short, almost too short, and, at first hearing, the very brief restatement of the first theme does not seem to bring the piece to a satisfactory conclusion. The middle section is particularly quaint: one can trace in it the influence of both Bach and Chopin, a combination by no means unpleasant. The Rhapsodie, with its bold principal subject followed by a chorale, and its dainty middle section, forms an excellent specimen of Hungarian music. Of the five pieces, the last two seem to us the most inspired. They were all interpreted by Mlle. Eibenschütz with great skill and earnestness, although in some of the numbers she did not seem to bring out the full meaning of the music: we refer especially to the Ballade and Romanze.

Dr. Stanford's Mass in G (Op. 46) was performed on Tuesday evening at the Bach Society's concert, Queen's Hall. The work was composed specially for the Church of the Oratory, and bears the inscription: "To Thomas Wingham, in sincere regard, December, 1892." The music throughout is dignified, and, though not lacking in contrapuntal devices, easy to follow. The Credo is a very fine number. There is a happy blending in it of the old and the new; the dramatic "Crucifixus" passage and the contrapuntal "Et vitam venturi" may serve as illustration. Next to the "Credo," the soft plaintive "Agnus Dei" was the section of the Mass which struck us most favourably. The work indeed, though it may not display marked individuality, is worthy of the composer; it is moreover pleasing to note that the "sincere regard" of one native musician for another was the raison d'être of the Mass. The performance, under the direction of the composer, was good—one cannot say excellent. The principal vocalists were Miss Esther Pallisor, Miss Marie Brema, and Messrs. Shakespeare and Norman Salmond. The programme concluded with the second part of the first act of "Parsifal." To condemn an opera in concert form and to approve of "Parsifal" on a concert platform would, on principle, be irrational; although it must be remembered that this is at the present day the only form in which the latter can be heard in England. Again, in "Parsifal," we have music of exceptionally emotional character; and if its meaning, apart from the stage, is never fully revealed, its intense subjective power can be felt. The performance was singularly impressive; Messrs. Norman Salmond and David Bispham interpreted their parts with admirable emphasis and fervour. That "Parsifal" is of "solemn character" we willingly grant, and the request for the audience not to leave their seats during the performance was a just one. But was not the Mass entitled to a similar request? And surely every great work of musical art is of "solemn character"; the distinction made in favour of "Parsifal" savoured, in sooth, somewhat of cant or custom. We must stand to the "Hallelujah" chorus, rise (but only occasionally) to the "Sanctus," and sit quietly through the "Grail" scene of "Parsifal." Why not also teach us how we should behave in presence of Mozart's "Jupiter," or Beethoven's "Choral," or Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony?

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

SUBSCRIPTIONS are being asked towards a testimonial to Mr. Straus on the occasion of his retirement from the active pursuit of his profession, and, in particular, from the post which, for so many years, he has held at the Saturday and Monday Popular Concerts. The committee includes Sir Frederick Leighton, Mr. Alma Tadmara, Sir George Grove, and Dr. Parry. Contributions will be received by the hon. treasurer, Lady Sandhurst, 10, Cadogan-gardens, S.W.

THE popular concert at the South Place Institute, on the evening of Sunday next, January 28, will be devoted entirely to the works of Beethoven.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN &amp; CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

DICTIONARY of POLITICAL ECONOMY. Edited by R. H. Inglis

PALGRAVE, F.R.S. Vol. I. (A.—E.). Medium 8vo, 21s. net.

DAILY NEWS.—"Promises to be a work of authority and of great practical utility."

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"A most useful work, wherein conciseness is blended with accurate information in a quite unusual degree."

FISHERS of MEN. Addressed to the Diocese of Canterbury in his Third Visitation. By EDWARD WHITE, Archbishop. Crown 8vo, 6s.

TIMES.—"Keen insight and sagacious counsel."

THE RESURRECTION of our LORD. By William Milligan, D.D.,

late Professor of Divinity and Biblical Criticism in the University of Aberdeen. Sixth Thousand Crown 8vo, 5s.

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE: a Narrative of the Events of his Life. By JAMES DYKES CAMPBELL. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

TIMES.—"A reproduction, revised and expanded, of the original and masterly biographical memoir of the poet, prefixed by Mr. Campbell to his edition of his poetical works published last year."

GUARDIAN.—"Nothing so good exists on the subject."

CHAPTERS on GREEK DRESS. By Maria Millington Evans.

With Illustrations. 8vo, 5s. net.

TIMES.—"Her pages are full of knowledge lucidly and attractively conveyed, and the illustrations are selected with taste and judgment."

A SHORT HISTORY of the ENGLISH PEOPLE. By J. R. Green,

M.A. Illustrated Edition. Edited by Mrs. J. R. GREEN and Miss KATE NORRIDGE. Part XXIX. 1s. net.

LADY WILLIAM. By Mrs. Oliphant. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

SPEAKER.—"It has that touch of natural simplicity which is the hall-mark of Mrs. Oliphant's work."

GLASGOW HERALD.—"The most experienced reader will hardly guess the actual development of the mystery till he arrives at it.....The greatest charm of the book lies in the restfully amusing little village society to which it introduces us."

MACMILLAN'S THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.—New Volume.

THE STORY of DICK. By Major Gambier Parry, Author of

"Reynell Taylor, a Biography," &amp;c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

FALL HALL GAZETTE.—"A series of charming little sketches in the life of a child."

OBSERVER.—"A bright little story full of pleasant scenes and scenery."

THE EVERSLEY SERIES.—New Volumes.

PARTIAL PORTRAITS. By Henry James. Globe 8vo, 5s.

THE COLLECTED WORKS of THOMAS HENRY HUXLEY,

F.R.S. In Monthly Volumes. Globe 8vo, 5s. each Volume.

Vol. I.—METHOD and RESULTS.

Vol. II.—DARWINIANA.

Vol. III.—SCIENCE and EDUCATION.

Vol. IV.—SCIENCE and HEBREW TRADITION.

Vol. V.—SCIENCE and CHRISTIAN TRADITION.

EXPERIMENTAL PROOFS of CHEMICAL THEORY for

BEGINNERS. By WILLIAM RAMSAY, Ph.D., F.R.S., Professor of Chemistry in University College, London. Second Edition. Pott 8vo, 2s. 6d.

ELECTRIC WAVES: being Researches on the Propagation of

Electric Action with Finite Velocity through Space. By HEINRICH HERTZ, late Professor of Physics in the University of Bonn. Authorized Translation by D. E. JONES, B.Sc. With Preface by Lord KELVIN, P.R.S. Illustrated. 8vo, 10s. net.

NATURE.—"The subject is of immense importance; the work described is of the highest order of experimental investigation; the results obtained have contributed more than any other recent results to revolutionise the view taken by the majority of scientific workers as to the nature of electromagnetic actions.....The whole work is most interesting, and well deserves the best attention of all interested in the great scientific advance of the last quarter of the nineteenth century."

MACMILLAN'S CLASSICAL SERIES.—New Volume.

HOMER'S ILIAD. Book IX. From "The Story of Achilles."

Edited, with Notes, by JOHN HENRY PRATT, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, Assistant Master at Harrow School; and WALTER LEAF, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Fesp. 8vo, 2s.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

No. 412.

FEBRUARY.

Price 1s.

CONTENTS.

1. LORDS and COMMONS.
2. PERLYCROSS. By R. D. BLACKMORE. Chapters XXVII.—XXIX.
3. THE PORTRAIT of a MOONSHEE. By J. W. SHERRER, C.S.I.
4. SOME THOUGHTS on ST. FRANCIS.
5. THE STORY of the INSCRIPTIONS.
6. AN OXFORD IDYLL.
7. ON MODERN TRAVELLING. By VERNON LEE.
8. THE PARTRIDGE. By T. S. KEBBEL.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO., LONDON.

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW LIST.

NEW BOOK BY THE AUTHOR OF
"OBITER DICTA."

The FIRST EDITION has been exhausted within a few days of publication, and a SECOND EDITION will be issued next week.

In folscep 8vo, tastefully printed, and bound in olive cloth, uniform with "Obiter Dicta," price 5s.

ESSAYS ABOUT MEN, WOMEN, AND BOOKS.

BY

AUGUSTINE BIRRELL, Q.C., M.P.

Contents.

SWIFT. BOLINGBROKE. STERNE. JOHNSON. RICHARD CUMBERLAND. ALEXANDER KNOX and THOMAS DE QUINCEY. HANNAH MORE. MARIE BASHKERTSEFF. SIR JOHN VANBRUGH. ROGER NORTH'S AUTO- BIOGRAPHY.	JOHN GAY. BOOKS: Old and New. BOOKBINDING. POETS-LAUREATE. PARLIAMENTARY CANDIDATES. THE BONA-FIDE TRAVELLER. HOURS in a LIBRARY. FREE QUOTATIONS. AUTHORS and CRITICS.
--	---

"Mr. Augustine Birrell is always good company. Unlike some living writers who might be named, he is always himself, and the self is so sane, so shrewd, so vivacious, that this fidelity to it suffices to make his books delightful."—Daily Chronicle.

Tastefully printed on fine paper, large 8vo, handsomely bound in cloth, price 21s. Fifty copies only have been printed on Large Paper for Collectors, price £3 8s. net.

THE BOOK-HUNTER
IN PARIS.

Being Studies among the Bookstalls of the Quays. By OCTAVE UZANNE. With an Introduction by AUGUSTINE BIRRELL, Author of "Obiter Dicta," "Rea Judicata," &amp;c., and 144 Characteristic Illustrations interspersed in the Text.

"A very interesting book. Mr. Birrell's introduction is a pleasant and useful explanation of the volume, which is presented in a form fully deserving of its literary merits."—Times.

NEW VOLUME OF THE BOOK-LOVERS' LIBRARY.

In folscep 8vo, tastefully printed on antique paper, and bound in olive cloth, gilt lettered, price 4s. 6d.; hand-made paper, Roxburghe binding, 7s. 6d. net; large-paper Roxburghe binding, 21s. net.

BOOK-SONG, an Anthology

of Poems of Books and Bookmen from Modern Authors Edited by GLESON WHITE, Editor of "Ballades and Rondeaux," "Garde Joyeuse," &amp;c., &amp;c.

"Charming and valuable."—Globe.
"There is much in this anthology to delight the reader."—Saturday Review.

Tastefully printed in demy 8vo, cloth, price 10s. 6d. Copiously illustrated with Sketches and Photographs.

ROUND THE WORLD
BY DOCTOR'S ORDERS.

Being a Narrative of a Year's Travel in Japan, Ceylon, Australia, China, New Zealand, Canada, United States &amp;c. By JOHN DALE, J.P., Scarborough.

Tastefully printed and bound in cloth, price 8s. 6d. With Illustrative Diagrams.

A SIMPLE HISTORY OF ANCIENT PHILOSOPHY

By W. R. SCOTT, M.A., Trinity College, Dublin. Author of "An Introduction to Cudworth's Treatise concerning Eternal and Immutable Morality."

Tastefully printed and appropriately bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

UNPOPULAR POLITICS

Being Non-popular Aspects, Political and Economic of some Prominent Contemporary Questions. By G. EDWARD TARNER.

CONTENTS:—State-provided Education—Combinations in Restraint of Trade—The Progressive Transfer of Political Power to the Largest Class.

LONDON:

ELLIOT STOCK 62, PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1135.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	PAGE
THE BOOK OF ENOCH, by the Rev. JOHN OWEN	93
LADY BLESSINGTON AND LORD BYRON, by F. HAWKINS	94
ANDREW LANG'S ST. ANDREWS, by W. WALLACE	96
CEMING WALTERS'S TENNYSON, by ARTHUR WAUGH	96
NEW NOVELS, by GEORGE COTTERELL	98
SOME BOOKS ON MODERN GREECE	99
NOTES AND NEWS	100
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	101
ORIGINAL VERSE: "SWAN SONG," by W. WARWICK BOND	101
OBITUARY: MISS PRABODY, by WALTER LEWIN	101
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	101
THE ACADEMIE FRANÇAISE, by CECIL NICHOLSON	102
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	102
CORRESPONDENCE—
The North British Inscriptions, by the Earl of Southesk, the Rev. A. L. Mayhew, and the Rev. E. McClure; Dante and Bertrán de Born , by A. G. Ferrers Howell and H. Krebs; A Child Marriage in 1623, by J. S. C.; "Winchester College," by Lionel Johnson	103
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	104
AVIANUS AND HIS IMITATORS, I, by Prof. ELLIS	104
CORRESPONDENCE—
Traces of Syriac Influence on the Text of the Vulgate, by J. T. Marshall; The Prevalence of s- Plurality in English, by Prof. Earls	105
SCIENCE NOTES	106
PHILOLOGY NOTES	107
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	107
OLD MASTERS AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY, III, by CLAUDE PHILLIPS	107
CORRESPONDENCE—
Botticelli's "Spring," by Grant Allen; Threatened Destruction of the Temple of Philæ, by Lieut.-Col. ROSE	109
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	110
STAGE NOTES	110
MUSIC NOTES	110

MR. KIRWAN.—LESSONS in SPEECH
Illustrated Dramatic Readings (a combination of speech, pictures, and music). Selections. Literary Lectures.—Address, 3, Vernon Place, W.C.

BYRON—SHELLEY—KEATS: IN
MEMORIAM ENDOWED YEARLY PRIZES for the BEST ESSAY in ENGLISH, written by a Woman of any nation. Third set. With Portrait of Fionnuala and "Gossip." 1s. 1d.—For rules, send addressed halfpenny wrapper to ROSE MARY CRAWSHAW, Rwlch, Breconshire.

A GRADUATE of BALLIOL, A.R.C.M.,
L.Mus.T.C.L., B.Mus.Oxon., is OPEN to undertake LITERARY or EXAMINING WORK in connection with Music.—E. W., 15, Ship Street, Oxford.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to best
University or Army Tutors, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained (free of charge) by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. BEYER, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

KEW BEE LITERARY SOCIETY,
12, Ruckley Road, London, W.—NOTICE to MEMBERS.—THE PRESIDENT will LECTURE on "ANTIQUARIAN ILLUSTRATIONS to SHAKESPEARE'S PLAYS," on TUESDAY EVENING NEXT, FEBRUARY 8th, at 8 o'clock.
JOHN PARNELL, President.

Just published, small 8vo, 364 pages, 5s. net.
FOLK-LORE of SCOTTISH LOCHS
and SPRINGS.
By JAMES M. MACKINLAY, M.A., F.S.A. Scot.
Glasgow: WILLIAM HODGE & CO. London: WILLIAMS & NORGATE.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL
MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STOCKER, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING.
AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—
Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by HAYES & CO., 49, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS
115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List.—115, Fleet Street, London.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS
and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

THE COLONIAL COLLEGE and TRAINING FARMS (Limited), Hollesley Bay, Suffolk.

For the Training of those destined for Colonial Life, &c.
The College owns and farms for the instruction of its students a fine Seaside Estate of 1,800 acres.
Prospectus on application to the RESIDENT DIRECTOR.

ELTHAM COLLEGE, KENT
(THE ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL).
TEN OPEN ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS, £40 to £50, on APRIL 11, 12, 13.—Full particulars of HEAD MASTER.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE
DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Truro, &c.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

UNIVERSITY of EDINBURGH.

LECTURESHIP in (a) FRENCH LANGUAGE and LITERATURE and ROMANCE PHILOLOGY, and (b) GERMAN LANGUAGE and LITERATURE and TEUTONIC PHILOLOGY.

The University Court will, on 16th April next, or some subsequent day, APPOINT A LECTURER in each of the above two subjects.

The Lecturers must be qualified to instruct students with a view to Honours, as well as the ordinary Degree in Arts, and must possess a historical acquaintance with both the Literature and the Philology of France and Germany respectively from the earliest times. They should also possess a thorough colloquial command of the language.

They will be required to teach during both the Winter and the Summer Session, and to enter on their duties at the beginning of the Winter Session, 1894-95.

The appointment, which may be renewed, will be for five years, at an annual salary of £400 in each lecturership.

It is a condition of their appointment that the Lecturers shall not teach in schools, or in any Institution other than the University.

Each applicant should lodge with the undersigned, not later than MESSRS. 26th MARCH next, sixteen copies of his application, and sixteen copies of any testimonials he may desire to submit. One copy of the application should bear the applicant's signature.

M. C. TAYLOR, Secretary University Court.
University of Edinburgh,
22nd January, 1894.

CATALOGUES
FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.
WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
Importers of Foreign Books,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.

CATALOGUES post free on application.
BIBLIOTHECA ORIENTALIS: I.
Being a Catalogue of Oriental Languages and Literature (containing New and Second-hand Books in more than 50 different languages), pp. iv.-104 (1,684 Nos.) will be sent post free on receipt of 6d.

LUZAC & CO.'S ROUGH LISTS of Second-hand Books, on the History, Geography, &c., of Asia, Africa, &c., Nos. 1 to 6, have been published (73s. Nos.), sent post free on application.

LUZAC & CO.'S ORIENTAL LIST.
Containing Notes and News on, and a Biographical List of, all new Publications on Africa and the East. Published Monthly. Annual Subscription (post free), 3s.

"The ACADEMY, Feb. 4, 1893, writes: 'Messrs. Luzac & Co.'s Oriental List.... describes the support of Oriental students.... It gives, under the heading of 'Notes and News,' details about important Oriental works, which are both more full and more careful than anything of the sort to be found elsewhere.'"

Vol. V., No. I. (January, 1894), just out. A few copies of Vols. I. to IV., are still to be had (half-bound, with full Author's Index, &c.) at 5s. net each volume.

LUZAC & CO., Oriental Booksellers and Publishers, 45, Great Russell Street (opposite the British Museum), London, W.C.

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL.
By PERCY RUSSELL.
With Prefatory Remarks by MR. GLADSTONE.
Sixth Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s.
With Portrait.

The BESTMINSTER REVIEW says: "A very complete manual and guide for journalist and author. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense.... We have little else but praise for the volume."

DIGBY, LONG & CO., PUBLISHERS,
18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON.

ESSAYS, RECOLLECTIONS, AND CAUSERIES.

By the Hon. LIONEL A. TOLLEMACHE.

Demy 8vo, pp. 454, cloth, 5s.

SAFE STUDIES.

Contents.

HISTORICAL PREDICTION.—SIR G. C. LEWIS and LONGEVITY.—LITERARY EGOTISM.—CHARLES AUSTIN—RECOLLECTIONS OF MR. GROTE and MR. BABBAGE.—MR. TENNYSON'S SOCIAL PHILOSOPHY.—PHYSICAL and MORAL COURAGE.—THE UPPER ENOADING.—NOTES and RECOLLECTIONS OF SIR CHARLES WHEATSTONE, DEAN STANLEY, and CANON KINGSLEY.—THE EPICURIST'S LAMENT.—TRANSLATIONS.

POEMS AND TRANSLATIONS

By The Hon. Mrs. L. A. TOLLEMACHE.

Demy 8vo, pp. 238, cloth, 2s. 6d.

STONES OF STUMBLING.

Contents.

THE CURE FOR INCURABLES.—THE FEAR OF DEATH.—FEARLESS DEATHS.—DIVINE ECONOMY OF TRUTH.

Appendices.

RECOLLECTIONS OF PATTISON.*—MR. ROMANES'S CATECHISM.—NEOCHRISTIANITY and NEOCATHOLICISM: A SEQUEL.

* This is also published separately, demy 8vo, cloth, 1s.

These books are issued at COST PRICE.

"Mr. Tollemache's essays seem to us to possess literary merit of a rare and high order. He is not only pleasantly anecdotic; he is eminently sympathetic, ingenious, thoughtful, and appreciative, and many of these qualities are also exhibited in his more speculative and less personal papers. His recollections of Grote, Charles Austin, and Pattison are full of interesting anecdote and suggestive comment, while those of Babbage, Sir Charles Wheatstone, Dean Stanley, and Canon Kingsley, belong to the same order.... The 'Recollections of Pattison' are very charming."—The Times.

"There are enough good stories in Mr. Tollemache's Recollections to fill half-a-dozen columns."—The [London] Star.

"The volumes are witty and interesting, and besprinkled throughout with the dew of wide and unusual reading. Particularly in his resort to apt classical quotation does Mr. Tollemache preserve an honourable literary tradition in a way which now seems a little old-fashioned, though agreeable from its very quaintness as well as its frequent pungency.... The 'Recollections of Pattison' are thoroughly delightful. Based upon a long friendship, and upon a certain affinity, they are altogether charming in their mingled analysis and reminiscence, narrative and anecdote.... We take pleasure in commending these books for their biographical interest, which in parts is of the greatest, as well as for the refinement and learning that pervade them throughout."—The Nation (New York).

"Since the death of Hayward, we know of no English litterateur who has, in the same degree as Mr. Tollemache, the happy knack of recollecting or collecting the characteristic sayings and doings of a distinguished man, and piecing them together in a finished mosaic."—The Daily Chronicle.

* * A slip giving further Press Notices sent on application.

LONDON: WILLIAM RICE, 86, FLEET STREET, E.C.

[Sold also by BRANTANO, 17, Avenue de l'Opéra, Paris, and 5, Union Square, New York; TITTMANN, Dresden; VIEUSSEUX, Florence; FITHVEN, Rome; and all Book-sellers.]

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and
SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the House of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.
COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.
N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS and POST FREE

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY,
10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;
211, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman
Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by Holf, R.A., Oulcs, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided as easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art
The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, of 181 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing nearly 70 Miniature Photographs of notable autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

New Pamphlet, "Autotype a Decorative and Educational Art," free on application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary
Book Illustrations.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs,
Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations,
Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

THE JOURNAL OF EDUCATION

"Again justifies its position as the leading monthly journal of the educational world."—BRADFORD OBSERVER, Jan. 27, 1891.

FEBRUARY CONTENTS.

OCCASIONAL NOTES:—Royal Commission on University Education; Christ's Hospital; Prof. Meiklejohn and the "Science of Education"; Salaries of Assistant Mistresses; Clerical Head Masters, &c.
THE STUDY and TEACHING of FRENCH (concluded). Prof. SPIERS
"BLESSÉ" are the STRONG, for they shall PREY on the WEAK."
Part II. Renan and Renanism. By the Hon. LIONEL A. TOLLEMACHE
TEACHERS' REGISTRATION. By CHARLES T. D. AGLAND.
THE EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTE of SCOTLAND, and Dr. J. G.
FITZGILL.

AMERICAN CURRICULA of SECONDARY EDUCATION.

CORRESPONDENCE:—Public Schools Time-Tables (T. Field); Scripture at the Local Examinations (Edith Tyley); Defects in English Public Schools (F. Haverfield); Girls' Education in America (K.
Gray); The Modern Language Association (W. Stuart Macgowan); Secondary Education (J. O. Bevan).

NOTES on ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS—TECHNICAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION of ASSISTANT MISTRESSES.

THE TEACHERS' GUILD—OFFICIAL REPORT.

NOTES and QUERIES.

CALENDAR of EDUCATIONAL EVENTS, &c.

REVIEWS and MINOR NOTICES.

SCHOOLS and UNIVERSITIES.

TRANSLATION PRIZES.

HAND-WRITING PRIZE RESULT (Illustrated).

Price 6d., per post, 8d.

Office 86, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Price 1s. Monthly.

THE EXPOSITOR.

CONTENTS for FEBRUARY.

ST. PAUL'S CONCEPTION OF CHRISTIANITY.—13. The Holy Spirit.

By Rev. Professor A. B. Bruce, D.D.

AGRAPHA: Sayings of Our Lord not Recorded in the Gospels.

By Rev. W. Lock, M.A.

THE BIBLE and SCIENCE.—2. The Book of Genesis.

By Sir J. W. Dawson, C.M.G., F.R.S.

"HE CALLED" or "SHE CALLED"?

By Professor Eberhard Nestle, D.D.

THE PREMIER IDEAS of JESUS.—2. Ageless Life.

By Rev. John Watson, M.A.

A REPLY to Mr. CHASE.

By Professor W. M. Ramsay, M.A.

SURVEY of RECENT BIBLICAL LITERATURE.

By Rev. Professor Marcus Dods, D.D.

LONDON: HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, PATERNOSTER ROW

Now ready, price 2s.; post free, 2s. 3d.

LA REVUE DE PARIS.

No. 1. FEBRUARY 1st.

CONTENTS.

H. de BALZAC, Letters à l'Etrangère.

PIERRE LOTI, An Couvent de Loyola.

ERNEST RENAN, Philon d'Alexandrie.

GYP, Le Mariage de Chiffon. I.

FRANCIS MAGNARD, La Resurrection d'une Légende.

D'ANNUNZIO, Episcopo & Cie. I.

EMILE FAGUET, Ferdinand Brunetière.

J. JUSSERAND, Le Roman d'un Roi d'Ecosse.

GABRIEL SEAILLES, La Peinture de Portrait.

Published bi-Monthly. Annual Subscription, post free, 48s.; Six Months, 24s.; Three Months, 12s.

General Agents for Great Britain and Ireland:

ASHER & Co., 13, Bedford Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,
&c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers
and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., are prepared to undertake the Printing and Publishing of first-class
Newspapers, Magazines, Books, Catalogues, Pamphlets, Prospectuses,
Articles of Association, Minutes of Evidence, &c., in the best style.
Their offices are fitted with the latest improvements in Rotary and other Machinery, the most modern English and Foreign Type, and they employ none but first-class workmen. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 2739. Telegraph, "Africanism London."

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

WALTER SCOTT'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW AND IMPORTANT WORK BY COUNT TOLSTOI.

READY IMMEDIATELY, crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.
(AUTHORISED TRANSLATION.)

THE KINGDOM OF GOD IS WITHIN YOU;

OR, CHRISTIANITY NOT AS A MYSTICAL DOCTRINE,
BUT AS A NEW LIFE-CONCEPTION.

With a Preface for this Edition

By COUNT LEO TOLSTOI.

Translated from the original Russian MS. by A. DELANO.

JUST READY

Crown 8vo, half-antique, paper boards, 2s. 6d.

The THEATRICAL "WORLD" FOR 1893.

By WILLIAM ARCHER.

"This year has been a peculiarly interesting theatrical season, with several interesting productions, the visits of Signora Duse and the Comédie Française, and, above all, the production of 'The Second Mrs. Tanqueray.' It will therefore be good news to students of the theatre that Mr. William Archer is about to publish, through Mr. Walter Scott, an almost complete reprint of the well-known criticisms that have appeared weekly during the year over his initials in the World."—London Daily Chronicle.

SCOTT LIBRARY.

Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, price 1s. 6d. per vol.

RECENT VOLUMES.

ESSAYS, DIALOGUES, AND THOUGHTS.

By LEOPARDI.

Translated, with an Introduction, by Major-General PATRICK MAXWELL.

THE INSPECTOR-GENERAL:

A Russian Comedy.

By NIKOLAI V. GOGOL.

Translated from the Original, with Introduction and Notes, by ARTHUR A. SYKES.

LATEST VOL.

ESSAYS AND APOTHEGMS OF LORD BACON.

Edited, with an Introduction, by JOHN BUCHAN.

THE CANTERBURY POETS.

SPECIAL EDITION.

Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, price 2s.

A SPECIAL EDITION of the CANTERBURY POETS, each volume containing a Frontispiece in Photogravure, is being issued. Forty Volumes now ready. List on application.

A NEW ISSUE OF THE WORKS OF NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE.

In 12 vols., crown 8vo, antique paper, with Frontispieces in Photogravure, the Cover designed by Walter Crane, 2s. 6d. per vol.

ALREADY ISSUED—

THE SCARLET LETTER.

With Frontispiece by T. Eyre Macklin.

THE HOUSE OF THE SEVEN GABLES.

With Frontispiece by T. Eyre Macklin.

THE BLITHEDALE ROMANCE.

With Frontispiece by T. Eyre Macklin.

Ready 26th February.

TANGLEWOOD TALES.

With Frontispiece by James Torrance.

LONDON: WALTER SCOTT, LIMITED,
24, WARWICK LANE, PATERNOSTER ROW.

DIGBY, LONG & CO.'S NEW BOOKS

AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

NOVELS AND STORIES.

SECOND EDITION.

LIKE a SISTER. By Madeline Crichton. In

3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.

The PEOPLE says: "We predict for her a prosperous career. She writes good English, and works out her plot with considerable skill."

THE NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "GOOD DAME FORTUNE."

WHAT HAPPENED at MORWYN. By Maria

A. HOYER. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s

The PALL MALL GAZETTE says: "It is refreshing to take up so bright and wholesome a story as 'What Happened at Morwyn,' and one written in a style so fresh and natural. Its heroine realises as nearly as may be Wordsworth's famous description of woman as she should be.....Cordially recommending it to our readers."

NEW MILITARY NOVEL.

DEFERRED PAY; or, a Major's Dilemma. By

Lieut.-Colonel W. H. M'CAUSLAND. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The WHITEHALL REVIEW says: "Will well repay perusal, and will be found of extreme interest to all Service readers."

THE NEW SOCIETY NOVEL.

FIRST LARGE EDITION EXHAUSTED, SECOND NOW READY.

UPPER BOHEMIANS: a Romance. By F. G.

WALPOLE, Author of "Lord Floysham." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The MORNING POST says: "An entertaining book, by a clever man of the world. Bright sketches of men and things here and abroad. The author's pictures of Roman society are excellent."

FIRST EDITION SOLD, SECOND THIS DAY.

WEST CLIFF: a Romance of Portland Isle.

By EASTON KING. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The MANCHESTER EXAMINER says: "It is an intensely interesting and very well-written book, which we can heartily recommend."

EDWIN ELLIOTT'S SUCCESSFUL NOVEL.

NETTA. By Edwin Elliott. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The ACADEMY says: "Mr. Elliott is to be welcomed.....A quite excellent story. Style .....so good.....Not only is the interest permanently sustained, but passages of dramatic vividness detain the reader."

FIFTH EDITION NEARLY EXHAUSTED, SIXTH IN PREPARATION.

DR. JANET OF HARLEY STREET. By Dr.

ARABELLA KENEALY, Author of "Molly and her Men-o'-War." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "IN A MOMENT OF PASSION."

BABETTE VIVIAN: a Novel. By Christel.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The MANCHESTER EXAMINER says: "A good plot and some pleasant characters.....It is certainly a good novel, likely to be enjoyed by all who read it."

"ZORG": a Story of British Guiana. By Vernon

KIRKE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The WESTMINSTER REVIEW says: "There is originality about the character of Sarnia.....Described with force and pathos."

HER ANGEL FRIEND. By Monica Tregarthen.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

[Just out.

MARIA, COUNTESS of SALETTO. From the Italian of E. ARBIS, by SYDNEY KING. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

[Just out.

An animated, interesting, and vivid picture of Modern Italian Society.

MARIANELA. From the Spanish of B. Perez

GALDOS. By MARY WHARTON, Translator of "Lady Perfecta," from the same Author. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The MANCHESTER GUARDIAN says: "Modern Spanish fiction is not well known to English readers, and there is a consequent freshness in 'Marianela.' Incidentally to the story questions of more than passing importance are discussed with originality and sympathy."

The GLASGOW HERALD says: "One of the ablest novelists that Spain has produced."

BJÖRNSON AND TURGENIEFF.

THE BRIDAL MARCH. From the Norwegian of

BJÖRNSON; and The WATCH. From the Russian of IVAN TURGENIEFF.

Translated by JOHN EVAN WILLIAMS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

The LITERARY WORLD says: "'The Bridal March,' with its vivid descriptions, will be read with interest.....Charmingly told, the characters are skillfully drawn, and stand out in strong relief. 'The Watch' is replete with vigorous touches and wholly original. It exhibits the writer's peculiar gift of character drawing, supplemented by effective descriptive power."

THE HERO of the "PELICAN": an Ocean
Drama. By PERCY DE LISLE. Crown 8vo, pictorial cloth, 3s. 6d. [Just out.

THE GIRL MUSICIAN. By Miriam Young.

With Full-Page Illustrations by Matthew Stetch. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

The LIVERPOOL MERCURY says: "This is a very pleasing story. The book is quite delightful."

THE PURSUIT of a CHIMERA: being a Mid-

winter's Day Dream. By C. ELVEY COPE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

The SATURDAY REVIEW says: "Much of the drama is singularly dream-like, and the mingling of fancy and oddity shows an excellent simulation of genuine dreaming.....The story is presented with considerable power."

THE VENETIAN SECRET; or, the Art of the Past. By CHARLES LUYENS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

The SATURDAY REVIEW says: "His characters are agreeably drawn, and are neatly differentiated without any traces of exaggeration."

THE OLD HOUSE of RAYNER, &c. By Grimley

HILL. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

The DAILY TELEGRAPH says: "Eminently readable....Written to entertain.....Fulfil their object very adequately."

CLENCHED ANTAGONISMS. By Lewis Iram.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

The SATURDAY REVIEW says: "A powerful and ghastly narrative of the triumph of force over virtue."

VANITY FAIR says: "Lewis Iram is original, unconventional, powerful, and interesting."

SOCIETY says: "An exceedingly able and enthralling story."

DR. WEEDON'S WAIF. By Kate Somers.

Illustrated with Full-page Drawings by Matthew Stetch. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

VANITY FAIR says: "One of the prettiest and most touching stories we have read for a long time."

The SATURDAY REVIEW says: "Vividly and pathetically told."

BUT: a Domestic Sketch. By Bachelor Abbots-

FORD. Illustrated throughout with numerous Drawings. Crown 8vo, picture cover, 1s.

The SCOTSMAN says: "It draws its fun from the adventures of a bachelor among children. It is brightly written and illustrated."

THE STRANGE ADVENTURES of a YOUNG

LADY of QUALITY, 1765. By DOROTHEA TOWNSHEND. Crown 8vo, paper cover, 1s.

The BRISTOL MERCURY says: "It is genuine, true, and natural from the first page to the last, and the style of the period is admirably imitated."

NEW WORKS.

SIXTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE as an IRISH

LANDLORD. Memoirs of JOHN HAMILTON, D.L., of St. Ernan's, Donegal.

Edited, with Introduction, by Rev. H. C. WHITE, late Chaplain, Paris. With Portrait.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Just out.

THE STANDARD WORK ON AUTHORSHIP.

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL. By Percy Russell.

With Prefatory Remarks by Mr. OLADSTONE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. Sixth Edition.

With Portrait.

The WESTMINSTER REVIEW says: "A very complete manual and guide for journalist and author...It is not merely a practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense.....We have little else but praise for the volume."

A CENTENARY MONOGRAPH.

CHARLOTTE CORDAY; or, a Hundred Years

After. By MARY JEAFFRESON, Author of "Roman Cameos," "Through all the Varying Year," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. [Just out.

NEW POETRY.

SOME TRANSLATIONS from CHARLES

BAUDELAIRE, POET and SYMBOLIST. By H. C. With Portrait. Fcap. 8vo

elegant parchment, 2s. 6d.

The TIMES says: "Are executed with no little metrical skill and command of poetic diction."

BRUCE'S HEART, and other Poems. By

EDWARD TOOVEY WELLS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

[Just out.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOTICE.—MISS BROUGHTON, the Author of "Nancy," &c., commenced a New Serial Story entitled "A BEGINNER," and MISS PEARD, the Author of "Near Neighbours," commenced one entitled "AN INTERLOPER," in THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE for January, 1894.

* The FEBRUARY ISSUE may now be obtained at all Booksellers and Railway Bookstalls.

NEW WORKS.

FREDERICK HILL: an

Autobiography of Fifty Years in Times of Reform. Being the Recollections of a Retired Civil Servant. By his Daughter, CONSTANCE HILL. 1 vol., demy 8vo, with Portraits, 16s.

"A most entertaining book, teeming with anecdotes and reminiscences of notabilities, and also of incidents that carry us back to days which now seem far distant."

Manchester Examiner.
"A most entertaining volume. Much of Mr. Hill's recollections is delightfully fresh."—Athenaeum.

"Unexpected but welcome light on the political and social movements of the century, together with much pleasant gossip of a personal kind, is to be found in these pages."

Leeds Mercury.
"A volume which in interest reads almost like a romance, and by those who take any interest in social reform it will be read with special profit and avidity. It has been admirably edited by Miss Hill."—Dundee Courier.

"The pages teem with good stories and pieces of history, local and national, political and literary, all told with charming simplicity and distinctness."

Birmingham Daily Gazette.

The CONVERSATIONS

of JAMES NORTHCOTE, R.A. Recorded by WILLIAM HAZLITT. A New Edition, Edited, with an Essay on Hazlitt and a Note on Northcote, by EDMUND GOSSE. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"Will be welcomed by a considerable section of the public—not only by those who are interested in matters of pictorial art, but by all who are attracted to bright and lively gossip of the miscellaneous sort. The Conversations are eminently readable."—Globe.

WOMEN of LETTERS,

including Memoirs of Lady Morgan, the Misses Berry, Mary Wollstonecraft Shelley, Lady Anna Barnard, Sarah Countess Cowper, Mrs. Opie, and Lady Duff Gordon. By GERTRUDE TOWNSHEND MAYER. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s. [Just ready.]

NEW WORKS OF FICTION.

NOW READY.

The GREATER GLORY.

By MAARTEN MAARTENS,
Author of "An Old Maid's Love," &c.
3 vols., crown 8vo.

SECOND EDITION.

DIANA TEMPEST.

By MARY CHOLMONDELEY,
Author of "Sir Charles Danvers," &c.
3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Of Miss Cholmondeley's clever novels, 'Diana Tempest' is quite the cleverest."—Times.

BRITOMART. By Mrs.

HERBERT MARTIN, Author of "Bonnie Lesley," &c.
3 vols., crown 8vo.

THE VICAR of LANG-

THWAITE. By LILY WATSON. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

SPEEDWELL. By Lady

GUENDOLEN RAMSDEN. 1 vol., crown 8vo.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

NEW AND RECENT NOVELS PUBLISHED BY CASSELL & COMPANY.

THE STANDISHS OF HIGH ACRE:

A Novel.

By GILBERT SHIELDON.

2 vols., 21s.

[Ready shortly.]

THE MAN IN BLACK.

By STANLEY WEYMAN,

Author of "A Gentleman of France," &c.

With 12 Full-Page Illustrations by Wal Paget, Esq. 6d.

[Just ready.]

LOST ON DU CORRIG;

Or, 'Twixt Earth and Ocean.

By STANDISH OGRADY,

Author of "Finn and his Companions," &c.

With 8 Full-Page Illustrations, 5s.

[Ready shortly.]

All who admire "The Mill on the Floss," should read

'L I S B E T H,

By LESLIE KEITH,

With which this new novel has been frequently compared by the Press.

AT ALL LIBRARIES. 3 vols., 31s. 6d.

THE DELECTABLE DUCHY.

Stories, Studies, and Sketches.

By Q,

Author of "Dead Man's Rock," &c.

Cloth, 6s.

The First Large Edition of this Work having been exhausted, a Second Edition is now on Sale.

T I N Y L U T T R E L L.

By E. W. HORNUNG,

Author of "A Bride from the Bush."

POPULAR EDITION. 6s. [Just ready.]

THE STORY OF FRANCIS CLUDDE.

By STANLEY J. WEYMAN,

Author of "The House of the Wolf," &c., &c.

6s. [Popular Edition now ready.]

THE ADMIRABLE LADY BIDDY FANE.

By FRANK BARRETT.

POPULAR EDITION.

With 12 Full-Page Illustrations, 6s.

[Now ready.]

The First Large Edition prepared of "THE IRON PIRATE," by MAX PEMBERTON, having been nearly exhausted, a Second Edition is in the press.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED,
LUDGATE HILL, LONDON.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

ANCIENT ARMS AND ARMOUR:

A Pictorial and Descriptive Record of the Origin
and Development of Arms and Armour.

To which are appended 133 Plates, specially drawn from the Author's Collection.

By EDWIN J. BRETT.

Imperial 4to, 650 pp., with 1,200 Original Engravings, half-bound in leather, FIVE GUINEAS net.

"Mr. Brett's magnificent work."—Daily Telegraph.

"We know no authority more thorough and up-to-date."

"A masterpiece of its kind.... Mr. Brett's work is as interesting as it is valuable."—Black and White.

JUST READY, AT ALL LIBRARIES.

GLIMPSES OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

By J. G. ALGER, Author of "Englishmen in the French Revolution," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

BEYOND THE ICE:

Being a Story of the Newly-Discovered Region Round
the North Pole.

Edited from Dr. FRANK FAIRLEIGH'S DIARY by G. READ
MURPHY, Inventor of the Victoria Torpedo.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

TWO REMARKABLE COLLECTIONS OF SHORT STORIES.—Vol. 1. Press.

THE WAY THEY LOVED AT GRIMPAT.

By E. RENTOU ESLER.

1 vol., 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"Should score one of the most solid literary successes of the season."

Daily Telegraph.

TALES of the YORKSHIRE WOLDS.

By J. KEIGHLEY SNOWDEN.

8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"There is decidedly good stuff in Mr. Snowden's tales.... We hope to meet Mr. Snowden again."—St. James's Gazette.

PREACHERS OF THE AGE SERIES.—New Volume.

THE "GOOD CHEER" of JESUS

CHRIST. By the Rev. CHARLES MOINET, M.A., Kensington.

With Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"One of the best volumes in a remarkably good series."

Glasgow Herald.

DOD'S PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, and KNIGHTAGE for 1894.

Crown 8vo, over 1,000 pages, handsomely bound, cloth extra gilt, gilt edges, 10s. 6d.

"Aims at giving a great deal of information in a small space, and signally succeeds in doing so. For purposes of rapid reference it has no competitor."—Athenaeum.

The ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER'S DIARY for 1894.

Arranged by RALPH HINDLE BAKER.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 2s.

"Mr. Baker has provided all that is necessary to an organist or choirmaster for keeping a record of everything appertaining to his church and choir, in the handiest possible form."—Daily Telegraph.

CHEAP EDITIONS AT ALL BOOKSELLERS.

Uniform crown 8vo Volumes, bound in cloth, HALF-A-CROWN
per Volume.

DONALD ROSS of HEIMRA. By WILLIAM ELACK.

CRIPPS the CARRIER. By R. D. BLACKMORE.

JACK'S COURTSHIP. By W. Clark RUSSELL.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE.

FEBRUARY NUMBER.

CONTENTS.

EDWARD BURNE-JONES. Cosmo Monkhouse. Illustrated
JOHN MARCH, SOUTHERNER. Chaps. VIII.—XV.
George W. Cable.

THE SCHOOLMASTER. James Baldwin. Illustrated.

MR. LOWELL on ART-PRINCIPLES. Ferris Lockwood.
ORCHIDS. W. A. Stiles. Illustrated.

ON PIRATICAL SEAS: a Mercantile's Voyages to the West Indies in 1865. Peter A. Grotjan.

THE SEA ISLAND HURRICANES: the Devastation. Joel
Chandler Harris. Illustrated.
&c. &c.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1894.

No. 1135, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

THE BOOK OF ENOCH.

The Book of Enoch. Translated from Prof. Dillmann's Text. Edited, with Introduction, &c., by R. H. Charles. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

"TEXTS AND STUDIES."—Vol. II., No. 3. Apocrypha Anecdota. By M. R. James. (Cambridge: University Press.)

THE Dean of King's College introduces his curious collection of Apocrypha by some graphic and appropriate remarks on present-day analogues of the apocalyptic writings of the Early Christian Church.

"The Apocryphal books stand in the relation of bye-paths—not always clean or pleasant—to the broad and well-trodden high-roads of orthodox patristic literature. If a future historian wants to realise vividly what were the beliefs of many large classes of ordinary Christians in our time, he will derive great help, I doubt not, from the Sunday stories of the last thirty years, and not less information can be gathered from the Apocryphal books as to the popular beliefs of average Christians in far earlier times" (p. viii.).

Following up an illustration as ingeniously descriptive as it is unimpeachably accurate, we may say that Mr. James has, in combination with Mr. Charles in his new translation of the Book of Enoch, just opened up a bye-path in a form which almost gives it a title to rank as a main road—a road which has just, so to speak, been "mained" by an authority like a County Council. Henceforward, the Book of Enoch may be described for English students as an authoritative treatise, whose illustrative value on the Books of the New Testament is not exceeded by any apocryphal writing that has come down to our time.

Before, however, we turn to Mr. Charles's praiseworthy labour in restoring this Book to its rightful position in this respect, we must cast a passing glance at the other bye-paths which Mr. James has added in his Anecdota to the Latin Fragments of the Book of Enoch. Altogether and inclusive of this interesting proof of the existence of a complete Latin version of the Book of Enoch, we have here brought together no less than twelve bye-paths—almost an itinerary, we may say—reverting once more to Mr. James's appropriate similitude.

These anecdotes possess very diverse interests. Not only in their aggregate significance are they remarkable, as indicating the varied literary and multitudinous environment, good, bad and indifferent, out of which the canonical Books of the New Testament, as its maturest fruit, have emerged—so far resembling a neglected botanic garden, now for the first time Darwinianly explored; but their particular meaning is not less striking, as containing a collection of writings, each of which has a certain affinity, more or less close, to some writing in the varied assortment of New Testament Books—so far resembling a register in which it is possible to trace the remote kinship of friends we have known long and in whose ancestry we take a profound interest. The only cause left for our wonderment, and that undoubtedly is most legitimate, is that the unspeakable importance of this large class of Biblical literature should have been so long neglected. Probably our Biblical scholars were possessed by the fear—cowardly and unworthy as any fear could be—that the value of the New Testament writings would be lessened by the closer investigation of writings so closely akin to themselves, that the canonical writings would become merely primi inter pares, ignoring the undoubted fact that all such investigations, so far as they have been fairly and critically set on foot, have hitherto resulted only in enhancing in most essential features the singular and peculiar merits of the books which the critical discrimination of the Early Church ultimately declared to be canonical.

Nor does this conclusion exhaust the value of the lessons derivable from the consideration of the large and still increasing store of New Testament Apocrypha. Pari passu with the growth of the centuries, Christianity—regarded from the standpoint of its written records, whether authentic and inspired, or spurious and unworthily human—has been undergoing a process of self-evolution, which has most remarkably confirmed the attribute of canonicity assigned to its selected writings by the Early Church. Thus, the Gospels or historical books, the Pauline and other Epistles, the Apostolic Fathers, the Apocryphal writings, have arranged themselves spontaneously in a kind of scale of greater and lesser importance. They might, I conceive, be co-ordinated either in a kind of perpendicular sequence like the degrees on the face of a thermometer: indeed the μέτρον might have some such name as Christometer, being headed by the noblest and most undeniably Christlike of the Master's own words, being followed by others less demonstrably so. Thus, the Christometron might indicate in recording the church history of successive centuries the downward gradation of Christlike, Apostolic, Episcopal, Ecclesiastical, Papal, and Church-councilary, and other grades of demoralisation, of crass ignorance and numbing superstition.

In the past, and regarded as a self-evolution of ecclesiastical history, we arrive at the distinction of canonical and uncanonical Books, and the subdivision of the latter into genuine and apocryphal, or else genuine and spurious books. In my judgment, the strongest arguments for a moderate theory of inspiration, or some equivalent distinction which might claim validity from a rational point of view, is the fact of the final selection of the Four Gospels from out the crowd of spurious gospels, epistles, and apocryphal treatises of every kind. By what agency was it accomplished? Was it largely personal or individual, or was it the result of different churches or communities? In either case was the ultimate decision altogether unanimous, or only partially so? How long did the process take (1) in each individual instance, (2) in the entire construction of the Four Gospels? What became of the tentative efforts, the partially completed MSS., &c., which necessarily emerged while the canonical work was proceeding? At any rate—and this furnishes some of the many problems on which the Book of Enoch and so many other apocryphal writings are calculated to throw light—we, as a fact, have only the net result:—Four Gospels, i.e., four varying collections pieced together rather roughly, but in deference to a certain chronological order, four arrangements of pieces, narratives, apologies (so-called λόγια), personal reminiscences, &c., which at the first were oral, but gradually by mutual assimilation, comparison, &c., assumed a more or less solid and permanent form by being put into writing. These separate writings took the name of Gospels or Evangels, less with the object of indicating authorship than implying doctrinal or narrative tendencies. Possibly, in certain cases, the intention contemplated by the tenor or order of the roughly-strung pieces may have been priority in time, or a traditional tenor or a specific or peculiar direction in literary or other recognised taste.

Hardly any apocryphal writing is more helpful to the student of gospel origins than the Book of Enoch. "Its influence on the New Testament has been greater than that of all the other Apocryphal and pseud-epigraphal books taken together," says Mr. Charles, and few who have gone into the question will be inclined to contest this emphatic testimony. He arranges the evidence for this conclusion under two heads: (1) he adduces a series of passages of the New Testament which either in phraseology or idea directly depend on an illustration of passages in Enoch; (2) doctrines in Enoch which had an undoubted share in moulding the corresponding New Testament doctrines.

He brings forward no less than eight pages of parallel passages in which phrases of Enoch are juxtaposed by texts of the New Testament. Most of these are eschatological in tendency, and are taken from the Epistle to the Hebrews, the General Epistles, and the Apocalypse of St. John. This interesting portion of his invaluable introduction he might, however, have still further utilised. Thus, he might have considered how far those chapters of Enoch which bear most similarity to the Gospels (leaving the eschatological portions out of the question) indicate a later date. For we may regard it as a mark of time in the apocryphal writings, when we find that the didactic or moral aspects of Christianity are continually subordinated to its eschatological elements. Thus, the interval between the Epistles and the Apocalypse on the one side, and the Synoptics on the other, is clearly indicated by the comparatively few passages in which the phrases in the Synoptics occur also in the Book of Enoch.

We may in truth accept this as a mark of synchronism. When the Book of Enoch was being compiled—and that it is a compilation, owing its existence to different men of varying culture and of different times, may now be regarded as a point accepted by some of the ablest critics—the teachings of the New Testament were undergoing that transition from apocalypticism to didactic and moral teaching which indicates the middle to the end of the second century. This tallies also with other evidences on the subject, pointing to the same conclusions. Mr. Charles is occupying more delicate ground when he speaks of and enumerates the doctrines in Enoch which had an undoubted share in moulding the corresponding New Testament doctrines, or are at all events necessary to the comprehension of the latter. Here he lays himself open to the charge of magnifying unduly the importance of his subject, and of assuming a dogmatic tone not altogether warranted by the facts. We may surely concede to him the enormous influence of the Book of Enoch as a formative power in moulding New Testament doctrines, without attempting to make that influence exclusive. Other Apocrypha might be adduced, of not less importance than the Book of Enoch, as helping to shape the eschatology of the New Testament. Indeed, the tendency belongs to an entire literature of which the Book of Enoch forms only a part, though undoubtedly a most important part. Mr. Charles is more successful when he confines himself to showing the illustrative effect of the Book in the New Testament. The following, e.g., is worth notice, though it is too much to say that the “incident to which the passage refers can only be rightly understood from Enoch.”

“When the Sadducees said, ‘Whose wife shall she be of them, for the seven had her to wife?’ they are arguing from the sensuous conception of the Messianic Kingdom, and this was no doubt the popular one.” [Wetstein records a traditional solution of this dilemma given by the Rabbis, which was generally received as authoritative—viz., that the wife first married in earth would be the one first wedded in Paradise. Mr. Charles is hardly correct, therefore, when he proceeds:] “That given in Enoch I. xxxvi., according to which its members, including the risen righteous, were to enjoy every good thing of earth and have each a thousand children. The Sadducees thought thereby to place this young prophet on the horns of a dilemma, and oblige him to confess either that there was no resurrection of the dead, or else that polygamy or polyandry would be practised in the coming kingdom. But the dilemma, proves invalid, and the conception of the future life portrayed in our Lord’s reply tallies almost exactly in thought and partially in word with that described in Enoch xci.-civ., according to which there is to be a resurrection indeed, but a resurrection of the spirit, and the risen righteous are to rejoice ‘as the angels of heaven’ (Enoch civ. 4; St. Matt. xxii. 30; St. Mark xii. 25), ‘being companions of the heavenly hosts’ (Enoch civ. 6).”

I have given this extract at length in order to represent Mr. Charles’s method in his admirable introduction, and as an illustration of the utility of the book for English Biblical students. For these, indeed, it may be described as indispensable, especially if taken in combination (1) with Lipsius’s Article “Enoch” in Smith and Wace’s Dictionary of Christian Biography, and (2) with Schürer’s History of the Jewish People in the Time of Jesus Christ, recently translated.

There are, however, a few concluding observations which I should like to submit for the author’s consideration. Like other collectors and editors of apocryphal writings, he has failed to realise the diversiform conditions under which these writings came into being, and the many-sided constituent elements which go to their formation. He acknowledges, indeed—though hardly with sufficient emphasis—that the book is a compilation, the aggregate work of different hands and spread over a large area of what might be called the Apocalyptic Christendom of the second century—i.e., the area roughly circumscribed by those Churches—Judæo-Palestinian and Asia Minor—in which eschatological ideas had rooted themselves most profoundly. He is probably right in regarding Palestine as its birthplace, while its main ideas and aspirations are rather Jewish than Gentile. Indeed, there is a notable assimilation in idea between the Book of Enoch and the Apocalypse of St. John. It is the new transcendental and glorified Judaism that forms the crown of the author’s hopes and expectations, just as it did that of St. Paul—“Then shall the Son also Himself be subject unto Him that put all things under Him that God may be All in All.”

Of course, if the diversity of authors be conceded, it will help to explain (1) the number, (2) the varying standpoints of the authors. Here again comes in the possibility of different parts of the Book having formed portions of the smaller writings which pertained to different Churches, and were collected by compilers of such writings. The uncertainty of the date, either of any one portion or of the whole of the Book, is another point which lends itself to a varied area of origin both in time and space. For my part, I see no reason why the Book of Enoch might not be accepted as the central document of a large and variously constituted class of apocalyptic literature. It has qualities which might fairly claim for it such a high position, and thus give it a commanding rank among the elucidatory writings which converge round the New Testament. At the same time, too much caution cannot be employed in the use whether of that or of any other Apocryphon. Dogmatism has here, as in most other regions of Scriptural research, exercised its customary benumbing and obscurantist effect. We must come to the study of such books as scholars willing to learn: not, yet awhile, as teachers professing to teach. The horizon of Biblical literature, especially of New Testament literature, is gradually expanding; but the very fact of the expansion of a once dark area, coupled with the fascination and desirability of its complete investigation, renders its claim for more light more imperative. What was once hidden (apokrypha) may perhaps be destined to see the light; but the measure and degree of light most usefully demanded may not be that which our wishes and our eagerness assert to be in our power: it may be only that which our limited powers of vision assert to be possible in our case.

JOHN OWEN.

A Journal of the Conversations of Lord Byron with the Countess of Blessington. New Edition, revised and annotated. (Bentley.)

LADY BLESSINGTON’S record of her brief acquaintance with Lord Byron at Genoa in 1823 has long been familiar to students of his strange and complex personality. First brought out by instalments in one of the magazines, it was reprinted in a separate form in 1834, about ten years after the poet’s death. It must have found many readers, as the exceptional interest he aroused among his contemporaries had not appreciably decreased in the interval. In one respect, we fear, the work must have been laid down with a feeling of disappointment. It contained but few of the epigrams and sallies with which Byron usually interlarded his talk, and in which “piquancy and wit were more evident than good nature.” The writer, as she says in her preface, was much less anxious to make an amusing book than to “avoid wounding the feelings of the living, or casting a shade over the reputation of the dead.” Otherwise, however, the narrative was acceptable enough. It consisted in the main of self-revealing conversations on the part of the enigmatical Byron, all being marked by internal evidence of at least substantial accuracy. Invidious critics might hold this to be a breach of confidence; but Lady Blessington could anticipate their censure by pointing out that the Boswell and Piozzi disclosures as to Johnson had not been viewed in such a light, and that her friend and guest had never, even by implication, bound her to secrecy in the matter. And the value of what she wrote was enhanced by an impartiality hardly to be looked for in the circumstances. While attracted to Byron by his genius, his sufferings, and his indisputable social gifts, she had a keen eye for his natural and acquired faults, of which she speaks without reserve. Her attitude towards him throughout is that of a sympathetic but cool-headed and sensible friend. Of late years, as a necessary result of the change in the general feeling in regard to Byron, the book has been lost sight of, except by those who make him a subject of special study. It now re-appears in a handsome form, with several portraits, including a reproduction of Count d’Orsay’s sketch, and with a few notes respecting persons incidentally mentioned in the conversations. In these notes, we must add, there are errors into which a well-informed and careful writer could not be expected to fall. The Earl of Dudley is referred to as “Earl Dudley,” the literary partner of Francis Beaumont as “Tom” Fletcher, and the committal of Sir Francis Burdett to the Tower as occurring about nine years after its actual date.

Advantage has been taken of the reprint to restore the faded memory of Lady Blessington herself. Prefixed to the conversations are two short accounts of her life, one written soon after her death by Miss Power, her sister, and the other by the editor of the present edition, who elects to withhold his name. Nor can she be thought undeserving of such attention. It is true that her literary reputation has become a thing of the past. Nowadays, unlike some of our grandparents, we do not hang with delight over her novels, her verses, or her recollections of France and Italy. But there can be little question that in the social history of the nineteenth century she holds a prominent place. Beautiful, clever, well-read, full of savoir faire, and hospitable beyond the limits of her income, she made her home a resort of the best company in London. "Everybody goes to Lady Blessington's," Haydon notes in his Diary. Gore House, with which her name is particularly associated, equalled Holland House itself in the brilliancy of its gatherings, which included women no less than men. Politics, literature, science, art—all had their representatives in her salon, without distinction of nationality, one of the number in her later years being the exiled Louis Napoléon, though he seems to have forgotten the circumstance upon his elevation to the Presidency of the Republic in 1848. As a critic of poetry, it is clear, Lady Blessington was above and in advance of her time. For instance, in the midst of the tendency to exalt Byron at the expense of his rivals, she thus writes of the greatest of the whole group:

"I have been reading Shelley's works, in which I have found many beautiful thoughts. This man of genius—for such decidedly he was—has not yet been rendered justice to. . . . He who was all charity has found none in the judgment pronounced on him by his contemporaries; but posterity will be more just."

As to another:

"I have been reading Wordsworth's poems again, and I verily believe for the fiftieth time. They contain a mine of lofty, beautiful, and natural thoughts. I never peruse them without feeling proud that England has such a poet, and without finding a love for the pure and noble increased in my mind."

Her conversation, like some of her writings, was marked now and then by sarcastic wit, but not by a deliberate intention to wound. Unfortunately, scandal had much to say about her after Lord Blessington's death. During her widowhood she made a permanent guest in her house of Count d'Orsay, who was not by many years her junior, and who was married to, but separated from, her step-daughter. On this subject it is only fair that her sister should have a hearing. "His dying mother," Miss Power states,

"had with her latest breath exacted from Lady Blessington a promise never to leave her son, a similar promise having been made to her by Lord Blessington, who loved him with a paternal affection. This mutual engagement was kept to the letter, and the quarter of a century that they remained together only served to strengthen and consolidate the tender regard that subsisted between them. In Comte D'Orsay Lady Blessington found the son that nature had withheld from her, and on him she bestowed that tenderness with which her heart overflowed. His wishes, his interests, were ever the moving principle of her actions; his friends were hers, and to love or dislike him (and her quick and feminine instinct never failed to teach her where either sentiment existed) was the best claim to her affection or the strongest provocative to her antipathy."

Let this account of the relations between the pair be accepted as correct. Still it is a pity that Lady Blessington, too careless of appearances, should have consented to occupy so equivocal a position. For the scandal we have mentioned she had only herself to blame.

On the whole, the conversations present us with a rather vivid portrait of Byron in private life. Many of his principal characteristics—his changeability of mood, his pride of birth, his self-consciousness, his shallow cynicism, his studied flippancy, his keen perception of the ridiculous, his delight in mere scandal, his affectedly languid air, his small superstitions, his love of mystification, his irritable temper, his impatience of contradiction, his sensitiveness to criticism, his incontinence of speech, his weakness for using French words in preference to English, and, perhaps above all, his real warmth of heart, which at times defied his efforts to conceal it—receive more or less distinct illustration. One impression made upon the mind by the book is that he was a determined but not very successful poseur. He cultivated a tone of light and sportive mockery, and Lady Blessington admits that it did not sit gracefully upon him. According to the same authority, he was at a still greater disadvantage in talking sentiment. Lady Byron was always in his thoughts, her name always on his lips. Indeed, he was so prone to bewail his domestic troubles, even to ordinary acquaintances, that Lady Blessington, certainly the most candid of his friends, sent to him a remonstrance in verse upon his want of self-respect.

"And canst thou bare thy breast to vulgar eyes?
And canst thou show the wounds that rankle there?
Methought in noble hearts that sorrow lies
Too deep to suffer coarser minds to share."

He read the lines with an angry flush upon his countenance, but did not fail to profit by the lesson. Music was the only art for which he cared, though he knew nothing of it practically. He often dwelt upon the power of association it possessed, and declared that the notes of a well-known air could transport him to distant scenes and events, presenting objects before him with a vividness that quite banished the present. Perfumes produced the same effect, though less forcibly. Lady Blessington ascribes his attacks upon Shakspeare to his desire to astonish people, being convinced that he had "not only deeply read but deeply felt the beauties he affected to deny." Perhaps he was at his best in speaking of valued friends.

"'You should have known Shelley,' said Byron, 'to feel how much I must regret him. He was the most gentle, the most amiable, the least worldly-minded person I ever met—full of delicacy, disinterested beyond all other men, and possessing a degree of genius joined to a simplicity as rare as it is admirable. He had formed to himself a beau idéal of all that is fine, high-minded, and noble; and he acted up to this ideal even to the very letter. He had a most brilliant imagination, but a total want of worldly wisdom. I have seen nothing like him, and never shall again, I am certain.'"

For Scott, too, he had nothing but reverence:

"In talking of Sir Walter's private character, goodness of heart, etcetera, Lord Byron became more animated than I had ever seen him; his colour changed from its general pallid tint to a more lively hue, and his eyes became humid."

The following indicates a modification of opinions which he had expressed some years before:—

"Those who accuse Byron of being an unbeliever are wrong: he is sceptical, but not unbelieving; and it appears not unlikely to me that a time may come when his wavering faith in many of the tenets of religion may be as firmly fixed as is now his conviction of the immortality of the soul—a conviction that he declares every fine and noble impulse of his nature renders more decided. He is a sworn foe to Materialism, tracing every defect to which we are subject to the infirmities entailed on us by the prison of clay in which the heavenly spark is confined. Conscience, he says, is to him another proof of the Divine Origin of Man, as is also his natural tendency to the love of good. A fine day, a moonlight night, or any other fine object in the phenomena of nature, excites (said Byron) strong feelings of religion in all elevated minds, and an outpouring of the spirit to the Creator, that, call it what we may, is the essence of innate love and gratitude to the Divinity. The belief in the immortality of the soul is the only true panacea for the ills of life."

A conversation which deeply impressed Lady Blessington is thus reported:

"There is something, I am convinced, continued Byron, in the poetical temperament that precludes happiness, not only to the person who has it, but to those connected with him. Do not accuse me of vanity because I say this, as my belief is that the worst poet may share this misfortune in common with the best. The way in which I account for it is, that our imaginations being warmer than our hearts, and much more given to wander, the latter have not the power to control the former; hence, soon after our passions are gratified imagination again takes wing, and, finding the insufficiency of actual indulgence beyond the moment, abandons itself to all its wayward fancies, and during the abandonment becomes cold and insensible to the demands of affection. This is our misfortune, but not our fault, and dearly do we expiate it; by it we are rendered incapable of sympathy, and cannot lighten, by sharing, the pain we inflict."

One more extract from the volume may be permissible:

"Byron's was a fine nature, spite of all the weeds that may have sprung up in it; and I am convinced that it is the excellence of the poet, or rather let me say the effect of that excellence, that has produced the defects of the man. In proportion to the admiration one has excited has been the severity of the censure bestowed on the other, and often most unjustly. The world has burnt incense before the poet, and heaped ashes on the head of the man. This has revolted and driven him out of the pale of social life: his wounded pride has avenged itself by painting his own portrait in the most sombre colours, as if to give a still darker picture than has yet been drawn by his foes, while glorying in forcing even from his foes an admiration as unbounded for his genius as has been their disapprobation for his character."

In these words, although they are set down in a casual way, we have, I think, a tolerably exact summary of the impression which Byron left upon Lady Blessington's mind.

FREDERICK HAWKINS.

St. Andrews. By Andrew Lang. (Longmans.)

MR. LANG has written a very readable book, in which there is a great deal of interesting historical information, much elegant sarcasm, and, unless I am greatly mistaken, only a single quotation from Mr. Louis Stevenson. One is rather sorry to see that Mr. Lang should have felt impelled, like the widow in Endymion, to go into very pretty mourning; for he says, "We grow grey, like the 'dear city of youth and dream,' the city of our youth; like her we have seen too many changes and known too many disappointments." But probably this is only Mr. Lang's fun, and to be taken with a grain or two of salt, like this depreciation of his own work—"the drawings of Mr. Hodge suggested the writing of the book."

Although it appears from what Mr. Lang says in his preface that a more elaborate historical work by another hand is in preparation, this substantial volume of some 350 pages will probably meet the wishes and supply the wants of cultured visitors to St. Andrews, who, going thither for something else than golf and ozone, arrive at a conclusion the opposite of Coningsby's, that "the age of ruins is past," and wonder what these numerous ruins mean. Mr. Lang takes, perhaps, too little interest in the St. Andrews of to-day—the St. Andrews which is not only the headquarters of golf, but which may yet be the Oxford of Scotland, and with a Girton of its own too.

"The modern St. Andrews," he says, "is a city of many schools, and in summer is a watering-place. Its antiquities are kept in good repair; its hotels do not invade the picturesque parts of the town, the cathedral end, the beautiful Pends, the old abbey-wall with its ivy-grown towers, the ruins of Kirkheugh and the Castle."

But as an alumnus of St. Andrews, and dedicating his book to "the students of St. Leonard's Hall, 1861-1863," Mr. Lang ought surely to have said or hinted more as to the possibilities of the old but reviving university than simply "The university has received a considerable bequest from an Australian benefactor; additional chairs have been founded, and there is a kind of unholy alliance or amalgamation with Dundee College." But perhaps Mr. Lang is sceptical as to the future of St. Andrews; he dreams of it as but a fishing village again, "when men will hear the tide as they stand on the wave-worn promontory whence the great broken towers shall have fallen."

I think there will be a general agreement among the more discriminating readers of this book, that the most enjoyable portions of it are also those which are the least likely to lead to controversy. No living Scotsman, with the possible exception of Mr. Skelton, could have reproduced so well as Mr. Lang has done the legend and romance of St. Andrews; but he would probably have pleased the great majority of his Scottish readers better if he had preserved a Hallamian impartiality when dealing with the leading events of Northern history, in so far as they are associated with St. Andrews: if, in particular, he had not let it be so very clearly understood that he looks upon the Scottish War of Independence and the Reformation as mistakes. He is, of course, quite entitled to his opinions; but why should he have indulged in speculation as to what might have happened if there had been no Bannockburn and no Reformation? Possibly enough Edward I.—that able man who spent his life fighting against the better tendencies of his time, and so accomplished nothing but ambitious failures, and died of a broken heart—would have won the battle of Bannockburn had he commanded there, though even that of course is but conjecture. But is it not morally certain that, after his death, the Scots, irritated by those savage cruelties—themselves among his greatest errors—which would have accompanied his conquest, would have risen; and is it not possible, considering that his successor was such a weakling as Edward II., that they might have risen successfully? But a thousand things might have happened. All we have to go upon are the accomplished facts of history. It serves no good purpose to cry over spilt milk, or even over spilt blood. Above all things, Mr. Lang would have done well to have taken a leaf out of the book of his adored Scott's invincible good nature—or to have re-read Mr. Stevenson's essay on "John Knox and his Relations to Women"—before he set to work upon the Reformer's doings in St. Andrews. Knox had the faults of his time; and of all men who are born conquerors he thought no more of the assassination of Cardinal Beaton than Beaton thought of the killing of George Wishart. Mr. Stevenson's view of Knox is a much broader and humaner one than Mr. Lang's. As for Scotland generally, I suspect it agrees with Mr. Froude that

"Knox was the voice which taught the peasant of the Lothians that he was a free man, the equal in the sight of God with the proudest peer or prelate that had trampled on his forefathers. He was the one antagonist whom Mary Stuart could not soften nor Maitland deceive; he it was that raised the poor commons of his country into a stern and rugged people, who might be hard, narrow, superstitious, and fanatical; but who nevertheless, were men whom neither king, noble, nor priest could force again to submit to tyranny."

Mr. Lang is quite out of place in a company of revolutionaries; but among antiquaries who can smile at their own foibles and are sceptical enough to distinguish legend from history, he is thoroughly at home. Hence it is that, apart from Bruce and Knox and the Covenanters, his book is certainly the most entertaining and readable that has been written upon a rather well-worn subject. His earliest chapters—"The Beginnings," "The St. Andrews of the Bishops," and "To the Foundation of the University"—and three others near the middle of the book—"Queen Mary at St. Andrews," "Andrew Melville's St. Andrews," and "Montrose at St. Andrews," have the perfection of good pictures. Many "studies" of the great Montrose have been published—or republished—during the past few years, but none of them gives a sketch of the Scottish Bayard (by the way, he was quite as great an adept at duplicity as Bishop Lamberton, whom Mr. Lang assails on the authority of his enemies) half so lifelike as the one that appears here. St. Andrews, too, in its decay—the St. Andrews of Samuel Johnson; and George Monck Berkeley, Esq., LL.B., F.S.S.A., with his Pepys of a mother; and of Robert Ferguson, "our only modern poet, our harmless Villon, a noisy, lively lad, full of whisky, and melancholy, and religious fears"—is also reproduced very satisfactorily, although, perhaps, in too dark colours. But why should Mr. Lang have left a blank between the St. Andrews of Chalmers and the St. Andrews of Dr. A. K. H. Boyd? The period is full of interest; the late Prof. Aytoun described a portion of it as "Hell." It will be difficult to fill up this blank now.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

Tennyson: Poet, Philosopher, and Idealist.
By J. Cuming Walters. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

It is sometimes difficult to decide whether a book may be judged most justly with reference simply to itself—to the contents between cover and cover, or in the light of the expectations which it holds out: expectations based partly upon the repute of its author, partly upon the programme of which its own title and preface give us promise. It is obvious that a book may be good enough in itself, and yet—where expectation has been high—fall considerably short of the things hoped of it, so that, while we might have been well contented had we expected little, we find ourselves disappointed, having expected much.

Mr. Cuming Walters's study of Tennyson is a case in point. Mr. Walters is well known to the student of Tennyson as one of the most thorough and painstaking writers who have added to the rapidly increasing library of Tennysonian literature; his research into his subject has, we know, been conducted at first hand, intimately, and with insight. To meet his name upon a title-page is to entertain, at the outset, expectations of more than ordinary kind. We look forward to something original in judgment, to new information, to fresh and suggestive thought. But more than this, Mr. Cuming Walters calls his volume Tennyson: Poet, Philosopher, and Idealist, and the title itself arouses fresh expectation. Under such a name we naturally expect a study of the work arranged as, or at any rate directed towards, a consideration of the Laureate in each of the three capacities indicated: we look for an estimate of his poetry, first, in its purely technical aspect, then with relation to its philosophy, and lastly, in the light of its idealism: each sphere treated distinctly, and the triad combined into something like a complete study of his work and varying moods. The view suggested by the title is further accentuated by the preface.

"Each chapter," Mr. Walters says, "is a separate and complete study of some phase of Tennyson's work, and I have particularly endeavoured to deal adequately with his religion, philosophy, and politics. . . I have not deemed it necessary in a work of this kind to repeat for the thousandth time the 'small talk' of which great men are so often the victims; and I must ask pardon in advance of those readers who do not find in these pages a full and true account of Tennyson's sayings and doings in private life. Nearly every poem he published is referred to, and every important public act of his life is chronicled, while I have not hesitated in some half-dozen cases to repeat a story which illustrates his methods and his character. By giving as many specimens of Tennyson's poetry as would be allowable, I have hoped to re-kindle old enthusiasms and arouse new admirers. But those who desire to read about the tobacco he smoked, the hats he wore, and the beer or wine he drank at dinner, must turn to those volumes where such unconsidered trifles are held to be worthy of chronicling."

Here, then, is Mr. Walters's own programme, on which we may fairly found our expectations. A study of the work, not altogether apart from the life, but eschewing personality; a study treating in separate chapters separate aspects of the poetry; a systematic, full-orbed analysis of poet, philosopher, and idealist—this, with no little pleasure, is the book which we anticipate. Now, the book which Mr. Walters has, as a matter of fact, produced is before us; and it is not altogether the book which he has described. He has given what is probably the longest, what is certainly, in the judgment of the present writer, the most acute and critical, estimate of Tennyson's poetry hitherto collected within the limits of a single volume: a very full and thoughtful tribute to a genius of whom much, but not, perhaps, too much, has already been written. But he has, nevertheless, given us a book which falls between two stools. There were three different classes of books, I think, which Mr. Walters might have essayed. He might have produced a biography pure and simple; or a study of the work, considered with no reference to chronology, but simply in the light of its own achievement; or a biography and study of the work combined, tracing the poet's progress from strength to strength, or (as some critics would have us believe) from strength to weakness. But Mr. Walters has written none of these books.

His work opens like a biography. The events of the early years are recorded with almost all the detail possible to the outside narrator; but few of the familiar stories of the Lincolnshire and Cambridge life are omitted. This Mr. Walters confesses in his preface.

"Believing as I do," he says, "in the far-reaching and permanent effects of early environment, I have recounted with some detail the events of Tennyson's youth; but in succeeding chapters I have only casually caught up the main threads of his personal history."

So far as the early environment is concerned, Mr. Walters is undoubtedly correct.

It is probably impossible to estimate Tennyson's poetry aright without direct reference to those "first affections, those shadowy recollections" which exercised so strong an influence over all his later work. But to begin, as he has done, with all the circumstance of full biography, and then to drop the method, and to start anew with entirely fresh groupings and classifications, is to give his work a piecemeal appearance, which leaves the reader with the impression that Mr. Walters is never quite at one with himself in an appreciation of the kind of book he has started to make. Time after time anecdotes are introduced into incongruous contexts, not with the result of elucidating or illustrating the text, but merely, it would seem, for the sake of lightening and relieving the criticism. Nor are these anecdotes chosen, as Mr. Walters hints in his preface, with a view to that scrupulous avoidance of personality upon which he congratulates himself. "Those who desire to read about the tobacco he smoked, the hats he wore, the beer or wine he drank at dinner," he says, "must turn to other volumes." Why, then, does Mr. Walters expressly relate, within the pages of his own impersonal study, almost every one of the familiar tales bearing upon these very characteristics? Upon p. 57 he writes:

"The poet has been somewhat irreverently described as a 'Fleet Streeter,' and a 'Bohemian of Bohemians,' noted for 'the poetic emphasis of his dress and the Parnassian width of his hat-brim.' He was even known at that little (and now not very choice) tavern where the memory of Dr. Johnson is treasured, the 'Cheshire Cheese,' at which place the poet could be seen with a huge meerschaum filled with the strongest and most pungent of tobaccos."

And then (p. 58) he quotes from Mr. Wemyss Reid's Life of Lord Houghton a letter of Spedding's:

"Yesterday I dined with Alfred Tennyson at the 'Cock Tavern,' Temple Bar. We had two chops, one pickle, two cheeses, one pint of stout, one pint of port, and three cigars. When we had finished, I had to take his regrets to the Kembles; he could not go because he had the influenza."

Again, on p. 162, Tennyson is about to read "Guinevere" to Bayard Taylor:

"But the first thing he did was to produce a magnum of wonderful sherry, thirty years old, which had been sent him by a poetic wine-dealer. Such wine I never tasted. 'It was meant to be drunk by Cleopatra or Catherine of Russia,' said Tennyson. We had two glasses a piece, when he said: 'To-night you shall help me drink one of the few bottles of my Waterloo—1815.' The bottle was brought, and after another glass all round, Tennyson took up the Idylls of the King."

And yet once more, at page 171:—

"Lord Tennyson is fond now of a glass of sound port. Upon one occasion he pressed Mr. Irving to take a glass of the precious liquid. Mr. Irving did as he was desired, but not being a port-drinker, sipped it very slowly. Before he had finished it, the decanter, from which the bard had been automatically replenishing his goblet, was empty. Lord Tennyson bade the butler bring a fresh supply, and, turning to his guest, said drily: 'Do you always drink a bottle of port, Mr. Irving, after dinner?'"

Now, all these things were, we are assured, assiduously omitted from Mr. Walters's manuscript. How, then, do they still stand here in type?

The fact is that Mr. Walters has not sufficiently kept before himself the aim with which he started writing. He knows so much about Tennyson, that he has found it impossible to keep out of his copy the dozen little anecdotes which are so characteristic of the poet that they could not but slip from under the critic's pen; and so he has committed the singular freak of himself condemning things that he has included in his own volume. Nor has he, I think, "realised his poster" in separate studies of the poetry, philosophy, and idealism of the Laureate. His survey of the work, always acute, often original, is sometimes chronological, sometimes not: it takes the form rather of an easy ramble through the work, with occasional divergence into side channels; it lacks the system which the title seems to promise. All these things are not necessarily faults; by-way criticism has an hundred attractions denied to the more rigid, analytical, methodical labour of the colder student. But they are not the things which we expect after reading Mr. Walters's preface, and—since he is himself so emphatic there—it has been impossible to review his book without reference to his own manifesto. The arrangement of the book is neither novel nor systematic, and novelty and system were the signposts displayed at the entrance.

But, as I said at the beginning, it is also possible, and perhaps not unjust, to consider a book with reference merely to its contents, setting aside all consideration of expectations; and, if one had read Mr. Walters's book without glancing at the title or the preface, one would have missed most of the disappointment which one must feel with those things in memory. I have already said that it seems to me the most acute criticism of Tennyson's work yet attempted. This remark needs amplification. Mr. Walters is a sincere admirer of his poet; but affection does not, as it is apt to do, dull the edge of his judgment. It may, perhaps, seem to the less eager questioner that his condemnation is sometimes too full of protest. It was unnecessary, I think, to speak quite so severely of "The Skipping Rope" and of "The How and Why." Those were errors in judgment, no doubt; why not, then, pass them by more kindly? Even Tennyson nods. Nor does Mr. Walters, to the present writer's taste, show sufficient appreciation of the dramas—"Queen Mary" and "The Falcon" especially; while one cannot but suspect him of an effort after originality in the kind things he says of "The Promise of May," the piece of all Tennyson's attempts the worst constructed from a dramatic point of view. But critics will probably never be at one in their estimate of the dramas.

On the other hand, Mr. Walters's criticism of "The Princess" is, I think, the most just and luminous estimate of that poem ever printed. His comments (page 64) upon the importance to the narrative of the story of Psyche's babe are singularly new and suggestive; and if, as indeed he hints, they had the approbation of the Laureate himself, they throw a valuable light upon the purpose of what is generally regarded as an unfortunately purposeless poem. It is refreshing, too, to read his vigorous, wholesome vindication of "Maud," a poem which he treats throughout with peculiar felicity. "Enoch Arden" he praises too highly for some tastes; "The Idylls of the King" he steers over too rapidly, perhaps; but then much has been written of this poem, and Mr. Littledale's full and scholarly study renders other treatment of the work difficult. The chapter upon the originality of Tennyson might surely have been omitted. The accumulation of parallelism was rendered wearisome, once and for all, by the publication of Mr. Churton Collins's elaborate piece of lost labour: any attempt to add to the evidence is a veritable scattering of dust upon the summit of Ossa. This sort of thing can be done interminably—but to what purpose? It always reads like an effort on the part of the compiler to prove his own wide reading and research; and Mr. Walters needed no such appendix to his full and thoughtful volume.

His book is not what we expected: it is not, perhaps, exactly what he himself designed; and, because the writer started with an aim higher than he could reach, it will possibly beget disappointment. But it is rich in the critical faculty critically employed, and is, in many respects, no unworthy tablet to the memory of a puissant and immortal genius.

ARTHUR WAUGH.

NEW NOVELS.

A Gentleman of France. By Stanley J. Weyman. In 3 vols. (Longmans.)

Markham Howard. By J. Heale. In 3 vols. (Fisher Unwin.)

A Heroine in Homespun. By Frederic Breton. In 2 vols. (Bentley.)

For Good or Evil. By Gilberta M. F. Lyon. In 2 vols. (Gay & Bird.)

A Bundle of Life. By John Oliver Hobbes. (Fisher Unwin.)

Appassionata. A Musician's Story. By Elsa D'Esterre Keeling. (Heinemann.)

Blizzard, and Another Phantasy. By Thomas Pinkerton. (Sonnenschein.)

A Question of Penmanship. By L. B. Walford. (Griffith, Farran & Co.)

A Waif from the Waves. By W. J. Knox-Little. (Chapman & Hall.)

On the first page of A Gentleman of France, one feels that this hero and this style are well worthy of attention; but as the stirring scenes succeed one another, and the character of this brave, modest, single-minded gentleman and true hero unfolds itself, one realises that a genuine addition has been made to the roll of creations in fiction. The Sieur de Marsac, in his own way, is unapproachable. His adventures, which are told by himself, are concerned with all the chief personages in France, at that troubled time when Henry of Valois was declining, and Navarre and Turenne were hatching plots. But they are told with a naïve simplicity and modesty which enhance his achievements, and show him to be infinitely superior to the great people on whom he looks as far above him. The story opens at a point where his fortunes are so reduced, that he possesses only a few gold pieces and his good horse, the Cid, which he grooms himself. Into such straits has he fallen, that he has to arrange his little remaining furniture about his open door, in such a way as not to suggest the nakedness of the land. Mlle. de la Vire possesses information as to the secret designs of her kinsman, Turenne, which it is of the first importance to Navarre to know and make use of without drawing suspicion upon himself. At this low ebb in his fortunes Gaston de Bonne, Sieur de Marsac, is charged by Navarre to capture the young lady, and carry her off to Henry of Valois at Blois. He welcomes the delicate task; and thenceforth through dangers, difficulties, sorrows, cruel rebuffs, and apparently insuperable barriers, he perseveres in the course before him, heeding nothing but the duty he has undertaken, yet contriving to capture several hearts on his way—the reader's among them. The book is of the best kind of historical novel. The history flows round and melts into the personal adventures of the hero, with so much actuality that fact and fiction become one, and are equally life-like and impressive.

The opening of Mr. Heale's story recalls Dickens's studies of child-life. It is the story of a nameless boy, who has to make name and fame for himself. Music is his gift, and with the noble strength of the artistic temperament he has some of its weaknesses. There is much careful and faithful work in the book, though the manner of it is a little solemn, except when "Old P."—a good bit of original character-drawing—is on the scene, or when the world in general, or the Almighty in particular, is apostrophised. Mr. Heale does not shrink from plain speaking on matters about which it is fitting not to mince language; the drift of the book, however, gives one the impression of a different code for men and women. Among some excellent side-sketches, which have less rather than more bearing on the main plot, is the Socialist gathering at Mrs. Bonnington's, where the company are arrayed in anything from Norfolk jackets, knickerbockers, and red neckties without collars, to ordinary evening dress.

Mr. Frederic Breton's "crofter chronicle"—A Heroine in Homespun—does not concern itself with the grievances we Southrons have learnt to connect with the peasant Highlanders. It is a love story perhaps before everything else, with a heroine of the picturesque name of Séonaid, one of whose lovers is the Dreamer of Dreams, and another a strong healthy sailor, Alick Campbell by name; while the atmosphere is supposed to be thick with other hovering but undistinguished swains. There is a real Hebridean flavour about the book—in its people, their curious beliefs, and their manners of speech and conduct. Alick is a crude type of Scottish stornness; and in direct contrast with him is John Bowie, the Dreamer, who, with his gift of beautiful speech, his alternating fits of strength and weakness, and his absolute belief in the supernatural, better realises a Southerner's notion of the inhabitants of the Western Isles. The incidents turn round about this same Séonaid, a good and beautiful maiden, who behaves as such a maiden should in her adventures and troubles, and who will make an excellent wife to the man who wins her. In a Scottish novel scenery is a necessary element, and here the descriptions of scenery are good. Perhaps the final catastrophe, where the sun rises over the fiords as the Atlantic rolls in on its deadly course, is the finest thing in the book.

Let it be said that there is a great simplicity and singleness of purpose about For Good or Evil. Miss Lyon does not allow a single irrelevant word to escape her; not so much as a side glance is there at any thoughts or ideas which the fates of her characters might suggest. Straight on those characters fare, with their more or less interesting histories, and their by no means so interesting conversations. They are all well-born people, and supposed to be well-bred, with the exception of Lord Lynmouth, the villain, to whose vices the authoress adds rank vulgarity—whether consciously or unconsciously, one cannot say. Pansy Bruce, the heroine, is intended to be a sweet good woman, and in fact is so. Some of the situations are good, and the characterisation is fairly successful. Indeed, Zelia so impresses her changeableness upon one, as to suggest a doubt whether the halcyon period reached at the end of the book will last far into her married life.

The brilliant short story which John Oliver Hobbes contributed to one of the summer numbers serves as prelude to the scrappy little comedy which occupies the last two-thirds of her book, A Bundle of Life. Teresa, the daughter of the weak and feminine Lady Warcop, lives to be over thirty, and comes into a love affair. There is rather a mixture of love affairs, as hers overlaps several other people's. As usual, the plot is not the strong point; a string of piquant situations is the truest description of the method of construction which John Oliver Hobbes employs. The real value of her work lies in the sharp, sudden, and brilliant, though extravagant, characterisations, like priceless flecks of colour, which are the essence of comedy. Her people all stand out in a few telling sentences, and say their several says and do their deeds (for which one is, of course, utterly unprepared) in a way that would be fatal to a work of higher aim, but which is exquisite and unspoiled comedy.

Throughout Appassionata there is a real foreign atmosphere—so real that Miss Olive, the only English person in the book, seems a foreigner, and the reader looks at her unconsciously from a Finnish, a French, a Russian, any but an English point of view. The first half of the story is charming—language, scenes, characters, all. Later on, the cause of the Count Denisow's estrangement from his wife seems a little inadequate, and personages are introduced to the reader on what might be considered insufficient grounds; but the writer's touch is everywhere light, true, and effective. If anything it is too light, and there is sometimes hardly enough said; a little more help to the reader in the imagining of a scene or a motive would have been serviceable. Music has not so much to do with the story as the title-page leads one to expect. It is only a detail that the estrangement between husband and wife turns upon music; and it was love of freedom rather than of music that made Selma keep her devoted lover waiting so many years before she would marry him.

Blizzard is a capital sketch of the effect of involuntary dog-keeping on a mild and unoffending curate. The dog, Blizzard, was a poacher's accomplice before he fell into the curate's hands, and by slow degrees he makes an ardent poacher of the curate himself. That development was no doubt aided by the vicar's act in dismissing the curate, after an enthusiastic sermon on dogs; for the proceeds of the dog's maraudings helped to keep the poor man's wife and children. The awkward situations are very amusing; and the curate owns that Blizzard, in his short but eventful career, turned him from a poor creature into a man. The other "fantasy" is a sordid, unrelieved story of a heartless girl and a calculating money-lender, who between them ruin the lives of men. It is undeniably clever, but as undeniably unpleasant, since the characters who are so graphically described are with one exception repulsive.

The short story which gives its name to Mrs. Walford's volume occurs in the middle of the book, and is perhaps the most insignificant in the collection. The peculiar gift Mrs. Walford showed in The Baby's Grandmother—the gift for perceiving and describing the enormous importance of trifles—is again noticeable in this latest of her productions. A letter sticks in a letter-box; a girl is, for economical reasons, not taken on a pleasure trip; people happen not to meet for a little while; a boy's holiday is put off—nobody else might see, as Mrs. Walford does, the possibilities in these things. But life, after all, is made up for most of us of nothing more striking; and whose life is insignificant to its only familiar reader—himself? One of the cleverest and shortest of these sketches is "A Meeting," in which Lady Magnolia Grandiflora, driving with her daughter, meets the Dean of St. Octave's for the second time in her life. The first time had been thirty years before. Lady Magnolia admits to her daughter that in those old days she had been a coquette, but not a flirt, and adds a definition: "The men go after coquettes; flirts go after the men."

One must admit with Canon Knox-Little that his A Waif from the Waves is "a trifling tale." He says that he hopes by it to bring home to humanity the sense and reality of another world; but this is not to be done by presenting us with very so-so ghosts, and enlarging at the same time on the Catholic faith. Charming as his other characters tell us his heroine and hero are, and abounding with goodness as the whole book is, the story will only achieve its purpose with those readers who are convinced already. Canon Knox-Little is perhaps a born orator and mover of the hearts of men, but story-teller he is not.

GEORGE COTTERELL.

SOME BOOKS ON MODERN GREECE.

Two Roving Englishwomen in Greece. By Isabel J. Armstrong. (Sampson Low.) This lively and amusing book contains the narrative of a five weeks' tour in Greece, which the authoress made in the company of a friend, Miss Edith Payne. The amusing element in it is caused in no slight degree, it must be confessed, by the travellers' ignorance of the Greek language, their inexperience of the manners and customs of the people, and their determination to shift for themselves in their expeditions into the interior of the country. These conditions, it may well be believed, were highly favourable to the development of mistakes, complications, and désagrémens of various kinds, the description of which is not necessarily interesting. But these ladies possessed a large fund of good humour, a warm appreciation of the country and its inhabitants, and a strong sense of fun; and the incidents of their rough life, which they courted in order to gain fresh experiences, are communicated to the reader with much spirit and naïveté. The descriptions of scenery also are graphic; and the observations on the antiquities, if they contain nothing absolutely new, have the advantage of being recorded by a lady's pen. What male archaeologist, when viewing the drums of the columns of one side of the temple of Zeus at Olympia, which lie in line as they fell after a shock of earthquake, would have remarked that "they look as if they only wanted a giant darning needle run through them to thread them all up into position again"? Landing at Patras, the travellers visited Olympia, and from that place made a three days' expedition to the Temple of Apollo at Bassae and back; after which they took the train to Athens, and inspected the ruins at Tiryns and Mycenae. Their intention had been to join an excursion party to the Greek Islands, for which a steamer had been chartered; but for this they arrived too late—a fortunate accident, as it happened, for this circumstance turned their thoughts towards Thessaly, and their visit to that province proved to be by far the most interesting part of their tour. Proceeding by steamer to Volo, and by rail to Larissa, they made that city their starting-point for visits—first to the Vale of Tempe, and afterwards to the Monasteries of Meteora. The former of those places, with its combination of grand and beautiful scenery, which admirably corresponds to its classical associations, is very gracefully described. The expedition to the latter was a much more arduous affair, and we may say with confidence that these ladies are the first of their sex from Western Europe who have set foot in those monasteries. These abodes are situated on a number of columnar masses of rock, which rise at the north-western extremity of the plain of Thessaly, and are well compared by Miss Armstrong to storks' nests on chimneys, or the turban which caps the headstone of a Turkish tomb. The sides of these rocks are perpendicular; and the buildings by which they are surmounted are reached either by means of a long rope, by which the visitor is drawn up in a net, or by a series of ladders attached to the face of the cliffs. The ladies had set their heart on ascending to the highest of these monasteries, Hagia Trias (Holy Trinity); but when they arrived at its foot, they found that the rope was too rotten to be used, and nothing remained but to ascend by the ladders. This they achieved; and considering that the height is between two and three hundred feet, and that the mode of transit is primitive of its kind, they deserve the credit of very great pluck for doing so. The two chapters which relate to this excursion are the best in the book, and are very brightly written. Indeed, Miss Armstrong's style is pleasant throughout; but, if she publishes anything in the future, we would suggest to her a little more restraint in the use of language. More than one of her picturesque descriptions is marred by the terrible word "splodge"; "humans" is hardly a literary equivalent for "human beings"; "absquatulate" is a doubtfully classical term; and, whatever may be the faults of the scenery of the Riviera, it is unkind to speak of the hardness of its sky and sea and land as "villainous."

Addresses and Recollections (Διηγήσεις καὶ Ἀναμνήσεις, Athens, 1893) is the title of a collection of miscellaneous essays and papers, twenty-three in number, by the well-known Modern Greek author, M. Bikélas, who, we are glad to learn, has just received the honorary degree of LL.D. from the University of St. Andrews. The subjects with which they deal may be roughly classified as educational and literary, biographical and descriptive. Under the first of these heads may be specially mentioned those on "Books and the Habit of Reading," on "Modern Greek Literature," and on "Education." The last-named subject is dealt with from the most comprehensive point of view, and contains, among other things, some sensible remarks on the attention which is devoted to athletic sports in English education, and the influence which they exercise in the formation of character. The biographical essays contain notices of Settembrini, of Koumoundouros, the Greek statesman, and of several of the men of letters in Western Europe who have contributed to the study of later and modern Greek—Emile Egger, Wilhelm Wagner, and the Marquis de Queux de Saint-Hilaire. There is also an account of E. A. Freeman's visit to America in 1882, and of his utterances on the subject of Greece and the Greeks on that occasion; and a translation of a very interesting diary kept in Greece in the years 1833-35 by Gustave d'Eichthal, who was one of the chief founders of the Association pour l'encouragement des Etudes grecques en France. In the descriptive portion the most interesting study is the author's narrative of a tour in Devon and Cornwall in 1865, which he originally published in the form of letters in the Pandora of Athens. The heart of a west country man cannot fail to be stirred when he reads an account in excellent Greek of the coasts and combs and moorland of his favourite counties—of Tavistock and Bude and Clovelly and Lynton with its Valley of Rocks (ἡ Κοιλία τῶν Βράχων). The culminating point of this romantic region, which is described throughout with much poetic feeling, is, in the author's opinion, the valley and residence of Glenthorne, near Lynmouth; and, as M. Bikélas is fond of illustrating his delineations of places by comparing them to scenes in Greece, it may interest him to know that the first owner of that abode, who was an old traveller in Greece, used to glory in the resemblance between the Bristol Channel, as seen from his windows, and the Bay of Salamis. The tour concluded with a pilgrimage to the Church of Landulph, near Saltash on the Tamar, where lies interred the reputed last scion of the Palaeologi of Constantinople. The spot is full of suggestive associations for a patriotic Greek; but we wish we could feel confident that the connexion of the said Palaeologus with the imperial family of that name is beyond suspicion. All these contributions are characterised by the taste and judgment with which those who are acquainted with M. Bikélas' writings are familiar. In his Introduction he discusses the question of the styles of prose writing in Greek at the present day, and advocates a via media between the attempts of the extreme regenerators of the modern Greek language to assimilate it to ancient Greek, and the views of those, like M. Psichari, who would reduce the written language, as far as may be, to the level of the spoken tongue.

AN interesting paper has recently been published by M. Renieri in the Δελτίον of the Historical and Ethnographical Society of Greece, on the visit of Metrophanes Critopulus, the disciple of Cyril Lucar, to England and Germany in the time of James I. (Μητροφάνης Κριτοπούλος κ. λ. οἱ ἐν Ἀγγλίᾳ καὶ Γερμανίᾳ φιλιη αὐτοῦ). Before his elevation to the patriarchal throne of Constantinople, Cyril found that the Greek Christians in that place were greatly exposed to the machinations of Jesuit missionaries from Rome. As none of his own countrymen possessed an adequate knowledge of theological questions to cope with them, he determined to send an intelligent ecclesiastic to England for instruction; and his choice fell on Metrophanes, who appears at that time to have been twenty-eight years of age. He arrived in England in 1617, and Archbishop Abbott, to whom he brought an introduction from Cyril, arranged that he should reside at Oxford, where he was entered at Balliol (κατετάχθη εἰς τὸ Φρεισιτισίον τὸ γνωστὸν ὑπὸ τὸ ὄνομα Balliol College). There he remained five years; and subsequently he passed into Germany, where he made a lengthened residence, and finally returned to Constantinople in 1630. In 1636 he was appointed Patriarch of Alexandria. After his death, a Confession of Faith of the Greek Church, of which he was the author, was printed at Helmstadt, in Greek and Latin, in 1661. Additional information, beyond what was already known concerning him, was furnished by M. Demetrapopulus, who in 1870 published a correspondence between Metrophanes and German literary men of his time, which he found in the public library at Hamburg; and in 1884 M. Mazarakis contributed other details, which he obtained from the library of the Patriarchate at Alexandria. The new facts which M. Renieri supplies are derived from the φιλοθήκη or autograph-book of Metrophanes, which still exists at Athens. This interesting album (λεξικόν) contains the signatures of his chief friends in England and Germany, which are accompanied by apposite quotations, and expressions of respect and goodwill. Many of these are published by M. Renieri; and among the names of his Oxford well-wishers we find those of Prideaux, the rector of Exeter College, of Briggs the mathematician, of Bainbridge the astronomer, and of Burton, the author of the Anatomy of Melancholy. The consentient testimony which these bear to his high character and acquirements is of value, as furnishing a reply to the subsequent imputations of Archbishop Abbott. The causes of the change of feeling of that prelate towards him are somewhat obscure, though it seems principally to have arisen from Metrophanes having recommended some of his English friends for promotion to the king, with whom he had a parting interview. Anyhow, Abbott wrote several letters of a defamatory character concerning his former protégé to Sir Thomas Rowe, the British ambassador to the Porte, the contents of which he desired to be communicated to Cyril Lucar, who was then Patriarch of Constantinople; but they had not the effect of diminishing Cyril's confidence in Metrophanes. The text of these letters has been published by Neale in the fourth volume of his Eastern Church, and a Greek translation of them is given by M. Renieri at the end of his paper. It is curious to remark how both Prideaux in England and Calixtus in Germany, in order to express their sympathy with a member of the Greek Church, appeal to their names the quotation, Gal. 3, 28, οὐκ ἔτι Ἰουδαῖος οὐδὲ Ἕλλην πάντες γὰρ ὑμεῖς εἰς ἓστε ἐν Χριστῷ ἰησοῦ. At the present day we should regard this as rather an equivocal compliment to an Orthodox Christian, but it does not seem to have appeared so to the men of that time.

NOTES AND NEWS.

PROF. SKEAT has finished his edition of the Complete Works of Geoffrey Chaucer, for the Clarendon Press, who will publish it, under the title of "The Oxford Chaucer," in six volumes, at short intervals during the present year. It consists, in the first place, of an entirely new text, based upon the best MSS. and the earliest printed editions. The spelling of every word has received attention, with the aim of following generally the highly phonetic system employed by the scribe of the Ellesmere MS. of the Canterbury Tales. In the second place, of an elaborate commentary, explaining every difficulty, and (in particular) pointing out the poet's indebtedness to Boccaccio, Statius, Ovid, Boethius, &c. Thirdly, of a glossary and indexes, of such exceptional fulness as to fill a volume by themselves. While spurious works, once attributed to Chaucer, have been carefully excluded, the reader will here find the whole genuine works of the author, including "A Complaint to his Lady" and a "Balade to Rosemunde." Volume I., to be issued immediately, contains a general introduction, a Life of Chaucer, a list of his works, the Romaunt of the Rose (with the original French text printed for comparison), and the Minor Poems. It is illustrated with a facsimile of the portrait in the Harleian MS.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. announce a volume entitled Christus Imperator! or, the Universal Empire of Christianity in the Light of Evolution. It consists of a series of sermons delivered at Liverpool from the pulpit of the new Dean of Ely. Among the preachers were: Dean Kitchin, Canon Fremantle, Canon Barnett, the Revs. J. Llewellyn Davies, Brooke Lambert, R. E. Bartlett, and H. D. Rawnsley.

UNDER the title of A Policy of Free Exchange, Mr. John Murray will shortly publish a collection of essays by various writers on the economical and social aspects of free exchange and kindred subjects. It is edited by Mr. Thomas Mackay, editor of a similar volume entitled "A Plea for Liberty," who himself writes on the interest of the working classes in free exchange. Among the other contributions are: "State Socialism and the Collapse in Australia," by the Hon. J. W. Fortescue; "The State in Relation to Railways," by Mr. W. M. Acworth; "The Principle of Progression in Taxation," by Mr. Bernard Mallet; and "The Coming Industrial Struggle," by Mr. W. Maitland.

MR. WILLIAM HEINEMANN will publish immediately an English translation, by Lady Mary Loyd, of the Vicomte Robert du Pontavice de Huessey's Life of Villiers de L'Isle Adam; and a commentary on Ibsen's Works, by Prof. Boyeson. But Prof. Herford's translation of Brand is delayed slightly, in order to enable Messrs. Scribner to publish it simultaneously in America.

MESSRS. ELKIN MATHEWS & JOHN LANE will publish next week a volume of verse by Mr. Grant Allen, modestly entitled The Lower Slopes, with a title-page designed by Mr. J. Illingworth Kay. We believe that most of the poems were written a good while ago.

MESSRS. H. S. NICHOLS & Co., of Soho-square, will have ready for issue in the course of this month an édition de luxe of Sir Richard Burton's mystical poem, "The Kasidah," with copious annotations.

AMONG the new volumes of verse which Mr. Elliot Stock will shortly publish, may be mentioned: Sonnets of the Wingless Hours, by Mr. Eugene Lee Hamilton; and Lyra Sacra, by Mary E. Kendrew.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL will publish in the course of the present month a book on big game shooting in the Congo Free State, with numerous illustrations.

MR. WILLIAM HEINEMANN announces for publication early in February two volumes of short stories: Our Manifold Lives, by the author of "The Heavenly Twins," and The King of Schnorrers: Grotesques and Fantasies, by Mr. Zangwill.

A NEW novel by Mr. Gilbert Sheldon, entitled The Standishs of High Acre, will be published shortly by Messrs. Cassell & Co., in two volumes.

MESSRS. BLISS, SANDS & FOSTER will publish next week a new novel by Esmé Stuart, entitled Inscrutable.

MR. STANDISH O'GRADY's new story, Lost on Du Corrig; or, "Twixt Earth and Ocean," will be published by Messrs. Cassell & Co. in a few days.

MESSRS. WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS will publish shortly a popular edition of Mr. Alexander Allardyce's Indian novel, The City of Sunshine, which first established the reputation of the author of "Balmoral" and "Earlscourt."

WE are asked to state that "Iota," the author of a recent novel called A Yellow Aster, desires to remain anonymous, though there is no objection to its being known that she is a woman.

A CHEAP edition of the Rev. Dr. A. G. Blaikie's Better Days for Working People will be issued very shortly by Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.

THE readers of "Safe Studies" and "Stones of Stumbling" may be glad to hear that the February number of the Journal of Education contains a long paper by the Hon. Lionel A. Tollemache, entitled "Renan and Renanism."

A MEMORIAL promoted by the Manchester Literary Club was recently sent to Mr. Gladstone, suggesting a recognition of the services to literature rendered by Mr. Alexander Ireland during the last forty years. The Lord Mayor of Manchester, who was the first signatory of the memorial, has received a letter from Mr. Gladstone approving the memorial and its object, and awarding to Mr. Ireland the sum of £200 from a special fund devoted to services of this nature.

THE third series of lectures given by the Sunday Lecture Society begins on Sunday, February 4, in St. George's Hall, Langham-place, at 4 p.m., when Mrs. Proctor-Smyth will lecture on "The Lick Observatory." Lectures will be subsequently given by Prof. Vivian B. Lewes, Messrs. G. Wotherspoon, R. W. Atkinson, Henry Somerville, and Sir Robert Ball.

THE annual meeting of the Harleian Society was held on Friday, January 26, when there was a large attendance of members. Mr. Granville Leveson-Gower, presided. The annual report and balance sheet were adopted. The society is now publishing Hunter's Familie Minorum Gentium, a valuable collection of pedigrees, under the editorship of Mr. J. W. Clay. A discussion took place on the subject of the future custody and preservation of parish registers, when it was unanimously resolved:

"That in the opinion of the Harleian Society it is most desirable that transcripts be made of all the parish registers in the country, and that the district or parish councils be required to make the same under rules and regulations to be approved by the Government."

MESSRS. BLADES, EAST & BLADES have sent us a little pamphlet, entitled How to Correct Printers' Proofs. Even those who do not need the information given will value it, because it contains facsimiles of press corrections in the handwriting of the late William Blades. One rule we may quote for the benefit of some of our own contributors:

"When an accented letter is required [this applies also to Greek breathings], the accent alone should not be marked, but the non-accented letter should be struck out, and the accented letter written in the margin."

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE delegates of the common university fund at Oxford have appointed Mr. Arthur Sidgwick to be reader in Greek, in succession to Mr. Bywater, now regius professor. Mr. Sidgwick enjoys the highest reputation as an editor of school books, as a writer of Greek verse, as a college tutor, and as an ardent supporter of all educational movements.

DR. LATHAM has resigned the Downing professorship of medicine at Cambridge, which he has held since 1874, having previously acted as deputy-professor.

IN Convocation at Oxford, next Tuesday, it will be proposed to confer the honorary degree of M.A. upon Major F. J. Eveleigh, who has just vacated the adjutancy of the University Volunteers.

MR. J. R. GREEN, of Trinity College, has been approved by the general board of studies at Cambridge for the degree of Doctor in Science.

PROF. BEVAN (Lord Almoner's professor of Arabic) and Mr. E. G. Browne (lecturer in Persian) have been appointed to represent the University of Cambridge at the International Congress of Orientalists to be held at Geneva in September.

THE Tylorian Lecture at Oxford, postponed from last term, will be delivered by M. Stephane Mallarmé on February 28. His subject is "Les Lettres et la Musique." The lecture will be delivered in English, but repeated in French on the following day.

THE accounts of the common university fund are published in the Oxford University Gazette. Apparently, it is intended to reduce the annual contributions from colleges from £4362 to £3000. Of the expenditure, by far the larger portion is devoted to the stipends of readers and lecturers. During the present year, it is proposed to grant £300 towards the purchase of casts at Athens, in addition to £58 for classical archaeology, and an annual grant of £150 for the maintenance of the collection of casts.

WHILE Cambridge has an Association of Brass Collectors, Oxford possesses a Philatelic Society, of which Dr. Murray has been president for the last three years. Another prominent member is Prof. Napier, who recently read a paper upon "The Stamps, Cards, and Envelopes used for messenger purposes at some of the Colleges at Oxford."

MR. LE GALLIENNE's poems were the subject of a paper read last week before a society at Worcester College, Oxford, which takes its name from De Quincey.

THE hon. secretaries of the Jowett Memorial Fund have published a second list of subscriptions, from which it appears that the total amount already received amount to nearly £8500. Very few subscriptions are specially appropriated to the personal memorials.

MR. T. J. LAWRENCE, of Downing, has addressed an open letter to the resident members of the senate at Cambridge, proposing that the twenty-first anniversary of the University Extension movement should be commemorated by an international congress, to be held at Cambridge in the summer of the present year. He further urges the desirability of establishing a system of post-graduate studies.

DR. JAMES BONAR has published in pamphlet form (Macmillans) a lecture which he delivered last June, at Essex Hall, to the United Philosophical Societies of University Extension students in West London. The subject is a discussion of the question, raised by Hume, whether such intellectual qualities as prudence, penetration, discernment, discretion, are to be included among the moral virtues.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

SWAN SONG.

"Tell my brothers
That I perceive death, now I am well awake, Best gift is they can give or I can take."
Webster's "Duchess of Malgi."

Pass gently, life!
As one that takes farewell of a dear friend:
For ne'er till now were thou and I at strife,
Nor shall the sequel lend
The rich succession of thy smile and tear,
The conquering pride of love that tramples fear
And vaunts itself a rapture without end!
But mine is weariness thou canst not mend.

Come, kindly death!
Surely of all life's bounties thou art best;
To whose forgetful palace entereth
No thought that may molest,
No hope and no regret, but ever, there,
Passes the waft of charmed oblivious air
O'er silent multitudes thy wand hath blessed:
Angel! I wait thy coming—bring me rest!

R. WARWICK BOND.

OBITUARY.

ELIZABETH PALMER PEABODY.

MISS PEABODY died at Jamaica Plain, Boston, on January 3, in the ninetieth year of her age. From the time she was sixteen she was engaged in teaching, and her interest in the work of education lasted throughout her life. Her first pupils were her sisters, one of whom, Sophia, became the wife of Nathaniel Hawthorne. For a time she was literary assistant to Dr. Channing, of whom she published some Recollections in 1880. In 1831 she was Mr. Bronson Alcott's assistant in his "Temple School," a great experiment in education, made famous by her invaluable Record, published in the following year. When she was eighteen years of age she first met Emerson, taking lessons in Greek from him. He was only one year older; and she has related how exceedingly shy both teacher and pupil were, so that they did not get into even "a chatting acquaintance," but sat opposite each other at the study table not daring to lift their eyes from their books. When the course of lessons was concluded, Emerson refused to receive any payment, on the ground that he had found he could teach her nothing. However, on this occasion the discovery of a mutual enthusiasm for Edward Everett broke their reserve, and they were destined to work together in many public movements. Among the New England Transcendentalists Miss Peabody, although not by any means the most prominent, was one of the most untiring and efficient workers. She was deeply interested in the Brook Farm experiment. When the Dial was languishing for want of subscribers, she made a strenuous effort to save it, and did, in fact, prolong its life, by taking the publication of it, and the general business management, into her own hands, without fee or charge of any kind. She contributed to its pages several valuable papers on Fourierism and other social ideals. In 1849 she edited a volume of Aesthetic Papers, which included essays by Emerson, Hawthorne, and Thoreau. It was intended to be the first of a series; but as only fifty persons subscribed for it, it had no successor. Besides the works already named, Miss Peabody wrote several books on education. Her final volume appeared in 1887, a collection entitled Last Evening with Alston and Other Essays. Her life was one of disinterested helpfulness. Mrs. Hawthorne wrote of her: she "was to my childhood and first consciousness the synonym of goodness," a sentiment which, assuredly, might be truly echoed by many others.

WALTER LEWIN.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE January number of Mind contains a vigorous article by Prof. Seth on "Hegelianism and its Critics." It is in the main a reply to Prof. Jones's two articles in the same journal, in which Prof. Seth was singled out for attack. The study of Hegelianism is said to sharpen the dialectical powers, and it is interesting to see how one who after being almost persuaded to join the fold, retorts on a professed disciple. The impression most strongly borne in our own mind, perhaps, in reading this controversy, is the practical impossibility of a perfect comprehension of another's language in the philosophic sphere. Here at least the scientist may indulge in his boast. But perhaps the chief use of philosophy may prove to be to sharpen one's wits by these very exercises in scrutinising words and getting at their manifold meanings. Prof. Seth positively accuses his critic of so far misunderstanding him as to use by way of refutation many of his own arguments against his opponents. In fact Prof. Jones says precisely what Prof. Seth says, "nur mit ein bischen andern Worten." Three other good articles complete the number. Prof. Mark Baldwin further develops his theory of Imitation as a principle in psychology, and appears to find it everywhere. We are always imitating, if not something external, at least ourselves. Imitation is here used as including all that psychologists mean by habit. In truth, the writer goes beyond the height of paradox attained by Mr. Samuel Butler in his clever volume Life and Habit, and describes the building up of tissues by the organism as a kind of imitative work. One result of this curious theory would be that the distinction of imitative and creative art must wholly disappear. The artist always imitates either something he has seen or heard, or at least his own internal idea or mental picture. Whether this new use of the word will conduce to clearness remains to be seen. Prof. Laurie has some good criticisms on the theory which he calls "psycho-physical materialism"; that consciousness is a mere "epiphenomenon" added to the chain of nervous processes, which theory, as he rightly sees, would have this extraordinary consequence, that "the whole of the 'Antigone' (of Sophocles) might effect itself as a complete drama without the intervention of consciousness." In the last of the principal articles, Mr. D. Irons subjects Prof. W. James's theory of Emotion to an interesting criticism. He makes some good points, as when he says that if an emotion were merely the sum of the bodily effects, we should not (as we often do) experience a sudden cessation of an emotion, say of anger or fear, when we find there is no real ground for the feeling, since the bodily accompaniments move slowly, and, as a matter of observation, survive in this case the emotion which excited them.

STILL another psychological journal. With the New Year America sends us (in addition to the American Journal of Psychology, edited by Prof. Stanley Hall, and largely occupied with the researches carried out at Clark University, of which he is the president) the Psychological Review, edited by Profs. J. M. Cattell and J. Mark Baldwin. We cannot but regret the fact that this is the third record of psychological work now appearing in the English language. A single monthly or bi-monthly review strictly confined to psychological research could publish all that is important, and the reduction of the number of journals would be a boon to students. As it is, one must be thankful for the appearance of a Review which will attempt to take note of what is important in all branches of psychological investigation. America has now established something like a school of psychology. Special professorships and laboratories have sprung up in most of the leading universities, and it is well that there should be a journal to give a complete and impartial view of the new work. The first number looks decidedly promising. Prof. Ladd leads off with an address recently given before the American Psychological Association. The address is an interesting review of the recent development of psychology in America, and an eloquent plea for a large and philosophic conception of the subject. Prof. Bryce begins a suggestive study of John Bunyan, whom he treats as a case of mental pathology. Then comes an account of the studies at the Psychological Laboratory at Harvard, where Dr. Münsterberg is introducing exact German methods of measuring mental phenomena. The single contribution by an English writer is a characteristic bit of self-experimentation by Mr. F. Galton, entitled "Arithmetic by Smell." The discussions, as also the accounts of recent writings, are, on the whole, good. It may be suggested, however, that the Review would add to its usefulness if it gave a full statement of the contents of other psychological journals, and noted as important the memoirs of psychological interest which now and again appear in periodicals not expressly devoted to psychological subjects.

THE ACADEMIE FRANÇAISE.

THE reception of M. Chaillemel-Lacour at the Académie Française took place on January 25, but his election dates as far back as March of last year. M. Renan had often expressed the wish that his old friend, M. Berthelot, the celebrated chemist, should succeed to his fauteuil; but there were objections to this. In the first place, the Academy already contains a sufficient number of savants, while M. Berthelot's literary merits are not reckoned high; and, above all, the materialistic theories of the author of Science idéale et Science positive were particularly distasteful to the bien pensant element in the Academy. Uncertainty of purpose reigned among the Immortals as to whom they should elect. M. Gaston Paris was scarcely eminent enough, and the name of M. Zola made them shudder; so that when M. Chaillemel-Lacour presented himself he was accepted by the bare majority of one vote. His reception was looked forward to with exceeding curiosity by the literary groups and fair ladies of the various académiques salons; for it was rumoured that the new Academician, instead of pronouncing the traditional panegyric of his predecessor, would severely criticise his philosophy—it was indeed whispered that this had been an express condition imposed on him in return for certain votes. It is needless to state that these were idle rumours. M. Chaillemel-Lacour did not tear Renan to pieces: he contented himself with giving the author of La Vie de Jésus some rather sharp scratches; and his speech, though a little too long (he spoke for an hour and a quarter by the clock), was a clever and witty oration, in the course of which he never overstepped the limits of courteous criticism.

To excuse his boldness in attempting to criticise so great a writer as Renan, M. Chaillemel-Lacour quoted, with happy effect, the following characteristic utterance of his predecessor: "Had I been born to be the head of a school, I should have loved only those of my disciples who detached themselves from me." And he added: "This confessed taste for schism re-assures me a little. If I happen to separate myself from him on some points, I shall picture to myself that I see in his kindly look the satisfaction of finding himself treated with a liberty worthy of him." After criticising the Vie de Jésus, the orator summed up his opinion of the work in the following terms:

"I do not know what has become of these objections, or whether their slight murmur is still to be heard somewhere. The book has partially survived them, and its novelty consists precisely in having given rise to them. If it has made no mark in the domain of science, it will have a place in the history of ideas. It is the first attempt made to substitute, by making it historical, a figure of flesh and blood in the place of the vague phantom which has flitted across the centuries. What cannot be concealed, however, is that, notwithstanding the formulas with which he loads it, and which one would sometimes think were borrowed from the protocols of the Lower Empire, the author has only sketched a figure of mean proportions, compared with that which can be created in the heart of the believer by a few words of the Gospel. . . . The hero of holiness was a hero of action; in the eyes of the author his glory fades away, he is only a fallen idealist."

M. Chaillemel-Lacour displayed both eloquence and gentle irony in his summing up of the personality of the author of Souvenirs de Jeunesse:

"La vie et les choses humaines n'étaient pour M. Renan qu'un spectacle peu sérieux, mais toujours intéressant. En se prêtant à tout de bonne grâce, il paraissait de plus en plus convaincu que, dans cette grande comédie où se déroulent les jeux de la fortune et de l'illusion, dans cette fantasmagorie où tout a sa place, même par moments l'héroïsme et la vertu, il n'y a rien à échanger, au moins si l'on ne veut pas s'exposer à rendre la pièce moins amusante. Il avait sur l'avenir des idées qui auraient pu conduire à un assez sombre pessimisme. Et pourtant M. Renan a été un homme heureux. Il vous a charmés jusqu'à la fin par sa placidité souriante; il vous a édifiés par l'exemple d'un bonheur qui ne sentait ni la tension ni l'effort, et où l'on ne voyait qu'un entier abandon. Je ne sais si, depuis Spicuzza, personne a jamais puisé dans une familiarité de toutes les heures avec l'Eternel une plus parfaite quiétude. . . . Il n'a pas eu de maître, il n'a pas fait de disciples, il n'en fera pas. Il reste et restera unique en France, idole des uns, pierre de scandale pour un grand nombre, exerçant sur les autres l'attrait d'une pensée qui fuit, comme Galatée, et qu'on poursuit sans l'atteindre."

The récipiendaire was M. Gaston Boissier, the historian and successor of M. Renan as Director of the Collège de France. He read his speech, a good specimen of academical rhetoric, from his seat at the bureau. Referring to the traditional welcome the Academy tendered to statesmen, he said that Renan was of opinion that the Academy, like the Prytaneum of the cities of antiquity, should offer its shelter to the remains of the various régimes which had in turn governed France, and that retired ministers, diplomatists, and worn-out orators should find within its precincts an honourable asylum in which they could end their days in serene tranquility such as they had never enjoyed during their public career. "But," added M. Gaston Boissier, addressing himself to the President of the Senate, "you are not only a politician; you are, as a lettré, a writer, a professor, a doubly welcome guest." He then proceeded to defend the memory of Renan from the accusation of having been a mere amuseur, a dilettante of philosophy, a thinker whose device was "contradiction." On the contrary, he was a devotee of science and literature, and tolerant towards all men. When he undertook to write Les Origines du Christianisme he accomplished the task with great independence of thought, but also with deep sympathy for the new religion, for the Apostles, and their trials and sufferings. He repudiated the violent and coarse attacks of the philosophers of the last century, and proved by his own example that an opinion can be firmly defended without insulting the belief of others. "He always professed sovereign indifference for material interests, and he died a poor man. . . . It was the essential dogma of his morality that life is good and that, after all, good is stronger than evil; he proclaimed that true wisdom consists for each of us in rejoicing in our work, in praising God from morning to evening by being gay, good-natured, and resigned."

Our thanks are due to M. Pingard, Secretary of the Institut, for the courteous welcome he proffered to the representative of the ACADEMY in the precincts of the Académie Française.

CECIL NICHOLSON.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- ARDOUIN-DUMAZET. Une Armée dans les Neiges: journal d'un volontaire du corps franc des Vosges (1870-71). Paris: Rouam. 6 fr.
 DATZ, P. Histoire de la publicité. T. 1er. Paris: Rothschild. 8 fr. 50 c.
 D'HONDT, P. Venise: L'Art de la Verrerie, histoire et fabrication. Paris: Lib. Centrale des Beaux-Arts. 5 fr.
 FERRARO, G. Contes populaires Malgaches. Paris: Leroux. 5 fr.
 GAULT, Paul. Les Chemises rouges: une conspiration sous la Terreur. Paris: Ollendorff. 8 fr. 50 c.
 HARLEZ, Ch. de. Shen-Sien-Shu. Le Livre des Esprits et des Immortels. Essai de mythologie chinoise. Paris: Leroux. 40 fr.
 LALLEMAND, Ch. Le Caire. Paris: Westhauser. 80 fr.
 LAVRELEY, Emile de. Essais et Etudes. T. 1er. Paris: Alcan. 7 fr. 50 c.
 LOTI, Pierre. Œuvres complètes de. T. I. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 7 fr. 50 c.
 SCHULTZ, E. Der junge Goethe. Ein Bild seiner inneren Entwicklung. (1749-1775). 5. Hft. Frankfurt-Weizsacker Periode. 2. Abtlg. Goethe in Weizsacker (1772). Halle: Kaemmerer. 1 M.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- SICKEL, O. Das Buch Job, nach Anleitet der Strophik u. der Septuaginta auf seine ursprüngliche Form zurückgeführt u. im Verhältnisse des Urtextes übers. Wien: Gerold's Sohn. 2 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

- AMÉLINEAU, E. Histoire des Monastères de la Basse-Egypte; Vies des Saints Paul, Antoine, Macaire, etc. Texte copte et traduction française. Paris: Leroux. 40 fr.
 DESJARDINS, A. De la liberté politique dans l'état moderne. Paris: Plon. 7 fr. 50 c.
 GAILLY DE TAURINES, Ch. La Nation canadienne: étude historique sur les populations françaises du Nord de l'Amérique. Paris: Plon. 3 fr. 50 c.
 KALOPOTHAKES, D. De Thracia provincia romana. Berlin: Heinrich. 2 M.
 LECQY DE LA MARONNE, A. La France sous Saint Louis et Philippe le Hardi. Paris: May & Motteroz. 4 fr.
 NOËL, Octave. Histoire du Commerce du Monde. T. II. Depuis les découvertes maritimes du 15<sup>e</sup> Siècle jusqu'à la Révolution de 1793. Paris: Plon. 20 fr.
 STRADA, T. La Loi de l'histoire. Paris: Alcan. 5 fr.
 WIRZ, J. C. Emano Filonardi, der letzte Nuntius in Zürich. Zürich: Fisk. 2 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY, ETC.

- BAILLON, H. Histoire des Plantes: Monographie des Cypripées, Restiées et Ericaculacées. Paris: Hachette. 4 fr.
 KIRCHHOFF, G. Vorlesungen üb. mathematische Physik. 4. Bd. Hrg. v. M. Planck. Leipzig: Teubner. 8 M.
 LANDMANN, S. Die Mehrheit geistiger Persönlichkeiten in e. Individuum. Eine psychol. Studie. Stuttgart: Enke. 4 M.
 LINDENFELD, R. V. Die Spongien der Adria. II. Die Hexaceratina. Leipzig: Engelmann. 2 M.
 NEUMANN, F. Vorlesungen üb. mathematische Physik. 7. Hft. Hrg. v. A. Wangerin. Leipzig: Teubner. 8 M.
 SCHIFF, Maurice. Recueil des Mémoires physiologiques de. T. I. Lausanne: Benda. 20 fr.
 SCHOTTEN, H. Inhalt u. Methode des planimetrischen Unterrichts. 2. Bd. Leipzig: Teubner. 8 M.
 ZIEGLER, H. E. Die Naturwissenschaft u. die sozial-demokratische Theorie, ihr Verhältnis dargelegt auf Grund der Werke v. Darwin u. Bebel. Stuttgart: Enke. 4 M.

PHILOLOGY.

- CORPUS glossariorum latinorum. Vol. V. Flaccidus, ed. G. Goetz. Leipzig: Teubner. 22 M.
 POPPELREUTER, J. De comodiæ atticæ primordiis particulae duæ. Berlin: Heinrich. 1 M. 20 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE NORTH PICTISH INSCRIPTIONS.

Bournemouth: Jan. 20, 1894.

Having read with much interest Mr. Nicholson's letters on the Pictavian Ogam inscriptions and the correspondence which they have elicited, allow me to offer a few words on the subject, in no controversial spirit, but as hoping to draw attention to some useful considerations. In his letter of January 13, Mr. Goudie has very justly remarked that experts are "still unable to arrive at unanimity" in their readings of these legends. Such unanimity is perhaps impossible; but it is clear that no progress can be made towards it until two things are done—until the text is definitely settled, either by entire agreement or by partial agreement with notes of permissible variations, and until the values of all the Ogam groups and signs are, in like manner, agreed upon, or noted as within limits doubtful.

The chief difficulties in establishing a text (some of which only affect Pictish Ogams, viewed apart from those in Ireland, England, and Wales) may be stated as follows: (1) Injuries and wear. Few of the inscriptions are undamaged, some are mere wrecks. Partly effaced groups often show traces that may be variously used for their completion: thus, Bressay (a) 3, 4, have been read as R, N, and as N, R, and Bressay (a) 8 as s or as ST.* (2) Long vowel scores (instead of the Irish and Welsh dots), which confuse with consonants. (3) Irregularity in slant of groups, some being neither fully slanted nor straight: thus, Newton 5, 26, have been read as I, or as R. (4) Variations in lengths, intervals, and slants of scores in individual groups: thus, Newton 6 has been read as q, or as A, C, or as possibly T, D. (5) The absence of a clear stem-line, whether line or angle, hence doubt as to the relations of groups to their stem. Thus, Golspie 8, 9, 10, might be either o, R, R, or D, Q, Q. (6) Peculiar marks of doubtful significance, such as the detached short scores on either side of Bressay (b) 4.

These difficulties mainly concern matters of fact, and might perhaps be settled or compromised more easily than others that belong to realms of opinion. In this latter class I would place those unusual signs peculiar (with one exception) to the Pictish Ogams, which are mostly precise enough in form but undefined in value. These are: (1) Angled, twisted, and under-barred scores, singly or in groups: generally admitted to be vowels, and very frequent in the angled variety. (2) Peculiar forms, such as Bressay (a) 16 = Oi (?); some of them rather obvious, as in Bressay (a) 15 and Burrian 26, R, R; others obscure, as Lunnasting 4 = Ui (?), and Burrian 20 = Ma (?). (3) The very perplexing sign X. Much depends on a true assignment of its value. The Ballymote key makes it equal diphthong EA. But cases exist where it clearly performs a different function, as in the Irish Ogam names MaXeini, CorrXo, Xoinetat (Brash, Ins. Mon. of Gaedhil). In the Welsh Crickhowel bilingual example, this sign in TurXili corresponds with P in the Roman Turpili; hence the assumption that X equals P. But there is no proof that the sounds were precisely identical. At all events, this is a solitary instance; and in the Irish examples cited P is impossible. Mr. Brash suggested o. That letter, however, is already represented in Ogams, and I have thought it not unlikely that in such cases X equals Ch or Gh, unrepresented sounds. The importance of the question in the present case is evident from the uses of this sign made by Mr. Nicholson and other writers, who, for reasons unknown to me, equate it with E (for which, of course, there is its own regular group), and in cases where two angled scores stand angle-points opposite treat these distinct scores (A, A) as if equivalent to X, and read them also as E. I do not assert that this is wrong: I only argue that the question must be settled before we can successfully decipher the Pictish Ogams and build theories on the result.

One other important consideration. Prof. Rhys has given the weight of his recognised authority to the substitution of a V and F rendering for the groups termed F and ST in the Book of Ballymote. Personally, I should hesitate to question a rendering thus originated; but seeing that the Ballymote key has been everywhere believed in (whatever its defects and limitations), and accepted as a guide by many eminent scholars, I venture to ask the reasons for a change which seems to have so important a bearing on the relations of the language in which these inscriptions are framed.

Let me repeat that I have no mere controversial ends in view. My desire is that our Pictavian Ogam inscriptions (I do not assume that they are necessarily the work of Pictish hands) should be studied afresh, on the original stones, by competent persons acting together; as in the case of the Newton Ogam, which last year was examined by Prof. Ramsay, Mr. W. R. Paton, Mr. Gordon of Newton, and myself, in a meeting arranged for the purpose. Happily the stones are very accessible, all of them being in the Edinburgh Antiquarian Museum, except those at Golspie (Dunrobin Museum), Aboyne, Brodie, Aquhollie, Logie Elphinstone, and Newton, which are within easy reach of railway-stations, the two last being in the same neighbourhood. Though valuable aids, photographs, rubbings, and casts cannot be trusted as substitutes for the original inscriptions, as, were it necessary, I could sufficiently prove by examples from my own experience.

SOUTHESK.

P.S., January 27.—Since this letter was in type I have had the advantage of reading Mr. Nicholson's communication in the current number of the ACADEMY. Permit me here to acknowledge his very kind and courteous reference to myself, and to record my belief that, whether or not his interpretations are generally accepted, he has rendered valuable service in the search for truth. I must not enter into discussions just now; but, referring to Mr. Mayhew's letter as well as to Mr. Nicholson's, allow me to point out that the word or syllable Ipe can only be found in the Pictavian Ogams by assuming that X equals P—which seems "not proven" (see above)—and that even then it only occurs once, viz., on the Newton Stone. With the undoubted Ipe in the St. Vigean Roman-Irish inscription, and with the entries in the Book of Deer, I have no present concern. In case reference should at any time be made to my own attempts at Ogam transliteration, may I mention that the versions given in my Origins of Pictish Symbolism (pp. 54, 71, 75, 76) represent my latest views (except that perhaps Burrian 20 equals MA (?) rather than MH (?), it is not the common Ogam X), and supersede those published in the Proc. S. Ant. Scot.

SOUTHESK.

Oxford: Jan. 27, 1894.

Mr. Nicholson seems to complain that I did not whisper my misgivings as to his explanations of the North Pictish inscriptions into his private ear in Bodley's Library, instead of saying a few plain sincere words about his method of investigation in the columns of the ACADEMY. He has no reason to complain.

When a scholar propounds his views in a literary journal, he must expect to be criticised, not in camera (Bodleyana), but in public, in the columns of the journal which he has favoured with his views.

No one doubts for a moment that Mr. Nicholson is a scholar of considerable ability, and of stupendous intellectual activity—a man devoted with a generous enthusiasm to the prosecution of antiquarian studies. He is clever and ingenious, and he has all the resources of a great library at his back. Still, I may perhaps be allowed to express as plainly as possible my decided opinion that, in the interests of sound learning, it is deeply to be regretted that a man, who is evidently untrained as well in the methods of comparative philology as in the rudiments of Celtic scholarship, who does not know the elements of Gaelic grammar, should presume to offer explanations of hopelessly obscure inscriptions—monuments which have utterly baffled the learning and ingenuity of trained experts in Celtic philology.

The professor of Celtic in the University of Oxford fancies that he can read on these inscriptions a language akin to Basque; Dr. Whitley Stokes, a trained comparative philologist, a Celtic scholar of European reputation, holds that this "Pictish" language is Brythonic—more nearly allied to Welsh than Gaelic; Mr. Nicholson, an amateur in these studies, has the temerity "to prove up to the hilt" that "Pictish" was a Goidelic language (not imported from Ireland)—the venerable mother of modern Scottish Gaelic. In a question of such dim obscurity, where the doctors of the science can see no clear guiding light, is it within the bounds of probability that a novice, however clever, who has picked up only a few crumbs of Celtic lore, who has not got as far as the mastery of the Gaelic declensions, can be a safe guide to us in the mist? It is quite certain that, with the employment of Mr. Nicholson's methods of interpretation, it would be perfectly possible to read any language spoken by the various tribes of men into these scratches on Scottish stones. An ingenious person could easily explain these inscriptions as written in the language of the Rock-Inscriptions of Darius. Another still more ingenious person could easily prove that he had found on the stones a language akin to the forcible unsophisticated speech of Lo Bengila.

The art of explanation, as practised in Bodley, is perfectly easy. In the first place ignore the elementary rules of accidence. In any difficulty adopt a new reading; if that fails, read the word backwards; if that fails, bring to bear this useful postulate: let it be granted that, in "Pictish," any sound may stand for any other sound. The thing is done! But the question may well be asked, "Is it worth doing? Is this science?"

Here is an instance of the useful postulate I have just mentioned. Mr. Nicholson reads on the Bressay Stone the words nahht and dattrr, which he explains as Norse words meaning respectively "night" and "daughter." To my obvious objection that the latter word should have retained the spirant as well as the former, Mr. Nicholson makes the following very naïve reply. The lady's description,

"though in itself Norse, is merely part of a Pictish inscription; and you cannot expect a Pict to be more consistent with ht in Norse than in his own language. Now, we not only have the same Pictish word split in these inscriptions sometimes as ehht, &c., and sometimes as elt, &c., but in the Lunnasting Stone, explained in my last letter, we actually get these two forms side by side."

The equation of "these two forms," be it remembered, is a pure assumption of Mr. Nicholson's.

* I will term the male epitaph Bressay (a), and the female Bressay (b).

Take an instance now of Mr. Nicholson's heroic contempt for grammatical consistency. He tells us that the s of cerroccs on the Burrian Stone is the s of the gen. sing., and, for the retention of final s, he refers to the form Lugudeccas, cited in Brugmann, Comp. Gr. § 576. This form Lugudeccas occurs in the Inscription of Ardmore, co. Waterford (see Stokes, Celtic Declension, Inscription No. 13, p. 87). This inscription is written in language of so ancient a date that on it we find the old gen. in i occurring three times. If Mr. Nicholson's theory about cerroccs had been correct, we should have found, of course, on the Burrian Stone, instead of uorr = mhor "an old gen. of mor, great," the form muri, a form ending in -i, as old Irish mār, mōr, belongs to the o-declension (see Brugmann II. § 74). At no period of the Gaelic language could such a form as uorr have been the gen. sing. of mōr.

I am afraid I am asking too much of your space. It is of the very smallest importance what I think or what Mr. Nicholson thinks about these inscriptions. We are neither of us specialists in Celtic philology. If the inscriptions are Goidelic, as Mr. Nicholson assumes, they can only be satisfactorily explained by trained Gaelic scholars. I wrote my former letter, not with the object of disturbing the mind of my old friend, but with the express purpose of eliciting the judgment of trained Celtic scholars on the matter in dispute between us. Possibly I shall not attain my end. Celtic philologists will very probably look upon the dispute much in the same way as Milton regarded the inglorious conflicts before the Conquest—as a mere bickering between kites and crows, as a matter quite unworthy the attention of serious men.

A. L. MAYHEW.

London: Jan. 27, 1894.

Mr. Nicholson, on the authority of Skene, would derive the place-names in Scotland with initial Tully or Tilly from teaghlach = family. Is there any evidence for this? The numerous Irish place-names beginning with Tully or its equivalent are all traceable, I think, to teluch (stem telikā) a hill, modern form tulach. This must be the element, I think, in such names as Tillymuick Hill, in Aberdeenshire (= hill of the pig), Tillycairn (hill of the cairn), Tullich Castle, in the same county, Tullich Burn, in Banff, Tullybelton Hill, Perth. There can hardly be question of a word signifying "family" in these connexions; and the fact that "Hill" is added in the case of three of them, and that the rest are associated with eminences, renders it all but certain that we have here to do with the Tully so frequently found in place-names in Ireland. The root is probably Til, as suggested in the new edition of Fick's Vergleichendes Wörterbuch der Indo-germanischen Sprachen, Zweiter Theil (p. 130) cf. Zeuss-Ebel (pp. 72 and 810).

EDMUND MCCLURE.

DANTE AND BERTRAN DE BORN.

Exeter: Jan. 22, 1894.

The answer to the interesting question of Mr. Wentworth Webster, why Dante treats Bertran de Born as he does in the Inferno, notwithstanding Bertran's repentance, seems to be suggested by Giuliani's note to the passage in Convito iv., 11, where Bertran is so highly eulogised. We must in fact remember that in the Divina Comedia Dante writes primarily as a poet and moralist, not as an historian. Discussing the sin of those who fomented discord between relatives, the poet is naturally anxious to avail himself of the singularly effective parallel between the conduct of Achitophel and that of Bertran de Born. Accordingly, just as in Purg. iii., 118-120 he invents the repentance of Manfred, here by a similar licence he sinks the repentance of Bertran; conceiving perhaps that the justice of the case was met by the eulogy of Bertran's character in the Convito, and the acknowledgment of his literary eminence in the De Vulgari Eloquentia (ii., 2).

A. G. FERRERS HOWELL.

Oxford: Jan. 24, 1894.

Mr. W. Webster, in his interesting note on Dante's "Young King" (ACADEMY, Jan. 20), having incidentally raised the question whether any adequate explanation has been given why Dante made such a terrible example of Bertran de Born in the Inferno, may I draw attention to an explanation I find in the introduction to the Poésies complètes de Bertran de Born, ed. Ant. Thomas (Toulouse, 1888), which may help to solve the problem?

"La poésie a le privilège de transformer et d'agrandir tout ce qu'elle touche. Un troubadour anonyme a raconté les événements politiques auxquels a été mêlé Bertran de Born, brouillant souvent les dates et les personnes, exagérant toujours la part qu'y avait prise le poète. C'est dans ce miroir grossissant et peu fidèle que Dante a aperçu la figure de Bertran de Born; son ardente imagination a ajouté encore aux transformations que cette figure avait déjà subies. De la le tableau inoubliable qui termine le vingt-huitième livre de l'Enfer" (cf. l. c. p. xi. et xii.).

H. KREBS.

A CHILD MARRIAGE IN 1623.

London: Jan. 30, 1894.

A comparatively late example of child marriage in England may be found in Number 1 of Dorset Records for January, just published by Mr. Charles J. Clark, of Lincoln's Inn Fields.

Among the abstracts of Inquisitiones post Mortem, temp. Charles I., there printed is one relating to Sir Robert Seymour, of Hampford, alias Hanford. The jurors duly find that the said Sir Robert died on July 7, 22 James I. [i.e., 1624], leaving as his son and heir Henry, then aged 14 years, 4 months, and 20 days. And they further find that the said Henry was married to Mary Welstead, on July 22, 1623, at which time he would have been only 13 years and 5 months old.

No doubt in this case, as in others, the object of the early marriage was to evade the liability for feudal dues; for Sir Robert held his manor of Hampford of the king in chief.

J. S. C.

"WINCHESTER COLLEGE."

London: Jan. 30, 1894.

The editor of the anniversary volume upon Winchester College, which I had the pleasure of reviewing in the ACADEMY of last week, kindly points out to me a blunder on my part, which I greatly regret, and beg leave to correct. In the second poem by the Bishop of Southwell, occurs the passage:

"Monasteria prouens pepercit
Rex illi epoliator, et sacrorum
Contemptor populū rebellis aestus:
Non illam impietas benigna regis,
Nec regis pietas maligna movit."

Taking the five lines together, I interpreted the last two as an allusion to the reigns and characters of Henry VIII. and Charles I. In reality, the allusion is to Charles II. and James II. My excuse must be, that my misinterpretation was at least not meaningless, nor false to history.

LIONEL JOHNSON.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- SUNDAY, Feb. 4, 4 p.m. Sunday Lecture: "The Lick Observatory," by Mrs. Proctor-Smyth.
7.30 p.m. Ethical: "The Story of an African Farm: a Criticism," by Mr. T. F. Husband.
MONDAY, Feb. 5, 5 p.m. Royal Institution: General Monthly Meeting.
5 p.m. London Institution: "Art about us," by Mr. Lewis F. Day.
8.15 p.m. Carlyle Society: "Imperial Federation," by Mr. George R. Parkin.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Advancement of Architecture," III., by Mr. G. Aitchison.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "The Detection and Measurement of Inflammable Gas and Vapour in the Air," III., by Dr. Frank Clowes.
8 p.m. Aristotelian: "Green and his Critics," by Mr. W. H. Fairbrother.
8 p.m. Victoria Institute: A Lecture by the Rev. H. N. Hutchinson.
TUESDAY, Feb. 6, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Locomotion and Fixation in Plants and Animals," IV., by Prof. C. Stewart.
8 p.m. Biblical Archaeology: "Ancient Metals from Tell el-Hesi," by Dr. J. H. Gladstone: "An Important Point of Egyptian Theology," by Mr. P. le Page Renouf.
8 p.m. Civil Engineers.
8.30 p.m. Zoological: "Synostosis and Curvature of the Spine in Fishes," by Prof. Howes; "Some Points in the Development of the Tadpole of Xenopus," by Mr. F. E. Beddard; "Some Remains of Aepyornis in the British Museum," by Mr. Chas. W. Andrews.
WEDNESDAY, Feb. 7, 4 p.m. Archaeological Institute: "A Stamped Leather Box of the Fifteenth Century," by Mr. R. Wright Taylor; "A Monumental Brass from Aberdeen," by Mr. C. T. Davis; "Some Monumental Brasses from Surrey," by Mr. Mill Stephenson.
8 p.m. Geological: "Some Cases of the Conversion of Compact Greenstones into Schists," by Prof. T. G. Bonney; "The Waldensian Gneisses and their Place in the Cottian Sequence," by Dr. J. W. Gregory.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Automatic Balance of Reciprocating Machinery, and Prevention of Vibration," by Mr. W. W. Beaumont.
THURSDAY, Feb. 8, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Past and Future of Mountain Exploration," I., by Mr. W. M. Conway.
4.30 p.m. Society of Arts: "Telegraphic Communication between England and India," by Mr. E. O. Walker.
6 p.m. London Institution: "The Life-History of a Mountain Range," by Mr. J. J. Harris Teall.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Advancement of Architecture," IV., by Mr. G. Aitchison.
8 p.m. Electrical Engineers: "The Electric Lighting of the City of London," by General Webber.
8 p.m. Mathematical: Exhibition and Description of Lord Kelvin's Models of his "Tetrakaidkahedron," by Mr. J. J. Walker.
8 p.m. United Service Institution: "The Coast-Lands of the North Atlantic," V., by Mr. H. J. MacKinder.
8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.
FRIDAY, Feb. 9, 5 p.m. Physical: Annual General Meeting; "The Viscosity of Liquids," by Mr. O. G. Jones.
8 p.m. Ruskin: "Ruskin in relation to Modern Problems," by Mr. E. T. Cook.
8 p.m. Viking Club: Concert.
9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Fortuitous Variation in Animals," by Prof. W. F. R. Weldon.
SATURDAY, Feb. 10, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Light, with special reference to the Optical Discoveries of Newton," I., by Lord Rayleigh.
8.45 p.m. Botanic: Fortnightly General Meeting.
8 p.m. South Kensington Museum: "The Arts of Egypt and Assyria, in their Relation to those of Greece," by Mr. Talfourd Ely.

SCIENCE.

AVIANUS AND HIS IMITATORS.

"LES FABULISTES LATINS DEPUIS LE SIÈCLE D'AUGUSTE JUSQU'À LA FIN DU MOYEN ÂGE."—Avianus et ses Anciens Imitateurs. Par Leopold Hervieux. (Paris: Firmin Didot.)

(First Notice.)

This handsome volume of 530 pages continues the exhaustive work of M. Hervieux on the Latin Fabulists. Two previous volumes deal with Phaedrus and his ancient imitators. The fables of Phaedrus, which in modern times are the only Latin fables largely known or read, and which, written as they were in the reign of Tiberius, have no little interest for their excellent and still undebased Latinity, were quite put out of the field in the Middle Ages by the forty-two elegiac fables of Avianus, a writer of the period which saw the final triumph of Christianity, and probably a later contemporary of Ausonius. A probable reason for this preposterous preference may be found in the metrical form as well as in the shortness of Avianus' work. His fables are in elegiacs, a metre with which everyone was familiar; those of Phaedrus are in iambs. Moreover, Avianus' elegiacs are terse and easily remembered; Phaedrus is apt to expatiate into matters which have nothing to do with the fable.

It is a sign of the popularity of Avianus in the Middle Age that his forty-two fables have come down to us in a great number of MSS., some of them as early as the ninth century. In not a few of them the love-elegies of Maximianus are found in immediate juxtaposition. But, whereas the elegies of Maximianus seem never to have been interpolated, the fables of Avianus have received large medieval accretions in the shape of promythia and epimythia, to say nothing of the prose paraphrases and rhymed transmutations of which M. Hervieux gives a full account for the first time. To these, indeed, the larger and, in some senses, the more interesting part of his Avianus et ses Anciens Imitateurs is devoted, and it is in this section of his book that his readers will find most that is new. M. Hervieux is an indefatigable palaeographer; hence, as the large compass of his étude admits of detailed and full descriptions of the MSS. in which the Fables of either Avianus or his paraphrasts and imitators occur, and many of these MSS. are not only very early, but contain a great variety of other matters, often far more important than Avianus, the trained palaeographer will find his attention continually arrested, and the tiro in palaeography, who pants to know how to make a suitable beginning of a study becoming every day more important, will turn again and again to a book in which, as in the works of de Nolhac, he is sure to find the richest and amplest material for his purpose. I cannot better illustrate my meaning than by referring to pp. 49—120, containing a minute account of the MSS. of Avianus in France, Germany, England, Austria, Belgium, Holland, Italy, Switzerland. This subsidiary purpose of M. Hervieux' volume is, I think, quite as important as its more direct object. It is, indeed, in its connexion with the Middle Age, far more than as a work of classical antiquity, that the fables of Avianus are interesting. They moulded the boyhood of Europe at least from the time of Charlemagne to the fifteenth century, and deserve, therefore, the most careful study from all who would understand the thought and morale of that period.

It may be as well to mention in succession the various matters which M. Hervieux' volume comprises. It is divided into two books. B. I. (pp. 3—156) contains a discussion on the name and age of the fabulist, followed by an account of the MSS., editions, and translations. B. II. describes the prose and verse paraphrases or abridgments executed in the Middle Age, with a full account of the MSS., mostly unknown before they were examined by M. Hervieux. Then follows (p. 265 to 287) the text of the fables, as given by the tenth century MS. of Trèves (1093): pp. 289—300, the Greek text of those fables of Babrius which Avianus has imitated: 301—318, the passages of Vergil copied by Avianus: pp. 319—369, two prose versions: 371—411, the leonine verse translation of a poet of Asti in Piedmont: 412—429, an examination of the rhymes employed by him: 430—450, another leonine version contained in an Austrian codex: 452—461, examination of the rhymes in this version: 462—466, Alexander Neckam's verse paraphrase of the first six fables, based on Paris 11867, with variants from Cambridge Gg. vi., 42: 468—473, Anti-Avianus: 475—479, Noui Aviani Parisiensis Flores: 480—490, Rhythmical Moralisation on the fables: 491—501, Metrical Moralisation on the same: 502—509, other medieval fables not belonging to the Avianian collection.

In the dissertation with which the work opens, M. Hervieux examines the views of Avianus' name, personality, and era, which have been held by previous editors, notably Cannigieter, Wernsdorf, Lachmann, Unrein, and myself. He shows that two spellings predominate in the MSS., Avianus, Avienus; the other forms, Anianus, Anienus, Abidnus, Avionetus, Avinionetus, may be dismissed as exceptional, corrupt, or only found in late MSS. Between Avianus, Avienus, the question is more difficult. Avienus is found in one ninth century codex (Paris 8093), and in two eleventh (B. N. Rawl. iii., in the Bodleian, Voss. L. O. 15 in the University Library of Leyden). To these I add the following: Albarus, a Spanish Jew of the ninth century, speaks of Abieni fabule metrice (Dümmler and Traube Poet. Lat. Med. Aevi III., p. 124), and Mico Levita (A.D. 825-853), who in his Prosodia cites the fables three times, spells the name Avienus. On the other hand Avianus is found in three MSS. of the eleventh century, two of the twelfth, ten of the thirteenth, seven of the fourteenth; and he is so called by Conrad of Hirschau in the twelfth century. M. Hervieux pronounces in favour of this spelling, as Cannigieter and all subsequent editors have done; yet, if earliness of witnesses preponderates over number the evidence is rather in favour of Avienus. The question cannot be considered settled. Meanwhile it is convenient to distinguish the fabulist Avianus from the geographical and astronomical poet Rufus Festus Avienus. It must not be forgotten that Fröhner, who in his edition of 1862 adopted the spelling Avianus, at a later period decided in favour neither of this nor Avienus, but of Avianius.

In the more purely historical part of his discussion, I find little to dissent from, except as to the interpretation of the words of the præfatio "De his ego ad quadraginta et duas in unum redactas fabulas dedi, quas rudi latinitate compositas elegis sum explicare conatus." M. Hervieux explains this to mean that Avianus turned forty-two fables, which had already been known to the Roman world in a common prose version, into elegiacs. He goes on to infer that this prose version was that of which Ausonius speaks as made by Titianus; and, since Titianus is called fandi artifex, explains rudi, in the above passage of the Præfatio, of the language of common life as opposed to the language of poetry. All this is pure hypothesis. In my edition I have maintained, as I still believe, that the words, rudi latinitate compositas elegis explicavi = r. l. composui et elegis explicavi. Avianus makes his statement, not of the whole collection of fables, but of the forty-two alone which he versified. The use of the participle is precisely the same as in the previous clause, in in unum redactas dedi. The rudeness of the latinity will easily be felt by any one who studies the fables; most of them have some word, or combination of words, which jars on our feeling of correct language.

The section on the editions of Avianus is full of new matter. It is noticeable that many of them, even the rarest, are to be found in the British Museum. M. Hervieux traces the fluctuation in the spelling of the fabulist's name from the Avianus of 1494 to the Avienus of 1570; thenceforward the two names alternate in the editions for about half a century, when a return was made to Avienus. Cannigieter (1731) was thought to have decided the question in favour of Avianus, which has ever since maintained its ground. We have seen that an age of MS. research like our own is not unlikely to overthrow this part of the learned Dutchman's researches, as it has undeniably disposed of his view of the fabulist's era.

ROBINSON ELLIS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TRACES OF SYRIAC INFLUENCE ON THE TEXT OF THE VULGATE.

Fallowfield, Manchester: Jan. 27, 1894.

I wish respectfully to suggest to the learned editors of the new edition of the Latin Vulgate that, for the solution of the problem they propound in to-day's ACADEMY, they should look to Syria. The proximity of Bethlehem, where Jerome laboured, renders this antecedently probable; and I venture to think that the following considerations prove (or tend to prove) that the MS. or MSS. in whose favour Jerome altered the readings of the Old Latin had been "Syriacised."

Mark ix. 5.—The Vulgate here has hic nos esse, instead of nos hic esse of the Old Latin. The Greek is ἡμεῖς ἔδε ἐταί. The Palestinian Lectionary (Syr-Jer), which so regularly presents the readings of BCS, is here defective (as is also the Curetonian); but, in Matt. xvii. 4, Syr-Jer reads "Good is it for us that we should be here"; but Syr-Cu in Matt. xvii. 4, and the Peshitta in this place, and also in Mark ix. 5, read: "Good is it for us that here we should be." May not the position of "here" in Syr and Syr-Cu have led to the transposition from nos hic esse to hic nos esse, in the MS. used by Jerome?

Luke ix. 44.—In vestris cordibus has not been found in any Syriac MS.; but the Diatessaron, which is essentially a Syrian production, bears evidence to the existence of this reading by the doublet: "Keep these sayings in your ears and hearts."

John vi. 12.—Ne perant has no precise equivalent in any known MS.; but Codex D bears evidence to the Vulgate by its unique reading: ἵνα μὴ τι ἀποληται ἐξ αὐτῶν, "That none of them be lost." That Codex Bezae bears the marks of Syriac influence has, in my judgment, been demonstrated by Mr. Chase.

John ix. 28.—The Vulgate adds proci dens, without any equivalent in extant Greek MSS. This passage does not exist in the Curetonian Fragments; but the insertion of "proci dens" is precisely the sort of embellishment in detail by which Syr-Cu is characterised. In fact, in three other passages, where προσκυβειν occurs in the Greek, the Curetonian adds נפל = "fell"—e.g., Matt. viii. 2, "a leper came, fell, and worshipped him." So Matt. xviii. 26, Matt. xx. 20.

Luke xi. 53.—Os ejus opprimere. Does not this translation of ἀποσπομαίρειν suggest a familiarity with the Peshitta מרססין? The radical notion of מרסס is to stamp with the foot, hence to coerce, hinder. Tremellius and others take this Syriac word to mean "to entrap"; but does not its usage in Rom. xv. 22 suggest here rather the thought of stifling Christ's words by browbeating? If so, this is the idea involved in "os opprimere," as well as in ἐπισπομαίρειν (3 MSS. of Tisch.).

As to the other cases, I have no suggestion to offer. Some of the instances are such that the Syriac cannot offer evidence—e.g., John v. 45, vii. 34, &c. The above may be thought too limited an area on which to base an induction. My purpose will be served if I have turned the attention of scholars in the direction in which the solution seems to lie; or, if a more extended list could be supplied me, I should have pleasure in making a further application of the method employed above.

J. T. MARSHALL.

THE PREVALENCE OF S-PLURALITY IN ENGLISH.

Oxford: Jan. 30, 1894.

Prof. Napier's letter in the ACADEMY of January 20 is in the nature of a schedule of details of evidence supplementary to the letter of January 13, to which we must turn for the enunciation of the principle upon which he resists his argument so far as it depends upon the Chronicle 1122-31 and upon the Ormulum. The principle upon which he relies is enunciated in these words:

"When two different languages are brought into contact, the influence of the one upon the other is first made apparent in the borrowing of words and phrases, and the proportion of such loan-words may, especially during the earlier periods of contact, be taken as a trustworthy gauge of the amount of influence exercised by the one on the other."

Applied to our present debate, this means to say that borrowed words and phrases are the first results of influence, that the passive language will adopt these earlier than it will admit flexional change, and that the true gauge as to whether influence is such as can impart flexional change is to be found in the list of borrowed words. Prof. Napier submits the Chronicle 1122-1131 and the Ormulum to this test, with a very remarkable result. He finds that the list of borrowed words is small; and the inference which his argument requires him to draw is this: that the influence was not strong enough to produce changes of form. But he is debarred from this inference by his own observation of words in the same book which have admitted change in form and meaning—viz., ormin, rime, wiless (modern English "wiles"), temple, mazzestre. How can he with any consistency maintain that the French influence might not have caused the native s-plural to become universal?

Prof. Napier leans upon a principle which fails him, and which in any case of exact reasoning must fail anyone who leans on it, because it is faulty. I know it is current, and I know there have been situations in history to which it might be applied with proximate accuracy; but I think it is not applicable to the situation now under discussion. Conquered people dislike the language of their conquerors. They prefer their own native words wherever choice is free, and so much is in their power; but the influence of form and sense is too subtle to be resisted—it is unnoticed and unsuspected, and therefore cannot be guarded against. For these reasons I cannot admit (in the particular case before us) that the proportion of loan-words may be taken as a trustworthy gauge of the amount of influence exercised by one language on the other.

That our s-plurality received a strong impulse from French, seems to me to be not so much a matter of inference from constructive reasonings, as a fact patent and visible to the naked eye on the pages of the Chronicle. I declare myself unable to pass from the plurals of the time of the Norman Conquest to those of sixty years later, and not feel that the change must be due to an external cause.

J. EARLE.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE Hayden Medal—founded by the widow of the late Prof. F. V. Hayden, "for the best publication, exploration, discovery, or research in the sciences of geology and palaeontology"—has been awarded by the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia to Prof. Huxley. The previous recipients of the medal have been Prof. J. Hall, Prof. E. D. Cope, and Prof. E. Suess.

MR. H. O. FORBES has been appointed director of the Liverpool Museum.

LORD RAYLEIGH, professor of natural philosophy at the Royal Institution, will begin, next Saturday, a course of six lectures on "Light, with special reference to the Optical Discoveries of Newton."

THE annual general meeting of the Physical Society will be held on Friday next, when Mr. O. G. Jones is to read a paper on "The Viscosity of Liquids."

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE new number of the Journal of Hellenic Studies (Macmillans) contains an interesting literary discovery. A Dutch naval officer, Mr. H. Van Assendelft de Coningh, acquired at Palmyra, in 1881, a set of wax tablets, which, when examined recently by Dr. D. G. Hesselning, of Leiden University, were discovered to contain portions of the text of fourteen of the Fables of Babrius. Dr. Hesselning has now published the text, with photographic facsimiles of all the tablets. Of the fourteen fables four have hitherto been known only in prose paraphrases; of the rest, Dr. Hesselning's opinion is that they are a sadly corrupted copy of an original which was superior in many respects to the Athoan and Vatican codices. The copy was evidently a mere schoolboy's exercise, and is full of mistakes, which in some cases reduce the text to prose; but the date of the tablets makes their evidence valuable wherever it is available. They are assigned on palaeographical and historical grounds (Palmyra was destroyed in A.D. 273) to the third century; and as the best authorities concur in placing Babrius in the early part of that century, the tablets carry us back very nearly to the age of the author. Among the remaining contents of the Journal, special mention may be made of Mr. J. G. Frazer's article contesting Dr. Dörpfeld's theory of the rebuilding of the pre-Persian temple on the Acropolis, and Mr. A. J. Evans's interesting account of a Mykenaeen treasure from Aegina, now in the British Museum. Prof. Percy Gardner disputes the restoration of the chariot group of the Mausoleum recently adopted in the Mausoleum room at the British Museum. Mr. A. G. Bather continues his description of the bronze fragments of the Acropolis, and discusses the plan of the Thersilion at Megalopolis; Mr. V. W. Yorke describes some new fragments of the balustrade of Athena Niké, discovered by himself; and Mr. W. J. Woodhouse prints a number of inscriptions from Aetolia.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

ELIZABETHIAN.—Wednesday, Jan. 10.)

F. ROGERS, Esq., in the chair.—Mr. A. H. Bullen read a paper on "William Browne, of Tavistock." Browne was born at Tavistock about 1591; but it was impossible to fix the exact date, as the registers for that year are lost. He was connected with several old Devonshire families, particularly the Browns in and around Eyelash. He was educated in Devonshire, proceeded to Exeter College, Oxford, Clifford's Inn, and the Inner Temple, and was in 1615 appointed pursuant to the Courts of Liveries. He was twice married, his first wife dying in 1614. Mr. Bullen supplied some new information regarding his second wife, who was named Timothy, and was second daughter of Sir Thomas Eversfield. Browne married her in 1628, after an engagement of thirteen years; but their only issue was two children, both of whom died in infancy. In 1611 Browne issued the first book of the Britannia's Pastorals, dedicating it to Lord Zouch, and including several commendatory poems from Selden, Drayton, Christopher Brooke and others. The second book was published in 1616, was dedicated to William Lord Herbert, and contained congratulatory poems from Davies, Wither, and Ben Jonson. The third part of the Britannia's Pastorals did not appear until 1852, when it was printed for the Percy Society from the original MS. Notable among his other works are "The Shepherd's Pipe," two books only of which were published by him, the Inner Temple Masque, and the celebrated Drinking Song alluded to in Poor Robin's Almonack (1694), and first printed from the Lansdowne MS. by Mr. Hazlitt, in 1867. His ballad on Lydford still lingers on the country-side, and is mentioned as early as 1630 in Westcott's Devonshire as being "sung by every travelling fiddler." Lydford law is to Browne like Jedburgh justice. The songs "Shall I tell you whom I love" and "Venus by Adonis's side" are well known. In 1647 appeared a translation of Le Roy's History of Polixander by one William Browne; but there is no evidence to show whether he was the present author. Browne, after his second marriage, settled near Betchworth and Dorking, apparently with a good competence, and died in or about 1645; but there is no trace of his death or burial in the Surrey registers. He may have been buried at Tavistock, as an entry in the Tavistock register would seem to show. The bulk of Browne's poetry was probably written in youth or in very early manhood. It would be a hopeless task to attempt to disentangle the plot of the Britannia's Pastorals, but this very intricacy is one of the charms of the poem. Walpole would, with his eighteenth century standard of judgment, have hardly included it among his "lounching books"; but the sympathetic reader has not far to travel before he lights upon some beautiful and striking passage. The brooks and birds babble and twitter in its printed page not less lively than in that western paradise. His shepherds and shepherdesses sing like the shepherd in the Arcadia, as though they would never grow old. We must not look to Browne for the energy and turbulence we find in the great poets, but in him we shall find a true poet of sweet and pleasant pastoral. On the other hand, his fondness for simple, homely images led him sometimes into sheer puerility and a hunting after the most far-fetched and outrageous conceits. Browne's poems have attracted admirers both among the poets of his day and the poets of our own. Sidney and Spenser were his masters; and the "well-languaged David," Michael Drayton, Ben Jonson, Christopher Brooke, and even John Milton wrote eulogies of his verse. To Nathaniel Carpenter, in his Worthies of Devonshire, there were "few such swans as he nowadays for harmony." From this Wood has conjectured that Browne had written a history of English poetry which was lost; but at most it can only be supposed that such a thing had been suggested by Browne. Keats and Mrs. Browning have, among modern poets, yielded Browne their meed of praise. Most of his days were spent at Wilton with the Herberts, that home of the poets; and in all probability the Elegy on the Countess of Pembroke, beginning "Underneath this marble hearse," &c., was written by Browne. Whalley, in the middle of the eighteenth century, was the first to attribute it to Ben Jonson, because it had been "universally assigned" to him. On the other hand, there is a second sextain not usually printed which was written by Browne; and Browne himself, in his elegy on Charles Lord Herbert of Cardiff and Shurland, claims the authorship in these words:—

"And since my weak and saddest verse
Was worthy thought thy grandam's hearse,
Accept of this."

Aubrey prior to Wood gave the elegy to Browne in his Natural History of Wiltshire—"made by Mr. Browne who wrote the Pastorals." It was first printed by Osborne in 1658, and appears in the Trinity College Dublin MS. signed William Browne. It was also included in the MS. of Poems of William Earl of Pembroke, the Countess's son. The old poet that sang so lustily the praises of Devonshire is yet beloved on the banks of the Tavy and the Plym.—A discussion was opened by Mr. Frederick Rogers, and continued by Messrs. Frank Payne, W. H. Cowham, James Ernest Baker, and A. H. Bullen.

ASIATIC.—(Tuesday, Jan. 16)

LORD REAY, president, in the chair.—Miss C. A. Foley read a paper on "The Psychological Basis of Buddhist Ethics in the Sixth Century B.C., as illustrated by the Cūla-Vedalla Sutta." This, the "Little Miscellaneous Discourse," is contained in the Majjhima Nikāya, one of the books in the second Pitaka of the Buddhist canon. It consists of a dialogue between Visākha, treasurer to King Bimbisāra, and Dhammadinnā his wife, from whom he had separated himself when converted by Gotama, although he remained a lay disciple. She, emulating her husband's example, but going further, had joined the Buddhist order and attained Arāhantship. Visākha, anxious to learn the state of her mind on her return (for missionary purposes) to his neighbourhood, interviews her by putting a number of questions on more or less knotty points of Buddhist psychology, ethics, and metaphysics. She, answering with ready discernment, finally refers him to Gotama, who sanctions all she has said as equivalent to his own teaching, and proclaims her first among the teachers in his train. Such is the vision given in the Apadāna in Dhammapala's Commentary on the Therīgāthā and in Buddhaghosha's Commentaries on the Anguttara Nikāya and on the Majjhima Nikāya. The thirty-three questions put to Dhammadinnā may be grouped thus: Seven on individuality or personality in its relation to desire, together with current theories on the location of the principle of individuality or soul; four on the eight-fold path of virtuous conduct; three on the Saṅkhāras; five on the psychology of religious hypnotics; seven on the modes of feeling their interrelations and connexion with immoral bias; seven on mental dispositions as correlated, and Nirvāna as unrelated. The psychological groundwork of character was by the Buddhist conceived as an aggregate of five factors—visible form, feeling, sense, perception, the Saṅkhāras, and conception of thought. Will does not appear as a prime factor; but as desire or craving is by Dhammadinnā viewed as a resultant of these five Skandhas tending to the persistence of the organic aggregate or individuality. The theories of soul in body, body in soul and the like, characterising Western thought, are all anticipated in the views combated by Gotama who, while opposing in his first sermon the localisation of soul, the Ego, in any one of the five Skandhas, on grounds which seem to identify the Ego with Will, does not there or elsewhere admit the existence of a noumenal principle at all. Still less is the question of free will admitted in Buddhist ethics, nor that of a distinct moral faculty or conscience, nor are the springs of action viewed from the modern standpoint. The psychology of emotion is treated of, under analysis of feeling into pleasurable, painful, and neutral (feeling which is neither pleasurable nor painful). The complex presentation of these, and the intellectual import of the last as discussed by Visākha and Dhammadinnā, show some parallelism with modern analyses of the same subject by such experts as Prof. Bain, Sully, Höffding, and James.

METEOROLOGICAL.—(Annual Meeting, Wednesday, Jan. 17.)

DR. C. THEODORE WILLIAMS, president, in the chair.—The council, in their report, stated that the society had made steady and uninterrupted progress during the year, there being an increase in the number of fellows, and the balance of income over expenditure being greater than in 1892. They also reported that Dr. C. Theodore Williams, previous to vacating the office of president, had expressed a desire for the formation of a fund for carrying out experiments and observations in meteorology, and that he had generously presented to the society the sum of £100 to form the nucleus of a research fund.—Dr. C. Theodore Williams, in his valedictory address, gave an account of the climate of Southern California, which he made most interesting by exhibiting a number of lantern slides. In the autumn of 1892 Dr. Williams visited this favoured region, chiefly with a view of investigating its present and future resources, and its suitability for invalids. After describing the entrance into California from Utah and Nevada, the general geography, and the mountain ranges, he pointed out that the mountain shelter is tolerably complete, and that the protected area consists of (1) valleys, chiefly running into the coast range from the sea and rising to various elevations, such as the fertile San Fernando and San Gabriel valleys; or else (2) more or less extensive plains as those of Santa Ana and San Jacinto. Southern California is subdivided into two portions, eastern and western, by the Sierra Nevada and its spurs, the San Gabriel and San Bernardino mountains. The climate of the eastern portion, which is an arid region, is very dry, very hot in summer and moderate in winter. The climate of the Western portion has three important factors, viz (1) Its southern latitude; (2) the influence of the Pacific Ocean, and especially of the Kuro Suvo current, which exercises a similar warming and equalising influence on the Pacific coast of North America as the Gulf Stream does on the western coasts of the British Isles and Norway; and (3) the influence of mountain ranges, affording protection from northerly and easterly blasts, and also condensing the moisture from the vapour-laden winds blowing from the Pacific. Dr. Williams then gave particulars as to the temperature and rainfall at Los Angeles, San Diego, Santa Barbara, and Riverside. From these it appears that the climate of Southern California is warm and temperate, and on the whole equable, with more moisture than that of Colorado; and that it is a climate which would allow of much outdoor life all the year round. The president next described the effect of the climate on vegetation, and showed what results had been obtained by diligent watering and gardening in this beautiful region. Wine and brandy are made in South California, but oranges and lemons are the leading crops, varied with guavas, pineapples, dates, almonds, figs, olives, apricots, plums, and vegetables. On higher land apples, pears, and cherries bear well, and our English summer small fruit is also grown; while strawberries ripen all the year round, and are plentiful, except in July and August. Dr. Williams concluded by saying that many an invalid has regained vigour and health, as well as secured a competence, in the sunny atmosphere of Southern California.—Mr. R. Inwards was elected president for the ensuing year.

ARI-STOTELIAN.—(Monday, Jan. 22.)

SHADWORTH H. HEDGSON, Esq., president, in the chair.—Mr. A. Bontwood read a paper on "The Ethical Interpretation of Life and Nature." The aim of the writer was to show that it is impossible for philosophy to give such an interpretation of life and nature as shall satisfy the facts of the moral consciousness, and justify the effort after the moral ideal, unless it passes beyond the domain of pure ethics and becomes distinctively religious. This does not imply that philosophy is to be controlled by theological dogmas arbitrarily introduced from a source of which philosophy cannot take cognisance, but that the appeal to experience, which all philosophy is bound to make, ought to be widened so as to make it include that particular form of experience which is the ground of religion. The main outlines of such a philosophy were sketched in some detail, and the paper concluded with a reference to St. Thomas Aquinas as the philosopher who had most nearly realised the ideal.—A discussion followed.

FINE ART.

OLD MASTERS AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

III.

THIS is not exactly a Sir Joshua year, although his name appears no less than eleven times in the catalogue, and most phases of his art are represented. No one work is shown which reaches the very best that the artist could do in the particular style of which it is an instance. The first canvas in order of date would appear to be the "Portraits of Lady Lepell Phipps and her Son" (S. G. Joseph, Esq.), painted about 1758. There is some questionable drawing in the hands; but the work, though faded, has great charm, and that distinction, so free from self-consciousness, in which the earlier time has the advantage of the later. The "Boy with a Bunch of Grapes" (Sir Charles Tennant) is rich in colour, and unusually sound in condition, but not one of the most enchanting of Sir Joshua's performances of this special class. It is commendably free from the impossible archness of some, but has not the irresistible human quality which delights us in others. The "Portrait of Sir Geoffrey Amherst" (Earl Amherst) was one of four pictures sent to the Incorporated Society in 1766, another being the famous full-length of the Marquis of Granby standing by his horse. The hero of the Canadian campaigns is in appearance just one of those men of action, one of those sturdy, simple Britons, in depicting whom Reynolds had no rival among his contemporaries or in his century. Though from a purely pictorial point of view open to criticism—for the figure is not happily placed in relation to its background or to the canvas generally—it may take rank with, though after, the noble "Lord Heathfield," which is one of Reynolds's latest and yet most vigorous productions of the same order. In striking contrast with this is the "Portrait of the Marquis of Tavistock" (W. Agnew, Esq.), a half-length representing the unfortunate young nobleman who married Sir Joshua's sitter and friend Lady Elizabeth Keppel, and was killed out hunting but a few months after this picture was painted. Not only the conception but the technique is here different: a gentle, manly nature, still further refined by high breeding, is happily suggested, and the handling, the colour, are well adapted to give expression to the painter's thought. It would be interesting to know whether this likeness (painted in 1766) was actually finished before Lord Tavistock's death in March, 1767. So singular is the expression of sadness and disquiet in the eyes of the man upon whom fortune had apparently showered all she had to give, that, if not an afterthought, it must appear a strange premonition—a foreboding on the part of the sitter or unconscious divination on that of the painter. Out of a series of large imposing full-lengths of fashionable ladies we select the most pleasing and most popular, the "Portrait of Mrs. Carnac (Lady Wallace)." This picture, which belongs to the same class as those typical decorative performances, "Georgiana, Duchess of Devonshire," and "The Duchess of Rutland," depicts a coldly gracious, smiling, and rather impersonal beauty, wearing white, gold-embroidered robes and coloured plumes. It is female portraits of this type that cause us to understand how it was that Reynolds's sitters occasionally cried out at the lack of resemblance in their counterfeit presentments.

The series of Gainsboroughs is a very interesting one, and in more than one instance shows him at his best. The "Page" (C. J. Wertheimer, Esq.) is the brilliant sketch of a handsome youth—a sort of "Blue Boy" en herbe, but more affected in attitude and less sympathetic in mien. The "Portrait of Miss Haverfield" is the full length of a child fronting the spectator, as she ties the strings of a black cloak worn over a white satin dress. Technically the picture is a brilliant exercise, but as a portrait it lacks the sympathy that Reynolds would, without effort, have been able to impart to such a subject. The "Portrait of the Hon. Mrs. P. Thicknesse" (C. J. Wertheimer, Esq.) is especially interesting as a comparatively early work, painted while the painter was still the chief portraitist of Bath, and as presenting the wife of his patron and friend, Capt. Philip Thicknesse. The conception is as vivacious and characteristic as can well be imagined; but it is obscured rather than helped by the unusual profusion of accessories—the ornate greyish-white gown with multitudinous flounces, the musical instruments, the music books. There is in the rendering of the flesh a curious glassiness, unusual to this degree even in early works, which may have been aggravated by cleaning. The "Portrait of Charles Frederick Abel" (C. J. Wertheimer, Esq.) is a masterpiece of characterisation and vitality, but the colour is not combined into the faultless harmony for which we look in a mature Gainsborough. On the knee of the then famous musician rests his viol di gamba, while under the chair is curled up his pet Pomeranian dog, so often and so superbly painted by the artist. The "Pomeranian Dog and Puppy," which was No. 113 in the Gainsborough exhibition at the Grosvenor Gallery, gives Abel's pets again in quite incomparable fashion. The master says, however, his last word as a painter in the exquisite "Mrs. Robinson," lent by Lady Wallace, from Manchester House. The fair Perdita, exquisitely dressed, delicately rouged, is seated under a tree; and, mounted by her side, watches, motionless yet eager and panting, another and more wonderful Pomeranian—probably this time the artist's own dog "Fox." The pearly harmony of delicate, half-effaced tones, woven together so as to make a general tone, strong as well as beautiful in its silver radiance, is one in which Gainsborough has never been surpassed.

Delicate and distinguished, but not very strong or personal, is the "Portrait of Master Smith" (Lord Burton) by Francis Cotes, a painter whose quiet, reserved charm has not yet met with the full appreciation which it deserves. As a painter of high-bred Englishwomen, without company airs and graces, or self-consciousness of any kind, he is entitled to a place of his own, even by the side of the greatest.

Best of the Romneys on the present occasion is not the "Lady Hamilton as Sensibility," which is hardly one of the most inspired portraits of the painter's chief divinity, but the brilliant unfinished study "A Harrow Gipsy" (Mrs. Tidswell). The evident enjoyment with which this is painted, the vitality which it still retains, give the piece a rather exceptional character, and lead us to wish that Romney had oftener painted in this fashion, though in doing so he had been compelled to sacrifice something of his classic repose and deliberate grace.

One of the jewels of English landscape art is "The Convent: Twilight" (Corporation of Glasgow), a work such as, unpretending as it is, none of the unfortunate master's contemporaries—certainly not the more appreciated Gainsborough—could have produced. This simple view of a convent surrounded by woods, standing out under the mysterious light of a clear evening sky, is a composition of classic beauty and most reposeful charm. The mystery and the melancholy are of the essence of the subject, and not violently imported into it. Here Wilson leans neither on Claude nor on any great artist, but is entirely himself.

This is emphatically an exhibition in which to see and study Turner: the greatest of modern landscape painters has rarely been so nobly represented as an oil painter. "The Trosachs" (James Orrock, Esq.) is a beautiful example of his first manner, sober in colour, but silver with a tremulous grey light: here the dominant note is that solemn quiet which was peculiar to Alexander Cozens; and the influence of Wilson, too, may we think be traced. In "Newark Abbey on the Wey" (same collection), nothing could well be lovelier than the hue of vanishing sunset which still suffuses the rapidly darkening scene; but the composition suffers terribly from the abundance of heterogeneous elements which the painter has not succeeded in fusing into an harmonious whole. The great "Wreck of the 'Minotaur'" (Earl of Yarborough) has very recently been before the public—at the last exhibition at the Guildhall. It is a magnificent show-piece, more imposing in its amplitude and dramatic force than convincing or based on literal truth. Of the Petworth Turners, some have been seen here but a short time ago; but they are so fine and, for the most part, in such fine condition, that their re-appearance is most welcome. The least successful as compositions are the two familiar "Views in the Park, Petworth," while the noblest of the series is "Chichester Canal: Sunset." Turner has not poetised the scene in his usual fashion, by expanding and distorting it so as to express the phase of sentiment of the moment; he has merely steeped it in the ruddy gold of sunset, leaving its simple, quiet beauty undisturbed. The result is a masterpiece, which may favourably compare even with his highest flights of fancy; Nature thus revealed is so infinitely more beautiful than anything that even a Turner can put in her place. As fresh as when it came from the painter's easel is "The Chain Pier, Brighton" (same collection), in which the sky is brightness itself, the wave-modelling wonderfully elaborate, and the swirling movement of the water suggested with consummate skill. It is curious that our two greatest masters of landscape, Turner and Constable, have both done wonders with this most prosaic of subjects, from which artists less sure of themselves might have shrunk.

Etty's "Pluto and Proserpine" (John Rhodes, Esq.) is a typical example of the merits and defects of this artist. Few of our countrymen have been gifted with greater natural capabilities as regards the technical side of the painter's art than Etty: he had the eye of the colourist, the breadth and sweep, the ease of handling, of the true painter. But how incapable he is of building up out of his models and accessories a coherent dramatic whole, of getting away from the atmosphere of the studio and the properties of stage—or, rather, in this instance, the circus! How strongly the taint of vulgarity clings to the whole thing!

George Mason's "Young Anglers" is a true English idyll, in which earth and sky and the human beings enframed in the landscape appear to be inevitably part of one whole. Especially masterly is the group of little rustics fishing in the clear stream, which mirrors the bright yet veiled sky. The lover of Frederick Walker approaches with a certain agitation this typical work of his, "The Plough," on its reappearance here, wondering whether the impression it originally made will deepen or fade. That a certain disillusion is the result is not to be denied, although the charm of Walker's exquisite feeling for distinctively English nature is as penetrating as ever. This conception of the heavy purple-red cloud, resting seemingly on the brow of the cliff, and dominating by its mass the foreground, with the team ploughing in the warm, dim light of approaching evening, appears not less original than before. But the thing is rather attempted than really accomplished. Atmosphere and aerial gradation are, in a great measure, wanting; there is, in many places, a tangle of detail beautiful in itself, but unduly insisted upon; and the classicality of these frieze-like figures of the ploughmen and their team is not a true classicality legitimately evolved from a natural motive by elimination and generalisation, but an arbitrary classicality obtained at some sacrifice of life and truth. Walker, if he had lived, would doubtless have attained to a unity and breadth of style, to a naturalness, as well as grace, in the treatment of the human figure, which are the qualities lacking even in his best pictures. The true painter's touch is much more apparent in a fine landscape, "The End of the Harvest" (John Aitken, Esq.), from the brush of a Scottish painter, George Paul Chalmers, who died in 1878 at the early age of forty-two, and who has not up to the present time been so well remembered as, judging by this example, he deserves. Chalmers has not a tithe of Walker's poetic power or originality, but he triumphs over his material, while the more gifted artist is embarrassed and entangled in his own beautiful conceptions. These remarks, be it said by the way, are not suggested by anything that the two artists have in common, but chiefly by the fact that their landscapes just referred to are placed in immediate juxtaposition to each other.

It was a happy idea to bring together, as has been done in the Water-colour Room, a group of paintings, drawings, and designs by that gifted, yet mannered and incomplete, artist, Thomas Stothard. He was a born colourist, with rare gifts in the direction of decorative art, who flourished in the golden prime of the English school, yet did not perhaps live at the time when his peculiar gifts could obtain their fullest development. A sort of latter-day Watteau, with something of the poetry and charm of the original, he affects idylls of artificial sentimentality, scenes from the poets, reminiscences conscious and unconscious of the elder masters. He divines rather than learns some of the secrets of Venetian colour; and if he shares in the mannerism and technical defects of his time, he invests even his faults with a grace which renders his admirers loth to part with them. His finest technical achievement here is the "Diana Sleeping" (Isaac Falcke, Esq.), a Titianesque or rather Giorgionesque motive, painted, however, with a remarkable approach to the peculiar colour-harmonies of a Tintoret. One version of the famous "Canterbury Pilgrims" (Hallam Murray, Esq.) is here; and if we find it difficult to agree with those among his contemporaries who praised the extraordinary accuracy in the drawing of the horses, we may still admire the spirit and humour of the whole, the onward sweep of the gay cavalcade, the bright unpromising hues which so well suit the subject. Composed with unusual skill, and with less than the usual mannerism, is the large canvas "The Children in the Wood" (Sir Chas. Robinson). A charm of sprightliness and humour, with more dramatic power than appears in the oil paintings, is to be noted in the dainty water-colours, especially those dealing with theatrical subjects or illustrating novels. Among things of this kind, too numerous for mention, attention may be called to "Scenes from Clarissa Harlowe," "Scenes from the Spectator," and, above all, "Theatrical Characters," with portrait-studies of noted actors of the time in costume.

The Black and White Room is devoted to the exhibition of a replica set of illustrations to the Book of Job, executed by William Blake in 1821 for the late John Linnell. The discussion of these, as forming a separate and entirely distinct group, having little or nothing in common with the rest of the exhibition, we must reserve for a future occasion.

Gallery V. is devoted to a well-chosen selection from the works of the late John Pettie, who braves an ordeal which might have been deemed especially dangerous to his art with unlooked-for success. That art does not, it is true, appear less narrow than heretofore, or less artificial in its romanticism; but certain technical and other excellencies stand out more strongly than they did when the works were seen successively, and, therefore, without opportunity for comparison with one other. Pettie has breadth and vigour of execution, but no great solidity: strength of tone is attained sometimes at the expense of atmospheric truth. His light is, as a rule, neither frankly artificial nor really natural; his figures appear to circulate in a bright, vitreous medium rather than in true air. What is most curious and characteristic about his talent is that he lives almost wholly in a past of romantic drama—even melodrama. A modern man, in contact with modern humanity, and studying it closely enough for his special purposes, he never, except in portraiture, grapples with his own time, unless it is dressed up in the défroque of another period. What is really his rarest and most artistic quality is the singular truth, the power of suggestion, with which he can represent violent action, swift onward movement, the animal life of the human being in full vigour. Good instances of this are the vigorous "Tussle with a Highland Smuggler"; the study "Disbanded," showing a sinewy Highlander rapidly scaling a snow-covered hillside; and the duel-scene "To the Death," in which the watchful energy of two well-matched and desperate combatants, the muscular tension of their strong limbs, are given with rare truth and skill. Melodrama still, but melodrama of a much higher and more poetic order, is "The Chieftain's Candlesticks"—a legend of Montrose. On either side of the chieftain's chair, now for ever empty, are placed the mighty torchbearers, two magnificent Highlanders, bearing aloft flaming torches, as, with grief stamped on their noble features, they stand solemn and motionless as statues. A great command over varieties of facial expression is displayed in those too purely melodramatic productions "Terms to the Besieged" and "Treason." Genuine humour, of its kind, gives distinctiveness to that popular anecdotic piece, "Ho! ho! ho! Old Noll"; and artistic skill, enjoyable for itself, quite apart from the question of subject, charms us in the canvases called "Late" and "The Time and Place," both of them studies of young cavaliers in seventeenth-century costume.

CLAUDE PHILLIPS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BOTTICELLI'S "SPRING."

Hind Head: Jan. 27, 1894.

There is perhaps no great picture whose meaning has been so much debated as the Primavera or "Allegory of Spring," by Botticelli, in the Belle Arti at Florence. I believe I have been fortunate enough to decipher the real interpretation of this beautiful work; and I venture to lay my reading of its figures before those who are interested in early Tuscan art.

Let me begin, however, by quoting a few of the current explanations. Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcaselle are judiciously vague in their identifications.

"The scene," they say, "is a landscape of wood, orchard, and flowery meadow. A man with a winged helmet like a Mercury, scantily draped about the hips, with a sword at his side, and striking down fruit from a tree, offers to the spectator a youthful form in fair movement and proportion. Three females near him (the Graces?) dance on the greensward in the light folds of transparent veils; a fourth (Venus?) stands in rich attire in the centre of the ground; whilst, above them, the blind Cupid flies down with his lighted torch. On the right a flying genius, whose dress flutters in the wind, wafts a stream of air towards a female, in whose hand is a bow and from whose mouth sprigs of roses fall into the garment of a nymph at her side."

This is safe but indefinite; it commits the authors to nothing—and tells the student nothing either.

The invaluable Baedeker follows the commonly received interpretation—the one which appears to be traditional in Florence.

"On the left," he says, "Mercury and the Graces; Venus in the middle; and, on the right, Flora, with a personification of Fertility, and a god of wind."

Rossetti's well-known sonnet embodies essentially the same explanation. I quote the lines which bear upon this subject:

"What masque of what old wind-withered New Year

Honours this Lady? Flora, wanton-eyed
For birth, and with all flowrets praukt and pied:
Aurora, Zephyrus, with mutual cheer
Of clasp and kiss: the Graces circling near,
'Neath bower-linked arch of white arms glorified:

And with those feathered feet which hovering glide

O'er Spring's brief bloom, Hermes the har-binger."

As poetry, this is, of course, most beautiful: but as exegesis, it appears to me to be essentially erroneous. The real explanation, I take it, is as follows. I begin with the personage on the spectator's left.

This figure, described by Crowe and Cavalcaselle as "striking down fruit from a tree," is really engaged in dispelling a mass of clouds which occupy the extreme upper left-hand corner of the composition. These clouds are faint, but still quite distinguishable in the original painting, and are very well brought out in the chromolithographic reproduction by the Arundel Society. The figure bears in his hands a caduceus, with which he drives away the mists of winter; his feet are winged; I take him for Favonius. Probably the hint was derived from the familiar Horatian line, "Solvitur acris hiems grata vice veris et Favoni."

The next three figures are admitted on all hands to be the Graces; the "Gratiæ decentes" of the same ode of Horace.

The central figure, commonly called Venus, is really Spring. She is represented as pregnant, because spring is the budding season of the year. Over her head hovers a winged Amor, with a fire-tipped dart, because "In the spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love." But I earnestly hope no Smelfungus will accuse me on this account of imagining that Botticelli was in the habit of reading Tennyson.

It is clearly the three figures on the right, however, which form the crux of the composition; and by its success in dealing with them any attempted interpretation must stand or fall. For a long time they puzzled me. At last, one day, as I sat in front of the picture, it came upon me with a flash; they are the three spring months, March, April, May, appropriately represented by allegorical figures.

The year begins, of course, after the old fashion, with March, to the extreme right of the composition. He is cold and blue; his limbs are scantily draped; his movements are hurried; where he passes through the orange-grove, the trees of the background, elsewhere quite still, are bent and bowed before him. He blows a gust of wind from his puffed-out mouth upon April, just in front of him.

April, though still hasty, is less rapid than March. She is draped, but lightly, from head to foot. Her upper half is clad in fleecy white cloud; her lower limbs are girt by pale blue sky—a most characteristic piece of symbolism. Moreover, the upper portion of her thin robe is plain white; the lower is dappled with green herbs, just sprouting, but not yet in blossom. This seems to indicate the first half of April as still wintry, while the second half is the time of reviving vegetation. But from April's mouth, under the breath of March, flowers are issuing, which drop into the lap of May in front of her. This would seem to suggest that "March winds and April showers, Bring forth May flowers."

I cannot learn whether there exists any Tuscan equivalent for this our English proverb; but if some correspondent can supply that missing link, I shall be glad to hear from him.

April seems as if escaping from the hands of March into the arms of May. It is possible that the way March clutches her retiring figure may enclose an allusion to the old idea that March borrows three days from April.

Last of all we have May herself, erect and smiling, clad from head to foot in a flowery robe, and with flowers springing more abundantly beneath her heel than anywhere else in the dappled foreground.

The contrast between the three months is very striking—March, boisterous and blustering; April, gentle and shrinking; May, sedate and quiet—March, hurrying rapidly; April, swift, but not flurried; May, calm and queen-like—March, cold and almost nude; April, warmer and lightly draped; May, fully clad in a rich robe of bloom, and with her lap full of posies—most like double anemones. (But if so, Botticelli errs in giving them a green calyx.) Every touch, I believe, has its allegorical meaning.

It almost looks as if this picture were one of four panels representing the Four Seasons; and I would venture to suggest that each most probably contained in the centre the season it represented—Spring, Summer, Autumn, or Winter; that on one side stood the three months which compose each season; and that the other may have been filled by appropriate accessory figures, like the Graces and Favonius. It also seems to me likely that the Primavera occupied the first place on the wall to the right of the entrance door, so that the figure of March greeted the spectator on entering. After it may have come Summer, probably with its three component months also on the right, and allegorical figures to the left of the composition. These two pictures may have occupied the right-hand wall of the room; the two others may have faced them on the left—with the component months at the opposite side, as if retreating. For example, Winter might have had on the right allegorical figures (say Boreas and Satyrs); and on the left, as if retiring towards the door, the successive figures of December, January, and February.

Did Botticelli ever paint any more of the series, for Cosimo de' Medici's villa at Castello, or elsewhere? Has any fragment of any companion piece survived? The general tone of the composition in the Primavera closely resembles Botticelli's "Birth of Venus," in the Uffizi, also from the Castello villa. Has this picture anything to do with the series of the Seasons?

The explanation of the Primavera here suggested seems to me to be so clear that I can hardly believe it has not hitherto struck some other observer. Yet I cannot find a hint of it in any book at my disposal. If it is not novel, I apologise for publishing it: my excuse must be that, so far as I am concerned, it is at least original. I have detailed my identification of the figures to several persons interested in the picture, both artists and men of letters, and found in every case it was alike new to them and accepted by them as a satisfactory interpretation. Hence I am emboldened to suggest it thus publicly for the opinion of experts.

GRANT ALLEN.

THREATENED DESTRUCTION OF THE TEMPLE OF PHILAE.

Strathern House, Crief, N.B.: Jan. 31, 1894.

I notice that the projects for the construction of reservoirs in the Nile have been completed, and that the Under Secretary for Public Works in Egypt admits that the Aswân Shallâl or Cataract site is the best and most economical of those proposed. He recognises the objection caused by the unavoidable inundation of the temple at Philae, but suggests that the temple might be removed, and built on the adjacent island.

I would earnestly call the attention of the archaeological world to this "unavoidable" act of vandalism. It is not enough to say that a committee of three engineers from England, France, and Italy has been appointed to study the question: they were not sent in the interests of art, but to study the stability of the great dam. I do not wish for a moment to suggest that these three eminent hydraulic engineers are themselves vandals. Yet it is well known that engineers, when swayed by the interests of their calling, do not take into consideration the art side of the question; and it is not to them that we would naturally turn when we wish to preserve a world-famous monument, but to men of taste and archaeological knowledge. I hope that a protest will be lodged in the proper quarter against this act, which will cast a slur on the English in Egypt.

Though the expense would, no doubt, be greater, I am still of opinion that water held back up to the plinth of the temple of Philae, supplemented by another dam higher up the river, would accomplish what is wanted in the way of supply. Two dams will be much safer than one, and the celebrated temple will be spared.

JUSTIN C. ROSS

(Late Inspector-General of Irrigation Egypt).

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

The following exhibitions open next week: the thirty-third annual exhibition of the Glasgow Institute of the Fine Arts; a loan collection of drawings by modern Dutch masters—including Josef Israels, James Maris, A. Mauve, and Bosboom—at the galleries of Messrs. Arthur Tooth & Sons, in the Haymarket; and a collection of Japanese lacquer and metal work, at the Burlington Fine Arts Club, in Savile-row, which will remain on view until the end of March.

VISCOUNT DILLON has been appointed a trustee of the National Portrait Gallery, in the room of the Hon. Edward Stanhope.

LAST Saturday (January 27) was the seventieth anniversary of the birth of Josef Israels, upon whom the Queen Regent of the Netherlands has conferred the newly founded order of Orange Nassau.

EVERYONE knows how much Méryon saw—and made the student of his etchings see—in that particular devil, outside Notre Dame, which bears the name of "Le Stryge," "Cruelty, list, hypocrisy"—these were but a part of the vices which the greatest imaginative artist in pure "black and white" whom we have had since Dürer, managed to read into, or managed to find in, the demon of stone that gazes and gloats over Paris. The attentions of Mr. Pennell, in the series of clever pen drawings which he shows at Mr. Dunthorne's, have not been concentrated altogether upon Méryon's favourite fiend. Mr. Pennell's wider sympathies have embraced many devils. Yet he has not neglected this ever living and potent one that fascinated Méryon, almost as much as did the exquisite beauty of the main lines of the great church. And, like the artist who has preceded him—except that in the slang of the moment, he has "done one better"—Mr. Pennell, an admirable draughtsman with not the most flexible of instruments, has taken note, in many of his drawings, of the Paris that lies below and beyond the devils of Notre Dame. The drawings are to a great extent original in method as well as interesting in theme; and for a while they reconcile us to some delay in the publication of those etchings which Messrs. Bousso, Valadon & Co. some time since announced as "in leisurely preparation."

AT the Goupil Gallery there is on view, for a while, the really fine collection of Japanese prints which was formed by that interesting critic and agreeable connoisseur, M. Théodore Duret. There is already, we suspect, a little abatement in the rage with which, but a few years ago, everything Japanese was sought for; but if the collector has become more discriminating, and knows that to much of Japanese production there cannot be accorded that long life and never-failing attractiveness which belongs to Classic and Renaissance design—that much of it, indeed, is as surely doomed to die as the work of the schools of Blake and the Pre-Raphaelites—that is only another reason for appreciating those finer examples of what the Japanese really did admirably well, in which this collection distinctly abounds. All the best masters of Japanese engraving in colours are well represented at the Goupil Gallery, where Hokusai rubs shoulders with Utamaro, and Kiyonaga faces Toyokuni.

THE STAGE.

STAGE NOTES.

ARGUMENTS for alterations in the laws of the land—the marriage laws included—are, as we know, often feebly based upon individual cases, with a supposed grievance. This is nearly always a mistake: the pleas indeed, when so based, can scarcely expect to be cogent. But in Mr. Gattie's new play, "The Transgressor," at the Court, even the individual instance is singularly ill-chosen. If ever a man deserved to be set free from the tie of marriage, by reason of his wife's apparently lasting insanity, it certainly is not the gentleman who bears the name of Langley in the piece at the Court Theatre. Sylvia, who in the lifetime of Langley's wife, he falsely married, is, when she discovers the facts, willing to remain with him in her true office as his mistress—which may be a piece of self-denial on her part, but which is a good deal more likely to be one of the very numerous cases of the subtle hypocrisy of self-indulgence sailing under the colours of self-denial. Whichever it is, it is no argument for the relaxation of the marriage law as it stands to-day. The polemical drama, to be successful, must be conducted with greater strength. Only emasculate men and undesirably passionate or sentimental women can really be affected by pleas like these. Mr. Gattie has done his best, no doubt; and in the future we believe it likely he will do better. Meanwhile, he must be thankful to Miss Olga Nethersole—who, since her very first appearance in "The Dean's Daughter," we think, has failed in nothing—for giving whatever vitality it has to the present performance at the Court. Certainly Mr. Gattie may be credited with having provided the lady with a strong part, though not a wholly sympathetic one. But—just Heavens!—what a use she makes of it! with a performance refined yet forcible, expressive yet restrained! Miss Nethersole is an artist, and a young woman who, by her work, does justice to her gifts. She is keenly and immediately intelligent; and her personality has what the great Aimée Desclées had, a quarter of a century ago—mobility not too obvious, and yet infinitely varied. May she rise to the heights of that most subtle mistress of her art! She gives fair promise of doing so.

THE Playgoers Club, in its festivity of last Sunday evening, must have had a good time of it. The speech of Mr. Pinero was serious and humane, as well as witty. The speech of Mr. Tree—excellently delivered, as we cannot doubt—had real, if somewhat heavily loaded humour. The speeches of Mr. Jope-Slade, the president—a valued dramatic critic, unreported, alas! in the only morning paper we had access to—are certain to have constituted admirable instances of government by epigram. And the Playgoers Club deserved all these privileges; for though it can scarcely avoid numbering among its members some who seek at its meetings an outlet for opinions not elsewhere smiled upon, it is, in the main, broad and sensible in its sympathies, and has made itself a very substantial factor in the London theatre-going life of the period.

MUSIC.

MUSIC NOTES.

THREE of Shakspeare's Sonnets (Nos. 29, 99, and 18), set to music by Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, were sung at the last Monday Popular Concert. The composer was in serious mood when he selected these poems, which will bear with no trifling. He has endeavoured throughout to accentuate, and in a dignified manner, the spirit of the words. Of the three, the middle one, "The Forward Violet," seems to have best inspired him. The interpreter, Mr. A. Oswald, sang carefully and intelligently, but his voice was not sufficiently sympathetic. The accompanist, Mr. H. Bird, deserves a word of praise, although an orchestra were needed to reveal the full meaning of the music. A pleasing "Highland Ballad," for violin, also by Dr. Mackenzie, was charmingly played by Lady Hallé; here again the pianoforte, substituted for the original orchestral accompaniment, proved unsatisfactory. Mr. L. Borwick played the complete set of Schumann's "Fantasiestücke" (Op. 12). His tone was somewhat cold in the first two numbers, but the reading of the rest was admirable, as regards both technique and feeling. Mr. Borwick attracts by his simple and earnest manner, and his resolute determination to refuse the encore deserves praise. The performance of Brahms's Quintet in G (Op. 111), under the direction of Lady Hallé, was extremely fine, especially in the two middle movements; the work represents the composer in one of his ripest moods. The programme concluded with Beethoven's Sonata in A (Op. 12, No. 2) for pianoforte and violin, to which Mr. Borwick and Lady Hallé rendered full justice.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON'S LIST.

A SEVENTH and CHEAPER EDITION of MR. FRANK-FORT MOORE'S New Novel, A GRAY EYE OR SO, in crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s., will be ready immediately.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

BY "IOTA."

A YELLOW ASTER. In 3 vols.

"The story is worked out—in the third volume especially—very much as Olive Schreiner would have handled it."—TO-DAY.

BY HELEN PROTHERO-LEWIS.

HOOKS of STEEL. In 3 vols.

By the Author of "A Lady of my Own," "Her Heart's Desire," &c.

"In constructive vigour and symmetry 'Hooks of Steel' is distinctly superior to that clever lady's previous works of fiction. Two delightful character sketches, Mathew Primavera and Felix Gray, are both masterpieces of delineation, drawn in the author's very best manner."—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

BY ADA CAMBRIDGE.

A MARRIAGE CEREMONY.

In 2 vols. By the Author of "A Little Minx," "Not All in Vain," &c.

BY THE HON. MRS. HENNIKER.

OUTLINES. By the Author of "Foiled," "Sir George," &c. Printed on antique laid paper, with Title-Page designed by J. Reffitt Oldfield, and a Photogravure Portrait of the Author. Dedicated to Thomas Hardy. In crown 8vo, gilt, 6s.

HUTCHINSON'S SELECT NOVELS.

In crown 8vo, handsome cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

The TRAGEDY of IDA NOBLE.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL. With 41 Illustrations by Everard Hopkins. [This week.

The Times says: "Mr. Clark Russell has never written a better story than 'The Tragedy of Ida Noble.'"

THE STORY of an AFRICAN FARM. By OLIVE SCHREINER.

[Seventy-third Thousand.

THE CUCKOO in the NEST.

By Mrs. OLIPHANT. With Illustrations by G. H. Edwards. [Sixth Edition this day.

The Athenaeum says: "Mrs. Oliphant's most successful novel."

SIXTH EDITION.

I FORBID the BANNS. By the Author of "A Gray Eye or So." In cloth gilt, 6s.

The Athenaeum says: "So racy and brilliant a novel."

SECOND EDITION.

DAIREEN. A South African Novel. By the Author of "A Gray Eye or So." In cloth gilt, 6s.

The Morning Post says: "'Daireen' is indeed a fine story, remarkably original and well constructed."

LONDON: HUTCHINSON &amp; CO., PATERNOSTER ROW

MESSRS. MACMILLAN &amp; CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

THE INCARNATION and COMMON LIFE. By Brooke Foss WESTCOTT, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop of Durham. Crown 8vo, 9s.

FISHERS of MEN. Addressed to the Diocese of Canterbury in his Third Visitation. By EDWARD WHITE, Archbishop. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE RESURRECTION of our LORD. By William Milligan, D.D., late Professor of Divinity and Biblical Criticism in the University of Aberdeen. Sixth Thousand. Crown 8vo, 5s.

THE MOTHER'S LEGACY to HER UNBORN CHILD. By ELIZABETH JOCELINE, Anno 1622. Reprinted from the Sixth Impression. With an Introduction by the LORD BISHOP of ROCHESTER. Crown 16mo, 4s. 6d.

PAIN, PLEASURE, and ÆSTHETICS: an Essay concerning the Psychology of Pain and Pleasure, with special reference to Æsthetics. By HENRY RUGGERS MARSHALL, M.A. 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

DAGONET the JESTER. By Malcolm Kingsley Macmillan. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

This story was published anonymously in 1886, but is now (1894) reissued under the author's name. ACADEMY.—"This book seems to us to be one of the most excellently conceived tales we are acquainted with. The story is very simple—just the love tale of a poor jester who has been expelled from his lord's castle, a blacksmith's son who becomes a scholar, and two simple good English maidens."

GUARDIAN.—"A strange dreamy fancy seems to have devised the history of 'Dagonet the Jester.'... Narrated in a quaint, musing fashion, as if by a man recalling events long past."

LADY WILLIAM. By Mrs. Oliphant. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"It is as restful, and soothing, and healthy as are certain sane-minded, even-tempered people met with all too seldom in everyday life."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"Mrs. Oliphant has proved once again, if proof were necessary, that when she chooses she is, among English story-tellers, easily first.... To read it is to feel that thrill of admiration for the genuine artist which is so rare."

BOOKMAN.—"Mrs. Oliphant has written no novel for a long time of keener interest and better workmanship."

MACMILLAN'S THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.—New Volume.

THE STORY of DICK. By Major Gambier Parry, Author of

"Reynell Taylor: a Biography," &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"A very wholesome story for the young.... The descriptions show a close and loving observation of the country."

SPECTATOR.—"This is a pretty character-study of boy-nature, illustrated throughout with descriptions worked, it is clear, with a very full and loving knowledge of rural life."

THE EVERSEY SERIES.—New Volumes.

PARTIAL PORTRAITS. By Henry James. Globe 8vo, 5s.THE COLLECTED WORKS of THOMAS HENRY HUXLEY,

F.R.S. In Monthly Volumes. Globe 8vo, 5s. each Volume.

Vol. V. SCIENCE and CHRISTIAN TRADITION.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO., LONDON.

ROBINSON &amp; CLEAVER, BELFAST,

Were awarded the Grand Diploma of Honour—Highest Award for Irish Damask Table Linen, Edinburgh, 1890
Two Prize Medals, Paris, 1889.

IRISH DAMASK TABLE AND HOUSE LINEN.

Fish Napkins, 2s. 11d. per doz. Dinner Napkins, 5s. 6d. per doz. Table Cloths, 2 yds. square, 2s. 11d. 2½ yds. by 3 yds., 5s. 11d. each. Kitchen Table Cloth, 11½d. each. Strong Huckaback Towels, 4s. 6d. per doz. Frilled Linen Pillow Cases, from 1s. 2½d. each.

IRISH CAMBRIC

Embroidered Handkerchiefs, in all the latest styles, from 1s. to 20s. each.

Children's Bordered, 1s. 3d. per doz.
Ladies' " 2s. 3d. "
Gentlemen's " 3s. 3d. "

Hemstitched:
Ladies', 2s. 9d. per doz.
Gents', 3s. 11d. "

POCKET HANDKERCHIEFS.

COLLARS: Ladies' and Children's 2-fold, 3s. 6d. per doz. Gents' 4-fold, 4s. 11d. per doz.
CUFFS for Ladies, Gentlemen, and Children, from 5s. 11d. per doz.

IRISH LINEN

Illustrated Price-Lists and Samples Post Free to any part of the World.

COLLARS, CUFFS, SHIRTS.

Best quality long-cloth Shirts, 4-fold Linen Fronts, 3s. 6d. half-dozen. (To measure 2s. extra.)

ROBINSON &amp; CLEAVER, BELFAST.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND &amp; CO.'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

and POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also, ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

A PENNY A DROP.

THE PURE OTTO OF ROSE

Coilet "Vinolia" Soap and "Vinolia" Coilet Powder

NOW COSTS A PENNY A DROP.

THROAT AND COUGH

Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use

EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUBUBES.

In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing.

Sold only in boxes, 7½d., and tins, 1s. 1½d., Labelled:
JAMES EPPS & CO., Ltd., Homœopathic Chemists, London

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S NEW BOOKS.

GREEK VASE PAINTINGS: a Selection of Examples, with Preface, Introductions, and Descriptions by J. E. HARRISON and D. S. MACCOLL. Size of the book, 18 by 14 inches, bound in strong cloth, 31s. 6d. [Just ready.]

JAPAN. By David Murray, Ph.D. (The 37th Volume of "The Story of the Nations.") Maps, Illustrations, and Index. Large crown 8vo, fancy cloth, gold lettered, 5s.
The Daily Chronicle says of this series: "Such a universal history as the series will present us with on its completion will be a possession such as no country can boast of."

THE MARQUIS d'ARGENSON: a Study in Criticism. Being the Stanhope Essay for 1893. By ARTHUR OGLE, Exhibitioner of Magdalen College. Crown 8vo, cloth or half-bound paper, price 6s.
"Sober without being bald, well balanced without being pedantic, and, though marked by much individuality, neither laboured nor mannered."—Glasgow Herald.

CATHARINE FURZE: a Novel. By Mark Rutherford. In 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 12s.
"A simple and touching story, told with rare skill and power."—Westminster Gazette.

RANDOM ROAMING, and other Papers. By Rev. Augustus Jessopp, D.D., Author of "Trials of a Country Parson," &c. Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.
"Random Roaming" is assured of a hearty welcome....Contact with Dr. Jessopp's mind is a wonderful stimulus to the love of the antiquities of our island, animate as well as inanimate."—Times.

THE HEBREW TWINS: a Vindication of God's Ways with Jacob and Esau. By the late Rev. SAMUEL COX, D.D., Author of "Expositions," &c. With Prefatory Memoir by his Wife. Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"Characterised by the well-known simplicity and clearness of Dr. Cox's style."—Scotsman.

BAMFORD'S PASSAGES in the LIFE of a RADICAL. Edited, with an Introduction, by Henry DUNCKLEY ("VERAX"). The New Volumes of "The Reformer's Book-Shelf." 2 vols., cloth, 3s. 6d. each. [Ready.]

BRIGHT CELESTIALS: the Chinaman at Home and Abroad. By John Coming Chinaman. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE NEW SPIRIT of the NATION; or, Ballads and Songs of the Writers of the Nation. Containing Songs and Ballads published since 1845. Edited, with an Introduction, by MARTIN MACDERMOTT. (The Third Volume of "The New Irish Library.") Small crown 8vo, paper, 1s.; cloth, 2s. [Just ready.]

THE HOUSE of LORDS: a Retrospect and a Forecast. By Thomas Alfred Spalding, LL.B., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.
"A painstaking and powerful indictment."—Daily Telegraph.

THE ROUSING of MRS. POTTER, and other Stories. By Jane Nelson. (The New Volume of "The Pseudonym Library.") 24mo, paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s. [Ready.]

LADY PERFECTA. From the Spanish of Perez Galdos, by Mary Wharton, Translator of "Marianela," from the same Author. (New Volume of "The Independent Novel Series.") Demy 12mo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

TWO SPHERES. By T. E. S. T. Revised and Enlarged throughout. 512 pages, full size, demy 8vo, cloth, 5s.
"Fully maintains its old reputation for learning and acuteness."—Scotsman.

INTRODUCTORY STUDIES in GREEK ART. Lectures delivered in the British Museum. By JANE E. HARRISON. Third Edition. Map and Illustrations. Cloth, 7s. 6d.
"The reader will constantly encounter serious and earnest thought, wide knowledge, and a vivid exposition."—Academy.

The CENTURY for FEBRUARY contains an illustrated Article on
LAURENS ALMA-TADEMA,
By ELLEN GOSSE. Price 1s. 4d.

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1136.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	PAGE
THE LIFE AND CORRESPONDENCE OF DEAN STANLEY, by A. W. BENN	117
AUGUSTINE BIRRELL'S NEW VOLUME OF ESSAYS, by J. A. NOBLE	119
WALISZEWSKI'S CATHERINE OF RUSSIA, by W. R. MORFILL	120
NEW NOVELS, by G. BARNETT SMITH	121
SOME BOOKS OF TRAVEL	123
NOTES AND NEWS	124
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	124
ORIGINAL VERSE: "BROUGHT BACK FROM THE SEA"	125
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	125
THE LIEDEBRANDSCHRIFT AT JENA	125
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	125
CORRESPONDENCE—
An Ancient Posture for Prayer, by Whitley Stokes; Dante and Alfraganus , by Paget Toynbee; The North Picthli Incriptions, by R. A. S. Macalister; The Name of Golspie, by Sir Herbert Maxwell; "Ere Orca," by T. A. Archer; The Book of Enoch, by the Rev. R. H. Charles; "Tennyson," by J. Cuming Walters	125
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	125
AVIANUS AND HIS IMITATORS, II, by Prof. ELLIS	125
CORRESPONDENCE—
The Fables of Avianus , by F. Jenkinson	129
SCIENCE NOTES	129
PHILOLOGY NOTES	129
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	130
BOSANQUET'S HISTORY OF AESTHETIC, by CAMPBELL DODGSON	130
LETTER FROM EGYPT, by Prof. SAYCE	132
OBITUARY	133
CORRESPONDENCE—
Botticelli's "Spring," by OSCAR BROWNING and G. T. CLOUGH	133
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	134
MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS	134
MUSIC NOTES	134

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—
Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS
115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List—115, Fleet Street, London.

SAVE PRINTER'S CORRECTIONS by having your MSS. neatly TYPED for REVISE before going to press. The best work in London. Moderate Charges. Artistic Typewriting.—GREGG'S LIGHT-LINE (Shorthand) INSTITUTE AND SCHOOL OF JOURNALISM, 55 and 56, Chancery Lane, W.C.

MR. KIRWAN.—LESSONS in SPEECH
Illustrated Dramatic Readings (a combination of speech, pictures, and music). Selections. Literary Lectures.—Address, 3, Vernon Place, W.C.

BYRON—SHELLEY—KEATS: IN
MEMORIAL ENDOWED YEARLY PRIZES for the BEST ESSAY in ENGLISH, written by a Woman of any nation. Third set. With Portrait of Foundress and "Gossip." Is. 1d.—For rules, send addressed halfpenny wrapper to ROSE MARY CRAWSHAY, Blich, Hircinsliure.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to best
University or Army Tutors, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained (free of charge) by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. BEZVOVA, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL
MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. R. BROOKER, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

FOR SALE—GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE, Vols. 1 to 103, From 1731 to 1833 inclusive, complete.—WELLS & SON, 8, Kirkgate, Huddersfield.

NEXT SESSION.—An experienced
Journalist wishes to WRITE a PARLIAMENTARY LETTER or SUMMARY, Weekly, for a Country Paper.—Address M. J. L. Kettom's Library, West Kensington Terrace, W.

PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,
&c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., are prepared to undertake the Printing and Publishing of first-class Newspapers, Magazines, Books, Catalogues, Pamphlets, Prospectuses, Articles of Association, Minutes of Evidence, &c. In the best style. Their offices are fitted with the latest improvements in Rotary and other Machinery, the most modern English and Foreign Type, and they employ none but first-class workmen. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 2769. Telegraph, "Africanism London."

THE COLONIAL COLLEGE and TRAINING FARMS (Limited), Hollesley Bay, Suffolk.

For the Training of those destined for Colonial Life, &c.
The College owns and farms for the instruction of its students a fine Seaside Estate of 1,800 acres.
Prospectus on application to the RESIDENT DIRECTOR.

ELTHAM COLLEGE, KENT (THE ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL).

TEN OPEN ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS, £40 to £50, on APRIL 11, 12, 13.—Full particulars of HEAD MASTER.

UNIVERSITY of EDINBURGH.

LECTURESHIP in (a) FRENCH LANGUAGE and LITERATURE and ROMANCE PHILOLOGY, and (b) GERMAN LANGUAGE and LITERATURE and TEUTONIC PHILOLOGY.

The University Court will, on 16th April next, or some subsequent day, APPOINT a LECTURER in each of the above two subjects.

The Lecturers must be qualified to instruct students with a view to Honours, as well as the ordinary Degree in Arts, and must possess a historical acquaintance with both the Literature and the Philology of France and Germany respectively from the earliest times. They should also possess a thorough colloquial command of the language.

They will be required to teach during both the Winter and the Summer Session, and to enter on their duties at the beginning of the Winter Session, 1894-95.

The appointment, which may be renewed, will be for five years, at an annual salary of £400 in each Lectureship.

It is a condition of their appointment that the Lecturers shall not teach in schools, or in any institution other than the University.

Each applicant should lodge with the undersigned, not later than MONDAY, 26th MARCH next, sixteen copies of his application, and sixteen copies of any testimonials he may desire to submit. One copy of the application should bear the applicant's signature.

M. C. TAYLOR, Secretary University Court.
University of Edinburgh,
22nd January, 1894.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.—NOTICE

to ARTISTS.—THE DAYS for RECEIVING PAINTINGS, DRAWINGS, &c., are FRIDAY, SATURDAY, and MONDAY, MARCH 30th, 31st, and APRIL 2nd, and for SCULPTURE, TUESDAY, APRIL 3rd.—Forms and labels can be obtained from the Academy during the month of March on receipt of Stamped and Directed Envelope.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.

CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,

Importers of Foreign Books,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,

AND

20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

TO BOOKBUYERS and Librarians of

Free Libraries.—THE FEBRUARY CATALOGUE of valuable

NEW and SECOND-HAND WORKS, offered at prices greatly reduced, is now ready, and will be sent post free on application to W. H.

SMITH & SON, Library Department, 186, Strand, London, W.C.

BOOKS WANTED by JAMES BAIN,

1, Haymarket, S.W.

TENNYSON.—The Silent Voices, 1892 (published to secure copyright).

GUSSES SIX LECTURES, written to be delivered before Lowell

Institute. Chiswick Press, Oct. 1884.

STEVENSON (H. L.).—The Charity Bazaar. Edin., 1893.

Testimonials in Favour of H. L. S. Advocate. Edin., Oct., 1891.

Moral Emblems. Davos Platz, 1891.

Moral Emblems. Second Collection. Davos Platz, 1892.

The Graver and the Pen. Edin., 1892.

Full Mail Christmas Extra, 1884 (orange wrapper).

STEVENSON and HENLEY.—Macaire. Edin., 1889.

AGENCY for AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS

and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

The Author's Manual

By PERCY RUSSELL.

With Prefatory Remarks by Mr. GLADSTONE.

Sixth Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s

With Portrait.

THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW says: "A very complete manual and guide for journalist and author. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense..... We have little else but praise for the volume."

DIGBY, LONG & CO., PUBLISHERS,

18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON.

MR. WM. HEINEMANN'S NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY.

COUNT TOLSTOY'S NEW WORK.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo, price 10s.

"THE KINGDOM OF GOD IS WITHIN YOU":

Christianity not as a Mystic Religion but as a New Theory of Life.

Translated from the Russian by

CONSTANCE GARNETT.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, with Portrait, 10s. 6d.

VILLIERS DE L'ISLE ADAM:

His Life and Works.

From the French of

VICOMTE ROBERT DU PONTAVICE DE HEUSSEY

By Lady MARY LOYD.

In 1 vol., 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

A COMMENTARY ON THE WORKS OF HENRIK IBSEN.

By HJALMAR HJORTH BOYESEN,

Author of "Gjette and Schiller," "Essays on German Literature," &c.

In 2 vols., 8vo, with Portrait, 28s.

THE ROMANCE OF AN EMPRESS.

CATHERINE II. OF RUSSIA.

From the French of R. WALISZEWSKI.

[At all Libraries.]

TIMES.—"This book is based on the confessions of the Empress herself; it gives striking pictures of the condition of the contemporary Russia which she did so much to mould as well as to expand.... Few stories in history are more romantic than that of Catherine II. of Russia, with its mysterious incidents and thrilling episodes; few characters present more curious problems."

2 vols., 8vo, with Portraits, 21s.

A FRIEND OF THE QUEEN.

MARIE ANTOINETTE—COUNT FERSEN.

From the French of PAUL GAULOT.

By Mrs. CASHEL HOEY.

[At all Libraries.]

TIMES.—"M. Gaulot's work tells with new and authentic details the romantic story of Count Fersen's devotion to Marie Antoinette, of his share in the celebrated Flight to Varennes, and in many other well-known episodes of the unhappy Queen's life."

NEW NOVELS.

A SUPERFLUOUS WOMAN.

IN THREE VOLUMES.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"A novel upon which has been expended an infinity of thought, and the pages of which betray a capacity for the analysis of human feelings and emotions rarely to be met with."

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"There is much strong and some pathetic writing in 'A Superfluous Woman,' and we dare say it will be proclaimed a remarkable book. It shows power and imagination in no small degree."

A COMEDY of MASKS. By Ernest Dowson and ARTHUR MOORE. In 3 vols. [At all Libraries]

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"A fascinating book... The concluding scene is very powerful."

LONDON:

WM. HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and
SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

ONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY,
10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;
241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY
74, New Oxford Street, London,
Is remarkable for its Display of Copies of Celebrated Works of
THE GREAT MASTERS.

Reproductions of the most important Paintings in the following Collections:—

NATIONAL GALLERY, LONDON,	LOUVRE, PARIS,
BUCKINGHAM PALACE,	LUXEMBOURG, PARIS,
WINDSOR CASTLE,	ROYAL GALLERY, DRESDEN,
UFFIZI, FLORENCE,	HERMITAGE, ST. PETERS-
PITTI, FLORENCE,	BURGO.
ACADEMY OF FINE ARTS,	PRADO, MADRID,
FLORENCE,	VATICAN, ROME,
AMSTERDAM,	HAARLEM,
THE HAGUE,	FRANKFORT,

AND

THE PARIS SALONS.

A LARGE COLLECTION of EXAMPLES of MODERN FRENCH and ENGLISH ART in SELECTED FRAMES suitable for HALL, LIBRARY, DRAWING-ROOM
BOUDOIR, &c.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 68 Miniature Photographs of notable Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

AUTOTYPE: a DECORATIVE and EDUCATIONAL ART.
NEW PAMPHLET—FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of
HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary
Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parchments and Manuscript Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their
Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs,
Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations,
Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.
Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

BREAKFAST—SUPPER

E P P S'S
GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.
C O C O A
BOILING WATER OR MILK.

HURST & BLACKETT'S PUBLICATIONS.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HER MAJESTY.
Now ready, 63rd Edition, 1 vol., royal 8vo, with the Arms beautifully engraved, 31s. 6d. bound, gilt edges.

LODGE'S PEERAGE and BARONET-
AGE for 1894. Corrected by the NOBILITY.

NEW WORK BY JOHN CORDY JEAFFRESON.

Now ready, in 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

A BOOK of RECOLLECTIONS. By JOHN CORDY JEAFFRESON, Author of "A Book about Lawyers," "A Book about Doctors," &c.

"The book is readable enough, and full of pleasant gossip about men of letters and other celebrities, great and small, whom Mr. Jeaffreson has known."—TIMES.

"Mr. Jeaffreson's volumes are a rich storehouse of anecdotes, to which the prudent reader will himself resort without a moment's delay."—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

"There are plenty of good stories in Mr. Jeaffreson's volumes which are sure to have a large number of delighted readers."—Globe.

NEW NOVELS.

HETTY'S HERITAGE. By Noel Dene,
Author of "The Aftermath." 2 vols.

THE WHITE AIGRETTE. By Vincent, Author of "Cathedral Bells," "Wrong on Both Sides," &c. 3 vols.

THE PRICE of a PEARL. By Eleanor
Holmes, Author of "Through another Man's Eyes," &c. 3 vols.
"The story is very pleasantly told, for the authoress has the knack of presenting even the most trivial details of her scheme in language that is always refined and telling."—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

GOOD DAME FORTUNE. By Maria
A. Hofer, 3 vols.

"None who desire to read a novel solely with the hope of being interested can fail to enjoy this book, and it is an excellent specimen of a kind of novel always in demand."—MANCHESTER EXAMINER.

BROKEN FORTUNES. By Henry
Cresswell, Author of "A Modern Greek Heroine," "A Willy Widow," &c. 3 vols.

"Mr. Cresswell's pages are interwoven in the strangest of tangles by a series of subtle contrivances, the cleverness of which never oversteps the limits of probability. 'Broken Fortunes' is entitled to a place of honour among the ablest fictional works of the year."—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

IN an ALPINE VALLEY. By G. Manville Fenn, Author of "Mahme Nousic," "The Master of the Ceremonies," &c. 3 vols.

"Mr. Fenn knows how to amuse, and he carries his readers along with him to his triumphant finish."—ATHENÆUM.

AT SOCIETY'S EXPENSE. By Algernon Gissing, Author of "A Moorland Idyl," "A Village Hampden," &c. 3 vols.

"Mr. Gissing is a clever writer, and his new story is smart, original, and piquant."—SCOTSMAN.

NEW ADDITION TO HURST & BLACKETT'S
THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.

SIR ANTHONY. By Adeline Sergeant,
Author of "Caspar Brooke's Daughter," &c.

Uniform, each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NOVELS BY EDNA LYALL.

DONOVAN: a Modern Englishman.

WE TWO.

IN THE GOLDEN DAYS.

KNIGHT ERRANT.

WON BY WAITING.

A HARDY NORSEMAN.

A SELECTION FROM

HURST & BLACKETT'S
STANDARD LIBRARY.

EACH IN A SINGLE VOLUME, PRICE 5s.

BY THE AUTHOR of "JOHN HALIFAX." JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLE-MAN.

A WOMAN'S THOUGHTS

ABOUT WOMEN.

A LIFE for a LIFE.

NOTHING NEW.

MISTRESS and MAID.

THE WOMAN'S KINGDOM.

CHRISTIAN'S MISTAKE.

A NOBLE LIFE.

HANNAH.

THE UNKIND WORD.

A BRAVE LADY.

STUDIES from LIFE.

YOUNG MRS. JARDINE.

BY THE AUTHOR of "SAM SLICK." NATURE and HUMAN NATURE.

WISE SAWS and MODERN INSTANCES.

THE OLD JUDGE; or,
Life in a Colony.

TRAITS of AMERICAN HUMOUR.

THE AMERICANS at HOME.

BY DR. GEORGE MAC DONALD.

DAVID ELGINBROD.

ROBERT FALCONER.

ALEC FORBES.

SIR GIBBIE.

BY MRS. OLIPHANT.

ADAM GRAEME.

LAIRD of NORLAW.

AGNES.

LIFE of IRVING.

A ROSE in JUNE.

PHOEBE, JUNIOR.

IT WAS A LOVER and HIS LASS.

LONDON: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S LIST.

P. CORNELII TACITI, DIALOGUS
DE ORATORIBUS. Edited with Prolegomena, Critical and Exegetical Commentary, Indexes, and a Bibliography, by ALFRED GUDEMAN, Johns Hopkins University.
To be published in March in the College Series of Latin Authors.

The Prolegomena will deal at length with the history of the "Dialogus Controversy," and will furnish positive proofs, both external and internal, of the Tacitean authorship of the treatise. The Introduction will also contain full discussions of the style, syntax, sources, MSS., &c. The recension of the text is based upon a close examination of the MS. readings and the results of the latest critical researches. A very complete adnotatio critica accompanies the text. This will be followed by a commentary, the exegetical and critical notes being, for the convenience of the reader, distinguished by different type. Indexes and an exhaustive bibliography will close the book.

THE COLLEGE SERIES OF LATIN AUTHORS.

Edited under the Supervision of Professor C. L. SMITH,
Harvard University; and Professor TRACY PECK,
Yale University, on lines similar to those of the College
Series of Greek Authors.

HORACE.—SATIRES and EPISTLES. By Prof. J. B. GREENOUGH. 6s. 6d.

CICERO.—BRUTUS, SEU DE CLARIS
ORATORIBUS. By Professor KELLOGG. 6s. 6d.

TACITUS.—ANNALS. Books I.-VI. By Professor ALLEN. 7s. 6d.

LIVY. Books I. and II. By Prof. J. B.
GREENOUGH. 6s. 6d.

LIVY. Books XXI. and XXII. By Prof. J. B.
GREENOUGH and Prof. TRACY PECK. 6s. 6d.

CATULLUS. By Professor ELMER TRUESDELL
MERRILL, of Wesleyan University. 6s. 6d.

THE COLLEGE SERIES OF GREEK AUTHORS.

Edited under the Supervision of Professor J. W.
WHITE and Professor T. D. SEYMOUR.

This series comprises a number of volumes selected from the works of the best Greek authors, carefully edited for the use of University Students and the Higher Forms in Schools.
Each Volume contains a full Introduction, with Notes, critical and explanatory, Rhythmic Schemes where necessary, and Appendices giving a brief Bibliography, &c.

The volumes are uniformly bound in cloth, square 8vo.

THUCYDIDES. Book I. By Professor C. D.
MORRIS. 7s. 6d.

THUCYDIDES. Book V. By Professor H. N.
FOWLER. 6s.

THUCYDIDES. Book VII. By Professor C. F.
SMITH. 6s.

HOMER.—INTRODUCTION to LANGUAGE and VERSE. By Professor SEYMOUR. 4s. 6d.

HOMER.—ILIAD. Books I.-III. By Professor
SEYMOUR. 6s.

HOMER.—ILIAD. Books IV.-VI. By Professor SEYMOUR. 6s.

HOMER.—ODYSSEY. Books I.-IV. By Professor FERRIN. 6s.

PLATO.—APOLOGY and CRITO. By Professor L. DYER. 6s.

PLATO.—PROTAGORAS. By Principal
TOWLE. 6s.

PLATO.—GORGIAS. By G. LODGE. 7s. 6d.

SOPHOCLES.—ANTIGONE. By Professor
DOOGUE. 6s.

ÆSCHYLUS.—PROMETHEUS VINCTUS
Weeklein's Edition. Translated by Professor ALLEN
7s. 6d.

EURIPIDES.—BACCHANTES. By Professor
BECKWITH. 6s.

EURIPIDES.—IPHIGENIA in TAURIS. By Professor FLAGG. 6s.

ARISTOPHANES.—THE CLOUDS. By Professor HUMPHREYS. 6s.

ÆSCHINES.—IN CTESIPHONTEM. By Professor RICHARDSON. 6s.

XENOPHON.—HELLENICA. Books I.-IV.
By Professor MANATT. 7s. 6d.

XENOPHON.—HELLENICA. Books V.-VII.
By Professor BENNETT. 7s. 6d.

LONDON:

EDWARD ARNOLD, 37, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.
Publisher to the India Office.

DIGBY, LONG & CO.'S NEW BOOKS

AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

NOVELS AND STORIES.

SECOND EDITION.

LIKE a SISTER. By Madeline Crichton. In 8 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.

The PEOPLE says: "We predict for her a prosperous career. She writes good English, and works out her plot with considerable skill."

THE NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "GOOD DAME FORTUNE."
WHAT HAPPENED at MORWYN. By Maria A. HOYER. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The PALL MALL GAZETTE says: "It is refreshing to take up so bright and wholesome a story as 'What Happened at Morwyn,' and one written in a style so fresh and natural. Its heroine realises as nearly as may be Wordsworth's famous description of woman as she should be.....Cordially recommending it to our readers."

NEW MILITARY NOVEL.

DEFERRED PAY; or, a Major's Dilemma. By Lieut.-Colonel W. H. M'CAUSLAND. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The WHITEHALL REVIEW says: "Will well repay perusal, and will be found of extreme interest to all Service readers."

THE NEW SOCIETY NOVEL.

FIRST LARGE EDITION EXHAUSTED, SECOND NOW READY.

UPPER BOHEMIANS: a Romance. By F. G. WALPOLE, Author of "Lord Floysham." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The MORNING POST says: "An entertaining book, by a clever man of the world. Bright sketches of men and things here and abroad. The author's pictures of Roman society are excellent."

FIRST EDITION SOLD, SECOND NOW READY.

WEST CLIFF: a Romance of Portland Isle. By EASTON KING. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The MANCHESTER EXAMINER says: "It is an intensely interesting and very well-written book, which we can heartily recommend."

EDWIN ELLIOTT'S SUCCESSFUL NOVEL.

NETTA. By Edwin Elliott. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The ACADEMY says: "Mr. Elliott is to be welcomed..... A quite excellent story. Style.....so good.....Not only is the interest permanently sustained, but passages of dramatic vividness detain the reader."

FIFTH EDITION NEARLY EXHAUSTED, SIXTH IN PREPARATION.

DR. JANET of HARLEY STREET. By Dr. ARABELLA KENEALY, Author of "Molly and her Man-o'-War." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "IN A MOMENT OF PASSION."

BABETTE VIVIAN: a Novel. By Christel. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The MANCHESTER EXAMINER says: "A good plot and some pleasant characters..... It is certainly a good novel, likely to be enjoyed by all who read it."

"ZORG": a Story of British Guiana. By Vernon KIRKE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The PUBLIC OPINION says: "After starting to read 'Zorg' one will not put it down until the book is finished. The novel is a promising one. The character of Sarnia Gordon is cleverly drawn: indeed all the characters are depicted in a natural and life-like manner."

HER ANGEL FRIEND. By Monica Tregarthen. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Just out.]

MARIA, COUNTESS of SALETTO. From the Italian of E. ARBIB, by SYDNEY KING. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Just out.]
An animated, interesting, and vivid picture of Modern Italian Society.

MARIANELA. From the Spanish of B. Perez GALDOS. By MARY WHARTON, Translator of "Lady Perfecta," from the same Author. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The MANCHESTER GUARDIAN says: "Modern Spanish fiction is not well known to English readers, and there is a consequent freshness in 'Marianela.' Incidentally to the story questions of more than passing importance are discussed with originality and sympathy."

BJÖRNSON AND TURGENIEFF.

THE BRIDAL MARCH. From the Norwegian of BJÖRNSON; and THE WATCH. From the Russian of IVAN TURGENIEFF. Translated by JOHN EVAN WILLIAMS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

The LITERARY WORLD says: "'The Bridal March,' with its vivid descriptions, will be read with interest.....Charmingly told, the characters are skilfully drawn, and stand out in strong relief. 'The Watch' is replete with vigorous touches and wholly original. It exhibits the writer's peculiar gift of character drawing, supplemented by effective descriptive power."

THE HERO of the "PELICAN": an Ocean Drama. By PERCY DE LISLE. Crown 8vo, pictorial cloth, 3s. 6d. [Just out.]

THE GIRL MUSICIAN. By Miriam Young. With Full-Page Illustrations by Matthew Stetch. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

The LIVERPOOL MERCURY says: "This is a very pleasing story. The book is quite delightful."

THE PURSUIT of a CHIMERA: being a Mid-winter's Day Dream. By C. ELVEY COPE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

The SATURDAY REVIEW says: "Much of the drama is singularly dream-like, and the mingling of fancy and oddity shows an excellent simulation of genuine dreaming.....The story is presented with considerable power."

THE VENETIAN SECRET; or, the Art of the Past. By CHARLES LUYTENS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

The SATURDAY REVIEW says: "His characters are agreeably drawn, and are neatly differentiated without any traces of exaggeration."

THE OLD HOUSE of RAYNER, &c. By Grimley HILL. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

The DAILY TELEGRAPH says: "Eminently readable.....Written to entertain.....Fulfills their object very adequately."

CLENCHED ANTAGONISMS. By Lewis Iram. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

The SATURDAY REVIEW says: "A powerful and ghastly narrative of the triumph of force over virtue."

VANITY FAIR says: "Lewis Iram is original, unconventional, powerful, and interesting."

SOCIETY says: "An exceedingly able and enthralling story."

DR. WEEDON'S WAIF. By Kate Somers. Illustrated with Full-page Drawings by Matthew Stetch. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

VANITY FAIR says: "One of the prettiest and most touching stories we have read for a long time."

The SATURDAY REVIEW says: "Vividly and pathetically told."

BUT: a Domestic Sketch. By Bachelor Abbots-FORD. Illustrated throughout with numerous Drawings. Crown 8vo, picture cover, 1s.

The SCOTSMAN says: "It draws its fun from the adventures of a bachelor among children. It is brightly written and illustrated."

THE STRANGE ADVENTURES of a YOUNG LADY of QUALITY, 1715. By DOROTHEA TOWNSHEND. Crown 8vo, paper cover, 1s.

The GUARDIAN says: "The story is pleasantly written; the spirit and manners of the time are well without being overdrawn, and the heroine is fresh and plucky."

NEW WORKS.

SIXTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE AS AN IRISH LANDLORD.

Memoirs of JOHN HAMILTON, D.L., of St. Ernan's, Donegal.

Edited, with Introduction, by Rev. H. C. WHITE, late Chaplain, Paris.

With Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The TIMES says: "Much valuable light on the real history of Ireland, and of the Irish agrarian question in the present century, is thrown by a very interesting volume entitled.....This very instructive volume."

THE STANDARD WORK ON AUTHORSHIP.

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL. By Percy Russell. With Prefatory Remarks by Mr. GLADSTONE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. Sixth Edition. With Portrait.

The WESTMINSTER REVIEW says: "A very complete manual and guide for journalist and author... It is not merely a practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense.....We have little else but praise for the volume."

NEW POETRY.

SOME TRANSLATIONS from CHARLES BAUDELAIRE, POET and SYMBOLIST. By H. C. With Portrait. Fcap. 8vo, elegant parchment, 2s. 6d.

The TIMES says: "Are executed with no little metrical skill and command of poetic diction."

BRUCE'S HEART, and other Poems. By EDWARD TOOVEY WELLS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. [Just out.]

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NEW WORKS.

FREDERIC HILL: an

Autobiography of Fifty Years in Times of Reform. Being the Recollections of a Retired Civil Servant. By his Daughter, CONSTANCE HILL. 1 vol., demy 8vo, with Portraits, 16s.

"A most entertaining book, teeming with anecdotes and reminiscences of notabilities, and also of incidents that carry us back to days which now seem far distant."—Manchester Examiner.

"Unexpected but welcome light on the political and social movements of the century, together with much pleasant gossip of a personal kind, is to be found in these pages."—Leeds Mercury.

"A volume which in interest reads almost like a romance, and by those who take any interest in social reform it will be read with special profit and avidity. It has been admirably edited by Miss Hill."—Dundee Courier.

"The pages teem with good stories and pieces of history, local and national, political and literary, all told with charming simplicity and distinctness."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

WOMEN of LETTERS,

including Memoirs of Lady Morgan, the Misses Berry, Mary Wollstonecraft Shelley, Lady Ann Barnard, Sarah Countess Cowper, Mrs. Opie, and Lady Duff Gordon. By GERTRUDE TOWNSHEND MAYER. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s. [Just ready.]

The CONVERSATIONS

of JAMES NORTHCOTE, R.A. Recorded by WILLIAM HAZLITT. A New Edition, Edited, with an Essay on Hazlitt and a Note on Northcote, by EDMUND GOSSE. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"Will be welcomed by a considerable section of the public—not only by those who are interested in matters of pictorial art, but by all who are attracted to bright and lively gossip of the miscellaneous sort. The Conversations are eminently readable."—Globe.

NEW NOVELS AT THE LIBRARIES

NOW READY.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE SIN OF JOOST AVELINGH."

The GREATER GLORY.

By MAARTEN MAARTENS,
Author of "An Old Maid's Love," &c.
3 vols., crown 8vo.

BRITOMART.

By Mrs. HERBERT MARTIN,
Author of "Bonnie Lesley," &c.
3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A noble novel, and the heroine of the touching, realistic, and deeply-thought-out story is a rarely beautiful and winning example of womanhood in its fairest and most worshipful aspects. The story is as charming as it is good."—World.

IMMEDIATELY.

THE ROMANCE OF SHERE NOTE.

By PERCY HURLBURD,
Author of "In Black and White."
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

THE SECOND EDITION
OF

DIANA TEMPEST.

By MARY CHOLMONDELEY,
Author of "The Danvers Jewels," "Sir Charles Danvers," &c.
3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Of Miss Cholmondeley's clever novels, 'Diana Tempest' is quite the cleverest."—Times.

THE VICAR of LANG-

THWAITE. By LILY WATSON. 3 vols., crown 8vo.
"A bright and pleasant novel."—Full Mall Gazette.

SPEEDWELL. By Lady GUENDOLEN RAMSDEN. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

NOW READY.

In demy 8vo, cloth, Illustrated with 12 Lithograph Plates, price 18s. net.

INVESTIGATIONS

ON

MICROSCOPIC FOAMS and on PROTOPLASM.

By PROF. O. BÜTSCHLI.

Translated from the German by E. A. MINCHIN, B.A.
Oxon., Fellow of Merton College, Oxford.

In demy 8vo, cloth, 450 pp., and Illustrated with 263 Figures, price 18s. net.

ZOOLOGY OF THE INVERTEBRATA:

A Text-Book for Students.

By ARTHUR E. SHIPLEY, M.A.,

Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Christ's College, and Demonstrator of Comparative Anatomy in the University of Cambridge.

In medium 8vo, boards, leather back.

A DICTIONARY OF BIRDS.

By ALFRED NEWTON.

Assisted by HANS GADOW.

With Contributions from RICHARD LYDEKKER, B.A., F.G.S.;
CHARLES S. ROY, M.A., F.R.S.; and ROBERT W. SHUFELDT,
M.D., late United States Army.

To be Completed in Four Parts, Parts 1 and 2 now ready.
Price 7s. 6d. net each.

In 4to, cloth, price 12s. 6d.

ZOOLOGICAL ARTICLES

Contributed to the "Encyclopædia
Britannica."

By E. RAY LANKESTER, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S.,
Linacre Professor in the University of Oxford.

TO WHICH ARE ADDED KINDRED ARTICLES BY OTHER NATURALISTS.

In demy 8vo, cloth, 763 pp., and Illustrated with 257 Wood
Engravings, price 12s. 6d.

AN INTRODUCTION

TO THE

STUDY of MAMMALS, LIVING and EXTINCT.

By SIR WILLIAM HENRY FLOWER, F.R.S.,
Director of the Natural History Departments, British Museum; and

RICHARD LYDEKKER, B.A., F.G.S., F.Z.S.
CHEAPER EDITION.

In demy 8vo, cloth, 720 pp., and Illustrated with 320 Wood
Engravings, price 12s. 6d.

AN INTRODUCTION

TO THE

STUDY OF FISHES.

By ALBERT C. L. G. GÜNTHER,
M.A., M.D., Ph.D., F.R.S.,

Keeper of the Zoological Department in the British Museum.
CHEAPER EDITION.

In crown 8vo, cloth, Illustrated, price 2s. 6d.

LIFE IN MOTION; Or, Muscle and Nerve.

By JOHN GRAY M'KENDRICK,
M.D., LL.D., F.R.S., F.R.C.P.E.,

Professor of Physiology in the University of Glasgow.
CHEAPER EDITION.

LONDON: ADAM & CHARLES BLACK,
SOHO SQUARE, W.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

For an Account of

"THE LIFE AND WORK

OF

MR. EDWARD BURNE-JONES,"

By Mr. COSMO MONKHOUSE,

See the FEBRUARY Number of "SCRIBNER'S
MAGAZINE," price ONE SHILLING.

The Article is illustrated with a Portrait, and many fine
Reproductions of Sir Edward Burne-Jones's Pictures.

ANCIENT ARMS AND ARMOUR:

A Pictorial and Descriptive Record of the Origin
and Development of Arms and Armour.

To which are appended 133 Plates, specially drawn from the Author's Collection.

By EDWIN J. BRETT.

Imperial 4to, 650 pp., with 1,200 Original Engravings, half-bound,
FIVE GUINEAS net.

"Mr. Brett's magnificent work."—Daily Telegraph. "We know no authority more thorough and up-to-date."—Daily Chronicle. "A masterpiece of its kind.... Mr. Brett's work is as interesting as it is valuable."—Black and White. "Is noteworthy for the very elaborate series of illustrations with which it is enriched."—Times. "We have lately had a sort of revival of the Man in Armour. Mr. Brett's splendid volume, therefore, has fallen on welcoming days."—Daily News. "It is a book that all antiquaries and lovers of ancient armour will deem a great acquisition to the shelves of their libraries."—Life.
"Some of the finest pictures in Mr. Brett's books are Italian arms and weapons of the tourney. Mr. Brett is an enthusiastic believer in the life of the Middle Ages. His collection seems to be very rich."—Observer. "Many of Mr. Brett's suits of armour came from such well-known collections as those of Sir Samuel Rush Meyrick, Sir Coutts Lindsay, Lord Londesborough, Count Gayevski, &c. Mr. Brett's work is a truly monumental volume."—Sporting and Dramatic News.
"Every great library will have it upon their shelves. A truly magnificent work."—England.

AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

GLIMPSES OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

By J. G. ALGER, Author of "Englishmen in the French Revolution," &c.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE LAST EARLS OF BARRYMORE.

1769-1824. By J. R. ROBINSON, Author of "The Princely Chandos," &c. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

"Full of anecdote and reminiscence."—St. James's Budget.
"Eminently readable and entertaining.... Mr. Robinson's record of his lordship's doings is very animated and has more interest than most romances."—Notes and Queries.

DR. NOAH PORTER, PRESIDENT

of YALE: a Memorial by his Friends. Edited by GEORGE S.
MERHAM. With Portraits. Crown 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

"This memoir was admirably conceived and has been admirably executed.... The book is full of information, unfamiliar to English readers, on Church life and College life in New England."—Dr. Dale in the British Weekly.

LANDMARKS of a LITERARY LIFE,

1850-1892. By Mrs. NEWTON CROSLAND (CAMILLA TOUL-MIN), Author of "Mrs. Blake," &c. With Photogravure Portrait.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

"Seldom has it been given to an author to chronicle the accession and jubilee of a Sovereign. More rarely, it is possible, to have known personally the eminent men and women of a period extending to seven decades."—Yorkshire Herald.

CHARLES KEENE'S LIFE and

LETTERS. By GEORGE SOMES LAYARD, B.A. With 3 Portraits, 30 Full-Page, and 44 smaller Illustrations, including 15
Photogravures. Cheap Edition. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

"Mr. Layard's book is worthy of his subject, and excellent reading from first to last."—Saturday Review.

WILLIAM HOGARTH, Mr. AUSTIN

DOBSON'S CRITICAL BIOGRAPHY of. Cheap Edition. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

"An authoritative monograph on Hogarth and his works....
Executed in a manner eminently worthy of Mr. Dobson's high reputation for literary skill and critical acumen."—Times.

MEMORABLE PARIS HOUSES: a

Handy Guide, with Illustrative, Critical, and Anecdotal Notices.
By WILLIAM HARRISON, Author of "Memorable London Houses." With over 80 Original Illustrations of Celebrities and their Houses. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

CHEAP EDITIONS AT ALL BOOKSELLERS.

Uniform crown 8vo Volumes, bound in cloth, HALF-A-CROWN
per Volume.

DONALD ROSS of HEIMRA. By WILLIAM BLACK.

CRIPPS the CARRIER. By R. D. BLACKMORE.

JACK'S COURTSHIP. By W. Clark RUSSELL.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.O.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1894.

No. 1136, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Life and Correspondence of Arthur Penrhyn Stanley. By Rowland E. Prothero, with the co-operation and sanction of the Very Rev. G. G. Bradley, Dean of Westminster. In 2 vols. (John Murray.)

DEAN STANLEY died on July 18, 1881. In his will, dated March 9, 1879, he appointed three literary executors: the Rev. Hugh Pearson, Mr. Theodore Walrond, and Mr. (now Sir George) Grove. Mr. Pearson survived his old friend less than a year; and Mr. Walrond, who had undertaken to write Stanley's life, died suddenly in 1887. The work was then taken up, though with considerable reluctance, by Dr. Bradley, who, after nearly four years' labour, felt himself obliged to hand it over to Mr. Prothero. The Dean of Westminster had by that time completed the first twenty-five years of his predecessor's biography (1815-1840). The amount of "copy" devoted to that period would have more than filled a large octavo volume; and the whole work, had it been continued on the same scale, would probably have extended to five volumes. Fortunately, Mr. Prothero succeeded in compressing the narrative of Stanley's youth to considerably less than half its original bulk, and in telling the whole story of his life within something less than the usual limits of ecclesiastical biography. The result is a valuable and permanent addition to English literature: a book written with admirable insight, delicacy, and discrimination; a book interesting from three distinct points of view—as embodying an immense mass of picturesque description and entertaining anecdotes from Stanley's own pen, as portraying at full length one of the most fascinating figures of the Victorian epoch, and as contributing to our knowledge of a most agitated and momentous period in the history of the English Church.

A great change has been brought about during the last sixty years in the mutual relations of the Church and the nation. There is a more intimate connexion now than there was then between religion and secular life. The clergy are more numerous, more devoted, better theologians, more interested in the outward dignity and splendour of their services than before. But they are also more in touch with science, art, politics, philanthropy, amusements: in general, with what we call culture or the spirit of the age. Their harmless affectation of worldliness even furnishes matter for merriment to the caricaturist. Above all, they are more tolerant of those who differ from them, and more disposed to change their own opinions in deference to the reasoning or authority of laymen. This change is the resultant of two distinct tendencies originally represented by hostile leaders. One, well known as the Oxford Movement, was personified by John Henry Newman. The other, less definite, could boast no single chief raised so far above his followers as the future Cardinal; but we shall not err much in saying that the source of its intellectual strength was Coleridge's philosophy, while the teacher who first made it a living social reality was Dr. Arnold.

"He made us understand," says Stanley, "that the only thing for which God supremely cares . . . is goodness: that the only thing which is supremely hateful to God is wickedness. All other things are useful, admirable, beautiful, in their several ways. All forms, ordinances, means of instruction, means of amusement, have their place in our lives. But religion, the true religion of Jesus Christ, consists in that which makes us wiser and better, more truthful, more loving, more tender, more considerate, more pure. Therefore, in his view, there was no place or time from which religion is shut out: there is no place or time where we cannot be serving God by serving our fellow-creatures" (vol. ii., pp. 454-5).

Elsewhere Stanley well illustrates the respective attitudes of the two opposing schools towards dogmatic theology:

"Newman, &c., assert that the main point, and one which is to be dwelt upon and most earnestly embraced, is that God is Three and yet One. Arnold, &c., that the main point is that God sent His Son to deliver us, His spirit to sanctify us, that accidentally this involves much that is unintelligible and mysterious as to the relations of the Persons" (vol. i., p. 210).

Thus, the ethical view of religion carried with it Latitudinarianism in doctrine, and by a further consequence Erastianism in Church government; while what are called High Church principles equally follow from the doctrinal view. For, in order to establish and transmit intact through all the ages a definite system of theoretical belief, there will be needed a body of experts trained expressly for the purpose, held together by the severest discipline, brooking no interference from without, and recruiting their numbers by co-optation. Such a body, if left to itself, will inevitably try to extirpate all differing or competing religious corporations, and to suppress all secular teaching at variance with its own standard of orthodoxy. Ethical religion, on the contrary, will in all matters involving interference with personal liberty strictly subordinate the Church to the state, since the state is above all things interested in public morality, and has for its first office to keep the peace between all sections of the community. Again, the doctrinal school, claiming as it does supernatural authority, will tend to uphold the authenticity of the miracles by which the divine mission of its founders and propagators is alleged to have been attested and occasionally confirmed, together with the absolute trustworthiness of the documents in which the call and its credentials are related. Per contra, the ethical school will tend to apply the accepted canons of scientific criticism to all history alike. Dr. Arnold's Erastian principles and the freedom of his Biblical criticism are too well known to need more than the briefest mention.

Arthur Stanley was marked out by training, by character, one may almost say by heredity, as the apostle of Arnold's creed. He belonged to the great Whig house of Stanley of Alderley, and the Whigs are nothing if not anti-clerical. The Stanleys have been country gentlemen, soldiers, sailors, statesmen, but never, apparently, theologians. Arthur's father, Edward, wished as a boy to go to sea, and took orders much against his will, although he discharged his clerical duties with such ability and zeal as to die Bishop of Norwich. So little did the elder Stanley stand on his episcopal dignity, as to allow the most important passages in his installation sermon to be dictated to him by young Arthur, then an undergraduate of twenty-two. Stanley's Memoir of his father "should," Mr. Prothero tells us, "be put in the hands of all men who have, against their wills, entered professions for which they feel themselves naturally unfitted" (vol. i., p. 412). The recommendation, if acted on, would ensure the Memoir an unprecedented circulation. But unless the ability and social position of the Bishop are to be given along with his life, the lesson conveyed will be of little use.

The religious element in the family seems to have been chiefly represented by Stanley's mother, Catherine, daughter of the Rev. Oswald Lyecester, a woman of high character and intellect. But, whatever gifts he may have inherited from her, there is no evidence that Mrs. Stanley exercised much influence over her son during his early years, or that there were many exchanges of confidence between them. His sister Mary was the chief correspondent of his boyhood; and even when living in the episcopal palace of Norwich as his father's examining chaplain, we hear that "he developed all his social talents in other circles than that of his own family. . . . Even his mother had then little in common with him" (vol. i., p. 252). The ardent affection which afterwards united them seems in fact to have been associated with the intellectual guidance not of the mother but of the son. For the rest an incidental notice shows, perhaps better than any other, what was the habitual tone of the Stanley household in matters of religion. Writing to Jowett in January 1856 about the death of his old nurse Sarah Burgess, Stanley observes that "one thing struck me a good deal the last time we spoke together about her end—the way in which she placed her confidence not in the mercy but in the justice of God" (vol. i., p. 470). The theology both of the High Church and of the Evangelical rests in the last resort on the sense of sin. Stanley was not conscious of any heinous offences in himself, and he was too honest as well as too sane to supply their place by morbid fancies. Nor, at least for a long time, was the existence of evil in others forcibly brought under his notice. As an undergraduate he wrote for the Rugby Magazine an article entitled "School a Little World"; but Rugby, where he spent five years under Arnold, was very far from being a little world to him: it was merely a somewhat extended home.

"The beauty and goodness of his character," says the Rev. J. N. Simpinkson, "seemed to impress the roughest of his schoolfellows, who felt him to be a being of a higher order than themselves, and not to be judged by their conventional standard. And he knew as little of them and their ways; so that when Tom Brown came out, he remarked about it: 'It is an absolute revelation to me; opens up a world of which, though so near me, I was utterly ignorant'" (vol. i., p. 68).

Active sports were not in his line, nor indeed muscular exertion of any kind. Once he boasts of having played football three days running, and hopes that in time he may like cricket; but, as Mr. Prothero tells us, "the new-born taste perished in its first infancy, and the faint hope was never realised" (vol. i., p. 48). Once, to our great relief, we find him sentenced to an imposition for letting off squibs (ib., p. 51); but this seems to have remained the only escapade in his life. He travelled a great deal, but travelling brought him no practical experience; for he was incapable of taking care of himself, and the necessary arrangements were always made by his companions. His marriage with Lady Augusta Bruce—a very happy marriage—seems to have been brought about by their friends, and it was only after considerable hesitation that he could bring himself to propose. No great sorrow befell him till the age of forty-seven, when he lost his mother; and sorrow when it came brought no deeper insight, real or imagined, into the mystery of life. The death of his mother, and yet more afterwards that of his beloved Augusta, had on Stanley merely an unnerving and prostrating effect. This "child of light," as Matthew Arnold called him, had nothing to learn from darkness: on principle he attended only to what was good in human nature, dwelt only on the sunny side of things.

But while there was no chord in Stanley's nature that responded to the deeper tones of Evangelical or Catholic theology, so neither was there any susceptibility to the forces that tended to dissipate or dry up the somewhat nebulous religiosity of his youth. Although the son of a mathematician and naturalist, the whole field of exact knowledge, except perhaps geography, was closed to him. His incapacity for arithmetic would have been ludicrous, if it had not been so touching and at last even tragic. It took him a good while to see that three times seven was not twenty-three. "He never quite appreciated the difference between eighteen-pence and one-and-eightpence." His weakness in this respect was the cause of a loss to the property of his beloved Westminster Abbey, which "clouded and embittered the last few months of his life" (vol. ii., pp. 282-3). The arithmetical arguments in Colenso's Examination of the Pentateuch were, of course, quite beyond him. But here, "as always," he "bowed to the greatest authority in his own subject" (vol. ii., p. 101). It would have been well if Pusoy had shown as much discretion. That divine went through Colenso's first part with his evening party, and "never met with anything more stupid or narrow or blundering" (ib., p. 160). In geometry Stanley scarcely knew which proposition was hard and which was not, all were so unintelligible (vol. i., p. 60). Speaking of miracles, he observes, "to me a break in scientific order never makes a difficulty, possibly because I have no science in me" (vol. ii., p. 496). He seems, however, to have disbelieved, on historical grounds, all the Biblical miracles except the Resurrection,* a position which no real thinker would have maintained. Nor was he, by his own admission, anything of a moral philosopher or metaphysician (vol. i., p. 495). Of the great philosophical works that mark the Victorian age, not one is named in his letters, not even one that stirred up so much theological controversy as Mansel's Bampton Lectures. Notwithstanding his enthusiasm for morality and the angelic goodness of his own character, his hold on moral distinctions seems to have been feeble. In his sermons on the Beatitudes, the selected instance of those who hunger and thirst after righteousness, "whose souls aspire to higher and severer courses of duty," is one, conspicuous even in a bad age for the iniquitousness and ruthlessness of his aggressions, Henry V. of England.

ἡ δὲ τ' ἐν εἰς παρὶς πρὸς δὲ
Δίκη ξυνοῦσα πῶτ' παντόλμῳ φρένας.

The Franco-German war Stanley very properly denounced as wicked and wanton, making the French solely responsible for it (vol. ii., p. 382); but it must be remembered that he was drawing his political inspiration from the Court, and that the Court was strongly anti-French. There is no word of censure for the really guilty persons, the Imperial family and their entourage. Visiting the field of Sedan, he regretfully notes having heard only one word of sympathy for "the unfortunate Emperor of the French"—a woman to whom the fallen tyrant had given five gold pieces called him "Bon enfant" (vol. ii., p. 404); and in after years when the Dean gave his consent and approval to the erection of a monument to the Prince Imperial in Westminster Abbey, it never seems to have struck him that the young man's chief claim to that distinction was derived from his being the son and heir of the greatest criminal of the age. He regrets the fall of that great wrong to the Italian people, the Pope's temporal power, because it involved "the destruction of a quaint historical anomaly" (ib., p. 383); but subsequently becomes somewhat reconciled to this dreadful calamity on finding that the new government has begun excavations in the Forum (ib., p. 406). When the Eastern Question came up for settlement, "the gallant struggle made by the Turks for their national existence in Europe powerfully appealed to the chivalry of his nature, and to his unfailing sympathies with the weaker side" (ib., p. 502)—as if strength or weakness had anything to do with right and wrong. But the Court was pro-Turkish; and at this time the political sympathies of the Dean seem to have gone entirely with the court-favourite Lord Beaconsfield.

Stanley was hardly less deficient on the aesthetic side than on the practical, scientific, and philosophical sides. I do not know how far taste and smell may be connected with the higher perceptions: he, at any rate, was without those senses, a fact which reminds one by contrast that Newman was an exquisite judge of wines. It has long been known that the Dean had no ear for music and no knowledge of architecture; we now learn that he was totally indifferent to painting and sculpture, that after his first youth even beautiful scenery failed to interest him unless it was associated with historical events. How far he really cared for poetry is not clear. He wrote enormous quantities of verse in his boyhood, won the Newdigate at Oxford, and produced some very creditable hymns in later life, but his metrical compositions never rose to the level of Tronch or even of Alford. As to appreciation, he always retained his early liking for Scott and Southey; but the works of his great contemporaries, apart from a very early mention of Tennyson, are totally ignored in the letters and reported conversations.

Classical scholarship and history were the subjects in which Stanley was strongest, but he was not very strong even in them. True, he gained every honour that Rugby could bestow, and at Oxford everything that could be won without Hebrew or mathematics, even the Ireland. But it was only after the third trial, and by dint of desperate efforts, that he succeeded in carrying off this last prize. Verse-composition, which, I believe, ranks next to textual criticism as the surest test of scholarship, went sorely against the grain with him; and Claughton, the tutor who initiated him into that difficult art has been celebrated as one who, "opus longe omnium difficillimum. Arthurum Penrhyn Stanley versus satis latine scribere edocuit" (vol. i., p. 172). His first class in the Final Classical School might perhaps count for more, had he not left on record that "some of the questions involved prodigious mistakes, and those in Greek history were quite disgraceful" (ib., p. 188). Dr. Bradley tells us that "his interest in the minuter shades of philosophical scholarship was never very keen" (ib., p. 355). His Commentary on the Corinthians was deficient in scholarship and accuracy; and "a certain Lightfoot" speedily convinced the unlucky divine that, "in undertaking to write critical notes, he had completely mistaken his vocation" (ib., p. 476). His vocation, according to himself and to those who knew him best, was unquestionably for picturesque history. He saw all things under the form of multitudinous agitations and successions of resonant events. "In his own life he always carried about with him a sense that he was moving through history and taking a part in its course" (vol. ii., p. 114). He regarded the Lectures on the Jewish Church as "the main purpose of his life, and his chief contribution to the religious revolution that he believed to be impending" (ib., p. 245). He held that "theology, if it is to live, must take the form of the best literature of the day" (ib., p. 497). Now, apart from poetry and fiction, the best literature of his own day was history, mostly of the mouvementé and picturesque sort. The philosophic method of the eighteenth century had gone out, the critical and scientific method of the later nineteenth had not come in. Mr. Prothero thinks that, with "greater leisure and greater specialisation," Stanley might have been a great historian (ib., p. 111). It is not clear how this would have been possible, without the qualities of "analytical sagacity, critical acuteness, and logical power," which are denied him on the same page. At any rate, the Lectures were far from up to date when they were delivered, and are now entirely obsolete. But what Maurice said remains true, that "Stanley has done more to make the Bible a reality in the homes of the people than any living man" (vol. i., p. 477). And in this way he gave for himself also some reality to a religion from which the dogmatic framework had been dissolved away. The danger of identifying any form of religion with history is, that it will gradually recede out of touch and sight with the events which constitute its essence.

* At least so far as appears from the Life. I believe there is evidence elsewhere going to prove that Stanley only accepted the Resurrection in a spiritual sense.

If I were asked to sum up the whole of Stanley's character, mind, and influence in a single phrase, I should call him the greatest associating force of his age. The laws by which states of consciousness are linked together and resuscitated—association by contiguity, association by resemblance, and association by contrast—were exemplified with extraordinary vigour and comprehensiveness in the processes of his imagination. He was always filling the scenes of travel with historical figures and events, or restoring to life the material surroundings amid which great historical events had been enacted, along with the garb and features, the gestures and tones of the actors who had borne a part therein, or looking through the great public ceremonies in which he delighted to mingle to the buried pomps and pageants of the past. What he lacked was the force of central innervation, the resolute sustained attention, which is the secret of originality, of discovery, of creation, of mastery over human beings: the faculty that analyses the presentations of sense and memory into their subtler elements, and recombines these into the great ideal constructions of war, industry, statesmanship, science, and art. And as Stanley delighted in assemblages of images, so also he delighted in assemblages of human beings. His was a social nature through and through. Hence his boyish preference for football, with its glorious crowding and closely confederated energies, to the more severely organised and isolating cricket. Hence also his avowed liking for "a row"; for no one could be less quarrelsome, no one more of a peacemaker than Stanley. As Mr. Prothero well says, "in his own person he bridged over gulfs which divide nations, classes, and Churches" (vol. ii., p. 512). As Tutor of University College, he mingled freely with the undergraduates—a less common familiarity then than now. As Dean of Westminster, he loved to conduct parties of working-men round the Abbey, and occasionally to entertain them at breakfast. "The doors of the Deanery were open to all comers"; and it became a rendezvous for the representatives of all religious denominations, as well as for men of distinction in literature, science, and art. Keble, Pusey, and Liddon were invited to preach in the Abbey, as well as Jowett, Temple, Maurice, and Colenso. The High Church leaders refused, for fear they might be suspected of tolerating any doctrines that differed from their own. Pusey declared that he had no common Christianity with Jowett. Liddon charitably hoped that Maurice would "return to the faith of the Church," but meanwhile objected to preach from a pulpit that he had occupied. If Pusey is so exclusive, argued Stanley, why does he make overtures to such a scandalous paper as the Record? For the same reason, retorted Liddon, that makes Maurice write to "a paper so flagrantly disloyal to Christian truth as the Spectator" (vol. ii., pp. 168-170). This was in 1864. Twelve years afterwards, "after three or four applications," Liddon consented to preach. The nomination of Dr. Temple as preacher in 1864 drew a protest from the Chapter of Westminster. "You may sign the protest," wrote the Dean, "but there is one thing you cannot do, and that is, make me quarrel with you for so doing" (ib., p. 290). One of the Chapter, Dr. Wordsworth, afterwards Bishop of Lincoln, had the year before published a protest against the appointment of Stanley himself to the Deanery, "filled with the most reckless misrepresentations," which, so far from causing any bitterness, led to a cordial friendship between the two.

As a consequence of his conciliatory disposition, Stanley had no sympathy with those who, like the Essayists, Colenso, and Mr. Voysey, attacked the popular beliefs. In his famous "Edinburgh" article on Essays and Reviews, he made the rather grotesque suggestion that Rowland Williams should have published his opinions under a "decent veil of German or Latin notes." But still less did he approve of persecution, and the final acquittal of the Essayists gave him unalloyed satisfaction. The points on which Christians were all agreed seemed to him vastly more important than the points on which they differed: a mind so deficient in logical subtlety and reach failed to estimate theoretical divergences at their true value. His High Church colleagues vainly warned him that his own method would result in a complete rejection of the supernatural; and, on the other hand, it never occurred to him that "stone dead hath no fellow," that the simple necessity of self-preservation must prompt all Rationalists to cut away the dogmatic foundations of a Church which, if it were able, would silence them by force. But, in truth, Catholicism was, and felt itself to be, as seriously threatened by Stanley's schemes of comprehension as by the direct attacks of avowedly heterodox teachers. For all denominations to unite on the basis of their common Christianity would mean a lowering of the doctrinal standard to that of the body whose creed embraced the minimum of belief; and, were the process of inclusion extended, as there is no reason why it should not be, to other than Christian sects, the result would be the complete identification of religion with morality, a tendency noticed and deplored by Mr. Prothero in Stanley's theory of Christian institutions (vol. ii., p. 561).

The last manifestation of the associative tendency was the effort to establish a connexion between religion and the supreme gifts of civilisation—what Guy de Maupassant has called "les grandes tendresses désintéressées"—amounting, as would almost seem, to their complete identification. "Whatever is good science is good theology" (vol. ii., p. 541). Here we find Stanley ending, where he began, as the propagandist of Arnold's principles; but what those principles meant when pushed to their last consequences might have been made clear to him by the writings of Arnold's son and his own friend, the author of Literature and Dogma.

We are told that Stanley in his last years had come to despair of the present generation. But even from his own point of view, this seems to have been a mistake, as, among other evidence, the success of the present biography goes to prove. Whatever revolutions a distant future may hold in reserve, Arnold's influence as transmitted through his favourite pupil has, so far, combined with that of his great opponent Newman, in giving more vitality to religion, more serious joy to life. Stanley is one of the forces by which the Church, the universities, the society, the public opinion of England as they were sixty years ago have been transformed into the Church, the universities, the society, the public opinion of the England in which we live.

ALFRED W. BENN.

---

Essays about Men, Women, and Books. By Augustine Birrell. (Elliot Stock.)

THERE are some writers who, to use a homely colloquialism, strike twelve all at once: their first achievement is a delightful surprise, but it tells us all about them, and though they may delight us again they cannot again surprise us, for they have shot their bolt. Among such writers Mr. Birrell must, I think, be placed. The little volume which he rather whimsically called Obiter Dicta had many charms, but its greatest charm lay in this—that it was that very rare thing, a really fresh book. Not that I would deny a quality which may be called freshness (in one pleasant sense of that epithet) to Res Judicatae and these latter Essays about Men, Women, and Books. I only note the fact that, whereas Obiter Dicta made as new a departure as is nowadays possible, and reminded us little if at all of any other book, its successors remind us on every page of Obiter Dicta, and may indeed be considered as "extra volumes" of that work.

It was, however, a work, extra volumes of which cannot be regarded as superfluous; at any rate they will not be so regarded by the people who are described by Mr. Birrell as "the great clan of sensible men and women who delight in reading for the pleasure it gives them." Mr. Birrell himself is of course one of the clan; and his fellow clansmen enjoy his books all the more because, in turning over their pages, they so frequently catch a glimpse of the tartan.

"Here we all are," he exclaims, "Heaven knows how many millions of us, speaking, writing, and spelling the English language more or less ungrammatically, in a world as full as it can hold of sorrows and cares and fustian and folly. Literature is a solace and a charm. I will not stop for a moment in my headstrong course to compare it with tobacco, though if it ever came to the vote mine would be cast for letters."

This is good, especially if Mr. Birrell knows well the refreshment of that other solace which his ballot-paper is to depreciate; but better still is it to make contributions to letters which half persuade even the most profligate smoker to follow his lead at the poll. And this is what he always does.

The present volume is perhaps—at any rate in parts—a trifle slighter and thinner than its three predecessors, about which, from time to time, I have had the pleasure of writing in the ACADEMY. Literature is not reduced to the rank of journalism by being first printed in a newspaper, any more than journalism rises to the rank of literature by being sewn or wired into the sheets of a volume; but some of these essays are a little too obviously newspaperish: some of the soil of the pit whence they were dug still clings to them. To mention such a detail as the retention of the bracketed words "(Macmillans, 3 vols.)," which accompany a reference to Sir James Stephen's Horae Sabbaticae, will perhaps be thought hypercritical; but there can be no objection to pointing out that such a paper as "Alexander Knox and Thomas de Quincey" is journalism naked and apparently not ashamed. What connexion is there between the two men thus linked together? None whatever; but it seems to have happened that new editions of the Memoirs of the one and the Works of the other were published at about the same time, and one Causerie would suffice for both. How was a look of unity to be given to it? In this fashion. Knox was intimately associated with Castle-reagh, to whom the Act of Union between Great Britain and Ireland was largely due; and the final ratification of that Act was witnessed by De Quincey, who happened when a lad of fifteen to be in Ireland as the guest of his friend, Lord Altamont. It is really ingenious, but how painfully unliterary, how palpably mechanical, how aggressively newspaperish! Of course one must remember that even journalists who produce literature sometimes have their subjects chosen for them rather than by them; and then we must needs miss the result of that "self-pleasing," generally as charming in letters as it is frequently disagreeable in life. Still, a writer is not bound to give permanence to his mature pot-boilers any more than to his school prize-essays; and the omission of this paper, and possibly of two or three of its companions, would have been no severe deprivation. Even they, however, are readable; and Mr. Birrell himself says, not altogether unwisely, "by 'excellent' I mean excellent to read."

To few men is it given to be so spontaneously sprightly as our author; fewer still are so happy in keeping their sprightliness urbane. Mr. Birrell can even poke fun urbanely—a difficult feat, which once or twice proved too much for that master of gentlemanly persiflage, Matthew Arnold. Who has forgotten his delicious reference in the first series of Obiter Dicta to Bishop Stubbs and Prof. Freeman as "horny-handed sons of toil," or the sly remark that "Professor Seeley, for reasons of his own, appears to think that... history should be as dull as possible"? Here we have their fellows, as, for example, the passing allusion to "Mr. Lewis Morris and Mr. Lecky, who are, I suppose, our nineteenth-century equivalents for Alexander Pope and Jonathan Swift," and the light pellet of satire thrown in the direction of Mr. Stead and the Nonconformist consciences:

"As for your opinion of Sterne as a man of conduct, is it worth while having one? It is a poor business bludgeoning men who bore the brunt of life a long century ago, and whose sole concern now with the world is to delight it. Laurence Sterne is not standing for Parliament."

I need hardly say that the italics in this and in a previous quotation are not Mr. Birrell's. He does not emphasise his good things, either typographically or otherwise, nor does he lead up to them—a pestilent habit of certain ill-developed humorists. They justify the adverb in his first title, for they always seem to come by the way; witness the reference to the tradition that Richard Cumberland was the original Sir Fretful Plagiary, followed by the grave remark, "On this last point we have the authority of Croker, and there is none better for anything disagreeable." This reads like a sudden thought, its force lies in its unexpectedness; and Mr. Birrell can administer us the same pleasant shock in compliment as well as in satire. "Everyone," he says of the letters of Samuel Johnson, "should add these two volumes to his library," and then gives an entirely new turn to the most hackneyed form of commendation by the happy close—"and if he has not a library, let him begin making one with them." The very thing, surely, that was waiting to be said of some book good enough to deserve it!

Mr. Birrell manages to impart a literary flavour even to an article on "the bona fide traveller" of English law by two pleasant pages about Mrs. Linnet of Janet's Repentance; but with regard both to this and to its companion article on "Parliamentary Candidates," one inclines to ask Géronte's question, "Que diable allait-il faire dans cette galère?" Perhaps the pleasantest papers are the distinctively bookish ones—that is, the papers which deal with books in general rather than with this or that book in particular. Such are "Books, Old and New," "Bookbinding," and "Authors and Critics," to which may be added "Hours in a Library"; for, though it deals mainly with Mr. Leslie Stephen's well known and admirable work, the divagations of the Hours give Mr. Birrell room for some pleasant literary talk at large. It is in this essay that the writer makes the confession,

"Metaphors will, I know, ultimately be my ruin"; but there is no suggestion of ruin in the fine opening passage:

"In the face of the proverb about the pavement of hell, I am prepared to maintain that good resolutions are better than bad, and that evil is the wretch who is not full of good intentions and holy plans at the beginning of each new year. Time, like a fruitful plain, then lies stretched before you; the eye rests on tuneful groves, cool meadow lands, and sedgy streams, whither you propose to wander, and where you promise yourself many happy well-spent hours. I speak in metaphors, of course—pale-faced Londoner that I am; my meadows and streams are not marked upon the map; they are (coming at once to the point, for this is a generation which is only teased by allegory) the old books I mean to read over again during the good year of grace 1894. Yonder stately grove is Gibbon; that thicket, Hobbes; where the light glitters on the green surface (it is black mud below) is Sterne; healthful but penetrating winds stir Bishop Butler's pages and make your naked soul shiver, as you become more and more convinced, the longer you read, that 'someone has blundered,' though whether it is you or your Maker remains, like everything else, unsolved."

Here Mr. Birrell is a little more deliberate; consecutive, and formal than usual; for, as a rule, he is not a sentence-builder, but a lively talker with the pen, as a writer of Causeries should be. Often jauntily colloquial, he can assume the formal symmetry of his friend Dr. Johnson, as when he says of De Quincey that "his style lacks the charm of economy, and his workmanship the dignity of concentration"; but whatever the mere external manner, the individuality, the temperament behind it, is always pleasantly recognisable. The book is, to quote again its author's own words, "excellent to read."

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

The Romance of an Empress: Catherine II. of Russia. From the French of R. Waliszewski. In 2 vols. (Heinemann.)

If there was need of a new Life of the Empress Catherine, M. Waliszewski appears to be, in many respects, a person well fitted to write it. He is familiar with the Russian language, and is thus able to get at the rich accumulation of material to be found in the transactions of the Russian Historical Society and in such magazines as Starina, Istoricheski Viestnik, and Russki Arkhiv. He has the additional qualifications of a highly picturesque style and considerable anecdotal talent. We cannot, therefore, wonder that he has produced a very readable work, and that the press of Western Europe, not indisposed to welcome a book full of Russian scandals, has received it with enthusiasm.

The early history of the great empress belongs, of course, to Germany. We see before us the scheming mother, the dull and respectable father, with his commonplace advice, given in deliciously macaronic German and Figchen (Fieckchen?), and one of the poorest of the poor Teutonic adventuresses, who hastened to the happy hunting grounds of barbarous Russia. The miserable Peter, her future husband, is brought before us, such as he has been shown already in the memoirs of Rulhière, of the Princess Dashkov, and the fragment of autobiography written by Catherine herself. The Empress Elizabeth, in spite of her faults, appears in a more amiable light. We think that M. Waliszewski, in his anxiety to show the difference between the courts of Versailles and St. Petersburg, has somewhat overstated the number of wooden palaces in Russia. Surely, before the arrival of Catherine, Rastrelli and other architects had ornamented the capital with some substantial and handsome stone buildings. When, on other occasions, our author speaks of the magnificence which surrounded the imperial court—as on the southern expedition of Catherine—he goes out of his way to remind us of the misery and squalor of the peasantry upon which that splendour was based. But surely the remark would be equally true of the Court of Louis XV. and of those of many of the petty German tyrants of the time; to say nothing of the deplorable condition of the Polish peasantry, which drew forth the strongest censures from Coxe and other travellers. In what country of Europe, in those days, with the exception, perhaps, of England, could a prosperous and contented peasantry have been found? In this respect, Russia exhibited little that was peculiar.

The portrait of Stanislaus Poniatowski, the Romulus Augustulus of unfortunate Poland, is drawn with great skill, though we are far from assigning him such virtues as our author does. Nor can we accept M. Waliszewski's description of the Princess Dashkov: he quotes from Diderot some not very flattering remarks upon her; but he certainly ought to have added the favourable criticisms of Voltaire. In the same way he attempts to minimise the highly complimentary accounts which Rulhière and other foreigners give of Catherine, by saying that her contemporaries saw her in a sort of mirage. We may rely fully upon the description of her in the travels of the correct and phlegmatic Coxe; and the account which he gives of the impression produced upon him by both her appearance and manners is highly favourable. The Prince de Ligne and Ségur and the Emperor Joseph are equally enthusiastic. "The art of mise en scène, in which she was incomparable," says M. Waliszewski, "has remained a tradition of the court of Russia." He then proceeds to narrate how a Viennese lady saw the Emperor Nicholas on a grand occasion in the latter years of his life. Although disease was making inroads upon him he held himself erect, and was afterwards observed, when the ceremony was over, to sink into a chair overpowered by fatigue. But is the concealment of physical weakness blamable only in an autocrat? Do not the great figures in our own imperial and regal pomp act in a similar way? It was a French royal personage who asked: "Les rois meurent ils?" It was a French and not a Russian emperor, who covered his face with a pigment to hide pallor and emaciation on the day of a terrible battle.

The story of the conspiracy and the fall of the unfortunate Peter has often been told. We do not find that M. Waliszewski adds much that is new. Throughout his book our author, although conceding here and there a word of praise to the empress and her adopted people, takes infinite pains to belittle them. We do not think that either the Turks or the Poles were such feeble adversaries as he would fain have us believe. The literature of the age of Catherine fares no better. We cannot accept the criticisms of M. Waliszewski. Drzghavin is certainly a better poet than our author allows him to be, and we can see by his putting Kheraskov in the same category that he has hardly read their works enough to discriminate justly their merits. But it was a prosaic age; Germany had her Gottsched and Günthers; France was enjoying the commomplaces of the Henriade and the niaiseries of Gentil Bernard. M. Waliszewski has many sneers at Catherine's literary attempts. Whatever they may be, they are certainly not dull. Amid the cares of state she found time to write some pleasant little comedies. She began a translation of the Iliad and made an adaptation of Shakspeare's "Merry Wives of Windsor."

In some of his details of the home life of Catherine the author speaks of her more favourably. He makes use of the diary of her secretary, Khrapovitski, which has now been a long time before the public. Here the Empress appears playful and good-tempered, and is conspicuous for her love of children and animals. Other phases of her life are too well known, and it need scarcely be said that they lose nothing in the hands of M. Waliszewski. To many of us Catherine may appear a mere ambitious woman, careless as to the means she employed to build up her power; but the Russian rightly sees in her a continuator of the grand designs of Peter. She also developed the vast empire which he founded. If here and there she seems unscrupulous in the means she selected, it should be remembered that all creators of powerful nationalities have proceeded on the same lines, be they a Napoleon or a Frederick the Great, or even the Drakes and Clives of our own empire. States are never built up by gentle methods. Bearing these facts in mind, her countrymen may be willing to pardon much in the empress of which they cannot altogether approve. Although M. Waliszewski speaks of the corrupting influence of Catherine, he confesses that she used it mainly for the good of the empire, as she conceived, and that she found in it the resources for the accomplishment of great things. He is willing to accord her praise for the attention she paid to the education of women. "She gave to her undertaking all the breadth and magnificence that we find in all her creations, and that would seem in some sort the natural emanation of herself." A Frenchman, when he writes of the era of Louis XIV., is full of enthusiastic eulogies, and foreign critics allow him to be so without reproof, although we are all aware of the corrupt atmosphere with which the court of that monarch was surrounded. It is only when we read the Memoirs which have come down to us that we realise what an age of moral leprosy it was, and upon what misery of the people its so-called glories were built up. Louis gives a grand series of fêtes, and the country meanwhile is suffering from a famine. On another occasion a dead baby is thrown by the starving parents into his carriage. And good Mme. de Sevigné writes so pleasantly and so jauntily about the cruel treatment of the peasants when the nobles choose to exercise their feudal rights. Let us then be fair. There is no thoughtful Russian who does not read some of the details of the age of Catherine with disgust. It is astonishing to see what is allowed to be published about her; in fact, were it not for the details drawn from Russian historical works, as M. Waliszewski acknowledges in his preface, his book would probably have remained unwritten, or certainly would have lost two-thirds of its charm.

It is a history essentially pour le grand public; most of the details are already familiar to the specialist. Very clever and very bitter as it is, it will no doubt find many readers. The translation is fairly well done, though now and then the English is a little eccentric. It is a pity that the French orthography of the Russian names is kept. This complicates matters; and names fairly familiar to English readers, although in a form already somewhat estropié, are disguised beyond recognition. Thus, the head of the secret police, Sheshkovski, becomes Chechkofski. Many other instances might be cited. The day has passed when Russian names could be treated as a gibberish; and, after all, they are spelled more regularly than our own. Again, does the translator think Dadaïs is a Russian word, or why does he allow the name of Von Visin's clever comedy Nedorosl, "The Minor," to appear in a French form?

W. R. MORFILL.

NEW NOVELS.

In an Alpine Valley. By G. Manville Fenn. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

An Ancient Ancestor. By Charles E. Hall. In 3 vols. (Skeffington.)

The Hampstead Mystery. By Florence Marryat. In 3 vols. (Whito.)

The Luck of Gerard Ridgeley. By Bertram Mitford. (Chatto & Windus.)

One in Charity. By Silas K. Hocking. (Frederick Warne.)

St. Wynfrith and its Inmates. By Evelyn Everett-Green. (Jarrold.)

The Face of Death. By E. Vincent Britton. (Seeley.)

Come Back from the Dead. By Christopher Howard. (Digby, Long & Co.)

In an Alpine Village is one of Mr. Manville Fenn's very best novels; and the fact that some of its incidents are a little improbable will not militate against its popularity. The author is an adept at constructing a good plot, whose details follow naturally upon one another until the climax is reached. One thing only we should feel inclined to take objection to: the apparent inadequacy of motive on the part of the irascible old Colonel Denton, in holding certain letters in terrorem over Lord Desborough. His lordship is a rising young statesman, who has committed a serious mistake in writing two compromising letters to an Indian Princess, which must be recovered at any cost. Accordingly he employs his legal adviser, Laurence Anderson, to proceed to Switzerland, bribing him heavily to wring them out of the Colonel, by fair means or foul. So in a lovely Alpine valley the whole of the action of the story takes place. Laurence Anderson is a thorough-paced villain; and when he comes up with the Colonel, and finds that he has a bewitching daughter, he lays diabolical traps to compel her to marry him. He does not find the work easy, however; for a stalwart young Englishman, Adam Deane, has already made an impression on her heart, and she remains true to him through the most painful trials. Descriptions of avalanches and snowstorms, with hair-breadth escapes from the jaws of death, occupy a considerable portion of the narrative. Anderson fails to discover, after much espionage, that the Colonel keeps the compromising letters of which he is in search in his cigar case. But he still remains on the alert; and as Adam Deane stands in his way with regard to Hester, one day when they are out on the mountains he pushes his rival over a precipice, and imagines that he has seen the last of him. Deane, however, miraculously survives, and confronts his enemy just before the latter meets with a horrible death. All things are adjusted, and even Lord Desborough finally marries the Princess. Adam and Hester are united, as also are Deane's friend Frant—a really fine fellow—and the Colonel's sister, Mrs. Lindley. The interest is well maintained to the end; the characters are drawn with vigour; and there is the true local colour in the Alpine scenery. Altogether the novel is one of the most entertaining of the season.

There is a good deal of genuine comedy in An Ancient Ancestor; but what will the Scotch and Irish claimants of Ossian say when they find that Mr. Hall has laid irreverent hands upon the great Gaelic poet? However, the story of the Macpherson imbroglio is made the groundwork for a very bright and amusing novel of the present day. All the incidents occur within the brief period of three weeks. Hugh Fergusson and his sister Malvina claim to be descendants of Ossian. They were born at Clachaig, on the west coast of the Isle of Arran, which tradition assigns as the last resting-place of the bard. It is in this spot that nearly the whole action of the novel lies. Malvina is a divine creature, and her beauty quite captivates Bernard Drake, who, it must be confessed, has first made her acquaintance in an underhand manner. She also begins to feel in return an affection for him, and a number of art lessons of which she is the recipient tend to foster it. Then, suddenly, the nature of the trick by which he made her acquaintance is borne in upon her, and she suffers from a severe revulsion of feeling. But her heart has been too deeply touched to allow of a final separation, and after a period of penance the lover is forgiven, and all ends joyously. So much for the modern story, but there is a good deal about the far older traditions associated with Ossian. His remains are searched for, as well as the inestimable manuscripts and treasures which he is reputed to have left behind him. When the MSS. are discovered, and indeed before, Dr. Johnson is severely trounced for his disbelief in Ossian and all his works. One well-drawn character in the book is the pretended James Macpherson, an alleged descendant of the Macpherson, but in reality a robber who trades upon his knowledge of the treasures of Clachaig, and who meets with a terrible death while endeavouring to unearth them. The local colour of this story is very true to the beautiful Arran scenery it attempts to depict—scenery quite familiar to the present writer. This description of a landscape on the east coast is most accurate:—

"The greatest charm of the Brodick view lies in its colouring. Surely such depths and shades and subtle gradations of tints were never before extracted from the pigments of Dame Nature's paint-box! The dense greens and changing browns, the tawny oranges and the glowing purples; the warm red of the sandstone rocks along the shore and the dazzling white of the scattered homesteads among the fields; these, coupled with the glorious azure of the sky above and the sapphire blue of the sunlit sea below, make up a perfect kaleidoscope of colour, which bursts on the astonished gaze of a new arrival with all the brilliancy of a transformation scene—so great is the contrast presented betwixt the Ayrshire and the Arran coasts, although a narrow strip of sea alone divides them."

The first volume of The Hampstead Mystery reads rather tamely, but Miss Marryat makes up for it by plenty of excitement in the second and third. Henry Hindes, the partner of a city merchant named Crampton, is desperately in love with his partner's young and beautiful daughter Jenny. Hindes is already married, but that is a mere detail. However, he conceals his love for Miss Jenny until she has made a runaway marriage with her Papist lover Frederick Walcheren. The Cramptons are stricken down by the blow; for, besides the shame of the escapade, they hate Popery like poison. Accordingly, they commission Hindes to fetch back their erring daughter, on condition that she leaves her husband for ever. Hindes comes up with them at Dover. Walcheren is away from the Lord Warden Hotel bathing, and his fair spouse is taking a walk on the cliffs. Hindes discovers her, and in the course of their conversation Mrs. Walcheren expresses her bitter hatred of him. Unable to control his rage at seeing her affection for Walcheren, he gives her a push over the cliffs. Her dead body is afterwards discovered, and there are some realistic scenes at the inquest. Walcheren was deeply attached to his wife, and altogether he turns out a better character than we should have expected from his antecedents. The mystery of the fall over the cliffs is never explained, but remorse begins to gnaw at the soul of Hindes, and his wretched but faithful wife discovers his secret. Everything is done to preserve it, but although Hindes takes large doses of morphia to drown his remorse, life becomes an insupportable burden. At length he wanders into the confessional box of a Roman Catholic Church, and makes a clean breast of everything. Now comes the chief dramatic situation in the novel. The priest proves to be the husband of the woman he has murdered! The seal of the confessional prevents Walcheren from taking his revenge, but he threatens to pursue the guilty man to his death. How he is dissuaded from carrying out this threat, and how Hindes in the end perishes miserably, we must leave the reader to discover for himself. Miss Marryat knows how to tell a story well. The best thing in The Hampstead Mystery is the recovery of Walcheren to a good and honourable life, by the wholesome influence of a woman he had previously wronged.

Mr. Bertram Mitford is one of the most spirited writers of the school of Mr. Rider Haggard. When he deals with South African life he not only writes con amore, but has evidently a thorough knowledge of the country and the natives. The Luck of Gerard Ridgeley, a tale of the Zulu border, has more than one scene of thrilling interest, which the author makes his readers realise most vividly. Two young Englishmen, Gerard Ridgeley and Harry Maitland, finding the old country too small for them, go out to South Africa to seek their fortunes. Gerard is bright, cheerful, and capable, and willing to turn his hand to anything; and he ultimately makes his way, though he passes through some terrible experiences first. Maitland is careless and lackadaisical and afraid of roughing it. He takes to frequenting bar-rooms and falls so low that his father peremptorily recalls him home. The trekking expedition which Ridgeley undertook with John Dawes, the transport rider, is powerfully described. They fall into the hands of a hostile native tribe, and are just about to be tortured to death when they are saved by Cetewayo. Ridgeley had rendered a service to the latter some months before, and this practically saves his life and that of his friend Dawes. Ridgeley is a manly young fellow, and he well deserves his success as well as his bride that is to be, the pretty May Kingsland.

One in Charity is a touching story of Cornish life. It has a religious tone, without being in the least degree canting. Two or three plots run side by side all through. One of them concerns the stalwart, upright young miner, Will Saxon, who, after experiences in both hemispheres, settles down in his native town, of which he becomes the most important person. He marries his early love, though he was just within an ace of losing her. Saxon's sister Ruth marries the Calvinistic minister, Penrose; but as she does not believe his hard creed, he attributes to her his want of success in the ministry. No matter how he comforts the elect and threatens the rest with hell, he has no success; so he flies from the field in despair. By trial and suffering he is brought to see that his wife's religion of love is the better way. The Vicar of Penleaz has already learnt the lesson, as have also some of the free-thinkers of the town. A terrible fever in Penleone brings out more real Christianity in the differing sects than ever they had exhibited before. They all discover that "to do good is nobler and more Christ-like than bolstering up a creed." As one of the characters roughly puts it, "Hell-fire don't stand no chance agin love." There is a very pathetic incident, where a lover sacrifices himself to save the life of his rival. High and truly catholic sentiments abound in this story.

An almshouse seems a very unlikely place to go to for romance; but Miss Everett-Green shows that it is possible even here to find incidents and emotions common to humanity. Her sketch of St. Wynfrith has many merits, not the least of which is the skilful delineation of character. The sad story of Sarah Trench has interest for higher circles than that in which she moved, and in which underhand scheming and vilification are by no means uncommon. Of course, in this sketch there is something besides almshouse life. The experiences of Lady Artingale are very touching, while those of Molly Wybrow are no less entertaining.

A higher literary finish is apparent in Mr. Briton's Westmoreland story, The Face of Death, than is the case as regards most of the other works upon our list. There is also more power generally, and a greater capacity for describing natural scenery vividly. Those who are acquainted with the Lake district will acknowledge that its features are faithfully portrayed in these pages. There is real interest, too, in the story of Alan Wyke and the way in which he is saved from making shipwreck of life; and also in the history of little Rizpah Rae, who is consumed by her love for humankind, and anxious to do something to alleviate the world's heavy load of misery. This is a bracing and morally helpful book.

There is an ultrasensational conclusion to Come Back from the Dead. Mrs. de Lacy Bruen is a fascinating lady who has led a chequered career. At the end of her deeds and misdeeds, and just when she is going to marry Sir Hugh Girtton, she dies. At least, she is given up for dead, but is really buried in a trance; and when the hand of Cupidity breaks open her coffin to secure a valuable ring which is buried with her, the spell is broken, and she returns to life. Sir Hugh marries her, but we think the law would have had something to say concerning the death of her first husband. However, one must not be too critical in these matters. The story, as a whole, has plenty of movement.

G. BARNETT SMITH.

SOME BOOKS OF TRAVEL.

To Gipsyland. By E. R. Pennell. (Fisher Unwin.) This is rather a disappointing book. The title is so attractive that, perhaps, the reader is led to expect more than can be fairly demanded from any writer dealing with the Romany of Eastern Europe. The subject of the gipsy (like Roman Law) has "clothed the walls of such spacious libraries" that little new can now be said. Unfortunately, all this mass of literature comes from the pen of Gorgios. Even the ever-delightful Borrow was himself an outsider. Like our own agricultural labourer, the gipsy still lacks an historian sprung from his own people. The Lovells, the Stanleys, the Coopers, and the Lees seem to be too profitably employed otherwise. The book under review consists of 240 pages, of which the first 113 might well have been omitted. Descriptions of Buda Pesth and first impressions of gipsy music soon pall on the reader. Mrs. Pennell is at her best when she is in pursuit of the gipsy in Transylvania. Her enthusiasm for the down-trodden Romany is sincere, and her manner of expressing it lively enough. Here is her picture of the Transylvanian gipsy of to-day, who has sunk to be a hewer of wood and drawer of water:

"But these were not gipsy tents, their huts burrowed deep into the ground, with walls and roof of wood and mortar, thatched with corn shucks. These were not tents to be thrown over the horse's back, or strapped under the van, where the cold blasts from the mountains gave the signal for the journey down into the lowland and far away to the south. For the gipsies living in them, though they ran naked like so many savages of the desert, had given up for ever the old, sweet free life when they wandered at will and knew no man for master. They had come many years ago to squat, as we would say, upon the great lord's estate, and he had let them stay, only exacting a day's work in every week from each grown man. The peasants in '48 may have been freed, but the gipsies in gipsyland have become slaves in their place, though many a Romany chaf followed Kossuth into the field against the hated Austrian."

The illustrations, by Mr. Joseph Pennell, form the main attraction of the book. They are numerous and good.

How I Shot my Bears; or, Two Years' Tent Life in Kullu and Lahoul. By Mrs. R. H. Tyacke. (Sampson Low.) As giving an account of regions little known save to English sportsmen, and certainly little traversed by English ladies, this is an interesting record of travel. The huge glaciers and mountain scenery of Lahoul are vividly painted, and the cheerfulness of the authoress under every kind of trial from servants and snow, fatigue, insects, and privation, is unabated throughout. Mrs. Tyacke's expedition offered a chance of examining the Buddhist monasteries and the manners of the natives, and these she has made the most of. Indeed, she is a most intelligent traveller and possesses a pleasant style, so that persons who do not in the least care how she shot her bears will enjoy the narrative. A map and illustrations still further assist the reader who is desirous of visiting these Himalayan scenes under Mrs. Tyacke's care. Although bears form the staple of the book, and the authoress and her husband are "in gloomy spirits" if no bears are seen, while "words cannot paint her disappointment" when he misses a bear, even a sportsman's instincts somewhat recoil at a lady who took pleasure in shooting a bear and her cubs together, and who styles the former "the old lady," just as the panther becomes frequently "Spots" in these pages. On another occasion we can better sympathise with her when she stalks and shoots a very fine bear without her husband's aid. Her account of a tame snow-leopard and of the Lahoul sheep laden with rice is curious. The measurements of the largest deodar tree found in India make an English tree-grower envious. At six feet from the ground it was thirty-eight feet six inches in circumference, preserving these dimensions for a height of about forty feet. The book will well repay reading; and a lady's pen is every here and there amusingly apparent, as when Mrs. Tyacke writes that her beaters could never learn to track a covey of chikors, "and we could never, never impress it on them."

Tales of a Nomad; or, Sport and Strife. By Charles Montague. (Longmans.) The author of these hairbreadth escapes from wild beasts and savages announces them to be "the pith of his experiences and nothing more." He does not waste words in his ten adventurous chapters, but is terse and vigorous. Two or three sentences enable the reader to realise to the full South African scenery and rivers. Borneo affords scope for many sporting exploits. The storming of Secocoeni's stronghold, and the siege of Marabastadt by the Boers, abound with graphic instances of irregular warfare. It is not pleasant, however, to read of the commandant succeeding in raiding six hundred head of cattle and shooting more than thirty of the enemy (Basutos), "in revenge for the death of" a trooper who had been killed by the latter in fair warfare. Mr. Montague, like almost all who shoot big game, is at times somewhat callous to the sufferings of his quarry. He "takes a steady shot at the liver of a buffalo, thinking that if he was a trifle too high he should break its back," and then, running up, sees that the animal "is done for, for he lay on his flank, and was banging the ground with his horns." With these deductions the volume forms an excellent account of sport in South African localities, where day by day game is fast disappearing, and has entirely disappeared from districts which Gordon Cumming saw teeming with all kinds of animals. The author's adventures while shooting wild elephants are thrilling. This form of sport is as dangerous as shooting tigers afoot in the open. The account of the dismay caused by the first donkey ever seen near Delagoa Bay is amusing, and so is the scene of Caffre divination. Mr. Montague does not shine as a classical scholar, as when he writes "cura post sedet imperatorem," and talks of the Athenians gallantly defending Thermopylae. It may be hoped, too, that the scene of administering justice in Borneo is somewhat highly coloured.

Letters of Travel. By Phillips Brooks. (Macmillans.) These letters of the late Bishop of Massachusetts relate to two journeys of more than a year's duration, taken in 1865-66 and in 1882-83, and to shorter summer trips. They are records of travel in Europe, India, and Japan, and across the continent of America to San Francisco, addressed to members of his own family. The writer kept to the beaten track, and there is nothing now in his experiences, or in his descriptions of the countries he visited. The charm of the letters lies in their almost childlike simplicity, and in the entire absence of conceit. Those who have had the good fortune to hear Phillips Brooks, and remember his powerful physique and striking mannerisms, will be surprised with this glimpse of what must have been a delightful character. Writing to a sick child from Trento in 1883, the late Bishop thus expresses himself:

"Only you must be in a great hurry and get well, because you see it is only five weeks from to-day that I shall expect to see you in the dear old study in Clarendon-street, where we have had such a lot of good times together before now. Just think of it! We'll set the music box a-going, and light all the gaslights in the house, and get my doll out of her cupboard, and dress Toot [the Bishop's little niece] up in a red pocket handkerchief and stand her up on the study table, and make her give three cheers! and we'll have some gingerbread and lemonade" (p. 317).

In epistolary literature we have never read anything more playful or charming than the Bishop's letters to "Gertie." How he envies the little Tyrolese girls their health and strength, because he wants "to steal half of it, and send it home in a box to Gertie." After reading this book we look forward with pleasure to the Life of Phillips Brooks, which is to be published shortly.

WE may here mention briefly the International Album-Guide, for the use of travellers and tourists, edited and published by Mr. Alfred Brocas. Setting aside the advertisements—which, by the way, are certainly not more offensive than those contained in certain popular papers we could mention—it consists of descriptions of health resorts, watering places, &c., in England and on the Continent, with superabundant illustrations. The descriptions are written both in English and in (very correct) French. The illustrations, which are all reproduced from photographs, vary in merit. Some of the full-page plates are admirable: we may particularly notice those of Nice and Naples. There is also an interesting photograph of the Tower Bridge, which would be an ornament to any book. The Riviera and Algiers receive perhaps excessive attention. In a subsequent issue, we would suggest the inclusion of St. Jean de Luz and San Sebastian, Palermo and Catania.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MRS. TYNDALL would be much indebted to any correspondents of the late Prof. Tyndall who have preserved his letters, if they would kindly lend them to her for use in the preparation of his biography. Any letters thus lent should be sent to her at Hind Head House, Haslemere, and will be returned safely to their owners.

MESSRS. W. H. ALLEN & Co. have in the press a History of the Portuguese in India, by Mr. F. C. Danvers, superintendent of records at the India Office, who officially visited Lisbon two or three years ago, to report upon documents in the Portuguese archives relating to India. Scarcely anything has been written in English upon this subject since the translation of Asia Portuguesa (1649), though the late Dr. A. C. Burnell is known to have made considerable collections for the purpose. The present author has made use, not only of the standard Portuguese histories, but also of the records that have recently been printed at Lisbon and at Goa. His work will be published in two volumes, with maps and illustrations.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. have in the press an authorised translation, in four volumes, of Prof. Adolf Holm's History of Greece, extending from the earliest times to the destruction of Greek independence.

MESSRS. WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS announce a posthumous work by the late Prof. William Minto, entitled Literature under the Georges.

MESSRS. LONGMANS will publish an account of the recent expedition to the Antarctic regions on board a Dundee Whaler, written and illustrated by Mr. W. G. Burn Murdoch. Scientific notes are contributed by the naturalists of the expedition.

A SELECTION from the poems of A. H. Clough will shortly be published, as a new volume in the "Golden Treasury" series.

MR. HALDEN PIKE'S Life of John Cassell will be issued by Messrs. Cassell & Co. during the course of the present month.

THE next volume in the series of "Heroes of the Nations" will be Cicero; and the Fall of the Roman Republic, by Mr. J. L. Strachan-Davidson.

THE chief feature in the thirty-first issue of The Statesman's Year Book, to be published immediately by Messrs. Macmillan & Co., will be an entirely new treatment of the great navies of the world, contributed by Mr. John Leyland. All the sections relating to fleets in the several countries have been re-cast on a uniform plan, so as to permit a comparative view. Statements are given of ships in course of construction, and of those that have only been ordered to be laid down; and also detailed descriptions of the principal types of vessels.

A NEW book by Mr. R. C. Hope, entitled Mediaeval Music, an Historical Sketch with Musical Illustrations, will be published immediately by Mr. Elliot Stock.

The Last Thirty-Six Years of the Kingdom of Naples is the title of an historical work, dealing with the unification and consolidation of Italy since 1824, by Niccola Nisco, which is now being translated for publication in England by her niece, Helene Gingold. Seven Stones, the last of Miss Gingold's books, has recently been added to the English collection in Queen Margherita's library.

THE proprietors of the London and China Telegraph will publish in April a descriptive dictionary of Malaya, based mainly on the standard work of Crawford, which, however, extended to the entire archipelago, whereas this will be confined to the Straits Settlements and the protected Native States. Much use also has been made of the Journal of the Straits Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society. The arrangement is in alphabetical order, giving notices not only of every village and river, but also of aboriginal tribes, their manners and customs, jungle products, natural history, &c.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co. will shortly publish an adventure story, entitled The Temple of Death. The scene is laid in a native state in Southern India; and the ritual of an obscure religious sect, the worshippers of Yama, the Hindu God of Death, is made the basis of the story. It will also contain descriptions of the archaeological remains, rock inscriptions, cave temples hewn out of the solid rock, and colossal images, which exist in Southern India in considerable numbers.

THE anniversary meeting of the Royal Historical Society is to be held at 20, Hanover-square on Thursday next, at 5.30 p.m., when Sir Mountstuart E. Grant Duff will deliver his presidential address. It will be proposed to elect the Earl of Rosebery, Prof. Max Müller, and Prof. H. F. Pelham, as vice-presidents; and also the following as members of council: Mr. Hubert Hall, Mr. I. S. Leadam, Prof. F. W. Maitland, Mr. C. Oman, and Prof. Tout.

THE Friday evening discourse at the Royal Institution next week will be delivered by Prof. John Nichol (late of Glasgow), on "Bacon's Key to Nature."

THE vernacular press of Wales is at present very active. Among other things issuing from it should be mentioned a History of the Baptist Denomination, with an Introduction on the Ancient Church of the Kymry. The author is the Rev. J. S. James, of Llandudno, and the publisher is Mr. W. M. Evans, of Carmarthen. Judging from the three first numbers of the first volume, the work is to be on a considerable scale, and it appears to meet with a very hearty reception. It touches inevitably on much contentious matter, and we shall doubtless hear soon what the historians of the Established Church think of it. In the meantime, the author is in full possession of the courage of his opinions.

MR. AND MRS. TREGASKIS, of the Caxton Head, High Holborn, have issued another of their sale catalogues, made valuable by numerous illustrations. These include facsimiles (presumably done by Mr. William Griggs) of bindings, of MSS., of title-pages, of old prints, and of a letter of Charles Lamb.

We are surprised at the low price asked for a (restored) copy of the First Folio of Shakspeare.

AT the moment of going to press, we hear of the sudden death of Mr. R. M. Ballantyne, the well-known writer of boys' books. He lived at Harrow, but it was at Tivoli that he died.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

A SUMMARY of the recommendations of the Royal Commission on a Teaching University for London has been published this week, filling nearly two and a half columns of the Times. Put as briefly as possible, it is proposed to merge the existing University of London in a new university, made up of four constituent bodies. These are: (1) The Senate, consisting of 65 members, of whom 31 in all are to be elected by the other constituent bodies, and the rest nominated either by the crown or by certain public institutions; (2) the Academic Council, consisting of 15 members elected by the Faculties; (3) the Faculties and Boards of Studies, consisting of all the professors, &c., both of the university itself and of the recognised Schools; (4) the Convocation, consisting of the present graduates and of future graduates of three years' standing, subject to payment of fees. The supreme governing authority is vested in the Senate, while the chief duties of the Academic Council are to recognise teachers and to determine curricula of study and examination. Certain institutions are enumerated as Schools of the university, including theological colleges and colleges of music; and it is expressly provided that no institution outside the limits of London shall be admitted in the future. As regards the examinations, a distinction is drawn between internal and external students; but for both classes the final examinations for the first degree must be, so far as possible, identical. Nothing is suggested in this summary of recommendations about the name of the university, about Gresham College, or about the provision of funds.

THE council of the Senate at Cambridge have issued a report in favour of post-graduate study. It is proposed to establish two new degrees, those of Bachelor of Letters and Bachelor of Science, open to graduates either of Cambridge or of other "recognised" universities, who shall have given evidence that they have pursued at Cambridge for at least one year a course of advanced study or research, and shall also have presented an original dissertation for approval by the board of studies. We believe that a similar scheme is at present under consideration at Oxford.

IN Convocation at Oxford, next Tuesday, it will be proposed to grant £25 to the Eastern Libraries Research Fund, which has been instituted, under the auspices of the theological faculty, to send out scholars to examine and report upon the MSS. in the convent of St. Catherine on Mount Sinai.

IT appears that the sole endowment of the Bampton Lecture at Oxford is a farm in Buckinghamshire. Owing to the necessity for heavy capital expenditure upon this farm, a debt has been incurred amounting to about £775. Under these circumstances, it has been decided to suspend the appointment of a lecturer for three alternate years, beginning with 1896. A similar measure was adopted about sixty years ago.

THE University of Oxford has accepted the sum of £103—subscribed in memory of the late Hugh Russell Welsh, of Trinity—as the endowment of a prize for the encouragement of the study of human anatomy, and, in particular, of the art of drawing in relation thereto.

THE Rev. Dr. A. F. Mitchell has announced his intention of resigning the chair of ecclesiastical history at St. Andrews, which he has held for more than twenty years. He was originally appointed professor of Hebrew as long ago as 1848.

PROF. ALTHAUS announces a third series of free evening lectures on "German Literature" at University College, of which the first is to be given on Wednesday next. The lectures will be given in German; and the subjects are—"Das deutsche Volkslied," "Die Brüder Wilhelm und Alexander von Humboldt," "Der Orientalismus in der deutschen Literatur," and "Die patriotischen Dichter in 19ten Jahrhundert."

ORIGINAL VERSE.

BROUGHT BACK FROM THE SEA.

You sailed away o'er a southern sea,
And ever I watched the wind and the sky,
And ever I prayed as the days went by,
That God would have mercy and bring you home.

O love! my love, if prayer can avail,
You were guarded from danger upon the deep;
For I was watching, though all were asleep,
Watching and praying to Heaven for you.

There are many go down in ships to the sea,
And she gathers them closely in her embrace,
And empty for all time must be the place
Of those she thus kisses on forehead and lip.

But you; you were watching the waves at play,
Bright blue waves with their crests of foam,
Did your heart for an instant ever turn home?
Did you think of me once on that southern sea?

On that southern sea, in that land of flowers,
My soul went with you, and time stood still,
My one prayer "Guard him from danger and ill,
Save him and bless him; and what though the sea

Should I mighty and terrible rise in her wrath;
Thou stillest the wind; Thou canst quiet the wave,

To Thee, Lord, I turn, for Thou only canst save
This soul of my soul who is out on the deep."

Did God hear my prayer, for he brought you home?
Brought you back from the pitiless sea,
You, who have never a thought to me,
Praying and watching when all were asleep.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Expositor for January opens with Dr. Bruce's able exposition of St. Paul's conception of the Holy Spirit, to which he connects a reply to those who would represent the apostle as indifferent to the historical Christ. Mr. Lock concludes his interesting and gracefully written papers on the Agrapha, or sayings of Christ not recorded in the Gospels. The closing passages, however devoutly thought, strike us as somewhat obscure. Sir J. W. Dawson continues his essays on the Bible and science, which contain many startling statements about an "Egyptian graduate" who edited the words of Moses, and the mythical representation of the antediluvian patriarchs in the Egyptian Hor-shes, or followers of Horus. Prof. Nestle discourses learnedly on the question whether καὶ ἰδύσεν, Matt. i. 25, means "and he called" (i.e., Joseph) or "and she called" (i.e., Mary). Mr. John Watson speaks, or preaches, on one of the "premier ideas" of Jesus. Prof. Dods gives an excellent survey of recent books. Prof. Ramsey continues his reply to Mr. F. V. Chase; he "now enters on the real subject, viz.,—Is the South Galatian theory right or wrong." Learned and impressive, of course, he is; but he admits having written parts of his first reply in hot haste, and still forgets that other persons can be sensitive besides himself.

THE LIEDERHANDSCHRIFT AT JENA.

IT will interest readers of the ACADEMY to hear that the unique and very valuable "Liederhandschrift," preserved in the University Library of Jena, is to be published, as soon as a sufficient number of subscribers is secured. The edition—which is to be executed after an improved method of photo-lithographic reproduction, by which an exact copy of the MS. will be obtained—bids fair to replace the original so far as scientific purposes are concerned, since great care will be taken that even in all matters of minutest detail a close imitation of the MS. may be secured. Apart from its importance for philology, as an early document of Middle High German, the "Liederhandschrift" is of a special interest for students of the history of music; for the various Lieder it contains are accompanied by musical notes, the earliest of their kind on record.

The facsimile, of which only a limited number of copies will be issued, will contain 266 leaves, large folio, the price being 150 marks. Further particulars may be obtained from Dr. Müller, head librarian of the university library. I may be allowed to express a hope that the enterprise will meet with such encouragement and support as to insure success.

F.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BAZIN, René. Les Italiens d'aujourd'hui. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
BRANDEN, J. F. v. den. Reproductions d'anciennes gravures d'orfèvrerie hollandaise. 2e Partie. Balthasar Sylvius (1550–1570). The Hague: Nijhoff. 25 fl.
CLAPARÈDE, A. de. A travers le monde: de ci, de là. Paris: Fischbacher. 3 fr. 50 c.
DIRCKX, G. Marokko. Materialien zur Kenntnis u. Beurtheilg. des Scherfenreiches u. der Marokko-Frage. Berlin: Cronbach. 3 M.
DUCRET, E. Comment se fait la politique. Les dessous de l'affaire Norton. Paris: Chaumel. 3 fr. 50 c.
FOUCART, G. Madagascar: commerce, colonisation. Paris: Challamel. 3 fr. 50 c.
FUSTES, Ch. L'Année des poètes. 4e Vol. 1893. Paris: Fischbacher. 10 fr.
GJERTZ, Mme Marie. L'Enthousiasme: roman. Paris: Gaume. 8 fr.
KATALOG der Musikbibliothek Peters. 1. u. 2. Abth. Leipzig: Peters. 18 M.
LAFORTE, A. Emile Zola: l'homme et l'œuvre. Paris: Laperle. 3 fr. 50 c.
MASSAJA, G. I miei trentacinque anni di missione nell'alta Etiopia. Vol. XL. Milan: Hoepli. 12 fr.
MÜLLES, G. A. Seesenheim, wie es ist u. der Streit üh. Friederike Brion, Goethes Jüngstlieb. Buhl: Konkordia. 8 M.
ROUTIER, L. Guillaume II. à Londres et l'Union Franco-Russe. Paris: Le Soulier. 3 fr. 50 c.
YUNO, Emile. Sous le ciel breton (impressions de voyage). Paris: Fischbacher. 5 fr.

HISTORY, ETC.

- FOUCARD, P., et JULES FINOT. La Défense nationale dans le Nord de 1792 à 1802. Paris: Lechevalier. 30 fr.
GAILLY DE FADRINE, Ch. La Nation Canadienne. Paris: Plon. 3 fr. 50 c.
GIBY, A. Manuel de diplomatique. Diplômes et chartes, chronologie technique etc. Paris: Hachette. 20 fr.
MONUMENT section IV. Constitutions et acts publics impérial et regum. Tom. I. DCCCXXI.—MCCXCVII. Ed. L. Weiland. Hannover: Hahn. 21 M.
NOEL, Octave. Histoire du commerce du monde. T. II. Depuis les découvertes maritimes du XVe siècle jusqu'à la Révolution de 1789. Paris: Plon. 20 fr.
BRUNAN, E. Histoire du peuple d'Israël. T. V et dernier. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 7 fr. 50 c.
VILLARS, Marquis de. Mémoires de la Cour d'Espagne de 1679 à 1681, publiés et annotés par A. Morel-Fatio. Paris: Plon. 8 fr.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- CAMUS, G. Monographie des Orchidées de France. Paris: Lechevalier. 40 fr.
JOURIN, L. Faune française: les Némertiens. Paris: Soc. d'éditions scientifiques. 15 fr.
ROTHLITZ, A. E. geologischer Querschnitt durch die Ost-Alpen. Stuttgart: Schweizerbart. 10 M.
SPRENGER, Ch. C. Das entdeckte Geheimnis der Natur im Bau u. in der Befruchtung der Blumen. Festschrift der Ausg. v. 1793. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 8 M.

PHILOLOGY.

- BIBLIOTHEK der Angelsächsischen Poesie. Neu bearb. v. R. P. Wülke. C. 2. Bd. 2. Hälfte. Leipzig: Wigand. 18 M.
DECUATINS, C. Néoromanische Chrestomathie. 1. Bd. Surselvisch, Subelvisch, Sursettsch. 2. Lig. Das 18. Jahrh. Erlangen: Junge. 9 M.
HUBFNER, F. De Plauti comœdiarum exemplia atticis quaestiones maxime chronologicae. Göttingen: Dieterich. 1 M. 50 Pf.
KAPPEL, M. Aristoteles-Lexikon. Erklärung der philosoph. termini technici d. Aristoteles. Paderborn: Schöningh. 1 M. 50 Pf.
LUTKE, C. Pherecydes. Göttingen: Dieterich. 1 M. 20 Pf.
POZNANSKI, S. Beiträge zur Geschichte der hebr. Sprachwissenschaft. 1. Berlin: Calvary. 2 M. 20 Pf.
WESTERWICK, O. De Plutarchi studiis Hesiodicis. Minden: Körber. 1 M. 20 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ON AN ANCIENT POSTURE OF PRAYER.

London: Jan. 21, 1894.

The only postures of Christian prayer mentioned in the New Testament are those of prostration (see Matt. xxvi. 39; Mark xiv. 35), kneeling (see Luke xxii. 41; Acts vii. 60; ix. 40; xx. 36; xxi. 5; Eph. iii. 14), and simply standing (Mark xi. 25). But the early Christians often prayed standing, with the arms extended horizontally. The object was, of course, to imitate the position of Christ upon the cross. For this see Tertullian and other authorities cited in Smith's Dictionary of Christian Antiquities, s.v. Prayer. As the Christian martyrs doubtless prayed at their consummation, death, the same posture was sometimes adopted by those witnesses. See, for instance, Eusebius, Hist. eccl., viii. 7:

Ἐώρας γοῦν ἡλικίαν οὐδ' ὄλων ἐτῶν εἰκοσι, δίχα δεσμῶν ἐστῶτος νέου, καὶ τὰς μὲν χεῖρας ἐραπλοῦντος εἰς σταυροῦ τύπον . . . ταῖς πρὸς τὸ θεῖον σχολαί-τατα τεταμένους ἰσχύαις.

Further information on this subject will be found in M. Le Blant's Les Actes des Martyrs, 1883, § 100, and in Prof. Ramsay's The Church in the Roman Empire, p. 421.

It has not, I think, been observed that the same or a similar practice existed in the mediaeval Irish Church. Its technical name was crois-fhigill, literally "cross-vigil," which is thus explained by O'Clery in his Glossary, printed at Louvain in 1643:

"urnaighthe no faire doni duine ar a ghlúinibh oen a lámha sínte a gcois"—"a prayer or a vigil which one makes on one's knees, with one's hands stretched out in (i.e., so as to form) a cross."

The word is of frequent occurrence in early Irish literature. The following examples will suffice—the first is from a MS. of the ninth century:

"Cumgabail inna lám hi crosfigill, is é briathar lám insin, 7 is é, briathar súle dano a cumgabail suas dochum úd, 7 is é briathar glunne 7 chos a fillud fri slechtan, 7 is é briathar choirp dano intan roichther do Dia oc slechtan 7 chros[fhigill]."

"The uplifting of the hands in cross-vigil, that is the hands' word, and this, then, is the eyes' word, uplifting them unto God, and this is the word of knees and legs, bending them to genuflexion, and this is the body's word, when it is directed to God in genuflexion and cross-vigil."—Il Codice Irlandese dell' Ambrosiana, ed. Ascoli, p. 575.

The next example is from a MS. written about 1150:

Gnim* casil, cros[fhigill], sleachtain, urnaighthi idan,
a dera (ad cen édaíl, buaid Beogain [log. Bécáin] cen (chuit ci) nad.

"Building a stone-wall, cross-vigil, genuflexion, pure prayer, his tears (flowing) from him without gain, were the virtue of Bécáin without a whit of crime."—Book of Leinster, p. 358, left margin.

* For Gnim the lithographic facsimile of the Book of Leinster has the nonsensical Snim; but see the Martyrology of Donegal, edd. Todd and Reeves, p. 94.

In the same MS., p. 371, col. 3, l. 43, "Crosa-igell co toe"—"Cross-vigil, with silence," occurs as one of the usages (gnáthaigthe) of the school of Senechell.

The next three examples are from a MS. of the fourteenth century:

"Is aire sin noco dentar isna lathibsea sléchtana na crosfigell ic einaigthe 7 noco nforchoimetaither riagla na n-áinted ngradaeh."—"Therefore it is that on those days (the fifty days from Pasch to Quinquagesima) no one performs genuflexions nor cross-vigil when praying, and the rules of the graded fasts are not observed" (Leabar Brecc, 54b, 63).

In the Second Vision of Adamnán, Leabar Brecc, p. 259a, 56, the term is applied to the attitude of Moses during the defeat of the Amalekites:

"Intan conébad Moysi a lámú hi crosfigill fri Dia nomuided forsna genntib. Intan immorro noléed is la thobc nomhuided for a muinntir fesin, conid desin dobertha aige arda fo a doibh coru scaich slaide na ngéantí."—"Whenever Moses would hold up his hands to God in cross-vigil defeat was inflicted on the heathen. When, however, he would let them down by his side defeat was inflicted on his own people. Wherefore high rocks were put under his arms until the smiting of the heathen had ceased" (see Exodus xvii. 9-12).

A similar statement is made as to Joshua:

"Intan tra nos-tócbad Iesáu mac Nuin in tóisech áimra a dii láim áille oengela uada i crosfigill fri Dia nomhuided for cathaib Cannán. Intan didiu ba seith i crosfigill 7 no thimoirced a lama fria thobc nomhuided for clainn Israel. Dorónsat tra maic Israel comairle nglic goesmair andsin a. di chorthi cloiche do shuidiugud 7 do thobcail fo lamaib Iesáu combat sin i crosfigill in oiret nobethi ic cur in catha."—"Now, when Joshua, son of Nun, the wonderful leader, would lift from him his two beautiful white hands in cross-vigil to God defeat would fall on Canaan's battalions. But, when he grew weary in making cross-vigil, and closed his hands against his sides, defeat would fall on the clan of Israel. So then the sons of Israel framed a wise and cunning counsel, to wit, they set and lifted two pillars of stone under Joshua's hands, so that they might be (stretched out) in cross-vigil so long as the battle was being fought" (Leabar Brecc, p. 124b).

Lastly, in the Colloquy of the Aged Men (Book of Lismore, fo. 185b, 2), St. Patrick comforts his convert, the ancient hero Cailte, by telling him that he beyond all the other Fianna has received the good things of God, to wit, belief and devotion and cross-vigil (creideamh ocus crabadh ocus croisfhighill sech gach nech aili don fhéinn).

It will be observed that there is nothing in the above quotations to justify O'Clery's statement that kneeling was essential to cross-vigil. On the contrary, the use of the term to describe Moses' attitude during the fight with Amalek seems to show that the person performing cross-vigil either stood or sat—probably the former.

WHITLEY STOKES.

DANTE'S REFERENCE TO THE "LIBRO DELL' AGGREGAZIONE DELLE STELLE" (CONV. II. 6), AND TO ALFRAGANUS' (CONV. II. 14).

British Museum: Jan. 4, 1894.

The hitherto unidentified compendium of astronomy to which Dante refers in the Convito (II. 6) by the title of il Libro dell' Aggregazione delle Stelle, without any further indication, turns out to be the Elementa Astronomica of Alfraganus. Of this work there are five editions in the British Museum, printed respectively at Ferrara in 1493 (A), at Nuremberg in 1537 (B), at Paris in 1546 (C), at Frankfurt in 1590 (D), at Amsterdam in 1669 (E).

There is nothing on the title-page of any of these editions to show that the work of Alfraganus was known by the name which Dante gives to the book he is quoting from in the passage referred to above. The usual title is either Compilatio Alfragani (A, B), or Compendium Alfragani (C), or Alfragani Elementa Astronomica (D, E). An alternative title, however, appears in the colophon of the Frankfort edition (D), which runs:—"Explicit Alfraganus de aggregatione scientiae stellarum, felicibus astris." Moreover, Christmann, the editor of this edition, incidentally mentions in a note that the title of a MS. version seen by him in the Palatine Library was as follows:—"Incipit liber de aggregationibus scientiae stellarum et principibus coelestium, quem Ametus filius Ameti dictus Alfraganus compilavit 30 capitulis."

There can hardly be a doubt, therefore, that the title, Libro dell' Aggregazione delle Stelle, employed by Dante was merely an abbreviated form of the alternative title of the work of Alfraganus, and that it was from Alfraganus that he derived the astronomical data given by him in this particular passage of the Convito. Dante there says, in discussing the motions of the Heavens à propos of the Heaven of Venus:—

"Li quali [movimenti dei cieli], secondochè nel Libro dell' Aggregazione delle Stelle epilogato si trova, la migliore dimostrazione degli Astrologi sono tre: uno, secondochè la stella si muove entro lo suo epicyclo; l'altro, secondochè lo epicyclo si muove con tutto il cielo ugualmente con quello del Sole; il terzo, secondochè tutto quel cielo si muove, seguendo il movimento della stellata spera da Occidente in Oriente, in cento anni uno grado."

This is in exact accordance with what Alfraganus says in his Compendium (Cap. xvii., "De motu stellarum quinque erraticarum in orbibus suis secundum longitudinem"):—

"Moventur quoque sphaerae horum planetarum [sc. Venus, Saturn, Jupiter, and Mars] per gradum unum, quibuslibet centum annis, juxta motum stellarum fixarum. Ex his omnibus patet, quod motus qui apparet in Zodiaco, hisce 4 planetis, excepto mercurio [which, as had been previously explained, has four motions], compositus sit ex tribus motibus tantum, videlicet ex motu planetæ in epicyclo, ex motu centri epicycli in eccentrico, et ex motu communis omnium stellarum fixarum." (Frankfort ed., pp. 83-4.)

I may add that, besides the printed editions mentioned above, there is one MS. (thirteenth century) of the Astronomy of Alfraganus in the British Museum, viz., Arundel 377. There is no hint in it of an alternative title, the work beginning "Incipit liber alfragani astronomici" and ending with a simple "explicit."

In a second passage of the Convito (II. 14) Dante makes a direct reference to Alfraganus. In discussing the size of the planet Mercury, he says:

"Mercurio è la più piccola stella del cielo; che la quantità del suo diametro non è più che di dugento trentadue miglia, secondochè pone Alfragano, che dice quello essere delle vent' otto parti l'una del diametro della terra, lo qual è sei mila cinquecento miglia."

This is in agreement with what Alfraganus says, according to the Frankfort edition (D), and MS. Arundel 377, in both of which the diameter of Mercury is given as  $\frac{1}{25}$  part of the diameter of the Earth; but it is not in agreement with his measurements as given in the other four printed editions (A, B, C, E), which again are not in agreement with one another in that respect. It is evident, therefore, that both the Frankfort edition and MS. Arundel 377 represent the version of Alfraganus made use of by Dante, while the others do not. I hope to deal elsewhere with the question of the relative values of the several editions of Alfraganus, the subject being, perhaps, somewhat too lengthy for the columns of the ACADEMY.

PAGET TOYNBEE.

P.S.—Through the kindness of Mr. Nicholson, I am enabled to add that an examination of the MSS. of Alfraganus at Oxford gives as a result that three out of twenty (viz., Savile 16; Digby 214; Laud 644); contain the alternative title: Liber de aggregationibus scientie stellarum.

THE NORTH-PICTISH INSCRIPTIONS.

Cambridge: Feb. 2, 1894.

I have been following with much interest the discussion on this subject in the pages of the ACADEMY; and although, as an amateur, fall under Mr. Mayhew's strictures, I beg leave to add a small contribution to it.

I had intended, in the first place, making some remarks on the X, but Lord Southesk has forestalled me. That this sign bears the value P on any inscription is a statement that will not bear investigation. There are two Ogham stones in Wales in which the engraver was required to cut P. In one of these, Kenfig, he has made what is probably an arbitrary sign of his own invention, trusting, I suppose, to the associated Roman inscription to elucidate his meaning. In the other stone, at Crickhowel, he has, it is true, made a X; but too much emphasis cannot be laid on the fact that it is below the stem line. If we argue from the sub-linear X at Crickhowel that the trans-linear X = P, we should also argue from the sub-linear II on the same stone that the trans-linear II = L, which is, of course, absurd. Mr. Brash (Og. Mon., p. 59) says "some writers have asserted that P was represented by the same symbol as IA . . . but the monuments give us no evidence in support of these statements." It is a pity that he gives no reference to these discerning writers beyond this summary dismissal; for the sign used for P at Crickhowel is the same symbol as IA. It seems also to be used at Killeenadreena, Valentia Island, in the name Erpenan. When we find two inscriptions in Dunloe Cave, of which one ends magi mucoi Toicac (i), and the other magi mucoi Toica X i, are we not justified in taking X, in its consonantal value, as some sort of guttural? Lord Southesk finds a difficulty in taking X as G, because "that letter is already represented in Oghams." Although it savours of presumption for me to express a difference of opinion with such a recognised authority, I venture to think with Mr. Brash that X (consonantal) and II are not independent, any more than are the figure 8 and its flat-headed variety affected by stonemasons. The ornamental flourish for RR, at Bressay and Burrian, is a kindred symbol.

Bressay.—Although the Norse element in this inscription is admitted by all writers on the subject, I find some difficulty in accepting it before obtaining satisfactory answers to one or two questions.

No one doubts that the inscriptions on the two sides of the Bressay Stone are contemporaneous; indeed, there are no grounds for doing so. Admitting this, may we not fairly ask why do we get a Celtic word for "son" and a Norse word for "daughter" in one and the same inscription? If a Pict engraved the stone, why did he not cut the whole inscription in his mother tongue? And if a Norseman, why not in his; and why did he employ Ogham letters in preference to Runes? There remains another alternative: that the language spoken in the Shetlands was a patois of Norse and Celtic, something like the Anglo-Gallic jargon spoken in the Channel Islands. But if this were so, why do the other Shetland Oghams betray no sign of Norse influence, and why are all the Runes of the archipelago free from Celtic admixture?

It would be perfectly possible—though not worth the time or trouble that would be involved—to frame a sentence which would be equally intelligible to the eyes of the speakers of two different languages, although it would convey totally different ideas to their minds. Single words will sufficiently illustrate my meaning. To a Frenchman, the sequence of letters p-a-y-s denotes "country"; to an Englishman it represents a part of the verb "to pay." An Irishman understands by d-r-e-a-m "a trite," which is as different as can be from the meaning which it conveys to an Englishman. Is it not just possible that nahhtveddadds (on what authority—ddaððs?) dattr, in spite of their undeniably Norse aspect, are really Pictish words, which will be found in their proper places in the Pictish dictionary should a lucky chance ever reveal any considerable proportion of the language?

R. A. S. MACALISTER.

P.S.—I may add that the equation  $X = G$ , or a similar sound, partly solves the difficult Gosoctas inscription in the National Museum of Ireland—Gosoctas mosac magi (=magi) Ni, leaving only mosac to deal with; and the application of the same equation to the Aglish fragment gives Agilogdo, which perhaps suggests the advisability of a careful re-examination of the patronymic on the Breastagh monument.

THE NAME OF GOLSPIE.

The Airlour, Whauphill, Wigtonshire:
Jan. 31, 1894.

There are two obvious misprints in my letter of Jan. 27, which I had not the opportunity of correcting in proof. In l. 5, espug should be espuig; and in l. 17 ramhfroda should be ramh-fhodu (pronounced rahōda).

As an instance of the interchange of g and c in Gaelic vocables, Laggangarn (lagann nan carn) is an imperfect example. It is an instance of what Irish grammarians call eclipse of one consonant by another, following the article. A better example, more nearly parallel to the hypothetical origin of Golspie, is Giffen, in Ayrshire, representing the Welsh cefn, "a ridge."

Camelon, in Stirlingshire, where King Arthur and Modred fell in battle (A.D. 537), is written Gamlan in the Red Book of Hergest (xxii, 30), and Camlan in the Black Book of Carmarthen (xix., stanza 13). Boece explained this name as Camelodunum, Cynobeline's fort, and later etymologists have been simple enough to accept this solution; but indeed it is a name of matter of fact origin = cam linn, "the winding pool," referring to a bend on the river Carron hard by. The same name occurs in other parts of Scotland as Camling, on Pulmaddy burn, and Camelon Lane, both in Galloway. Lane is an Old Norse loan word, still in use in Broad Scots to signify a slow running stream.

There are many streams in Ireland called Cameline and Camling; the latter is the name of a small river in Antrim, flowing through a glen called Crumlin, i.e., crom ghleunn, "crooked glen."

HERBERT MAXWELL.

"EX ORCO."

Oxford: Jan. 13, 1894.

Will you allow me to protest against an ungenerous note which is appended to an article on the "Results of the Crusades" in the current Edinburgh Review?

I ought perhaps not to be offended at finding myself killed and buried by the Reviewer. I have for so many years lived without knowing how the next morning would find me, that I dare not complain of my critic for cutting short my thread of existence a little prematurely; but I do complain of the whole tone of the footnote he devotes to my book on The Crusade of Richard I. He finds three faults with this diminutive and (as I thought) harmless production. As it so happens, I am quite without responsibility for each one of these points.

(1) He states that I speak of jerboas in the plain of Carmel. To this I answer that I have done no such thing. To begin with, it is one of some three notes in my little book that I did not write myself. Anyone with an ounce of penetration, I should have thought, would have seen that a note about Dipodida C. was not in my style. Then, the writer of that note does not people the plain of Carmel with jerboas: he only suggests that the nameless leaping animal mentioned in the Itinerarium Ricardi is a jerboa. As the jerboa is admitted to flourish in the Arabian and Egyptian sands a few miles off, I do not see any absurdity in suggesting that seven or eight centuries ago its habitat was wider than at present. The Fauna of no country necessarily remain the same for a thousand years.

(2) The Reviewer states that I also write of "Tarantulas" in Palestine. Here, once more, I do no such thing. That part of the footnote identifying the "Tarentes" of the Itinerarium with the "Tarantula" is not, I think, mine (at least in its present form), though the rest of this note about Albert of Aix, &c., is. I translate the word as referring to certain "creeping insects commonly called Tarentes"; and the identification with "Tarantulas" is not mine, but due to the latest editor of the Itinerarium, and the greatest of living English scholars. Dr. Stubbs regards these insects as "Tarantulas"; and, were I responsible for the identification, I should desire nothing better than to err in such company. It is nothing to the point to say there are no tarantulas in Palestine now. Neither I, nor the annotator, nor Dr. Stubbs, say that there are.

(3) The Reviewer proceeds to find fault with the Englishing of my Arabic names. Here, once more, he lays his finger on a point that has little or nothing to do with me. In writing my book, I followed the spelling of the English, French, Latin, and German authorities I was using. Till Arabic scholars have settled upon some definite rules for Englishing Arabic names, non-Arabic authors can do no more. Here too, after my MS. had left my hands, someone, unknown to me, altered my spelling on a principle unintelligible to me; and this necessitated a few other changes in proof. That there are inconsistencies and mistakes in my spelling of Arabic words I am only too conscious. But is my critic consistent himself?

Lastly, he accuses me of having failed fully to grasp the topography of Richard's campaign. This I take to be his way of stating that he differs from some of my conclusions. Here again, I would cry "peccavi," if I felt that I had been guilty of any arrogance in laying down the law on such a very intricate question as Richard's campaign. But have I, in the whole course of my little book, ever ventured on "dogmatism"? I have simply done my best to pick out, among conflicting views, that which seemed to me the most likely to be true. In doing this I have apparently had the misfortune to differ occasionally from my censor.

Will there ever come a day when critics will put their names to what they pen when attacking other writers? I have no wish to say a word of disrespect towards a writer for whom (if I pierce the veil of his anonymity aright) I have nothing but the kindest feelings—a writer from whom I have doubtless learnt much. But I do claim the right to point out that this very writer who finds such wholesale fault with what I have not written, and what (had I written it) I have no need to be ashamed of (I refer to the "jerboa" and the "tarantula"), is himself a very doubtful reed for anyone to lean on. Of some eight dates that he gives in the course of a few pages, about half are wrong, and these are elementary dates. Thus he puts the death of Fulk in 1144 instead of 1143; he places Amalric I.'s death in 1173 instead of 1174; and, if I read him aright, the death of Baldwin III. in 1162 instead of 1163; while he caps this series of blunders by putting the death of Baldwin IV. in 1186. The precise date of this last event is very obscure; but, despite a certain amount of mediaeval authority which seems to support 1186, it is almost certain that this year is wrong. How far my critic is conversant with the original twelfth century or thirteenth century authorities for crusading history is further evidenced (1) by his attributing the Itinerarium Ricardi to Geoffroy de Vinsauf; (2) by his appeal to Ernoul's rotten legend as to Saladin's captivity, and this only at second hand from M. Rey's volume; (3) by his fixing the marriage of Isabella and Henfrid of Toron in 1184.

Those who have devoted their lives to mediaeval history will find other statements in this paper on the "Results of the Crusades," calculated to take away their breath. But I have no wish to play an ungenerous part. The paper, as a whole, is not one of which anybody need be ashamed, and I, in common with others, may learn something from its perusal. But was there any need for its writer to go out of his way to fix a stigma on a little book—written, as he seems to know, under great discouragements—that never boasted itself, and certainly was not "unduly puffed up"? I hope I have no false pride, no foolish notion that my own work is perfect. Probably I have made mistakes, as does everyone else; but then I have never laid claim to immunity from error.

I hope that my own little History of the Crusades will appear before very long now, though I have been unable to finish it myself. Will my critic tell me what system of Englishing Arabic names he would recommend? I was thinking of adopting, with some modifications, that of the Encyclopaedia Britannica, but I cannot see my way to use "breathings" in a popular work? Fas est et ab hoste doceri.

T. A. ARCHER.

THE BOOK OF ENOCH.

Oxford: Feb. 5, 1894.

May I be allowed to correct certain misapprehensions on the part of my critics, Mr. Owen and Mr. James. I have to draw attention only to one point in connexion with the former; and this is that he seems to regard the Book of Enoch as a product of the second century A.D., whereas it is all but universally agreed that it is pre-Christian, and my contention is that it belongs partly to the second century and partly to the first century B.C.

With regard to Mr. James, whose criticism has just appeared in the Classical Review, my task is more serious. In a few instances, Mr. James reproduces certain strictures of Prof. Dillmann. To only one of these, however, does he give the sanction of his judgment, and that rather unfortunately for himself. Following Dillmann's example, he charges me with misspelling no less than twenty times the name of the "allbekannten Pariser Gelehrten Hallévi." Before lending themselves to such a charge, it would have been wiser for my critics to have acquainted themselves better with the biography of this scholar, who in his earlier years, when he wrote the treatise I have quoted so frequently, spelt his name Hallévi and not Hallévy, as he has done of late. Some other criticisms of Dillmann, which are as easily rebutted as the above, will be dealt with in the Introduction to my Ethiopic Text of the Book of Jubilees, which is almost ready for press, and in the Introduction to the Ethiopic Text of Enoch, which will appear, I hope, next year.

Mr. James is disinclined to "believe that any considerable portion [of Apocalyptic literature] has disappeared and left no record of its existence." To support this view in some degree, he feels obliged to assume that the various portions of the Book of Enoch were not current separately, but "were written to occupy their present position by successive authors." A study of the violent dislocations which the various independent sections have undergone at the hands of an editor or editors would at once disabuse him of this error.

Again, Mr. James is mistaken in thinking that I "did not know of the Latin version [of Jude 15] which Zahn quotes from the Anonymus contra Novatianum 16." I was fully aware of the passage, but was not prepared to draw Zahn's conclusions from it. I have long known this treatise to be of importance in connexion with the Slavonic Enoch.

Mr. James hopes that he is not answerable for the statement made in reference to his Latin fragment which he kindly communicated to me—"that it follows a penitential edict of St. Boniface, &c." I am sorry that I cannot relieve him from any responsibility in this matter. From him and from him alone it emanates.

Again, Mr. James remarks that my "bibliography does not profess to be complete," and undertakes to fill up some of its omissions in a later part of his review. Now, as I certainly intended to give a complete bibliography since the year 1850 (Book of Enoch, p. 9), I was astonished to read that it could easily be enlarged, and so I turned hastily to the paragraph containing the proposed additions. My astonishment, however, quickly changed to merriment over the suggested improvements, and my merriment changed again to astonishment that so laborious a student of Catalogues as Mr. James should have found no more than three or four antiquated and virtually useless works written in the uncritical foretime of Enochic study. With these few works that he mentions I am acquainted, and with, I suppose, six times as many more composed before 1850; but as from a cursory examination of them I found them to be valueless for a first-hand study of the subject, I purposely omitted all consideration of them. The scientific study of Enoch begins with the sixth decade of this century.

One more remark and I have done. Other reviewers have not experienced the same difficulty in understanding my "Essay on the term 'The Son of Man.'" If, however, my book reaches a second edition, I will try to write so as to be "understood" by the Dean of King's College.

For one or two strictures I am grateful to my reviewer, as well as for his otherwise kindly and appreciative criticism.

R. H. CHARLES.

"TENNYSON—POET, PHILOSOPHER, AND IDEALIST."

Birmingham: Feb. 5, 1891.

Will you allow me to thank Mr. Arthur Waugh for his just criticism and his generous estimate of my book on Tennyson, and at the same time to refer to a slight misapprehension which exists in regard to the few anecdotes I have included? For this misapprehension I am willing to admit that I am chiefly to blame; but I think Mr. Waugh and other critics have overlooked one sentence in my preface which I wrote for the special purpose of explanation.

I say first that "I have not deemed it necessary to repeat for the thousandth time the 'small talk' of which great men are so often the victims." Observing this, my critics at once remark that they can find several anecdotes, perhaps a dozen, scattered about the 370 pages—surely not a very big average. But my next sentence runs thus: "I have not hesitated in some half-dozen cases to repeat a story which illustrates his [the poet's] methods and character." To a writer with a twelve years' collection of "ana" before him, amounting to some score of stout volumes, the temptation to insert a large number of stories was almost irresistible. I forsook an early project, however, when so many daily papers at the time of Lord Tennyson's death crowded their columns for several weeks with vulgar gossip, the subject not infrequently being beer, port, hats, tobacco, boots, length of hair, a "ragged beard," "slovenly dress," and a "growling voice." There was no object in telling the stories, except to allude to such offensive facts. This was the "small talk" to which I objected; and, fearing to appear to imitate the bad example set, I omitted a long chapter of personalia, prepared at considerable trouble, and consisting of at least a hundred stories which I believe are the best relating to Tennyson, and not very generally known. From my own point of view, therefore, the volume seemed to lose all claim to be considered anecdotal.

Then comes this point. Mr. Waugh, by no means improperly, points out that I, too, have allowed references to appear to the poet's hats, and wine, and tobacco. Perhaps I must plead guilty to a little inconsistency, but my defence is this—in each case the reference is but an incidental portion of an anecdote which is in itself important, and is quoted from a standard author, and I shrank from mutilating the text of such men as Bayard Taylor, Monckton Milnes, T. H. Escott, and others. My sensitiveness in this matter may be a fault—"the very head and front of my offending hath this extent no more." In my own mind I felt, and still feel, justified in the course I adopted, and I am in hope that this brief explanation will dispel the misunderstanding which has arisen, much to my surprise.

J. CUMING WALTERS.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, Feb. 11, 4 p.m. Sunday Lecture: "Aerated Waters," by Prof. Vivian B. Lewes.

7.30 p.m. Ethical: "The Ethics of Retentment," by Mrs. Sophie Bryant.

MONDAY, Feb. 12, 5 p.m. London Institution: "Russian Political Exiles," by Mr. G. Kennan.

8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Advancement of Architecture," V., by Mr. G. Aitchison.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "The Detection and Measurement of Inflammable Gas and Vapour in the Air," IV., by Dr. Frank Clowes.

8.30 p.m. Geographical: "Johore," by Mr. H. Lake.

TUESDAY, Feb. 13, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Locomotion and Fixation in Plants and Animals," V., by Prof. C. Stewart.

8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Discussion, "The Transport of Petroleum in Bulk," by Mr. B. Redwood.

8 p.m. Colonial Institute: "Imperial Defence," by Sir George Chesney.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Modern Development of Illustrated Journalism," by Mr. Horace Townsend.

8.50 p.m. Anthropological: "The Languages of British New Guinea," by Mr. Sidney H. Ray.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Languages of the Indians of the Mackenzie and Yukon Rivers," by Bishop Pompas.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Some Ancient Indian Charms from the Tibetans," by Surgeon-Major L. A. Waddell.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Various Objects from the Malay Peninsula," by Mr. Cecil Wray.

WEDNESDAY, Feb. 14, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The St. Pancras Electric Light Installation," by Mr. Henry Robinson.

THURSDAY, Feb. 15, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Past and Future of Mountain Exploration," II., by Mr. W. M. Conway.

4.30 p.m. Society of Arts: "Experiences at the Court of Afghanistan," by Dr. John A. Gray.

5.50 p.m. Historical: Anniversary Meeting.

6 p.m. London Institution: "Cholera," by Dr. E. Klein.

8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Advancement of Architecture," VI., by Mr. G. Aitchison.

8 p.m. Linnean: "Hygroscopic Movements connected with Seed Dispersal," by Miss Peritz.

8 p.m. Linnean: "Contributions to the Natural History of the Flower," II., by Mr. J. C. Willis.

8 p.m. Chemical: "Determination of the Available Mineral Plant Food in Soils," by Dr. Bernard Dyer.

"Aerial Oxidation of Turpentine and Essential Oils," by Mr. C. T. Kingzett.

8 p.m. United Service Institution: "The Coast-Lands of the North Atlantic," VI., by Mr. H. J. Mackinder.

8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.

FRIDAY, Feb. 16, 3 p.m. Geological: Annual General Meeting.

7.30 p.m. Civil Engineers: Students' Meeting, "Ship Slipways," by Mr. Walter Beer.

9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Bacon's Key to Nature," by Prof. Nichol.

SATURDAY, Feb. 17, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Light," II., by Lord Rayleigh.

SCIENCE.

AVIANUS AND HIS IMITATORS.

"LES FABULISTES LATINS DEPUIS LE SIÈCLE D'AUGUSTE JUSQU'À LA FIN DU MOYEN ÂGE."—Avianus et ses Anciens Imitateurs. Par Léopold Hervieux. (Paris: Firmin Didot.)

(Second Notice.)

To appreciate the importance of Avianus as a literary monument, it is necessary to know something of his imitators. Robert, in his edition (1825) of unedited fables of the twelfth, thirteenth, and fourteenth centuries, seems to have first signalled the existence of a prose version called Apologi Aviani in MS. 347 B of the Paris Library. Du Ménil, in 1854, in his Poésies inédites du moyen âge, transcribed two of these, following the same MS., which, it seems, is an inferior copy of another in the same library, 347 C. Fröhner, in 1862, was the first to give a full text of these Apologi Aviani, and to use for it the latter MS. Both the MSS., according to him, were written in the fourteenth century, 347 C perhaps twenty years before 347 B. Fröhner thought that the prose version of Avianus found in both was made by an Englishman. M. Hervieux, in four pages of close reasoning, makes it nearly certain that it was the work of a Frenchman. He is here supported by the opinion of the first of living palaeographers, M. Léopold Delisle.

A second prose version of Avianus exists, in various degrees of completeness, in six MSS. examined by M. Hervieux, and described by him in pp. 168—171. They form a kind of supplement to the collection of fables known under the name of Romulus. In this version thirty-seven of the forty-two fables of Avianus, occasionally deviating from the right order, are mixed with eight from other sources. In the discussion on these M. Hervieux mentions a fact which will interest Englishmen; among the translators of Romulus is our own King Henry Beau Clerc (p. 174).

Besides the two prose versions, there are extant several poetical transfusions or expansions of Avianus. The first of these is called by Hervieux "The Novus Avianus of the poet of Asti." This datum is supplied by a line in the first fable:

"Vatis in Astensis sic sit tua copia mensis."

Grosse, who published this version in 1868, suggested that Asta in Hispania Baetica was the birth-place of the poet; but as there is a more famous Asta Pompeia in Piedmont, and the poet, in his transfusion of the fable de duabus ovis, mentions a river Burbur, obviously Borbo, an affluent of the Piedmontese river Tanaro, it is to the North of Italy that he must be referred. His date is fixed by the earliest MS. (Brussels 10,726, 10,729) as not later than the twelfth century. The elegiacs in which the version is composed are leonine: in other words, have the two halves of each hexameter and pentameter rhyming; and du Méril asserts that this form of Latin composition was carried to its highest perfection in that century. Hervieux infers from the constant and pedantic invocation of Phoebus and the nine Muses, each of whom is introduced by name in the version, and on the other hand, from the entire omission of God or the Saints, that the poet of Asti was not a cleric. The work is divided into three parts: the first is directed against Pride; the second against Vice; the third against Credulity. As a specimen of leonine verse, this Novus Avianus has its interest, and Hervieux has not thought it beneath him to examine its rhymes with great minuteness (pp. 187-193 and 413-429). Three MSS. of the work are known: two at Brussels, the third at Munich. Probably others exist, but have as yet been unexamined.

The second poetical version, also in leonine elegiacs, is known as the Novus Avianus of Vienna. It is preserved in MS. 303 of the Vienna Library, and in another, signalled for the first time by Hervieux, in the Library of Munich (MS. 14,703). Though du Méril published six of these rhymed fables in his Poésies inédites du moyen âge (pp. 268 sqq.), the whole version has never been given to the world till its appearance in M. Hervieux' volume (pp. 430-451). This version differs from the former in omitting the thirty-first fable. The two MSS. are—the Vienna, of the fourteenth, and the Munich, of the fifteenth century; but this may, of course, be accidental, and in no way prove that the version is not much earlier. Yet from the fact that some of the epimythia, which in the course of the Middle Age were added to Avianus' original text, are farther "leonised" in this version, of which there is no trace in the poet of Asti, it is a probable inference that the Vienna version is later than that of Asti: Hervieux thinks by half a century.

A third rhymed paraphrase of the first six fables of Avianus was made by Alexander Neckam at the end of the twelfth or beginning of the thirteenth century. Fröhner thought these were a fragment of an entire version; but Hervieux shows that the two MSS. known to contain them (Paris 11,867, Cambridge Gg. vi., 42), agree in containing these and no more. Du Méril first published this Novus Avianus of Neckam in 1854, but without knowing the existence of the often better Cambridge MS. Thomas Wright, in his edition of Neckam (1863), has omitted this paraphrase, nor indeed has it any special merit. Its purpose may, as du Méril supposed, have been to give young students some idea of the way in which an original text might be expanded or abridged; he would do this in a few specimens and not care to carry his design to any farther length. This view is based on Fable ii., "The Eagle and the Tortoise." This is paraphrased, first, copiose in thirty-two verses for Avianus' sixteen; next, compendiose in ten; lastly, subcincte in four.

After this comes an Anti-Avianus, or, as it is called in the Cambridge MS. in which it is preserved (Dd. xi. 78), Antavianus. This is published by Hervieux for the first time. He supposes it to mean a counter or false Avianus. It comprises nine fables in unrhymed elegiacs, forming a kind of paraphrase of Av. i., ii., iii., iv., v., xv., xix., xxxvii., xxxiv. The writer's merits are gravely discussed by Hervieux, but cannot be estimated highly.

A chapter on the abridgment of Avianus completes the discussion. For depth of research, and for stimulating researchers, I know of very few books that can compare with M. Hervieux' volume.

ROBINSON ELLIS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE FABLES OF AVIANUS.

Trinity College, Cambridge: Feb. 7, 1894.

Avianus writes: "fabulas dedi quas rudi latinitate compositas elegis sum explicare conatus." Is it possible to escape the conclusion that he intended a double antithesis—rudi . . . compositas elegis . . . explicare? Also, does it follow that, because his verses do not come up to an Ovidian standard, they would seem rudes to himself?

F. JENKINSON.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE Hon. Walter Rothschild proposes to publish a periodical in connexion with his Museum at Tring, under the title of Novitates Zoologicae. It will contain papers on mammals, birds, &c., and also discussions on general questions of zoological or palaeontological interest. Descriptions of new species will be confined almost entirely to those of which the types belong to the Tring Museum; and the other articles will for the most part be founded on work carried on at that Museum, or on specimens sent by Mr. Rothschild's collectors. It is intended to issue the periodical in occasional parts, amounting to about 600 quarto pages in the year, with coloured plates, at a subscription price of one guinea.

THE annual general meeting of the Geological Society is to be held at Burlington House on Friday next at 3 p.m., when the president will deliver his address, and the medals, &c., will be presented to their recipients. The same evening, the fellows and their friends will dine together at the Criterion Restaurant.

AT the London Institution, on Thursday next, at 6 p.m., Dr. E. Klein will deliver an illustrated lecture on "Cholera."

IN Nature for February 1, there is an admirable obituary notice of the veteran botanical collector, Dr. Richard Spruce, signed with the initials A. R. W.

THE February number of the Geographical Journal (Edward Stanford) contains an introductory paper on "The Geography of Mammals," by Mr. W. L. Sclater, illustrated with a coloured map. He supports the familiar into six regions (as first proposed by the author's father in 1857, with regard to birds), as against the recent theories of American naturalists. At the end is given a useful table, giving the numbers of orders, families, and genera, found in each of the six regions, classified as endemic, quasi-endemic, and wide-spread, with a second table showing the percentages of these classes. The latter table brings out very clearly the relative specialisation of the mammalia of South America.

MR. BERNARD QUARITCH's last "Rough List" consists largely of scientific works, including astronomy, botany, entomology, geology, mathematics, ornithology, and palaeontology.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

MESSRS. ASHER & Co. will publish, for the Royal Society of Literature, the text and translation of an important Syriac work, by Dr. E. A. Wallis Budge, of the British Museum. This is the complete series of Discourses upon Christian Belief, Life, and Character, written by Philoxenus (460-523), Bishop of Mabbogh, and author of the Philoxenian version of the New Testament. Volume I. will contain the text of these discourses, fourteen in number, which is published for the first time from a collation of eight MSS. in the British Museum. In the second volume will be given an English translation, together with extracts from other unpublished writings of Philoxenus.

ON February 3, Dr. Reinhold Rost, late librarian of the India Office, having attained his seventy-second birthday, received from the King of Sweden the insignia of the Order of the North Star, in recognition of his services in the promotion of Oriental studies.

MR. GLADSTONE has made a grant of £300 from public funds to Mr. Herbert A. Giles, late H.B.M.'s Consul at Ningpo, in recognition of the value of the Dictionary of the Chinese language lately compiled by him.

WE quote the following from the Times :—

"Prof. Jules Nicole, of Geneva, has just published the texts of the papyrus fragments of Homer, bought in Egypt on behalf of the Geneva Public Library. One of these is of great interest, as it contains a text presenting substantial variations from that hitherto known to us. In the space of seventy lines of the ordinary text (Iliad xi. 788—xii. 9), no fewer than thirteen additional lines have been inserted. Of these thirteen, three are preserved intact, and four more can be reconstructed with considerable probability. It will be remembered that among the Petrie Papyri, published by Prof. Mahaffy a few years back, was an early fragment of the Iliad (also, curiously enough, of the 11th book), which, in the space of thirty-six lines, had five hitherto unknown lines in addition. If the rate of increase shown in these two fragments were maintained throughout the whole Iliad, the poem would be increased by about 2500 verses. Besides these additional lines, Prof. Nicole's fragment shows some notable variants in the rest of the text. His other fragments, four in number, are less sensational in their character. One belongs to a manuscript of the Cydney, the others to manuscripts of the Iliad, but all substantially confirm the received text."

MESSRS. LUZAC, of Great Russell-street, have issued a sale catalogue of oriental books, consisting of about 1700 lots, classified under no less than fifty-four separate headings. We approve of classification; but subdivision can be carried too far, as when Bugis, Cagataic, and Mikir are treated as languages of the same importance as Sanskrit or Arabic. Sometimes also, as in the case of Cagataic, foreign systems of transliteration have been allowed to stand. But, on the whole, this first instalment of a "Bibliotheca Orientalis" will be useful to scholars, especially for its list of periodicals.

THE last number of the Babylonian and Oriental Record (David Nutt) contains another of Prof. Terrien de Lacouperie's articles upon "The Origin of Chinese Civilisation." He here deals with the reign of the first emperor, She Hwang-ti (221-210 B.C.), the builder of the Great Wall, who, it is conjectured, may have been influenced by the fame of Alexander the Great; and with the introduction of Buddhism into China, which was not effectively accomplished until A.D. 67. There are also continuations of Dr. F. Hirth's Notes on Ancient Porcelain, and of the translation of the Familiar Sayings of Confucius, by Prof. C. de Harlez.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

CLIFTON SHAKSPEARE SOCIETY.—(Saturday, Dec. 30.)

Miss M. CATHARINE SMITH in the chair.—The consideration of "Love's Labour's Lost" was introduced by the reading of Mr. P. A. Daniel's Time-Analysis of the Play (Trans. N.S.S., 1877-9, Part II.), Mr. S. L. Lee's "New Study of 'Love's Labour's Lost'" (Gent. Mag. Oct., 1880), and Section I. of Dr. Landmann's paper on "Shakspere and Euphuism" (Trans. N.S.S. 1880-5, Part II.).

(Saturday, Jan. 27.)

Miss M. CATHARINE SMITH in the chair.—Mr. Arthur S. Way read a paper, entitled "Shakspere's Attitude to Two Problems of his Time." It has been alleged that Shakspere shrank from dealing with questions arising out of the practical politics of his day—that he was afraid to touch on dangerous topics. To those who study his plays in the light of the history of his time, the real matter for wonder is of the opposite nature: how, bearing in mind the very precarious and dependent position of playwrights and actors in his day, he could venture to tread so often and so boldly on perilous ground. If there were burning questions in those days, in touching upon which one would have to face the risk of a stern reckoning with the powers that be, they were certainly those of assassination and rebellion. There is, perhaps, no other period in the world's history so crowded with terrible incidents of this sort as that covered by the life of Shakspere. Although his fellow dramatists were rather inclined to avoid these perilous subjects, Shakspere boldly, in the midst of this atmosphere of rebellion, treats of the successive rebellions since the Conquest, showing a marked preference for those which had been successful. It seems like sporting over a volcano. How was he enabled to do it with impunity? Are we to ascribe it to magnanimous indifference on the part of the Queen and her advisers? Yet they could be jealous and vindictive enough on occasion. Was it owing to his having powerful patrons among the courtiers and favourites? Yet in the very year which saw "Julius Caesar" performed the head of Essex rolled on the scaffold; and there is a story of the representation of a drama of successful rebellion—"Richard II."—to prepare the minds of men for the earl's attempt, on the very day before he led the insurrection which cost him his life. There is some mystery here which we cannot fathom. Yet Shakspere wrote on steadily; and "Macbeth," the tale of the murder of a Scottish king, appeared in the year of the Gunpowder Plot. It is interesting to note the difference in Shakspere's attitude towards the two methods of opposing usurpation, tyranny, or misgovernment. While we have four historical plays in which open rebellion is more or less successful, we have two in which resort is had to assassination, and in both the deed is a failure. In "Macbeth" the moral constitution of the murderer is made the instrument of punishing a crime. In "Julius Caesar" the constitution of society and the logic of events bring retribution on a blunder. And Shakspere shows the unlawfulness of the deeds not by preaching a sermon through some declaiming lay figure, but by pointing to the inevitable retribution, which without respect of persons, without regard to motives, overtook all who had borne part therein. Here, as elsewhere, he proves the essential folly and evil of a wrong action, by allowing to the prime mover in it every possible excuse and showing them all unavailing, as though to teach us that no loftiness of aim, no purity of intention, can set aside the eternal laws of right and wrong, can make treachery justifiable, and murder sinless. Does he then invest the despot with a right divine, which must bring inevitable retribution on all who strike at him? No; but his clear-sighted penetration told him that to strike at the effect will not remove the cause; and his unerring instinct of right and honour and manliness, which made him the noblest representative Englishman, taught him that what is a crime in private life cannot be a merit in public life. All the man in him, all the Englishman in him, revolted from the assassin's dagger, from the conspirator's paths of darkness, from his self-debasement and false dissembling. We find in "Richard II." no condemnation of resistance to abused authority; he could not so have read the lessons of his time. Bollingbroke's measures and their execution are crowned with complete success; but in the heart of this success there is a canker, and it is of his own planting. The steps by which he reached the crown were marked by duplicity, and by duplicity which deceived nobody, and so had but the effect of lowering him in men's eyes. And in the crisis he is saved, not by strength of his own, but by one who is strong in that manliness in which he is deficient; and it is part of his punishment to fear and suspect his deliverer—his son, the embodiment of what he might have been had he risen to the height of his opportunity.

THE FOLKLORE SOCIETY.—(Annual Meeting, Wednesday, Jan. 17.)

G. L. GOMME, Esq., president, in the chair.—In the report of the council it was stated that during the past year the work of collecting the folklore of the different counties had been steadily pushed forward. Lady Camilla Gordon's collection of the Folklore of Suffolk, from printed sources, had been issued to members as Part II. of the series of "County Folklore." The Leicestershire and Rutland collection had also been completed, and it was hoped, would soon be in the printer's hands. The Anthropological Institute had made proposals for an amalgamation of the two societies, but the negotiations entered into for this purpose had fallen through.—Mr. Gomme, in the course of his address as president, said it was one of the fundamental laws of their science that man, until he had reached the academic stage of culture, never invented a new thing. New things developed gradually from old things, but new things were not created by man—not new arts, new customs, new legends, new beliefs, nor new fairy tales. He did not believe that the human brain was capable of absolutely "inventing" anything. It might alter the conception of things already in existence, add together incongruous elements, and produce results that were marvellous or supernatural, according to the frame of mind in which they were looked at. It was one of the satisfactions of scientific inquiry into human thought that outside the knowable the mind was not capable of reaching. It reached back into the past by the effort of memory, tradition, and record; it reached forward into the future by the sublime function of hope. But what it saw in the past and foresaw in the future could not be its own creations, but independent facts. Always, therefore, as it seemed to him, there was a reality at the bottom of all fancy and all tradition. There were two elements in the comparative study of custom and belief: namely, the comparison of like elements in two distinct areas, and the comparison of unlike elements in the same area. The first of these two elements of comparison had been studied very thoroughly, and to some purpose, by the most distinguished philosophers, anthropologists, and folklorists, and we were beginning to see some results. The second of these two elements had scarcely been studied at all. Mr. Gomme afterwards spoke of the relation of folklore to anthropology, incidentally expressing regret that the latter had chosen to look askance—he did not say jealously—at the former. He also dealt at some length with various branches of folklore research.

SOCIETY OF HISTORICAL THEOLOGY.—(Manchester College, Oxford, Thursday, Jan. 25.)

Prof. F. MAX MÜLLER, president, in the chair.—A paper was read by Mr. John Massie, on "ἀπαργμός, Phil. ii. 6: a Criticism and a Defence." After discussion, Mr. F. P. Badham read a paper, entitled "Notes on Posteriority in St. Mark." Synoptic criticism appeared to be standing still, owing to the widespread belief (see article "Gospels" in Smith's Bible Dictionary) in the priority of St. Mark to St. Matthew. The writer of the paper offered seven examples of St. Mark's posteriority. (1) Starting from Matt. ix. 30, 31, he compared Mark v. 43 and i. 43-45, and inferred that behind both the First Gospel and the Second there was a document which contained matter peculiar to each—Matthew omitting the injunction to the leper, and the result of its infraction, and Mark omitting the two blind men. This cure belonged to the group containing the Gadarene demons and the blind beggars of Jericho. These narratives, therefore, must be regarded as prior to those in Mark. (2) Mark xiii. 9-13 is related most closely, not to the corresponding section in Matt. xxiv., but to Matt. x. 17-22; yet Mark xiii. 10 cannot be derived from Matt. x. 23, but from Matt. xxiv. 11. The transference of a portion of the primary charge to the later occasion was further discussed under (3) in connexion with the apostolic mission. In Matt. x. the disciples do not depart, while in Mark vi. 12, 13, there is an actual dismissal. Their return in vi. 30 seemed derivable from Matt. xiv. 12, where there is a certain ambiguity about the persons who "went and told Jesus." The Second Gospel limited the charge to the specific occasion, and consequently postponed the particular portion of Matt. x. In example (4) the writer analysed Mark iii. 7, 8, where the double occurrence of the word "multitude" was explained by comparison with Mark i. 39 and Matt. iv. 23—v. 1. Example (5) was drawn from the stater incident, Matt. xvii. 24-27, compared with Mark ix. 33 ff. The chief reason for the prejudice with which this narrative, together with the kindred one of St. Peter's walking on the sea, is usually regarded, viz., that "it obviously belongs to a late cycle of tradition," is infinitely weak as an argument for the literal priority of a document which omits it. When at last a sudden necessity arose for written gospels, they evidently appeared in tolerably rapid succession, mere accident determining the order. It by no means follows that the least miraculous narratives were the first in the field, and that the earliest writing evangelist was the best informed. (6) In the section containing the narrative of the death of John the Baptist (Matt. xiv. and Mark vi.) the two gospels seemed to be running closely parallel, so that there could be no resort to independent traditions. In that case Mark vi. 19, 20, could not have been the origin of Matt. xiv. 5; but something very like the latter may have been the original of the former. Lastly, example (7) dealt with the request of the Syro-Phœnician woman. The analysis of Matt. xv. 22-28 and Mark vii. 24-30 showed that with set purpose the author of the Second Gospel clipped the First, and explained and excused something that he did not relate.

FINE ART.

A History of Aesthetic. By Bernard Bosanquet. (Sonnenschein.)

A GLANCE at the bibliography, which concludes this volume, will show to how wide a range of reading, to how catholic a sympathy, it owes its completeness; and will prepare the reader for such a critical history of the literature of Europe, from a single point of view, as will console him for the absence of observations on Peru and China. Moreover, the most ardent encomiast of Cathay will grant that, till the Oriental races cease to make the loveliest carpets in the world with the certainty of instinct, and forget the cunning of hand and eye in a zeal for barren discussion, they have no claim to appear in a History of Aesthetic, which is not, be it remembered, a History of Art.

A closer acquaintance with Mr. Bosanquet's book will prove that it is no mere compilation of what has been said before on aesthetic questions; but the original work of a cultivated man, who has not shrunk from the labour of reading the voluminous aesthetic literature of Germany, nor from recording his own dissent from its methods or results, though with an almost provoking modesty. What charity inspires the remark, that Schasler's Critical History of Aesthetics is "an immense, but very fresh and readable work, filling 1200 pages"! And of Visscher's "immense array of volumes" he leniently says: "I cannot help fearing that this colossal monument of real knowledge, capacity, and industry will have little effect on the future course of aesthetic science." He has wisely confined his own work, comprehensive as it is, within the more modest limit of 500 pages. And he is not always coldly impartial, but in sundry parentheses and footnotes lets his readers into the secret of his likes and dislikes. With an evident relief he turns from the "exact" aestheticians of modern Germany, to quote an eloquent page of Mr. Ruskin on the significance of mountain forms, or of Mr. Morris on the craftsman's pleasure in his work as the secret of its excellence. He makes no secret of his enthusiasm for Hegel: indeed, he betrays the influence of the master now and again by a tendency to reconcile "opposites," which were, to all appearances, good friends already, though high praise is due to the prevailing clearness of style and avoidance of technical barbarisms.

It must be admitted, however, that in the opening chapter, which limits the province of the enquiry and defines the subject-matter, Mr. Bosanquet has set such a stumbling-block in the way as may deter all but the courageous or the inquisitive from setting out with him as their guide. He begins by vindicating, on excellent grounds, his preference for the beauty of Fine Art over the beauty of Nature as constituting, together with the aesthetic consciousness of man, the proper subject-matter of his intended history. But his definition of Beauty is amazing. Can he have felt it, won it for himself, or known how to win it from others, we are tempted to ask, when he can define it thus: "That which has characteristic or individual expressiveness for sense-perception or imagination, subject to the conditions of general or abstract expressiveness in the same medium."

It may be considered unfair to detach these words from their context. But, first, a definition, more than any other portion of discourse, needs to be independent and intelligible by itself; and, secondly, a repeated study of the context has failed to show why the awkwardness of the wording should not have been modified by the omission of the entire second half of the definition. The author himself, indeed, makes this concession, with needless caution, on the following page, and reduces beauty to "the characteristic in as far as expressed for sense-perception or for imagination." This is simpler, but it will not bear analysis; for what system of psychology will admit that either sense-perception, or imagination, has the power to recognise the characteristic, when presented to it? We are not quarrelling, for the moment, with the characteristic; but we maintain that it appeals to a higher, a rarer, a more critical faculty than either sense-perception or imagination; and that for either of these, without the activity of the understanding, it could not be expressed at all. And then, partly for this very reason, is not "the characteristic" too austere, too little sensuous, to be the equivalent of beauty? It is perfectly true, and the truth could not be better stated, that "the highest beauty, whether of nature or of art, is not in many cases pleasant to the normal sensibility even of civilised mankind, and is judged by the consensus, not of average feeling as such, but rather of the tendency of human feeling in proportion as it is developed by education and experience. And what is pleasant at first to the untrained sense—a psychological fact more universal than the educated sensibility—is not as a rule, though it is in some cases, genuinely beautiful." The history of the opera in this century, or of the revolution which the last fifty years have wrought in the appreciation of Italian painting, would form the best commentary on this quotation. "The educated sensibility"—the very phrase we wanted has been vouchsafed to us, though, we fear, unintentionally—has ceased to scoff at Wagner, and has learnt to value the art of the quattrocento as it deserves, instead of repeating, parrot-like, the few great names which a shallower age was content to extol; but "the untrained sense" continues to prefer "The Mikado" to "The Meistersinger," and Guido Reni to Pinturicchio. But we show no disrespect for the characteristic, if we still regard it as a quality which appeals more to the intellect than to the senses or the imagination, and require in a definition of beauty some recognition of qualities which act on the senses and the emotions, something akin to the "simple, sensuous, passionate," which Milton required in poetry. Kant and Schiller were right in describing the mental state which appreciates true beauty as one in which the senses and the intellect work harmoniously together, so that the happily balanced mind neither sinks to hedonism nor soars too far in the direction of abstract thought. Saucers and triangles are incapable of beauty. The mind grows enervated if it merely lets the senses play with pleasant, but meaningless, colours, sounds, or curves; while a work of art so intricate or obscure as to puzzle and tire the brain, dulls the sense of beauty and makes disinterested pleasure impossible. Marcus Aurelius, in his anxiety to avoid the former extreme, welcomes the latter with enthusiasm. "Thou wilt despise delightful singing," he says (Comm. Lib. xi. 2), "if thou divide the tuneful voice into its several tones, and ask thyself concerning each, Is this thy master?" The Emperor applies the same simple process of annihilation to dancing as a fine art, and, indeed, recommends it for everything in life, except virtue. This amusing specimen of art-criticism quite justifies Mr. Bosanquet in discussing the Stoic contribution to the philosophy of the beautiful in a single page.

From the whole history of thought on this subject during the long period which the author passes in review, three epochs detach themselves as really significant. The first is what we may conveniently, if vaguely, designate Antiquity, from Plato to Plotinus. The second is the eighteenth century before Kant. The third is the period from Kant to the present day. The six centuries of the first period have a certain continuity, though hardly that of growth. That luckless word, μίμησις (imitation), choked every healthy offshoot of speculation on art and its place in the scheme of life with a jungle of fallacies. The Stoic Emperor only speaks as the heir of ages of delusion, when he says (Lib. xi. 10):—"Nature is in no case the inferior of Art, for the arts, in fact, imitate the world of nature." The modern paradox, "Nature is the imitation of Art," for one who has faith enough in the idealism implicit in it to carry his premises to logical conclusions, is more consistent and true to fact than the misleading partial truth of Greek philosophy.

It is natural to a simple age, or a simple mind, to find its soul's satisfaction in a clever imitation of Nature. The familiar stories about Zeuxis may be matched by the old Japanese tale of Kanaoka, who painted a horse so life-like that it took to committing nocturnal depredations in the garden, and required to be restrained with a rope. The marvel is that Plato, familiar with the highly intellectual and creative art of the Periclean age, could write as he did in Rep. X. But, fortunately, aesthetic has never had much influence on artistic production, and its vagaries are too harmless to provoke much indignation.

The author of the Enneads, Platonist as he was, would not submit to Plato's treatment of Art as bound by the limits of ordinary perception. He speaks of it as creative, supplying deficiencies in Nature. But, above all, he views Nature itself as symbolic of the invisible laws or reasons which underlie the visible universe—as in a beautiful passage, where he exults in flames, as the symbol of cleanly, vivid life; and from this it is but a short step to the recognition that Art is the expression of such laws or reasons under forms of sense. But the step was not taken in ancient times. Music might have made the revelation perfect, had it then grown out of its infancy.

Mr. Bosanquet devotes two of his most interesting chapters to the attitude of the Christian world towards beauty, exemplified in St. Augustine, St. Francis, St. Thomas, and Dante. He is able to trace a certain evolution from the germ of modern aesthetic in Plotinus. But the contributions of the middle ages, nay, of the Renaissance itself, to aesthetic were slender. The critical seventeenth and eighteenth centuries collected the materials for a new advance: poetry, tragedy, painting, sculpture were minutely analysed; their forms were defined, and their relation one to another, and their import in the sum of life, were estimated. Winckelmann discovered a lost world, the true Hellas; and in the wonderful last decade of the eighteenth century much new light was seen. Philosophy, on its two diverging paths, had reached the extremes of Hume and Wolff; the Kritik der reinen Vernunft had to go back to the point of divergence and start afresh. Then Kant undertook, in the Kritik der Urtheilskraft, the reconciliation of the natural with the moral or rational order, of the perceptions of sense with the ideas of reason; and from that epoch, 1790, modern Aesthetic dates its origin. Metaphysic, through Schiller, the Kantian and Hellenist, gave a speedy impulse to literature. In the marriage of Faust and Helena Goethe symbolised the union of the mediæval and the antique, as judged by a catholic standard of criticism, just as in his youthful essay on German architecture he had defended the cause of Gothic. Then the way was prepared for the colossal work of Hegel, who traced in the history of art, as in every other factor of civilization, the evolution of the World-Spirit.

Such, in the briefest outline, is the history of Aesthetic, down to the commencement of its latest era. We may pursue it, if we will, through the psychology of the aesthetic sense, the analysis of curvos and waves of sound or light, the arbitrary and sometimes absurd classifications of the arts; for these are the chief topics of modern German writers on Aesthetic. If we do so, we shall be grateful chiefly to Schopenhauer, for his treatment of music as the symbol of pure movement, "the quintessence of life and events, without any likeness to any of them;" and to Lotze, for his fascinating but improbable suggestion that there is an "objective beauty" to be considered "not as a bare relation, as a bare form, of which the things to which it belongs are themselves not conscious; since we, the rather, explain it as the pleasure which the objects themselves receive from the happy construction of their forms. They, therefore, do not merely appear beautiful, in so far as they make on us a pleasing impression; but we, in the impression, only share with them in their own beautiful feeling of pleasure." Here is a revival of the anima mundi; the "great fetish," as Comte called it, has still a devotee. If we forget for a moment our modern, orthodox views on the "pathetic fallacy," and indulge in day-dreams, we may envy the "Hermes" and the "Idolino" their divine felicity, and pity the torments of the particles of bronze, which compose the "mummies" on the Holborn Viaduct.

As "imitation" is the characteristic topic of the Graeco-Roman philosophy of art, so is "the Sublime" that of the eighteenth century, and so, we may add is "the Ugly" that of our own time. These two conceptions have held a quite exaggerated place in modern speculation. The work of Longinus (noteworthy for its citation of the first chapter of Genesis as an example of sublimity) is one of the many classical writings, which have enjoyed a great popularity in more leisurely and scholarly ages than our own, but are now seldom read. In the age, which talked of "the grand style," whosoever would be orthodox (and who would not?) must have sound views concerning the Sublime. It was part of the Zopf of the age, which was left behind, when revolutions and romanticism came into fashion, and de Saussure scaled Mont Blanc, that "horrid Alp." And then, having absorbed and digested the Sublime, Aesthetic, in search of new mental food more strengthening still, commenced in more earnest its invasion of the Ugly.

Rosenkranz devotes an entire work to it (Ästhetik des Hässlichen). Mr. Bosanquet himself has quite a zeal for the Ugly. He has no patience with those who talk of it as a foil to the Beautiful. He will not be content till the Beautiful, like some voracious, flabby organism of the ocean, shall have engulfed the Ugly in itself and closed round it. There is a hint, indeed, that certain stubborn things will refuse to be treated in this way, doomed to remain hideous and a grief for ever. But these shall be few. Marcus Aurelius drew up a short Index Expurgatorius, which consisted of "the lion's jaws, deadly poison, wickedness in general, thistles, and mud." (Lib. vi. 36.) It will be interesting to observe how many of these unappetising things will have been absorbed into the Beautiful, when twentieth-century professors systematise it anew. Thistles are the favourite food of a creature which has been known to masquerade in the lion's skin, and can therefore have no horror of its jaws. Wickedness in general is ignored, for the modern aesthetician has made up his mind, at least, that he has no need to meddle with morals: he expects, but does not receive, a like courtesy from the moralist. With poison, unless it lurk in wall-papers of vivid hue, he is not concerned. Mud remains. It will also be abundant in the next world, if we may judge by the amazing variety of names for it in the vocabulary of Dante.

After all, the movement is a good one. Let us admire all we can in nature, and be thankful for it; narrowness of taste, in scenery or living things, argues a want of culture, and is punished by a poverty of enjoyment. In art, it is the manner, the touch, that redeems. The great artist can work miracles with ugliness. "The ugliest ugliness," Mr. Bosanquet rightly says, "is ugly art." Bad, stupid art is man's own unnecessary invention for the corruption of himself and his fellows, and has no claim to toleration.

CAMPBELL DODGSON.

LETTER FROM EGYPT.

Abu-Simbel: Jan. 20, 1894.

I HURRIED up the Nile this winter as rapidly as a long continuance of southerly winds would allow: so that, apart from a visit to the newly-discovered tombs of Saqqarah, the only noteworthy event of my voyage from Cairo to Assuan was the discovery of early quotations from the Gospels in an ancient rock-church about a mile and a half to the north of the ruins of Antinoopolis. The church is in the quarries above a ruined Coptic monastery, and the quotations are from the beginnings of the Gospels of Matthew, Luke, and John. The forms of the letters are of the fourth or fifth century.

While at Assuan, I visited a colossal Osiride figure in the granite quarries about a mile and a half to the north of Shellal, which was discovered by Major Cunningham, and last year was cleared of sand by M. de Morgan. It lies on its back, at a little distance south of a stele, in which Amenophis III. describes the execution of a "great image" of himself. In the neighbourhood both of the stele and of the colossus are huge unfinished sarcophagi, of which I counted eight, of the same size and form as the sarcophagi of the sacred bulls at Saqqarah. Their unfinished state shows that the death of Amenophis III. interrupted the work of completing them; and we may, therefore, infer that during the reign of his successor, the "heretic-king" Khu-n-Aten, no more Apis-bulls were embalmed. Besides the sarcophagi, balls of diorite are found, especially on the line of the road which was made for conveying the colossus from the quarry. They seem to have had something to do with the means of transport.

At Philæ I went on board Mr. Somers Clarke's dahabiyeh, which had just passed the Cataract, and on the following day we were joined by Prof. Mahaffy. On our way to Wadi Halfa we have halted at many places and copied many inscriptions, while Mr. Somers Clarke has made plans of the various monuments we have seen. At Kalabsheh we spent two days, and discovered there three Greek poems. The longest of these, in thirty-four lines, is specially interesting, as it mentions an otherwise unknown Nubian deity, called Breith (or, as Prof. Mahaffy would read the name, Sebireith), whom it identifies with Mandoulis, the native god of Kalabsheh. The lines in which the name occurs are the following:

ὦς ἡμαρ καὶ νύξ σε σίβει· ὄρα δ' ἅμα πᾶσαι καὶ καλέουσί σε Βριθ καὶ Μάνδουλιν συνομήτους, ἄστρα θεῶν ἐν σήμα κατ' οὐρανὸν ἀντέλλοντα.

The two gods are apparently identified with the constellation of Kastor and Pollux, and it would seem that an oracle of Mandoulis (Maruli in the hieroglyphs) was established in the temple.

I made a fresh copy of the famous "Meroitic" inscription, and found good reason for concluding that it cannot have anything to do with the Greek inscription of the Nubian king Silko, as has been supposed. Two proskynēmata of the age of the Antonines have been written above and below it, the last letters of the first having been cramped into a corner in order to avoid the Meroitic text; it is evident, therefore, that the latter must be long anterior to the inscription of Silko, who lived after the time of Diocletian. No light, consequently, will be thrown from this quarter on the decipherment of the Meroitic inscriptions; but perhaps some help may be obtained from a Meroitic text I discovered, cut in large clear letters on a rock near Sonqari a little to the north of Korosko.

On the south side of the Meroitic text the hieroglyphs of a "Pharaoh" have been engraved over a number of Greek proskynēmata, proving that the title of "Pharaoh" might be given to one of the later Roman emperors. In the quarries behind the temple I found two late Greek inscriptions which, for aught I know, may have already been published. They are, however, noticeable on account of the curious mixture of paganism and Christianity which they contain. They begin with the monogram of "Christos," one of them being further flanked by the letters α and ω, and nevertheless they conclude with the expression: "Grieve not; no one is immortal." I ought to add that I made a list of all the Greek inscriptions at present visible on the walls of the temple: they amount in all to ninety-six.

At Dendûr I collated the published hieroglyphic texts with the originals, and found that the god whose name has been read Ar-hem-snefer should really be Ar-hon-snofer; and at Gerf Hossén I discovered some hieroglyphic graffiti on a boulder of rock at a little distance south of the temple. At Dakkeh and Kûbban we spent some time, and I busied myself in copying the texts in the portion of the Temple of Dakkeh erected by the Ethiopian king, Arq-Amon. Mr. Somers Clarke's examination of the structure proved that it had been finished before the buildings tf Ptolemy Euergetes II. were added to it; his fixes the date of Arq-Amon, and shows that he may easily have been the Eugamenes of Diodoros (iii. 6), who was a later contemporary of Ptolemy Philadelphos. As Arq-Amon is represented in one place offering homage to the deified "Pharaoh" of Senem or Bijeh, it is clear that the supremacy of the Ptolemy was still recognised by the Ethiopian prince as far south at all events as the First Cataract. In the latter part of the reign of Ptolemy Philopator, however, the Ethiopian kings not only made themselves independent, but even claimed dominion over Upper Egypt, and at Debot Azkhal-Amon, a successor of Arq-Amon, appears as an independent monarch. The temple built by Azkhal-Amon at Debot is a close imitation of that of Arq-Amon at Dakkeh; and, as at Dakkeh, it was added to by Euergetes II.

In one of the texts which I copied at Dakkeh, Arq-Amon states that he had presented to Isis of Abaton and Philae "the irrigated land of Talmis (Dakkeh) of Nubia (Thalmo-To-kens) from Syene (Sunnut) to Takhompso (Ti-qamso), 12 schoeni (art) on the west bank and 12 schoeni on the east bank." Here, therefore, we have a mention of the famous Dodekaschoeni which, according to Herodotos (ii. 29), extended from Elephantine to the island of Takhompso.

Herodotos makes the schoenos equivalent to two Persian parasanga; 12 schoeni, consequently, would be about 82½ miles. According to Murray's Handbook, the distance from Assuan to Qorti, a little to the south of Dakkeh, is about 80½ miles. At Qorti we accordingly landed; and after visiting the foundations of a temple, where Lepsius still saw the cartouches of Thothmes III., we found, a little to the west of it, the site of a large city, which is strewn with potsherds and lamps of the Roman period. The natives also brought us beads of the same epoch, which they had disinterred on the spot. The city stood on what must have been at the time a very large island, some five miles in length; the old channel of the Nile on the west side of it is still very visible, and may possibly be filled with water during an exceptionally high Nile. To the south the channel passes under the temple of Maharraqa, the ancient Hiera Sykamios. There seems little doubt, therefore, that in Qorti we must see Takhompso.

At Kubbān we found some tombs cut in the rock on the north side of the old fortress, and to the south of the ruins of the temple a large circular basin also cut in the rock, the object of which it is difficult to divine. The temple of Maharraqa is rapidly disappearing. Since I last saw it, fourteen years ago, a considerable portion of the wall has fallen, and the natives are busily at work chipping away the fallen stone on which Greek proskynēmata have been painted.

Our next stopping-place was Wadies-Sebū'a. Here I found the name of Bent-Anat, the daughter of Ramses II., on the back of one of the fallen Osiride figures, which does not appear to have been noticed before. Then we went on to Amada, where Prof. Mahaffy and myself occupied ourselves in copying the graffiti on the roof of the temple. The results are interesting, as the alphabet and language of them prove to be the same as those of an inscription discovered by Lepsius at Qasr Ibrim, and supposed by him to represent the language of the "Christian Ethiopians." We subsequently corrected his copy of the latter inscription, which has suffered since he saw it by the fall of a portion of the rock on which it is engraved. Half a mile to the north of Qasr Ibrim we examined the ruins of an early Christian church, on the walls of which we discovered other inscriptions of a similar kind, as well as Greek and Coptic texts. One of these mentions "Stephen, the Bishop of Timék," of Timéis. Immediately above the church I found on the rock a representation of the Hathor-cow, a table of offerings, and a number of persons in long robes and of the most non-Egyptian appearance, as they were all of disproportionate height and had the same deformity at the back as the queen of Pun in the famous picture at Dér el-Bāhari. To this representation was attached the name of Mentuhotep, in hieroglyphs of the same early form as those which distinguish the graffiti of the VIth and XIth Dynasties at Silsilis. The tableau, therefore, which is accompanied by a drawing of an early Egyptian ship, points to the visit of an Egyptian official to this region in the time of the XIth or XIIth Dynasty, as well as to the fact that the spot was considered sacred to Hathor. Its ancient sanctity doubtless led to the erection of the church in Christian times.

Before reaching Qasr Ibrim we stopped to examine a large ruined fortress of brick, which lies to the west of the Gezirat Qati. We found that it was of late Ptolemaic or early Roman origin, the brickwork being built on a basement of finely-cut stone. On the bank of the river, eastward of the fortress, the natives have recently opened a number of crude brick tombs, and the sand was strewn with fragments of pottery. We picked up pieces of light blue porcelain, as well as a curious plaque, with holes for suspension, on which is painted the full-length figure of a fisherman.

A few miles to the south of the fortress is the beautiful tomb of Pennut, who lived in the reign of Ramses VI. Murray's Handbook calls him "Poeri," and makes the king under whom he lived Ramses V., a mistake which has led Prof. Wiedemann in his Aegyptische Geschichte (p. 515) to duplicate the tomb and its occupant. On the way to the tomb, we made an interesting discovery. To the south-east of it lies a necropolis of considerable size, the tombs consisting partly of Egyptian structures of brick, partly of Nubian cairns of stone. Eight of the Egyptian tombs are mastabas, with pyramidal roofs resting upon square chambers about four feet in height, which were again supported on a basement of stone. One of the tombs is still in an almost perfect state; others are more or less broken down, and show that they were arched within. The interior walls of the chambers were covered with white plaster and then painted; in one case we removed the sand which covered them, and found boats painted on one side, and on the other a reaping scene. Five men were cutting the corn, behind them came two superintendents, then the master leaning upon a staff, and finally his son. All alike were red-skinned Egyptians in white kilts; the master alone wore sandals, which were white and of the simplest form. The painting and scenes resembled those of the tombs at Kom el-Ahmar, opened by Messrs. Tylor and Somers Clarke last year, and doubtless belong to the same age. They cannot be later than the time of the XIIth Dynasty, and may even belong to the VIth.

A. H. SAYCE.

OBITUARY.

WE have to record another blank in the ranks of Royal Scottish Academicians by the death of Mr. Gourlay Steell, which occurred at Edinburgh, on January 31.

Mr. Steell, a younger brother of the late Sir John Steell, the sculptor, was born at Edinburgh in 1819, a son of John Steell, a well-known wood carver. He studied, under Sir William Allan, in the schools of the Board of Manufactures, that historic "Trustees' Academy" which has furnished instruction to most of the eminent Scottish artists; and for a time he worked in the studio of Robert Scott Lauder, the teacher of Orchardson and Pettie, of McTaggart and Paul Chalmers. At the early age of thirteen he began to exhibit in the Royal Scottish Academy; and from that period he was seldom unrepresented in the annual displays of this body, of which he became an Associate in 1846 and a full Academician in 1859. In his earlier years he devoted himself a good deal to modelling, which he taught for several years in the Watt Institute, in succession to his father; and he executed many book illustrations for the publishers. But he soon devoted himself to animal-painting, and in this department he secured aristocratic patrons, working both in oils and in tempera. He was best known by his renderings of Highland cattle; but he also frequently executed equestrian portraits, such as that of Colonel Carrick Buchanan, of Drumpellier, with his huntsmen and foxhounds, and a similar picture of the late Earl of Wemyss, both of which have been engraved. In 1865 his "Cottage Bedside at Osborne," representing the Queen visiting one of her sick tenants, attracted much attention; and in 1872 he was appointed Her Majesty's Animal Painter for Scotland. He also held a similar appointment in connexion with the Highland and Agricultural Society; and in 1882, on the election of Sir William Fettes Douglas as president of the Royal Scottish Academy, he succeeded him as curator of the National Gallery of Scotland. Many of his recent productions were large charcoal studies of animals, a class of work in which his vigorous and facile draughtsmanship was seen to advantage.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BOTTICELLI'S "SPRING."

King's College, Cambridge: Feb. 5, 1894.

It seems to me certain that Botticelli's "Primavera" is a translation into painting of the well-known lines of Lucretius, Book v. 737-740:—

"It ver et Venus et veris prænuntians ante
Psmatus graditur Zephyrus vestigia propter
Flora quibus mater præspargens ante vias
Cuncta coloribus egregiis et odoribus opplet."

Venus stands in the centre of the picture with Cupid above her head. Flora is scattering flowers in the manner described by Lucretius. Spring is represented by a female figure producing flowers from her mouth under the generative influence of the winged Zephyr. This, of course, only accounts for half the picture; but the three Graces, "segnes solvere nodum" (Horace, Odes III. 21, 22), and Mercury are fit companions for Venus and Spring.

OSCAR BROWNING.

Eastbourne: Feb 5, 1894.

Judging from the character of Mr. Grant Allen's communication, I infer that it covers the whole ground of his information on the subject of Botticelli's "Primavera," and that he does not happen to be aware of the connexion that has been traced—first by Prof. J. Cavallucci—between that picture and the Stanzas written by Politian to commemorate Giuliano de Medici's triumph in the lists of the tournament of 1475, and his attachment to the bella Simonetta Vespucci. The face of the youth on the left of the picture is said to bear an idealised resemblance to Giuliano, but the associated origin of the two compositions is * Isou, "Jesus," has in the Amada inscriptions the title of ourou, which is evidently the Nubian uru, "lord" (Old Egyptian ur, Coptic ouro).

based upon the following description of the heroine in the poem:—

"Candida è ella e candida la vesta
Ma pur di rose e fior dipinta e d'erba;
Lo fiancillato crin dell' aurea testa
Scende in la fronte umilmente superba.
Ridele intorno tutta la foresta
E quante può sue curo disacerba.
Nell'atto regalmente è mansueta
E pur col ciglio le tempeste acqueta.

Ella era assisa sopra la verdura
Allegria e ghirlandetta avea contestata
Di quanti fior creasse mai natura,
De' quali era dipinta la sua vesta.
E come prima al giovin pose cura
Alquanto paurosa alzò la testa,
Poi con la bianca man riprese il lembo,
Levorsì in piè con di fior pieno un grembo.

Mosse sovra l'erbetta i passi lenti
Con atto d'amorosa grazia adorno.

Ma l'erba verde sotto i dolci passi
Bianca, gialla, vermiglia, azzurra fassi."

It is possible that an examination of the Stanze might lead to a confirmation or modification of Mr. Grant Allen's theory of the significance of the several figures.

G. T. CLOUGH.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

JUST as Mr. Walter Besant is agitating, with his usual enthusiasm for the interests of his brethren, for an English "legion of honour" for literary men—a distinction they will never get till, with some better spirit of camaraderie, they cease to make light of the importance of their own art—there comes the announcement of further distinctions bestowed or offered to certain approved followers of the art of painting. Mr. G. F. Watts has declined a baronetcy, and Mr. Edward Burne Jones has accepted one. We regret, for our own part, that one of the most admirable painters of portrait and of imaginative subject that the English school has ever produced has only felt himself able to respectfully decline the honours he has so entirely merited and would have so appropriately worn. And, while sincerely congratulating Mr. Burne Jones on the social advance won for him by what many consider to be unique achievements in the art of design—for certainly it is in design rather than in brush-work, in weird invention rather than in masculine character-drawing, that resides the attraction of his canvases—we cannot but feel that an honour not less marked might have been bestowed on at least one really great exponent of the painting of landscape and marine. We think, of course, of such a man as Mr. Hook. Nor would it have been inappropriate to have conferred that which can scarcely in every case be regarded as the lesser distinction of knighthood upon the only president of an important art society who is still without any title. Not only the individuality of Mr. Wyke Bayliss's painting, but more especially the loyalty and pertinacity of his efforts to advance the fortunes of the Royal Society of British Artists, point him out a fitting recipient of an honour not likely, as we suspect, to be long delayed. Sir Frederic Leighton, Sir Everett Millais, Sir Edward Burne Jones, Sir James Linton, Sir John Gilbert, Sir John Tenniel, Sir George Reid, Sir Francis Powell—this is the list of painters (and by no means an unworthy one) upon whom titular distinctions have within the last few years been bestowed.

AN exhibition of water colours by members of the Dudley Gallery Art Society will open next week, at the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly.

THE spring exhibition of pictures in oil and water colours at the Walker Art Gallery, in Liverpool, will also open next week. On this occasion, as already announced in the ACADEMY, decorative art and photography are included in the exhibition.

IN continuation of former exhibitions of deceased Nottingham artists, Mr. G. H. Wallis has now brought together in the Castle Museum a loan collection of the work of Reuben Bussey, consisting of ninety-five works in oil, water-colour, and black and white, besides 125 original sketches in pencil, &c. Bussey, who was born in 1818 and died only last year, specially devoted himself to illustrating the old street architecture and mediæval history of Nottingham, and scenes from the plays of Shakspeare. The catalogue of the exhibition contains an interesting portrait.

THE Ex Libris Society will hold its third annual meeting in St. Martin's Town Hall, on Wednesday next, at 8 p.m., when Mr. J. R. Brown is to deliver an address as chairman of council. As on former occasions, there will be an exhibition of book-plates and heraldic curiosities, open in the afternoon and also later in the evening. Among the objects exhibited will be: original designs for book-plates, special collections, books containing interesting plates or heraldic devices stamped on the cover, and literature relating to the subject.

THE Revue Critique for February 5 contains a review of Dr. A. Furtwaengler's recent work on the Masterpieces of Greek Sculpture. It is written by M. Salomon Reinach, and extends to no less than twenty pages.

Repertorium für Kunstwissenschaft (Band xvi. Heft, 5, 6). With this double number ends the series of volumes of a valuable periodical, edited up to the time of his death by Dr. Janitschek. The publishers have been well advised to make of this number a memorial, as it were, to the late editor and a useful summary of his work, by filling it with a complete general index to the magazine from its commencement. The index has an independent value, and should find a place in the library of every student of art history; for there are few subjects which have, during the last decade or more, attracted the attention of students that are not discussed in the learned pages of the Repertorium by writers of weight. So far as we have been able to test it, the index appears to be well made and complete.

MUSIC.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

MESSRS. ASCHERBERG & Co. publish two songs by Leoncavallo, entitled Déclaration and To-Night and To-Morrow. The composer of "Pagliacci" is pretty sure to obtain a hearing, and besides, there are touches in these songs which recall music in that opera. Of the two we prefer the second. Mignon, by Guy d'Hardelot is a graceful little ballad dedicated to Mlle. Calvé. The Danza Album of Six Songs will please all who like soft, sentimental music; of their kind the songs are very good.

MESSRS. METZLER & Co. send us new songs by Frederic H. Cowen:—My Lady Sleeps; Two Songs: No. 1, Sundown; No. 2, Eyes so Tristful; and The Sea hath its Pearls. The music of all is smooth and tasteful. The setting of Longfellow's serenade is very pleasing, and there are plaintive harmonies in Sundown. Metzler's Christmas Album of Dance Music, containing many popular pieces, will be welcome at this season of the year.

Gabriella, by Emilio Pizzi. (Cocks.) This is a lyric drama in one act, composed for and dedicated to Mme. Adelina Patti-Nicolini.

The Italian libretto, by C. A. Byrne and F. Fulgonio (English version by Mowbray Marras) tells of a young heiress, Gabriella, of a wicked Duke who covets her wealth, and shuts her up in a convent, of a lover who secretly releases her, and of a good Queen who exposes the villainy of the Duke, and brings about a happy ending. The plot is simple and moral: justice triumphs and true love is rewarded. The music is of light character: it is practically a drawing-room opera. The part of Gabriella, intended for Mme. Patti, is showy, and the Queen's song (contralto) is effective. To be properly judged, the work must of course be heard with orchestra.

Shakespeare's Flowers, by Isabel Hearne. This is a set of three short pianoforte pieces particularly fresh and pleasing. There is no mistaking the influence of Schumann; but the composer has talent and taste, and in time will become independent.

MUSIC NOTES.

BRAMH'S fine Quintet (Op. 111), led by Lady Hallé, was repeated at the Saturday Popular Concert, and made a deep impression. The programme included four Irish pieces for violin, with pianoforte accompaniment by Dr. Stanford. The first, "A Lament," has a characteristic first theme, with a plaintive second theme in good contrast; the Jig, with variations, is clever, though somewhat formal; the "Hush Song" is a short movement full of refinement and charm; the "Reel" is bright and bustling. Of the four, the third is the best; and next to it, in our opinion, comes the first. The pieces were all interpreted to perfection by Lady Hallé, and Mr. Bird had plenty to do—and did it well—on the pianoforte. Mr. Leonard Borwick gave a highly poetical rendering of Schubert's great Sonata in B flat. It is full of wonderful music, but yet one cannot help kicking slightly against the "heavenly" length of the work.

ON the Monday, Herr Joachim made his first appearance this season at the Popular Concerts, and with him came the usual "Rasoumofsky" Quartet—the particular one selected being No. 1 in F. The eminent violinist celebrates this year his jubilee: on March 28, 1844, he first appeared in this country, and a few months later, when only thirteen years of age, he performed Beethoven's Violin Concerto at a Philharmonic Concert. Herr Joachim is still a great player, though he has passed his prime; his earnest reading of the Beethoven music on Monday made one forget a few notes of which the intonation was not absolutely pure. He was well supported by Messrs. Ries, Gibson, and Piatti. He gave a very delicate reading of a Spohr Adagio, and added a Bach Movement by way of encore. Miss Fanny Davies displayed vigour in Beethoven's Polonaise in C and Rondo a Capriccio—two short pieces characteristic of the composer, but not of him at his greatest. Mme. Bertha Moore was very successful as the vocalist.

HERR KORBAY, the celebrated composer of Hungarian folk-songs, has accepted a professorship of singing at the Royal Academy of Music. Two prizes, also, have been instituted—one for vocalists, by Mr. Norman Salmond; and one for pianists, by Miss Zimmerman.

AT the Wagner Concert, under the directorship of Herr Félix Mottl, at the Queen's-hall, on April 17, Mr. W. Hess will be leader of the orchestra. A bass trumpet and tenor tubas will be used, and not, as usual, replaced by a trombone and horns. Mr. Andrew Black will sing Wotan's "Abschied" from the "Walküre."

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW LIST.

NEW VOLUME OF THE CAMDEN LIBRARY.

On fine paper, with rough edges, at 6s. per vol. On fine paper, bound in Roxburghes, with gilt top, 7s. 6d. net. Large-paper Copies (fifty only), on Hand-made Paper and bound in Roxburghes, with gilt top, 21s. net.

WEST IRISH FOLK TALES AND ROMANCES.

With Specimens of the Gaelic Originals in Three Dialects Phonetically Spelt. Collected and Translated by WM. LARMINE. Being the Third Volume of the CAMDEN LIBRARY.

The former Volumes in the Camden Library are:—

Vol. II. SCULPTURED and STORIED SIGNS and INSCRIPTIONS of HISTORIC LONDON.

By PHILIP NORMAN.

Vol. I. The ANTIQUITIES and CURIO-SITIES of the EXCHEQUER.

By HURBERT HALL, F.S.A., of H.M.'s Public Record Office. With Illustrations by Ralph Nevill, F.S.A., and an Introduction by Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS ON THE CAMDEN
LIBRARY.

"The facts and anecdotes which are woven into the pages are curious, and no doubt will be perfectly new to many readers."—Public Opinion.

"Immensely superior to the ordinary kind of serial hand-books.....Full of valuable information which cannot easily be found elsewhere."—St. James's Gazette.

"This book, which is printed on delightful paper and in most enjoyable type, affords a rich feast for the antiquarian. It is not only full of information, but is lively, and abounds in quaint stories."—Cambridge Independent Press.

"Where everything is so valuable and entertaining, there is no necessity for special selection or indication....The series will be a godsend to lovers of antiquarian lore."—Glasgow Herald.

"Contains great wealth of information, every item of which belongs to the category of 'things not generally known.' It does great credit to the persevering industry, discrimination, and literary skill of its author.....The book is admirably produced and indexed, and is readable throughout."—Daily Telegraph.

"The illustrations, which are always well chosen, have been very carefully reproduced. 'The Camden Library' ought to be popular alike with scholars and with the wider general public."—Scottish Leader.

In tasteful demy 8vo, printed on fine paper and appropriately bound, 7s. 6d.; Large-Paper Copies, 21s. net.

TENNYSON AND HIS PRE-RAPHAELITE
ILLUSTRATORS:

A Book about a Book. With several illustrations. By GEORGE SOMES LAYARD, Author of "Life and Letters of Charles Keen, of Punch," &c.

NEW BOOK BY THE AUTHOR OF "OBITER DICTA."

SECOND EDITION, in fcap. 8vo, testefully printed and bound in olive cloth, uniform with "Obiter Dicta," 6s. Also 50 Large-Paper Copies, 21s. net. Only Two or Three Copies left.

ESSAYS ABOUT MEN,
WOMEN, AND BOOKS.

By AUGUSTINE BIRRELL, Q.C., M.P.

"Mr. Augustine Birrell is always good company. Unlike some living writers who might be named, he is always himself, and the self is so sane, so shrewd, so vivacious, that this fidelity to it suffices to make his books delightful."—Daily Chronicle.

In tasteful crown 8vo, appropriately bound, 5s.

MEDIEVAL MUSIC.

Historical Sketch with Musical Illustrations by ROBERT CHAS. HOPE, F.S.A., F.R.S.L., Author of "English Holy Wells."

Contents.—The Early Music of Greece—The Musical Systems of Egypt—The Later Musical System of Greece—The Christian Era—St. Gregory: his influence on the Music of the Church—Introduction of the Organ into the West—Medieval System of Music—Uses of Milan and Rome—Systems of Incised—Account of Descant, Notation Clefs—Guido Aretto—Measured Music—Birth of Modern Music.

LONDON:

ELLIOT STOCK 62, PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

PASSAGES FOR TRANSLATION
FROM FRENCH AUTHORS.

SELECTED BY

WALTER DURNFORD, M.A.,

Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, Assistant Master at Eton College.

London: EDWARD STANFORD, 26 and 27, Cockspur Street, S.W.

1894.

NOW READY.

Thirty-fourth annual publication. Price 50s., elegantly bound. Dedicated, by permission, to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales.

THE COUNTY FAMILIES of the UNITED KINGDOM: a Royal Manual of the Titled and Untitled Aristocracy of Great Britain and Ireland, by EDWARD WALFORD, M.A., late Scholar of Balliol College, Oxford. Containing Notices of the Descent, Birth, Marriage, Education, &c., of more than 12,000 distinguished Heads of Families in the United Kingdom, their Heirs-Apparent or Presumptive, together with a Record of the Patronage at their disposal, the Offices which they hold or have held, their Town Addresses, Country Residences, Clubs, &c.

London: QUATTO & WINDUS, Piccadilly, W.

THE

LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW.

No. CLXII. JANUARY, 1894.

Price 4s. Annual Subscription, 12s. 6d., post free.

CONTENTS.

I.—DR. PUSEY'S LIFE AND WORK.

II.—LOWELL'S LETTERS.

III.—JOHN RUSKIN: a Study in Development.

IV.—MASHONALAND.

V.—PEOPLE'S BANKS.

VI.—CAPTAIN LUGARD IN EAST AFRICA.

VII.—MODERN APOLOGETICS.

VIII.—SHORT REVIEWS and BRIEF NOTICES.

IX.—SUMMARIES of FOREIGN PERIODICALS.

London: CHARLES H. KELLY, 2, Castle Street, City Road, E.C., and 66, Paternoster Row, E.C.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSIT repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows Interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

A PENNY A DROP.

THE PURE OTTO OF ROSE

IN

Toilet "Vinolia" Soap and
"Vinolia" Toilet Powder

NOW COSTS A PENNY A DROP.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND &amp; CO.'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS
andPOTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

A. & S. Gatti, Sole Proprietors and Managers.
THIS EVENING, at 8, A WOMAN'S REVENGE. Messrs. Chas. Warner, Chas. Cartwright, H. Flemming, J. Carter, R. Harding, H. Russell, and Arthur Williams; Mesdames Mary Burke, Alma Stanley, Adah Barton, and Agnes Thomas.

COMEDY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, DICK SHERIDAN. Messrs. H. B. Irving, Brandon Thomas, Cyril Maude, Lewis Waller, Sydney Brough, Edmund Maurice, Will Dennis, F. M. Paget, &c.; Mesdames Vane, Pattie Browne, Lena Ashwell, Radclyffe, Ettie Williams, A. O'Brien, and Miss Winifred Emery.

COURT THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.50, THE TRANSGRESSOR. Messrs. Fernandez, Brookfield, Hicks, Bucklaw, Cowie, and Arthur Elwood; Misses Coleman, Hafton, Blakiston, and Miss Olga Netherale. Preceded, at 7.50, by UNDER THE CLOCK. Messrs. Brookfield, Hicks, Nainby, Wyce; Miss Lettie Venne, Miss Wilmot, &c.

CRITERION THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9.10, THE HEADLESS MAN. Mr. Charles Wyndham, Messrs. Blakeley, Valentine, Worthing, Atherley, Taylor; Mesdames Jeffreys, Frances, Matthews, Miller, N. Noel, Baker. Preceded, at 8.10, by THE BENGAL TIGER. Messrs. Somerset, Atherley, Hemaley; Misses M. A. Victor, Maria.

DALY'S THEATRE, LEICESTER SQUARE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, Shakespeare's comedy of TWELFTH NIGHT. Miss Rehan as Viola; and George Clarke, James Lewis, Herbert Graham; Violet Vanbrugh, Catherine Lewis, &c.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.

THIS DAY, at 1.30 and 7.30, ROBINSON CRUSOE. Messrs. Herbert Campbell, Dan Leno, Little Tich, Harry Payne, Arthur Alexander, John D'Auban, Chas. Dodsworth, and Brown Newland, and Le Clercq; Misses Ada Blanche, Marie Lloyd, Emma D'Auban, Lily Harold, Julia Kent.

GAIETY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, DON JUAN. Messrs. Arthur Roberts, R. Pateman, E. Payne, W. Warde, G. Mudie; Mesdames Millie Hylton, Cissy Loftus, Maria Davis, Louisa Montague, Sinden, Earle, Mills, Henderson, Hamer, Durkin, Cannon, Benton, Collier, Price, Sutherland, and Katie Seymour.

GLOBE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, CHARLEY'S AUNT. Mr. W. S. Penley, Messrs. Walter Everard, Ernest Hendrie, H. Farmer, Cecil Thornbury, and H. Reeves Smith; Misses Ada Branson, Merrick, Clayton, Nina Bouicault. At 8, JOHN THURGOOD, FARMER.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. H. Beerbohm Tree.
THIS EVENING, at 8.30, THE CHARLATAN. At 8.15 PERSONS. Mr. Tree, Messrs. Fred Terry, Fredk. Kerr, Nutcombe, Gould, C. Allan, Holman Clark, Montagu Hay; Mesdames Lily Hanbury, Gertrude Kingston, I. Vanbrugh, Brooke, and Mrs. Tree.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

THIS DAY, at 1.30 and 7.30. Mr. Oscar Barrett's Fairy Pantomime, CINDERELLA. Misses Ellaline Terris, Kate Chard, Clara Jacks, Minnie Terry, Florrie Harmon, Susie Vaughan, Alice Brooke; Messrs. Victor Stephens, Deane Brand, Lugg, Harry Parker, Fred Emney, Blunt, Wallace, Charles Lauri.

OPERA COMIQUE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, UNCLE'S GHOST. Messrs. Alfred Malby, Fred Thorne, John Tresahar, J. F. Graham, Chas. Burleigh, E. Dagnall, C. Landor, B. Hurst, L. Wallace, H. Norton; Mesdames Carrie Cote, E. Brimley Sheridan, Mary Kingsley, H. Cowen, M. Nolon, and Emily Thorne. Preceded at 8 by SUNSET.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, A GAIETY GIRL. Messrs. C. Hayden Coffin, Eric Lewis, Kaye, Bantock, D'Ossy, Porteous, Rimmer, Somerville, and Harry Monkhouse; Mmes. Decima Moore, Juliette Neville, Cutler, Studholme, Pounds, Phelps, M. Hobson, Massey, Lloyd, Robinson, Gurst, and P. Broughton. At 7.45, ADOPTION.

ROYAL PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 7.30, A LIFE OF PLEASURE. Messrs. Henry Neville, Arthur Dacre, Frank H. Fenton, William Elton, and Harry Nicholls; Mesdames Laura Linden, Emily Fitzroy, Le Thiere, and Mrs. Bernard Beere.

SAVOY THEATRE.

R. D'Oyly Carte, Proprietor and Manager.
THIS EVENING, at 8.15, UTOPIA, LIMITED. Messrs. Rutland Barrington, W. H. Denny, J. Le Hay, Scott-Fisher, Gridley, S. Russell, Hunt, and C. Kenningham; Mesdames Nancy McIntosh, Florence Perry, Emmie Owen, and Rosina Brandram.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.10, THE SECOND MRS. TANQUERAY. Mr. George Alexander, Messrs. H. H. Vincent, Ben Webster, H. V. Esmond, A. Vane-Tempest, A. Bromley-Davenport, A. Holles; Miss Maude Millett, Miss Granville, Miss Laura Graves, Mrs. Patrick Campbell.

STRAND THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, TOM, DICK, AND HARRY. Messrs. Frank Curzon, John Beauchamp, Shirley, Percy, W. F. Hawtrey, Milton, Meyrick, Arthur Playfair; Mesdames Vane Featherston, Lytzer, Cronyn, Carlotta Zerbin. At 8.10, FOR CHARITY'S SAKE.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

NEW AND RECENT BOOKS.

NEW VOLUME (C), £2 12s. 6d.

RECENT PART (CONSIGNIFICANT—CROUCHING), 12s. 6d.

NEW SECTION (CBOUCHMAS—CZECH), 4s.

A NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY ON HISTORICAL PRINCIPLES.

Founded mainly on the Materials Collected by the Philological Society.

Edited by JAMES A. H. MURRAY, LL.D.

NOTICE.—The present position of the Work is as follows:—

Vol. I. A and B, and Vol. II. C. Edited by Dr. MURRAY. Imperial 4to, half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d. each. (Published.)

The Parts comprised in Vols. I. and II. are still sold separately.

Vol. III. D and E.

D. Edited by Dr. MURRAY. (In the press.) E—EVERY. 12s. 6d. (Published.)

E. Edited by HENRY BRADLEY, M.A.

EVERYBODY—EZOD. (Immediately.)

Vol. IV. F, G, and H.

F. Edited by HENRY BRADLEY, M.A.

"The colossal nature of Dr. Murray's undertaking and monumental thoroughness of his work are attested by the fact that this (the second) volume of no less than 1,308 pages is devoted to the letter C alone, and that the space this letter requires will even be surpassed by the letter S. On the other hand, nine of the smaller letters, X, Z, Y, Q, K, J, N, U, and V, will only require the same amount of space."—The Times.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

ENGLISH-SWAHILI DICTIONARY. Compiled for the Use of the Universities' Mission to Central Africa. By A. C. MADAN, M.A., Student of Christ Church, Oxford, and Member of the Universities' Mission to Central Africa.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

AN ENQUIRY concerning the HUMAN UNDERSTANDING and AN ENQUIRY concerning the PRINCIPLES of MORALS. By DAVID HUME. Reprinted from the Posthumous Edition of 1777, and Edited, with an Introduction, Comparative Tables of Contents, and an Analytical Index, by L. A. SELBY-BIGGE, M.A., Fellow and Lecturer of University College.

BY THE SAME.

HUME'S TREATISE of HUMAN NATURE. Reprinted from the Original Edition in Three Volumes. 9s.

*** Completion of the New Edition of Prof. Wallace's "Logic of Hegel."

Just published, Second Edition, Revised and Augmented, crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

PROLEGOMENA to the STUDY of HEGEL'S PHILOSOPHY, and especially of his LOGIC. By WILLIAM WALLACE, M.A., LL.D., Fellow of Merton College, and Whyte's Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Oxford.

BY THE SAME.

THE LOGIC of HEGEL. Translated from the Encyclopedia of the Philosophical Sciences. Second Edition, Revised and Augmented, 10s. 6d.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

QUINTI SEPTIMII FLORENTIS.

TERTULLIANI de PRÆSCRIPTIONE HÆRETICORUM: AD MARTYRAS: AD SCAPULAM. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by T. HERBERT BINDLEY, B.D., Merton College, Oxford, Principal of Codrington College, Barbadoes, and Examining Chaplain to the Lord Bishop.

BY THE SAME. Crown 8vo, 6s.

TERTULLIANI APOLOGETICUS ADVERSUS GENTES PRO CHRISTIANIS. Edited, with Introduction and Notes.

"We welcome this scholarly edition with especial pleasure. The plan and execution are both good, the annotations being an advance upon anything of the kind we have seen in English."—Spectator.

"A good edition of one of the most interesting documents of the early Church. Mr. Bindley has read up his subject thoroughly, and gives the result of his studies in a compact and serviceable form. For examination purposes nothing more could be desired."—Saturday Review.

Recently issued, Part III.

Parts I, II., and III., A-ΩΩΩH'A. Imperial 4to, 21s. each.

A CONCORDANCE to the SEPTUAGINT and the other GREEK VERSIONS of the OLD TESTAMENT (including the Apocryphal Books). By the late EDWIN HATCH, M.A., D.D., and HENRY A. REDPATH, M.A., assisted by other Scholars.

Until the publication of PART V., but not afterwards, subscriptions may be paid in advance at the price of £4 4s. for the Six Parts.

Parts I. and II. (AA—JUSTICIA) now ready, 4to.

Price to Subscribers who take the whole work, £2 2s. net each, being £8 8s. net for the Four Parts.

"A work of supreme importance to students of botany and to horticulturists."

The work will be completed in Four Parts, which will be issued to Subscribers at Eight Guinea net. The price will be raised on publication. The completion of the whole work may be expected during the present year. Subscriptions will be received until the publication of Part IV.

INDEX KEWENSIS PLANTARUM PHANEROGAMARUM Nomina et Synonyma Omnium Generum et Specierum a Linnaeo usque ad Annum MDCCCLXXXV. Complectens, Nomine Recepto, Anchora, patria unicuique Plantae Subjecta, sumptibus beati CAROLI ROBERTI DARWIN, ductu et consilio JOSEPHI D. HOOKER, confecti B. DAYDON JACKSON.

"Botanists may well be congratulated on the issue of this important work. It is not only destined to be in constant use by working botanists, but will also serve as a standard of nomenclature for a considerable time to come."—Athenæum.

Crown 8vo, with 3 Maps, 7s. 6d.

The best idea of the Matabele Question, and of the Interests Involved
In It, will be found in

GEOGRAPHY of AFRICA SOUTH of the ZAMBEZI. By the Rev. W. PARR GRESWELL, M.A., under the auspices of the Royal Colonial Institute, Author of "A History of the Dominion of Canada" and "Geography of the Dominion of Canada and Newfoundland."

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, with Maps, 7s. 6d.

AN HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY of the BRITISH COLONIES. Volume III.—WEST AFRICA. By C. P. LUCAS, B.A., of Balliol College, Oxford, and the Colonial Office, London.

ALREADY PUBLISHED.

INTRODUCTION to a HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY of the BRITISH COLONIES. By C. P. LUCAS, B.A. With 8 Maps. Crown 8vo,
4s. 6d.

Vol. I. THE MEDITERRANEAN and EASTERN COLONIES
(exclusive of India). With 11 Maps. 5s.

Vol. II. THE WEST INDIAN COLONIES. With 12 Maps
7s. 6d.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.; cloth, cut flush, 6s.

GRAMMAR of the BENGALI LANGUAGE, LITERARY and COLLOQUIAL. By JOHN BEAMES, Bengal Civil Service (Retired), Author of "A Comparative Grammar of the Modern Aryan Language of India," &amp;c.

THE OXFORD ORIENTAL SERIES.

Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

A BURMESE READER: being an Easy Introduction to the Written Language, and Companion to Judson's Grammar. For the Use of Civil Service Students and others who wish to acquire the Language quickly and thoroughly. By R. F. ST. ANDREW ST. JOHN, Hon. M.A., Member of the Royal Asiatic Society, Teacher of Burmese in the University of Oxford and University College, London, and late Deputy-Commissioner in Burma.

Crown 8vo, with Map, 5s.

A SHORT ACCOUNT of the LAND REVENUE and its ADMINISTRATION in BRITISH INDIA. With a Sketch of the Land Tenures. By B. H. BADEN-POWELL, C.I.E., F.R.S.E., M.B.A.S., late of the Bengal Civil Service, and one of the Judges of the Chief Court of the Punjab.

"Mr. Baden-Powell is to be congratulated on the knowledge, skill, and care which have enabled him to bring within the compass of two hundred and fifty pages so clear and comprehensive a survey of land revenue administration in British India, and the forms of tenure on which it is based."—Spectator.

"Mr. Baden-Powell's work contains a mass of information that could only be obtained otherwise by laborious searchings amongst official reports and books, some of which are now scarce and inaccessible; and as such it should be in the library of every revenue officer, jurist, and student."—The Madras Mail.

Vol. XLI., Part III. BOOKS V., VI., and VII. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d.

SACRED BOOKS of the EAST. Edited by F. MAX MÜLLER. The SATAPATHA-BRAHMANA, according to the Text of the Mādhyandina School. Translated by JULIUS EGOELING.

8vo, cloth, with Maps and Plans, 12s.

SELECTIONS from STRABO. With an Introduction on Strabo's Life and Works. By the Rev. H. F. TOZER, M.A., F.R.O.S., Honorary Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford.

"A very valuable and instructive series of passages from the writings of the Greek geographer, edited by a very competent scholar, who is also an experienced traveller in classic lands."—Times.

Just published, Second Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, 2s.

SECOND GREEK READER. Selections from Herodotus. With Introductions, Notes, and Vocabulary, by A. M. BELL, M.A.

FULL CATALOGUES POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1137.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	PAGE
DYKES CAMPBELL'S LIFE OF COLERIDGE, by T. HUTCHINSON	141
GEORGE ROBERTSON'S KEYNOTES, by WILLIAM SHARP	143
WATTS'S MEDIEVAL SPAIN, by THE REV. WENTWORTH WEBSTER	144
TWO BOOKS ON HORSES, by J. I. MINCHIN	141
NEW NOVELS, by GEORGE SAINTSBURY	145
CURRENT THEOLOGY	146
NOTES AND NEWS	147
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	148
ORIGINAL VERSE: "PRECIPICE, SEA, AND SKY," by SIR GEORGE DOUGLAS	148
OBITUARY: R. M. BALLANTYNE, by J. S. C.; H. GOLDSMITH, by H. G. H.	148
MACAZINES AND REVIEWS	148
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	149
CORRESPONDENCE—
The Septuagint versus The Hebrew Text of the Bible, IV, by Sir H. H. Howarth; Sir Thomas Morgan, by C. H. Firth; An Ancient Posture of Prayer, by A. W. W. B.	149
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	150
BONEY'S TOP STORY OF OUR PLANET, by F. W. RUDLER	150
CORRESPONDENCE—
The Fables of Aelianus, by Prof. Ellis; The s-Plurals in English, by Prof. Napier	151
SCIENCE NOTES	151
PHILOLOGY NOTES	151
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	151
THE TEMPLE OF QUEEN HATASU AT DEIR-EL-BAHARI, by D. G. HOGARTH	153
ENGLISH DRAWINGS AT MESSRS. AGNEW'S	154
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	154
PAULLEON'S "CAROTINS," by CECIL NICHOLSON	154
OBITUARY: HANS BÜLOW, by J. S. S.	155
MUSIC NOTES	155

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—
Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS
115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List:—115, Fleet Street, London.

MR. KIRWAN.—LESSONS in SPEECH
Illustrated Dramatic Readings in combination of speech, pictures, and music. Selections. Literary Lectures.—Address, 3, Vernon Place, W.C.

BYRON—SHELLEY—KEATS: IN
MEMORIAL ENDOWED YEARLY PRIZES for the BEST ESSAY in ENGLISH, written by a Woman of any nation. Third set. With Portrait of Fanny and "Gossip." 1s. 1d.—For rules, send addressed halfpenny wrapper to ROSE MARY CRAWSHAW, Ilwaco, Breconshire.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to best
University or Army Tutors, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained free of sending a statement of requirements to R. J. BREVOR, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL
MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. SPOCK, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

ELOCUTION, Voice Production, Gesture,
Shakespeare, Gymnastics, Delsarte, Esthetics, Physical and Vocal Drill, Private Lessons in Expression, Practice in Reading, Recitation, and Criticism. THE CHAFFIN-NOBLE TRAINING SCHOOL OF EXPRESSION, 13, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W. Principal, Miss FANNIE MASON.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,

Importers of Foreign Books,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,

AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.—NOTICE

to ARTISTS.—THE DAYS for RECEIVING PAINTINGS, DRAWINGS, &c., are FRIDAY, SATURDAY, and MONDAY, MARCH 30th, 31st, and APRIL 2nd, and for SCULPTURE, TUESDAY, APRIL 3rd.—Forms and labels can be obtained from the Academy during the month of March on receipt of stamped and Directed Envelope

THE COLONIAL COLLEGE and TRAINING FARMS (Limited), Hollesley Bay, Suffolk.

For the Training of those destined for Colonial Life, &c.
The College owns and farms for the instruction of its students a fine Seaside Estate of 1,800 acres.
Prospectus on application to the RESIDENT DIRECTOR.

ELTHAM COLLEGE, KENT (THE ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL).

TEN OPEN ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS, £40 to £50, on APRIL 11, 12, 13.—Full particulars of HEAD MASTER.

GUY'S HOSPITAL.—PRELIMINARY

SCIENTIFIC (M.B. Lond.) CLASSES are held throughout the year. Special Instruction is given for the July Examination. Fee 16 Guineas.

GUY'S HOSPITAL.—ENTRANCE

SCHOLARSHIPS in September, 1894. FOUR OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS, two (£150 and £60) in Science, and two (£100 and £50) in Arts.—Particulars and copies of Examination Papers on application to the DEAN, Guy's Hospital.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE
DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Truro, &c.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

UNIVERSITY of EDINBURGH.

LECTURESHIP in (a) FRENCH LANGUAGE and LITERATURE and ROMANCE PHILOLOGY, and (b) GERMAN LANGUAGE and LITERATURE and TEUTONIC PHILOLOGY.

The University Court will, on 16th April next, or some subsequent day, APPOINT a LECTURER in each of the above two subjects.

The Lecturers must be qualified to instruct students with a view to Honours, as well as the ordinary Degree in Arts, and must possess a historical acquaintance with both the Literature and the Philology of France and Germany respectively from the earliest times. They should also possess a thorough colloquial command of the language. They will be required to teach during both the Winter and the Summer Session, and to enter on their duties at the beginning of the Winter Session, 1894-95.

The appointment, which may be renewed, will be for five years, at an annual salary of £400 in each Lectureship.

It is a condition of their appointment that the Lecturers shall not teach in schools, or in any Institution other than the University.

Each applicant should lodge with the undersigned, not later than MONDAY, 26th MARCH next, sixteen copies of his application, and sixteen copies of any testimonials he may desire to submit. One copy of the application should bear the applicant's signature.

M. G. TAYLOR, Secretary University Court.
University of Edinburgh,
22nd January, 1894.

BRITISH MUSEUM.

EVENING OPENING.

On and after Monday, the 19th February, the Exhibition Galleries will be open from 8 p.m. to 10 p.m. as follows:—

MONDAYS and FRIDAYS: { Egyptian, Assyrian, Semitic, Religious and American collections.
WEDNESDAYS and SATURDAYS: { Greek and Roman collections.

TUESDAYS and THURSDAYS: { Manuscripts, King's Library, Porcelain and Glass, and Prints and Drawings; Prehistoric, Ethnographical and Medieval collections.

19th Feb., 1894.
E. MAUNCE THOMPSON,
Principal Librarian and Secretary.

Now ready, crown 8vo, price 6s., 5s. pp.

IBSEN. A Lecture delivered at University
College, Liverpool, by Request of the Senate, January 26, 1894, by SIR EDWARD RUSSELL.

Liverpool: EDWARD HOWELL, Church Street. London: SIMPSON, MARSHALL & CO., Limited.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS
and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

The Author's Manual

By PERCY RUSSELL.

With Prefatory Remarks by Mr. GLADSTONE.
Sixth Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s

The WESTMINSTER REVIEW says: "A very complete manual and guide for journalist and author. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense. . . . We have little else but praise for the volume."

DIGBY, LONG & CO., PUBLISHERS,
15, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON.

SECOND MEMOIR of the ARCHAEOLOGICAL SURVEY of EGYPT. Published under the auspices of the EGYPT EXPLORATION FUND.

BENI HASAN. Part II. By PERCY E. NEWBERRY. With Appendix, Plans, and Measurements of the Tombs by G. W. FRASER, F.S.A. Edited by F. L. GRIFITH, B.A. F.S.A. 39 Plates (3 coloured). Price 25s.

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER & Co., Ltd., London; BERNARD QUARITCH, London; ASHER & Co., London; and OFFICE of the EGYPT Exploration Fund, 37, Great Russell Street, W.C. (opposite the British Museum).

TO SCULPTORS and others.—PORTLAND PLACE, W.

A very handsome 13-ROOMED RESIDENCE, with two noble STUDIOS at rear, specially adapted for Artistic Work of Colossal Proportions. The Studios are let to an eminent sculptor, but possession may be obtained by one quarter's no ice. The Residence will be offered with possession.

MESSRS. ROBERT TIDEY & SON

will SELL by AUCTION, at the MART, CITY, on WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 28th, 1894, at Two o'clock precisely, the direct PORTLAND LEASE of No. 31, DEVONSHIRE STREET, W. Unexpired term 28 years at £45 per annum, the premises being together of the rental value of £250 per annum.

May be viewed. Particulars, &c., at the Mart, of Messrs. MOONIE & MILLS, Solicitors, 30, Basinghall Street, E.C., or of the AUCTIONEERS, 193, Essex Road, Islington.

The Valuable and Extensive Stock of Books of Mr. J. TOOVEY.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HOOD

will SELL by AUCTION, at their HOUSE, No. 13, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C., on MONDAY, Feb. 26, and Eight Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, the valuable and extensive STOCK of BOOKS of Mr. J. TOOVEY, comprising valuable County Histories on Large Paper—Privately Printed Club Books—Early Manuscripts—choice and Historic Bindings—best Editions of the French and Italian Classics—Americana—Old English Literature—Works of the English, French, and Italian Dramatists and Poets—Bibliography—the Illustrated Books—Works on Heraldry and English Antiquities—Voyages and Travels—Historical Works—Early Books in Black Letter—and Works in most Classes of Literature.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had; if by post, on receipt of eight stamps.

A Collection of Books on Sports and Pastimes, the Property of Mr. J. TOOVEY.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HOOD

will SELL by AUCTION, at their HOUSE, No. 13, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C., on THURSDAY, March 8, at 1 o'clock precisely, a COLLECTION of BOOKS on SPORTS and PASTIMES, and a few Pictures, the Property of Mr. J. TOOVEY.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had; if by post, on receipt of four stamps.

THEISM; or, the Religion of Common Sense.

A Handbook of Religion based on our Reason, Conscience, and Love, apart from so-called "Revelation."

By the Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, B.A. Oxon., formerly Vicar of Halaugh, Minister of the Theistic Church, Swallow Street, Williams & Norgate. Price 2s. 6d.

MUDIE'S

SELECT

LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

ONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;
241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.O

JAMES NISBET & CO., PUBLISHERS.

BY THE LATE R. M. BALLANTYNE.

Recently published.

1. PERSONAL REMINISCENCES and INCIDENTS. With

Portrait. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"A most entertaining volume."—Daily Telegraph.

2. THE WALRUS-HUNTERS: a Romance of the Realms of Ice.

With Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 5s.

"Admirably diversified in incident, and full of interest in all respects."—Saturday Review.

With Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. each.

THE HOT SWAMP.

THE BUFFALO RUNNERS.

CHARLIE to the RESCUE.

BLOWN to BITS.

BLUE LIGHTS.

THE FUGITIVES.

RED ROONEY.

THE ROVER of the ANDES.

THE YOUNG TRAWLER.

DUSTY DIAMONDS.

The BATTERY and the BOILER.

THE GIANT of the NORTH.

THE LONELY ISLAND.

POST HASTE.

IN the TRACK of the TROOPS.

The SETTLER and the SAVAGE.

UNDER the WAVES.

RIVERS of ICE.

THE PIRATE CITY.

BLACK IVORY.

THE NORSEMAN in the WEST.

THE IRON HORSE.

THE FLOATING LIGHT of the GOODWIN SANDS.

ERLING the BOLD.

THE GOLDEN DREAM.

DEEP DOWN.

FIGHTING the FLAMES.

SHIFTING WINDS.

THE LIGHTHOUSE.

THE LIFEBOAT.

GASCOYNE, the SANDAL-

WOOD TRADER.

THE WILD MAN of the WEST.

THE RED ERIC.

FREAKS on the FELS.

THE BIG OTTER.

** Also books by Mr. Ballantyne at 2s. 6d. and 1s.; list sent on application to the Publishers.

JAMES NISBET & CO., 21, BERNERS STREET, W.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRVATURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by Holi, R.A., Oakes, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Triusep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, of 181 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing nearly 70 Miniature photographs of notable autotypes, post free, ONK SHILLING.

New Pamphlet, "Autotype a Decorative and Educational Art," free on application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

THROAT AND COUGH

Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use

EPF'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.

In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the glycerine in these agreeable confection becomes actively healing.

Sold only in boxes, 7½d., and tins, 1s. 1½d., Labelled: AMES EPF & CO., Ltd., Homoeopathic Chemists, London

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANSTÄNGEL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

1894.

NOW READY.

Thirty-fourth annual publication. Price 50s., elegantly bound.

Dedicated, by permission, to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales.

THE COUNTY FAMILIES of the UNITED KINGDOM: a Royal Manual of the Titled and Un-titled Aristocracy of Great Britain and Ireland, by EDWARD WALFORD, M.A., late Scholar of Balliol College, Oxford. Containing Notices of the Descent, Birth, Marriage, Education, &c., of more than 12,000 distinguished Heads of Families in the United Kingdom, their Heirs-Apparent or Presumptive, together with a Record of the Patronage at their disposal, the Offices which they hold or have held, their Town Addresses, Country Residences, Clubs, &c.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, Piccadilly, W.

"LANGUAGES": a Journal for

Linguists, Philologists, and Students of Languages. Fourpence Monthly. New Series. Contents of the mid-February Number, now ready:—The Greatest Living Linguist: Dr. Leitner (illus.) special—International Languages—About Sanskrit (illus.)—Professor Brugsch (illus.)—Linguistic Publishers (illus.)—Bygone Linguists—Editorial Notes—Olla Podrida—Reviews—Correspondence—Prizes—Oriental-type Display, &c., &c.

Office: 57, FLEET STREET, LONDON.

PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,

&c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., are prepared to undertake the Printing and Publishing of first-class Newspapers, Magazines, Books, Catalogues, Pamphlets, Prospectuses, Articles of Association, Minutes of Evidence, &c., in the best style. Their offices are fitted with the latest improvements in Rotary and other Machinery, the most modern English and Foreign Type, and they employ none but first-class workmen. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 2799. Telegram, "Africaism London."

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

NEW VOLUME OF BISHOP CREIGHTON'S

"HISTORY OF THE PAPACY."

HISTORY of the PAPACY during the REFORMATION. By MANDELL CREIGHTON, D.D., LL.D., Bishop of Peterborough. Vol. V. (1517-1527). THE GERMAN REVOLT. 8vo, 15s.

* Vols. I. and II. (1378-1464), 32s. Vols. III. and IV. (1464-1518), 24s.

NEW NOVEL BY STANLEY J. WEYMAN.

A GENTLEMAN of FRANCE: being

the Memoirs of GASTON DE BONNE, Sieur de Marsac. By STANLEY J. WEYMAN, Author of "The House of the Wolf." New and Cheaper Edition, with Frontispiece and Vignette by H. J. Ford. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"This is, in fact, quite the best historical romance that has appeared for some years. It is full of sensation, and the adventures hang very naturally upon the hero. Never since D'Artagnan was there a better swordsman." Pall Mall Gazette.

NEW BOOK BY CANON HOLLAND.

GOD'S CITY and the COMING of the KINGDOM. By the Rev. HENRY SCOTT HOLLAND, M.A., Canon and Precentor of St. Paul's. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE ALCHEMICAL ESSENCE and

the CHEMICAL ELEMENT: an Episode in the Quest of the Unchanging. By M. M. PATTISON MUIR, Fellow of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge. 8vo, 4s. 6d. [In a few days.]

HISTORY of ENGLAND under

HENRY IV. By JAMES HAMILTON WYLIE, M.A., one of H.M. Inspectors of Schools. 3 vols., crown 8vo. Vol. I., 10s. 6d.; Vol. II., 15s. (in a few days); Vol. III. (in the press).

AUSTRALIA AS IT IS; or, Facts and

Features, Sketches and Incidents of Australia and Australian Life. With Notices of New Zealand. By A. CLERGYMAN, Thirteen Years Resident in the Interior of New South Wales. Third Edition. Crown 8vo, 5s.

PICTURES in PROSE of NATURE,

WILD SPORT, and HUMBLE LIFE. By AUBYN TREVOR BATTYE, B.A. Crown 8vo, 6s.

CONTENTS:—With Carl of the Hill—Three Fish—Memories—A Child of the People—Canvey Island—In the Land of the Great Spirit—In Norfolk by the Sea—The Witch in Kent—Oxford: The Upper River—Upon a Day—The Procession of Spring—Vesper.

THE ONE GOOD GUEST: a Story.

By L. B. WALFORD. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"A story so full of the best human nature that it is vastly pleasant to read, and equally grateful to remember." National Observer.

WHAT NECESSITY KNOWS. By

L. DOUGALL, Author of "Beggars All," &c. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"One of the most thoughtful and impressive novels of the season. It is a book which grows upon the reader. Its descriptive passages, its curious glimpses of out-of-the-way life, its quiet but vigorous handling of character, all make it a story of no common order."—Yorkshire Post.

EPOCHS OF INDIAN HISTORY.—New Volume.

Edited by JOHN ADAM, M.A., Principal of Pachaiyappa's College, and Fellow of the University, Madras.

THE MUHAMMADANS; or, the History of Hindustan (including Bengal) to the time of Warren Hastings and the Regulating Act (1774). By J. D. REES, C.I.E., of the Madras Civil Service. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE SILVER LIBRARY.—New Volumes.

CARTHAGE and the CARTHAGINIANS. By R. BOSWORTH SMITH, M.A., Assistant Master in Harrow School. With Maps, Plans, &c. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.

THE TOILERS of the FIELD. By RICHARD JEFFERIES. With Portrait from the Bust in Salisbury Cathedral. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.

THE EXPANSE of

HEAVEN: Essays on the Wonders of the Firmament. By R. A. PROCTOR. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

NEW YORK: 15 EAST 16TH STREET.

DIGBY, LONG & CO.'S NEW BOOKS

AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

NOVELS AND STORIES.

SECOND EDITION.

LIKE a SISTER. By Madeline Crichton. In

8 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.

The PEOPLE says: "We predict for her a prosperous career. She writes good English, and works out her plot with considerable skill."

THE NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "GOOD DAME FORTUNE."

WHAT HAPPENED at MORWYN. By Maria

A. HOYER. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The PALL MALL GAZETTE says: "It is refreshing to take up so bright and wholesome a story as 'What Happened at Morwyn,' and one written in a style so fresh and natural. Its heroine realises as neatly as may be Wordsworth's famous description of woman as she should be.....Cordially recommending it to our readers."

NEW MILITARY NOVEL.

DEFERRED PAY; or, a Major's Dilemma. By

Lieut.-Colonel W. H. McCausland. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The WHITEHALL REVIEW says: "Will well repay perusal, and will be found of extreme interest to all Service readers."

THE NEW SOCIETY NOVEL.

FIRST LARGE EDITION EXHAUSTED, SECOND NOW READY.

UPPER BOHEMIANS: a Romance. By F. G.

WALPOLE, Author of "Lord Floysham." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The MORNING POST says: "An entertaining book, by a clever man of the world. Bright sketches of men and things here and abroad. The author's pictures of Roman society are excellent."

FIRST EDITION SOLD, SECOND NOW READY.

WEST CLIFF: a Romance of Portland Isle.

By EASTON KING. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The MANCHESTER EXAMINER says: "It is an intensely interesting and very well-written book, which we can heartily recommend."

EDWIN ELLIOTT'S SUCCESSFUL NOVEL.

NETTA. By Edwin Elliott. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The ACADEMY says: "Mr. Elliott is to be welcomed.....A quite excellent story. Style .....so good.....Not only is the interest permanently sustained, but passages of dramatic vividness detain the reader."

THE SIXTH EDITION IS NOW READY.

DR. JANET of HARLEY STREET. By Dr.

ARABELLA KENEALY, Author of "Molly and her Men-o'-War." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "IN A MOMENT OF PASSION."

BABETTE VIVIAN: a Novel. By Christel.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The MANCHESTER EXAMINER says: "A good plot and some pleasant characters.....It is certainly a good novel, likely to be enjoyed by all who read it."

"ZORG": a Story of British Guiana. By Vernon

KIRKE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The PUBLIC OPINION says: "After starting to read 'Zorg' one will not put it down until the book is finished. The novel is a promising one. The character of Samia Gordon is cleverly drawn: indeed all the characters are depicted in a natural and life-like manner."

HER ANGEL FRIEND. By Monica Tregarthen.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

[Just out.]

MARIA, COUNTESS of SALETTO. From the Italian of E. ARSIB, by SYDNEY KING. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

[Just out.]

An animated, interesting, and vivid picture of Modern Italian Society.

MARIANELA. From the Spanish of B. Perez

CAJALOS. By MARY WHARTON, Translator of "Lady Perfecta," from the same Author. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The MANCHESTER GUARDIAN says: "Modern Spanish fiction is not well known to English readers, and there is a consequent freshness in 'Marianela.' Incidentally to the story questions of more than passing importance are discussed with originality and sympathy."

BJÖRNSON AND TURGENIEFF.

THE BRIDAL MARCH. From the Norwegian of

BJÖRNSON; and The WATCH. From the Russian of IVAN TURGENIEFF.

Translated by JOHN EVAN WILLIAMS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

The LITERARY WORLD says: "The Bridal March," with its vivid descriptions, will be read with interest.....Charmingly told, the characters are skilfully drawn, and stand out in strong relief. 'The Watch' is replete with vigorous touches and wholly original. It exhibits the writer's peculiar gift of character drawing, supplemented by effective descriptive power."

THE HERO of the "PELICAN": an Ocean
Drama. By PERCY DE LISLE. Crown 8vo, pictorial cloth, 3s. 6d. [Just out.]

THE GIRL MUSICIAN. By Miriam Young.

With Full-Page Illustrations by Matthew Stretch. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

The LIVERPOOL MERCURY says: "This is a very pleasing story. The work is quite delightful."

THE PURSUIT of a CHIMERA: being a Mid-
winter's Day Dream. By C. ELVEY COPE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

The SATURDAY REVIEW says: "Much of the drama is singularly dream-like, and the mingling of fancy and oddity shows an excellent simulation of genuine dreaming.....The story is presented with considerable power."

THE VENETIAN SECRET; or, the Art of the Past. By CHARLES LUTYENS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

The SATURDAY REVIEW says: "His characters are agreeably drawn, and are neatly differentiated without any traces of exaggeration."

THE OLD HOUSE of RAYNER, &c. By Grimley

HILL. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

The DAILY TELEGRAPH says: "Eminently readable...Written to entertain.....Fulfill their object very adequately."

CLENCHED ANTAGONISMS. By Lewis Iram.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

The SATURDAY REVIEW says: "A powerful and ghastly narrative of the triumph of force over virtue."

VANITY FAIR says: "Lewis Iram is original, unconventional, powerful, and interesting."

SOCIETY says: "An exceedingly able and enthralling story."

DR. WEEDON'S WAIF. By Kate Somers.

Illustrated with Full-page Drawings by Matthew Stretch. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

VANITY FAIR says: "One of the prettiest and most touching stories we have read for a long time."

The SATURDAY REVIEW says: "Vividly and pathetically told."

BUT: a Domestic Sketch. By Bachelor Abbots-

FORD. Illustrated throughout with numerous Drawings. Crown 8vo, picture cover, 1s.

The SCOTSMAN says: "It draws its fun from the adventures of a bachelor among children. It is brightly written and illustrated."

THE STRANGE ADVENTURES of a YOUNG

LADY of QUALITY, 1705. By DOROTHEA TOWNSHEND. Crown 8vo, paper cover, 1s.

The GUARDIAN says: "The story is pleasantly written; the spirit and manner of the time are well without being overdrawn, and the heroine is fresh and plucky."

NEW WORKS.

SIXTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE AS AN IRISH LANDLORD.

Memoirs of JOHN HAMILTON, D.L., of St. Ernan's, Donegal.

Edited, with Introduction, by REV. H. C. WHITE, late Chaplain, Paris.

With Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The TIMES says: "Much valuable light on the real history of Ireland, and of the Irish agrarian question in the present century, is thrown by a very interesting volume entitled.....This very instructive volume."

THE STANDARD WORK ON AUTHORSHIP.

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL. By Percy Russell.

With Prefatory Remarks by Mr. GLADSTONE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. Sixth Edition.

With Portrait.

The WESTMINSTER REVIEW says: "A very complete manual and guide for journalist and author...It is not merely a practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense.....We have little else but praise for the volume."

NEW POETRY.

SOME TRANSLATIONS from CHARLES

BAUDELAIRE, POET and SYMBOLIST. By H. C. With Portrait. Fcap. 8vo, elegant parchment, 2s. 6d.

The TIMES says: "Are executed with no little metrical skill and command of poetic diction."

BRUCE'S HEART, and other Poems. By

EDWARD TOOHEY WELLS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

[Just out.]

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NEW WORKS.

FREDERIC HILL: an

Autobiography of Fifty Years in Times of Reform. Being the Recollections of a Retired Civil Servant. By his Daughter, CONSTANCE HILL. 1 vol., demy 8vo, with Portraits, 16s.

"A charming book, most interesting and most readable." Aberdeen Free Press.

"Unexpected but welcome light on the political and social movements of the century, together with much pleasant gossip of a personal kind, is to be found in these pages." Leeds Mercury.

"A volume which in interest reads almost like a romance, and by those who take any interest in social reform it will be read with special profit and avidity. It has been admirably edited by Miss Hill."—Dundee Courier.

"The pages teem with good stories and pieces of history, local and national, political and literary, all told with charming simplicity and distinctness." Birmingham Daily Gazette.

The CONVERSATIONS of

JAMES NORTHCOTE, R.A. Recorded by WILLIAM HAZLITT. A New Edition, Edited, with an Essay on Hazlitt and a Note on Northcote, by EDMUND GOSSE. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"Will be welcomed by a considerable section of the public—not only by those who are interested in matters of pictorial art, but by all who are attracted to bright and lively gossip of the miscellaneous sort. The conversations are eminently readable."—Globe.

JUST READY.

WOMEN of LETTERS,

including Memoirs of Lady Morgan, the Misses Berry, Mary Wollstonecraft Shelley, Lady Ann Barnard, Sarah Countess Cowper, Mrs. Opie, and Lady Duff Gordon. By GERTRUDE TOWNSHEND MAYER. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

NEW NOVELS AT THE LIBRARIES

NOW READY.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE SIN OF JOOST AVELINGH."

THE GREATER GLORY

By MAARTEN MAARTENS,
Author of "An Old Maid's Love," &c.
3 vols., crown 8vo.

"No review can do justice to the many deep and delicate studies in this careful, brilliant, and picturesque book." Daily Chronicle.

"A most ingenious and clever novel, full of good things." Daily Telegraph.

"A book which has a charm of style quite its own, and has enriched the world of fiction with new characters, destined to more than passing fame."—Observer.

"A serious and striking production."—Scotsman.

NOW READY.

THE ROMANCE OF SHERE MOTE.

By PERCY HURLBURD,
Author of "In Black and White."
3 vols., crown 8vo.

THE SECOND EDITION OF
DIANA TEMPEST. By
MARY CHOLMONDELEY, Author of "The Danvers Jewels," "Sir Charles Danvers," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

THE VICAR of LANG-

THWAITE. By LILY WATSON. 3 vols., crown 8vo.
"This pretty story is a plea for tolerance and charity among the 'clashing of the creeds.' There is much that is touching in the book, much simple pathos and bits of quaint humour." Pall Mall Gazette.

NOW READY.

BRITOMART. By Mrs.

HERBERT MARTIN, Author of "Bonnie Lesley," &c.
3 vols., crown 8vo.
"A noble novel—this realistic and deeply-thought-out story is as charming as it is good."—World.

NOW READY.

SPEEDWELL. By Lady

GUENDOLEN RAMSDEN. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.
"This graceful and pathetic book will please all readers. The story of woman's love and man's inconstancy is sweetly and freshly told."—Pall Mall Gazette.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

BLISS, SANDS & FOSTER'S NEW BOOKS.

A WINTER JAUNT TO NORWAY.

With Accounts (from personal acquaintance) of Nansen, Ibsen, Björnson, Brandes, &c. By Mrs. ALEC TWEEDIE, Author of "A Girl's Ride in Iceland," and "The Passion Play at Oberammergau." Fully Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 16s.

"A breezy and entertaining volume.....well calculated to induce other travellers to follow her adventurous example, while it will entertain many who must perforce stay at home."—Times.

"Charming account of her experiences in Norway and of the people she met there.....The description she has given of much that she saw and heard is written in simple but vigorous language, and abounds with useful, as well as entertaining, information about Norway."—Morning Post.

"The volume is one of varied attractions." Daily Telegraph.

"Admirably illustrated."—Scotsman.

A NEW BOOK OF TRAVEL AT THE LIBRARIES.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

IN AN ORCHARD.

By
Mrs. MACQUOID.
2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.
[Published Feb. 5.]

First Review.

"As pleasant a tale as has come from its author's pen."—Scotsman.

INSCRUTABLE.

By ESMÉ STUART.
1 vol., crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.
[This week.]

VICTIMS.

By F. W. MAUDE.
1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.
[Just published.]

Cloth, gilt top, 2s.

THE MODERN LIBRARY.

"Autumn leaf" tinted hand-made paper, 1s. 6d.

THE NEW VOLUME.

"HEAVENS!"

A Bohemian Novel,
BY

Alois Vojtech Smilovsky.

Translated by
Prof. V. E. MOUREK, of Prague University; and
JANE MOUREK.

PREVIOUS VOLUMES.

1. A LATTER-DAY ROMANCE.

By Mrs. MURRAY HICKSON.

2. THE WORLD'S PLEASURES.

By CLARA SAVILE-CLARKE.

3. A NAUGHTY GIRL.

By J. ASHBY STERRY.

LONDON: 15, CRAVEN STREET, STRAND, W.C.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

ANCIENT ARMS AND ARMOUR:

A Pictorial and Descriptive Record of the Origin and Development of Arms and Armour.

To which are appended 153 Plates, specially drawn from the Author's Collection.

By EDWIN J. BRETT.

Imp 4to, 650 pp., with 1,200 Original Engravings, half-bound, FIVE GUINEAS net.

"Mr. Brett's magnificent work."—Daily Telegraph. "We know no authority more thorough and up-to-date."—Daily Chronicle. "A masterpiece of its kind....Mr. Brett's work is as interesting as it is valuable."—Black and White. "Is noteworthy for the very elaborate series of illustrations with which it is enriched."—Times. "We have lately had a sort of revival of the Man in Armour. Mr. Brett's splendid volume, therefore, has fallen on welcoming days."—Daily News. "It is a book that all antiquaries and lovers of ancient armour will deem a great acquisition to the shelves of their libraries."—Life. "Some of the finest pictures in Mr. Brett's books are Italian arms and weapons of the tourney. Mr. Brett is an enthusiastic believer in the life of the Middle Ages. His collection seems to be very rich."—Observer. "Many of Mr. Brett's suits of armour came from such well-known collections as those of Sir Samuel Rush Meyrick, Sir Coutts Lindsay, Lord Londesborough, Count Gayetzki, &c. Mr. Brett's work is a truly monumental volume."—Sporting and Dramatic News. "Every great library will have it upon their shelves. A truly magnificent work."—England.

GLIMPSES OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION:

Myths, Ideals, and Realities.

By J. G. ALGER, Author of "Englishmen in the French Revolution," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 8s.

BEYOND THE ICE:

Being a Story of the Newly-Discovered Region Round the North Pole

Edited from DR. FRANK FARLEIGH'S DIARY by G. READ MURPHY, Inventor of the Victoria Torpedo.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

TWO REMARKABLE COLLECTIONS OF SHORT STORIES.—Vide Passes.

THE WAY THEY LOVED at GRIM-

PAT. By E. BENTON ESLER. 1 vol., 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"If love stories simply told, without foolish sentiment or exaggerated pathos, can win the public ear, 'The Way They Loved at Grimpat' should be popular. They are among the very best specimens of our modern short story literature." MR. JAMES PAIN in the Illustrated London News, Jan. 20, 1894.

TALES of the YORKSHIRE WOLDS.

By J. KEIGHLEY SNOWDEN. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"A welcome new-comer. Mr. Snowden's book gives a keen delight." Pall Mall Gazette. "Mr. Snowden handles humour and pathos with equal skill, whilst he is not afraid to touch with a firm hand some of the saddest problems of life."—Yorkshire Post.

CHEAP EDITIONS AT ALL BOOKSELLERS.

Uniform crown 8vo Volumes, bound in cloth, price HALF-A-CROWN per Volume.

DONALD ROSS of HEIMRA. By WILLIAM BLACK.

CRIPPS the CARRIER. By R. D. BLACKMORE.

JACK'S COURTSHIP. By W. Clark RUSSELL.

DOD'S PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, and KNIGHTAGE for 1894. Crown 8vo, over 1,000 pages, hand- specially bound, cloth extra gilt, gilt edges, 10s. 6d.

"Aims at giving a great deal of information in a small space, and signally succeeds in doing so. For purposes of rapid reference it has no competitor."—Athenaeum.

The ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER'S

DIARY for 1894. Arranged by RALPH HINDLE BAKER. Demy 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

"Mr. Baker has provided all that is necessary to an organist or choir-master for keeping a record of everything appertaining to his church and choir in the handiest possible form."—Daily Telegraph.

For an Account of

"THE LIFE AND WORK

OF

SIR EDWARD BURNE-JONES,"

By Mr. COSMO MONKHOUSE,

See the FEBRUARY Number of "SCRIBNER'S
MAGAZINE," price ONE SHILLING.

The Article is illustrated with a Portrait, and many fine Reproductions of Sir Edward Burne-Jones's Pictures.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1894.

No. 1137, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Samuel Taylor Coleridge: a Narrative of the Events of his Life. By James Dykes Campbell. (Macmillans.)

It is now some ten months ago since there appeared the latest of the series known as Macmillan's "Complete Editions of the Poets," namely, The Poetical Works of Samuel Taylor Coleridge: edited, with a Biographical Introduction, by James Dykes Campbell. The book proved a success, as legitimate and well-earned as it was instantaneous and complete. It contained by far the fullest collection of the poems that had ever appeared (including a number of poems and fragments—some of them artistically important, such as "The Three Graves," Parts I. and II., and all of them personally interesting—which, hitherto, had remained in manuscript); and Appendices and Notes to the extent of some 180 pages, containing everything needful to explain and illustrate in the fullest manner the origin, history, and meaning of every piece in the book—enough, in short, to satisfy the requirements of the most exacting student.

It is, however, neither in the diligent assemblage of the disiecta membra, nor in the ample scope and full measure of his notes, that the chief merit of Mr. Campbell's editorial work consists. That which renders his book of such exceptional value, and raises it in importance far beyond every other volume of the multum-in-parvo class, is the fact that in the biographical introduction prefixed to the Poems the student finds—not, as is customary and indeed proper with books of this compendious character, merely a brief epitome of some standard and recognised biography, but—an absolutely original and independent narrative of the events of Coleridge's life, based upon the editor's personal researches among autograph letters and other authentic contemporary records. Mr. Campbell has not been content to take his facts on trust from preceding biographers of the poet: he is resolved to have as little as possible to do with biography at second-hand. Accordingly, at the expense of enormous pains in delving and blasting, he has worked his way down to the bed rock, and fetched up thence into the light a number of pure, native, unsophisticated facts, of the genuineness of which at least, whether they harmonise with our preconceived notions or not, it is impossible for us to entertain the faintest shadow of a doubt.

In his preface to the reprint of the Introduction (the book now under review), Mr. Campbell writes:

"As no authoritative biography of Coleridge existed, I was obliged to construct a narrative for my own purpose. With this view I carefully sifted all the old biographical materials, and, as far as possible, collated them with the original documents. I searched all books of memoirs, &c., likely to contain incidental information regarding Coleridge; and, further, I was privileged by being permitted to make use of much important matter, either absolutely new or previously unavailable."

Of the protracted labour involved in the work of comparing and verifying; of the vexation caused by finding—as must often happen—one's generous self-expenditure in research crowned with results ludicrously disproportionate; of the baffling sense of frustration, when, after starting in full cry upon a false trail, one finds oneself presently lost in the wood or buried chin-deep in bog, but in either case farther than ever off the true scent—in a word, of the endless perplexity and bewilderment which form the inevitable concomitants of such a task as that undertaken by Mr. Campbell, no one can form anything like an adequate conception who has not, at some time or other, been caught in the toils of a similar quest.

The present writer, while earnestly disclaiming any pretension to be thus fully qualified, may yet be allowed to mention that having set to work, some time before the appearance of Mr. Campbell's edition of the Poems, to construct for his own use a complete and accurate chronological table of the events of Coleridge's life, and having for this purpose thoroughly ransacked the Memorials of Coleorton, The Letters of Charles Lamb (Ainger), The Estlin Letters, Thomas Poole and his Friends, A Group of Englishmen, Letters from the Lake Poets, and Alisop's Letters, Conversations, and Recollections of S. T. Coleridge, together with the various Lives of Wordsworth, Southey, and Cole-ridge that had up to that time appeared in print (including H. N. Coleridge's "Biographical Supplement" to the Biographia Literaria, ed. 1847), he may perhaps be in a position to frame some conjecture—however partial and inadequate—of the gigantic dimensions and herculean severity of Mr. Campbell's labours. Only with regard to one, and that probably the most arduous as it was certainly the most indispensable branch of the work, he must confess himself absolutely without experience: he has never attempted—having neither the courage nor the means requisite—either to unravel the mingled web of truth and falsehood so cunningly woven by Joseph Cottle, or to ascertain and correct that Artful Dodger's innumerable tamperings with the letters and other documents quoted by him in his Early Recollections. On this point there is no need to enlarge; suffice it to say that Hercules at work in the stable of Augeas is not in it with Mr. Campbell at work on the Reminiscences of Cottle. The task must have been indeed an odious one, enough to make an honest man's gorge rise again and again with amazed disgust. All the greater should be our gratitude to Mr. Campbell, who for our advantage tackled the nasty job like a man, and worked with such good will and to such good purpose that Mr. Joseph Cottle now stands securely pilloried for the pharisaical hypocrite and self-righteous rogue he most assuredly was:

"Breathing like sanctified and pious bawds,
The better to beguile," though unluckily beyond the reach of "ovarious" oblations or of anything more damaging than a few drops of Walkden's Writing Fluid.

It was not likely that a biography of the class we have endeavoured to describe would be suffered to remain very long in the subordinate position to which the modesty of its author had originally consigned it. When the new edition of the Poems had been a week or two in their hands, the critics began, with one accord, to express their surprise that a piece of work of sterling and unquestionable value should have been sent for the first time before the public in such humble guise, and to demand that the Introduction should be reprinted as a substantive work, and in a style worthy of the high excellence of the matter. Of these demands the result is now before us. Mr. Campbell tells us—and tells us truly—that he has "spared no effort towards making it worthy of separate publication, and of its new title. It has been carefully revised; and though neither form nor scale has been materially altered, the author has not hesitated to expand the narrative wherever a fuller or clearer statement appeared to be desirable, or new facts which had come to light in the interval required to be mentioned."

We have thought it worth our while to go systematically through the new Memoir, comparing it carefully as we advanced with the original Introduction. Of the result of our examination the following is a brief account.

Within the narrow interval that has elapsed since the publication of Mr. Campbell's edition of the Poems, the one really important addition to our knowledge of Coleridge has been the series of letters written by him, eighteen in number, which his grandson, Mr. Ernest Hartley Coleridge, edited last year for the Illustrated London News (April 1—July 8, 1893). From these letters Mr. Campbell quotes freely in the Memoir before us, especially from the first four of the series, which were written from Christ's Hospital to the poet's mother and brothers George and Luke. Writing to the latter, Coleridge, then in his fifteenth year, says: "But above all, I can never sufficiently express my gratitude to my brother George. He is father, brother, and everything to me." This, we remember, puzzled us last year, as we had been under the impression that George was at this date (May, 1787) already resident at Ottery, where he ultimately succeeded to the Grammar School and to the private boarding school which his father had carried on. Mr. Campbell clears up the point by telling us that "About two years before this George had taken a situation as master in Newcome's Academy at Hackney, where he remained until he took up his permanent residence at Ottery in 1794. He was probably the 'Dear Brother' to whom the following request was addressed in a letter described as 'undated,' from Christ's Hospital, before 1790:—'You will excuse me for reminding you that, as our holidays commence next week, and I shall go out a good deal, a good pair of breeches will be no inconsiderable accession to my appearance," his present pair being "not altogether well adapted for a female eye."

In the letter to Luke already quoted, Coleridge says: "Miss Calerica [?] and my cousin Bowdon behave more kindly to me than I can express. I dine there every Saturday." On this Mr. Campbell comments:

"The many acknowledgments of kindnesses received from the Bowdons incline one to believe that there is a touch of artistic exaggeration in Lamb's description of Coleridge as 'a poor friendless boy, whose few acquaintances in the great city, after a little forced notice which they had the grace to take of him on his first arrival in town, soon grew tired of his holiday visits.'"

And, in truth, with his brother George hard by at Hackney, ready, on demand, to supply good counsel or new breeches; with a hearty welcome from his Bowdon "uncle, aunt, and cousins" in Threadneedle-street always awaiting him; and, later on, with the house of Mrs. Evans and her daughters ever open to receive him, Coleridge must have been an object of envy to many a less lucky schoolmate.

Of the letters written by Coleridge from Cambridge to the Evans family no less than seven have been preserved. One of these, addressed to Mrs. Evans immediately after the Craven Scholarship award had been announced, Mr. Campbell now prints for the first time. It has been alleged that his failure to obtain this distinction seriously affected Coleridge's spirits, and thus contributed to bring about the disaster of November, 1793, when the poet disappeared from his college, and, after a fruitless attempt to re-establish his credit by means of a share in the Irish Lottery, enlisted, as Silas Tompkins Comberbacke, in the Fifteenth or King's Light Dragoons. But this view receives no confirmation from Coleridge's letter, which runs as follows:

"The event of our examination was such as surpassed my expectation, and perfectly accorded with my wishes. After a very severe trial of six days' continuance, the number of the competitors was reduced from 17 to 4, and, after a further process of ordeal, we the survivors, were declared equal each to the other, and the Scholarship, according to the will of the Founder, awarded to the youngest of us, who was found to be a Mr. Butler of St. John's College [afterwards Headmaster of Shrewsbury and Bishop of Lichfield]. I am just two months older than he is; and, though I would doubtless have rather had it myself, I am not yet at all sorry at his success, for he is sensible and unassuming," &c.

On this Mr. Campbell comments: "I should be afraid to guarantee the strict accuracy of this account of the award; but it shows clearly enough that Coleridge did not take his loss of the scholarship very much to heart." Accordingly, Mr. Campbell attributes the wine-bibbing and debt-incurring and general "wretchlessness of living" which ensued, not to despondency arising from disappointed ambition, but rather to the circumstance that, Middleton being gone, the University no longer held a steadying influence for Coleridge. Writing to his wife from Göttingen in March, 1799, Coleridge recalls "the wild bacchanalian sympathy with which I had formerly joined" the wine-parties at Cambridge; and on this his biographer remarks: "I have an assured faith in the accuracy of the Cambridge reminiscence." Of the flight to London and its immediate causes Mr. Campbell says:

"I think the Mary Evans affair is only to be understood by assuming that soon before his enlistment Coleridge had become convinced that, while Mary Evans continued to look upon him as merely a clever boy whose companionship was pleasant, she was giving her affections to 'Mr. —'; and that, thereupon, and without a word of declaration or explanation, he had suddenly broken off all relations with the family." "Cottle ascribes to Coleridge the statement that he ran away in a fit of disgust arising from Mary Evans's rejection of his addresses. It is not improbable that debts and disappointed love combined to drive him out of his course. Debts, however contracted, were evidently weighing upon him at the time."

Of a long and important paragraph on the "Mary Evans affair," which now appears for the first time (pp. 40, 41), we cannot afford space for more than the final sentence: "The whole episode, so far as we know it, appears to have been highly creditable to Mary Evans, and in no respect discreditable to Coleridge."

Mr. Campbell's purpose, as he tells us in the preface to his edition of the Poems, was to make the Introduction "a plain narrative of the events of Coleridge's life." "Comment, especially moralising, has been studiously avoided." The rule was a wise though difficult one, and was observed by Mr. Campbell with a fidelity that deserved, and won, the widest and warmest acknowledgment. Naturally enough the gratitude of his critics seems to have stimulated him to fresh efforts: he has revised his pages and has ruthlessly struck out thence everything in the shape of "an aside": whatever could be by the exercise of the perversest ingenuity be construed into an expression of the author's feeling or judgment regarding the act related. Thus, in a note on the passage (Introduction, p. xvi.; Memoir, p. 13) where he speaks of Coleridge having "invaded the murky caves of the third-century Neo-Platonists with his boyish rush-light," Mr. Campbell says: "He unblushingly asserts that he had translated the eight hymns of Synesius from the Greek into English Anacreontics before his fifteenth year!" In the Memoir the adverb is omitted. Again, where he describes the tour in South Wales on which the poet accompanied Thomas Wedgwood, a metaphysical hypochondriac and amateur in narcotics—his particular "wanity" being Bang, "the Nephenthe of the Ancients," according to Coleridge—Mr. Campbell (Introduction, p. lxiii.) speaks of the pair as Arcades ambo. This epithet has disappeared from the reprint (p. 136), probably because it seemed to convey a suspicion that the two men were bound to each other through a common voluptuousness. Again, when telling the story of The Friend, Mr. Campbell has omitted from the Memoir certain passages of the Introduction, which seem to indirectly charge Coleridge with persistent obstinacy in neglecting the suggestions of men experienced in journalism; and whereas in the Introduction he says of the stamped paper on which The Friend was to be printed that "it was sent, of course, by the wrong route" (a suggestion that the miscarriage was to be regarded as the natural and inevitable result of the arrangements for the conveyance of the paper being made by Coleridge), in the Memoir he has substituted the word "unfortunately," thus reducing the sentence to a bare statement of the fact. But by far the most important example of this class occurs on pp. lvi.-lvii. of the Introduction. After describing the serious pecuniary straits and the lamentable habit of unproductiveness into which Coleridge had allowed himself to drift after his settlement at Greta Hall in 1800, Mr. Campbell writes: "With the best will in the world to extend nothing but sympathy towards a man of genius beating his wings against the realities of life, one finds it difficult to be quite patient with his perplexities. Even Poole's patience gave way." Here, at last, we have something like a word of comment. But the passage is altered in the Memoir. "One finds it difficult" is struck out, and the sentence runs: "Even Poole found it difficult to be quite patient with Coleridge's perplexities."

As to the date of the first meeting between Wordsworth and Coleridge, Mr. Campbell has found cause to abandon the opinion, expressed by him in a note on p. xxxii. of the Introduction, that it took place in either September or October, 1796. He now believes that the two men may have met as early as in September, 1795. Into this question the narrow limits of our space forbid us to enter fully, as we had intended doing; but, in expressing our entire concurrence with Mr. Campbell's present opinion, we may point out that it is that which is supported by the testimony of contemporary letters: as, for example, Lamb's second letter to Coleridge (Ainger's ed.), written probably on May 31, 1796, and Coleridge's letter of May 13, 1796, to "Citizen Thelwall," where he speaks of "a very dear friend of mine, who is, in my opinion, the best poet of the age," and whom, notwithstanding that Coleridge goes on to describe him as "a Republican and at least a semi-Atheist," we are fully persuaded to have been none other than William Wordsworth. There is, in fine, no solid reason whatsoever why we should not accept as the true account of the matter what H. N. Coleridge tells us: namely, that the poets met each other for the first time in the year 1795 at the house of Mr. Pinney, the Bristol merchant of whose country house, Racedown in Dorsetshire, Wordsworth shortly afterwards became the occupant.

On the Dedication of Coleridge's second edition of his poems to his brother George (from which, by the way, he introduces two lengthy passages into the Memoir) Mr. Campbell has added a paragraph of just and felicitously expressed criticism, from which we quote the following sentences:

"The style moves in easy accord with the thought, gravity and pensive gaiety alternating and mingling with unfailing sweetness and grace. But withal, the deficiency of the poem, from one point of view, is more notable than its achievement: it gives no hint—nothing in the volume to which it is a prelude gives the least hint—that Coleridge's hand was already on the latch of the magic casements which were to open on the perilous seas sailed by the 'Ancient Mariner,' and the fairy lands of 'Christabel' and 'Kubla Khan.'"

For this curious deficiency Mr. Campbell refrains from suggesting any reason. To us it appears to be simply due to the fact that the Dedication was written before the recently begun habit of laudanum had had time to produce any permanent effect upon the poet's mental constitution. Coleridge's first experience of laudanum seems to have been on November 3, 1796, when (he tells Poole) his medical attendant prescribed it for the relief of an acute attack of neuralgia. He instantly experienced its positive, as well as its negative effects: "I take twenty-five drops of laudanum every five hours, the ease and spirits gained by which have enabled me to write you this flighty, but not exaggerating account." On December 17 following, he tells Thelwall that neuralgia had made "the frequent use of laudanum absolutely necessary." The Dedication was probably written in May 1797. As the poet's body became habituated to the "angelic poison," there ensued, doubtless, a rapid expansion and exaltation of his imaginative faculty, due to those "drops distilled from the well of life," whose power can pierce "even to the inmost seat of mental sight." For we must recollect that, as De Quincey says, "it is in the faculty of mental vision, it is in the increased power of dealing with the shadowy and the dark, that the characteristic virtue of opium lies." Of "Kubla Khan," we know from Coleridge himself that it was the outcome of an opium-dream; and, for our part, we do not doubt that some at least of the vast and fantastic imagery of "The Ancient Mariner" was produced by the same agency. Thus, if it be true that opium killed the poet in Coleridge, it is also no less true that opium developed and elicited the poet in him. The same drug which, when used occasionally and in moderation (as no doubt Coleridge at first used it), served to quicken "the vision and the faculty divine," when taken incessantly and in excessive quantity (as after the settlement at Greta Hall) bred a film which was fated never thoroughly to be purged from the poet's mental eye.

In the Memoir we have noticed but one error. "Seventeen months" (p. 241) should be "thirty-one months."

T. HUTCHINSON.

Keynotes. By George Egerton. (Elkin Mathews & John Lane.)

In his essay on Balzac, Sainte-Beuve speaks of the "topsy-turveydom of human worthlessness." The sentiment underlying this phrase is common to many writers, of all periods and of all nations. But there is a sense in which it is intensely modern; and it is significant that the keenest literary realisation of it is on the part of women. That life is "topsy-turvy"—in other words that—as Théophile Gautier, I think, says somewhere—chance is a treasure-house of atrocious combinations; that the lords of misadventure seem paramount; that the unexpected is, so to say, all that we can safely depend upon—all this is part of that universal worldly wisdom sung by the Omars and demonstrated by the Schopenhauers of every age. But that there is a radical topsy-turveydom, a blind struggling, a confused array of baffled forces, below the mere general mischance of circumstance, is a fact which, though foreshadowed by Hamlet and all his kin, is only now being realised with that poignancy of apprehension which is certainly the most characteristic note of our fin-de-siècle imaginative literature. At no time has the inner life of woman been so clearly, some will say so ruthlessly revealed. There are, for those whose eyes are opened, signals of profound import along the advancing line of humanity; and the most eager, the most intent, the most determined of the standard-bearers of the army of the coming generation are seen to be women. It is difficult for those who have not pondered the literary expression of the problems which are now still further dividing, and at the same time drawing to a closer union, men and women—for those who are ignorant of the conclusions of such iconoclasts as Strindberg, Nietzsche, and other dreamers of salvation through anarchy, as well as of the more disguised but not less significant writings of women throughout Europe and the Americas: a Matilde Serao in Italy, an Emilia Pardo Bazan in Spain, a "Rachilde" in France, a "George Egerton" (among others) in England—it is difficult for those unobservers to realise that we are not only on the possible verge of a conflict of utmost moment, but that the frontiers of "What is" have been already crossed at a hundred places, and that the pioneers of "What is to be" are fighting and falling, slaying stealthily, encroaching steadily, a score hurrying in the steps of every "faithful failure."

This New Spirit, as it is vaguely called, demonstrates itself seriously, even in fiction. Certainly no more significant book of its kind than Keynotes has appeared recently. In the clever work of John Oliver Hobbes, of Sarah Grand, of Mrs. W. K. Clifford, and of other women novelists of the new dispensation, this spirit is conspicuous, though not with the same absolute unreserve, the same straightforward frankness of both thought and expression, as in the book now under review. For there can be no question as to the sex of "George Egerton." The touch of a woman is recognisable throughout. The time is, of course, past when a statement of this kind would convey a breath of condescension, if not of actual disparagement. The very qualities that are commonly taken to distinguish the work of a man from that of a woman—logical directness of thought, firmness of handling, conciseness, and a vigorous individuality in either the use or the voluntary renunciation of verbal graces—are the qualities pre-eminently possessed by "George Egerton." With the exception of Mr. George Meredith, there is no writer of our day who is more masculine in the quality of her wit, in her peculiar insight and directness of style, than John Oliver Hobbes; yet in Some Emotions and a Moral, in The Sinner's Comedy, in A Bundle of Life, there is the unmistakable suggestion, breath, atmosphere, call it what one will, which reveals the sex of the author. I read somewhere the other day that, while the first of the stories in Keynotes, "A Cross Line," is much more like the work of a woman than of a man, the three grouped under the general title "Under the Northern Sky," could not possibly be written by anyone but a man, and a man of exceptional, almost brutal vigour. This reminds one of the remarks made some fifty years ago, when the dramatic conception and the still more dramatically vigorous exposition of Mr. Rochester in Jane Eyre was held to be conclusive evidence as to the male sex of the author. If "George Egerton" is not a woman's woman, still less is she a man's woman. Not only does she go as far in outspokenness as is within reason; but in the matter of cynical recognition of what to her seem plain facts and obvious deductions, "goes one further," in this fashion: "The qualities that go to make a Napoleon—superstition, want of honour, disregard of opinion, and the eternal I—are oftener to be found in a woman than a man." It is only fair to add that this bitter saying is to a great extent redeemed by the rider: "Lucky for the world that all these attributes weigh as nothing in the balance with the need to love if she be a good woman, to be loved if she is of a coarser fibre." The story in which these words occur is the first, "A Cross Line." It is, on the whole, the most representative in the book: in its delicate literary art, its suggestiveness, its cynicism, its exaggeration of general deductions from the particular instance, and also in its obliquity of moral vision, by which the writer (unless I apprehend her meaning wrongly) conveys the suggestion that spiritual redemption is merely the outcome of a fortuitous happening of circumstances. In this story the realisation of the mystery of maternity and the instinctive stability of womanhood, though triumphant in the person of the heroine, are called into actuality by the merest hazard. Had a physical warning happily not intervened, had a serving-maid not been confidential, "the something white on the lilac-bush near the gate" might never have been flaunted in farewell, with the result that two lives would have been ruined, and one depraved. For the real truth of the matter is that the heroine of "A Cross Line" acts worthily and beautifully at the last, not so much out of womanly dignity and duty as from a sudden diversion of her mind from ennui to a new and engrossing interest. This may be a true deduction from the particular instance: as a typical generalisation, it is obviously false.

Of the first five stories, "A Cross Line" and "Now Spring has Come" are the most carefully wrought. Their insight, their nimble movement, their surety of touch convince one that in this writer's work we may confidently look for the charm of creative art—the spell that no dexterity, no mere technical excellence can simulate.

The "White Elf," the "Grey Glove," the "Empty Frame" are slighter; but the alightness of the third is as of flexible steel, and of the first as of the flawless ware of Murano. The "Grey Glove" is the least satisfactory study in this book of studies: not only on account of its inadequately fulfilled motive, technically speaking, but because of something lacking in the perfect wholeness of the primary conception. The three remarkable closing sketches, for they are sketches rather than stories, collectively called "Under Northern Sky," have a vigour that is almost brutal, an intensity that has in it something barbaric. The whole series of stories in Keynotes might have been grouped under the same epithet, for the pervading sentiment is "northern" to an exceptional degree. "George Egerton" has not only been influenced by Björnsterne Björnson and other Scandinavian writers, but has herself been won by the witchery of the North—a witchery that is like none other, whose appeal, when felt at all, is irresistible, and which to those who love it seems the most beautiful, the most alluring thing in literature. Keynotes has something of this spell brooding over its pages. But, after all, the volume is of the nature of an introduction. After so remarkable a prelude, we must all expect in due time an ampler and complete, a really notable book from the pen of "George Egerton." Experience, of course, suggests doubt, but I find it impossible not to be sanguine of high achievement on the part of this new writer.

WILLIAM SHARP.

"THE STORY OF THE NATIONS."—Spain: being a Summary of Spanish History from the Moorish Conquest to the Fall of Granada (711-1492, A.D.). By H. E. Watts. (Fisher Unwin.)

THE biographer of Cervantes and translator of the Quijote has here given us a sketch of a portion of the history of Spain, which is not unworthy of his previous writings. Mr. Watts has studied the Spanish chronicles and historical documents in the original, and has used the best commentaries and translations of the Arabic sources; hence this volume is very different from the compilation of a mere book-maker. We fully agree with his estimate of the older authorities in the Preface. Dunham, with all his merits—exaggerated as these were by Buckle—is truly said to be now entirely out of date. Mariana can only rank in Spanish history like the earlier editions of Hume do in English; nor is Lafuente much more satisfactory. Mr. Watts sees too that a vast and yearly increasing amount of material for Spanish history still needs sifting and sorting; and until this has been done, it is impossible to write any history of Spain that can be either complete or wholly trustworthy. The best Spanish scholars have been, and are now, engaged in the collection of this material: they are acting most wisely in this; much that is irrecoverable has indeed already disappeared, but much has been recovered that would be lost but for their labours. Mr. Watts is, I believe, the first English writer on Spanish history that has clearly seen this, and hence his sketch of this period is far in advance of anything that has been written by his predecessors. We may here remark, in dealing with the Preface, that the España Sagrada has now reached its fifty-first, instead of its forty-seventh, tome.

It follows from this condition of Spanish history that at present hardly any students will come to the same conclusions on all points: some will give more weight to one line of evidence, some to another. This difference of opinion is inevitable, and one can hardly divine which view may eventually be found most in accordance with historical truth. Hence the criticisms which I venture to offer—except as regards some unfortunate slips—are to be considered only as differences of opinion, or differing deductions from the same data.

In a history like that of Spain, throughout which the ecclesiastical element has a larger share than in that of almost any other European country, it is no small merit to have seen how independent of Rome in early medieval times the Church in Spain really was; pp. 158-160 should be carefully read in connexion with this. But while rightly stating the general fact, our author apparently does not perceive or take into consideration that the influence of Rome, penetrating into Spain by way of France in the eleventh century, and superseding the Mozarabic (or rather the Isidorian) rite, was a part only of the great advance in the claims of Rome put forth by Hildebrand, and felt as much in Germany, France, and England, as in Spain. Nor does he seem aware of the counter-miracle (cf. Boletín de la Real Academia de la Historia, tomo xv. p. 179 seq.) which balanced that in favour of the Mozarabic ritual. In chap. vi. p. 146 the Fuero Viejo de Castilla, and the Fuero Real should have been mentioned between the Fuero Juzgo and Las Siete Partidas.

Sometimes Mr. Watts departs a little from the principles which he has so well laid down in his Preface, as when he writes, p. 164: "It is the ballads which are the basis of all Spanish history; and in Spain at least there are no literary documents so trustworthy." It would be more correct to say that the ballads have been the bane of almost all Spanish history as hitherto written. They have been far too readily accepted as contemporary evidence. There is hardly a better test of an accurate knowledge of Spanish history and literature than to be able to take up a Romancero and to assign approximately the real instead of the assumed or professed date of the several romances. It is a very bold statement to affirm that any existing Spanish ballad is "at least as old as (the eleventh century) Chanson de Roland"; and, though this is more a matter of taste, to say that the Poema del Cid is of "a quality vastly higher than the Song of Roland"; vastly superior, I grant, it is in historical authority, but—in poetic quality?

The book falls off somewhat towards the end. There is an occasional obscurity or confusion in the narrative, which we do not observe in the earlier portions. It will be difficult, I think, for one who approaches the subject for the first time to disentangle the narrative on p. 220 and the following pages. "The village of Aljubarrota," south of Leiria and not far from the Atlantic, is hardly "a little way within the Portuguese frontier." In the concluding reign of the Catholic kings, Mr. Watts does not sufficiently bring into evidence the vast increase which the fall of Granada, the possession of an army, and the masterships of the Military Orders gave to the royal power in Spain. The fatal wound to Spanish liberties, though it became apparent only after the war of the Comuneros, was really inflicted then. Isabel's son Juan has surely a better right to be called the Marcellus of Spain than her brother Alfonso. There is no evidence that Alfonso would have made a better ruler than his sister; while the death of her son Juan opened the way for the Austrian dynasty, and for all the subsequent national misfortunes.

These minor drawbacks to the enjoyment of the last pages of the work do not arise from any lack, but from almost too great fulness of knowledge. Endeavouring to compress too much into his story, the writer does not sufficiently consider how it would read to one who approaches it with no special preparation. Still there need be no hesitation in saying that Mr. Watts's summary of Spanish history from 711 to 1492 is the best that has yet appeared in English, and that this volume will take very high rank among the best of those which have appeared in the series of "The Story of the Nations."

WENTWORTH WEBSTER.

TWO BOOKS ON HORSES.

Horse Racing in England: a Synoptical Review. By Robert Black. (Bentley.)

Xenophon's Art of Horsemanship. Translated by M. Morgan, Assistant Professor at Harvard University. (Boston: Little, Brown & Co.)

MR. BLACK is a very industrious compiler, and any number of old Calendars must have been ransacked to bring together the detailed information which his book affords. I fear that he will be mistaken in thinking that his "single volume, neither ponderous nor unduly expensive," will meet a public want; for little interest can be taken by anyone in lists of names of horses and owners going back for two hundred years. And, unfortunately, Mr. Black's very intricate style, with his love for parentheses, which often makes his long sentences riddles, the meaning of which it is hardly possible to discover, mars greatly the interest of what might be curious information.

Mr. Black is full of prejudices. He seems to be of opinion that what he calls "common fellers" have no right to achieve success on the Turf; and his righteous contempt is poured out without stint against ex-prize fighters, ex-saddlers, ex-grooms, and ex-journeymen carpenters, who at various periods have blossomed into celebrated winners. He indulges also in moral remarks on the enormities of Bookmakers, as a class, whom he seems to regard as the disgrace of modern racing. I confess I am myself more inclined to accept the view of the young gentleman at Eton, who when the Turf was under discussion at the school debating society, remarked that its destruction would be particularly hard on the Bookmakers, who were a most respectable class and worthy of all encouragement. Perhaps when we reach the millennium racing may be carried on without betting, without Bookmakers, by millionaire owners for the benefit of the Hospitals and the pleasure of the public.

Meanwhile, until that blessed era is reached, sport is conducted under less happy conditions; and Mr. Black, as its faithful chronicler, has a fine nose for the various scandals which, unfortunately, mark its career. There were probably none when the Merry Monarch himself rode in matches and for twenty pound plates at Newmarket. But they were numerous enough when, a century later, the then Prince of Wales followed the sport of kings; and, according to Mr. Black, they flourish like funguses in the Victorian era.

Mr. Black's synoptical review of horse racing is divided into four periods—the first, from Charles II. to George II.; the second, in the time of George III.; the third, for the reigns of George IV. and William IV.; and the last, for that of the present Queen, when, according to our author, the introduction of Mammoth Stakes, the apotheosis of jockeys and trainers, and the malign influence of "bookies," have cast a deadly shadow on our national pastime.

Our second book is a scholarly translation of Xenophon's tract on Horsemanship, which, written some centuries before the Christian era, remains to this day what it was at the first, an admirable practical treatise on the subject. This American edition is a beautiful specimen of modern printing, and is adorned with illustrations selected from the sculptures of Phidias and from vase paintings. The translation, so far as I have compared it with the original, appears to be accurate, and the notes afford all necessary assistance to a modern reader.

I think that Mr. Morgan is in error in a note (17), in which he states that by γνῶμονες, Xenophon means the milk teeth, and is therefore advising against the purchase of a horse over five years old. The word surely means, what to this day we call the marks in the permanent teeth, which tell the age of a horse to the age of eight.

Mr. Morgan explains in a note, what Xenophon calls the Persian fashion of putting a rider on his horse, as identical with that "leg up" by which to the present day a jockey is thrown into his seat. A light racing saddle would not stand the strain of mounting by the stirrup, and there is no easier method for either the rider or his assistant. Xenophon specially recommends it for men advanced in years, whose joints are stiff.

There is an admirably practical description in Xenophon of what we call a horse's canon bones, and their defects, which Mr. Morgan has translated as follows:—

"The shank bones ought to be stout, for they are the supporters of the body; but they should not be thickly coated with flesh or veins; if they are, in riding over hard ground, the veins would fill with blood, and become varicose, the legs would swell, and the flesh recede. With this slackening of the flesh, the back sinew often gives way, and makes the horse lame" (pp. 15, 16).

In a note the translator claims originality for taking περόνη as the back sinew, which is, of course, right, and no other interpretation is permissible. I do not consider his rendering of the Greek passage, however, a happy one, or even quite correct. Xenophon's words are:

Εἰ δὲ μὴ, ὅταν ἐν σκληροῖς ἐλαύνηται, ἀνάγκη αἱματος ταῦτα πληροῦσθαι, καὶ κρισσοὺς γίγνεσθαι, καὶ παχύνεσθαι μὲν τὰ σκέλη, ἀφίστασθαι δὲ τὸ δέρμα (De Re Equestri, i., 5).

κρισσοὺς is simply what we call a windgall, and the following version exactly represents Xenophon's description. "If they were, in riding on hard ground, the veins would fill with blood, windgalls be formed, the legs swell, and the skin be puffy." I never saw varicose veins in a horse, nor do I understand what can be meant by the flesh receding, which is not to be found in the Greek. The skin separating from the bone is what we call a puffy leg.

Everyone who has been in India will feel that the best type of the Pegu pony answers exactly to the model adopted by Phidias for the horses on the frieze of the Parthenon. On pp. 41 and 68 are full-page illustrations, taken from sixth-century Attic monuments. The first is of the type of an Indian country pony, the last of a Persian horse of the present day.

JAMES INNES MINCHIN.

NEW NOVELS.

Mr. Bailey-Martin. By Percy White. (Heinemann.)

How they loved at Grimpat. By E. Rentoul Esler. (Sampson Low.)

The Burden of Isabel. By J. McLaren Cobban. In 3 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

Worthington Junior. By Edith Sichel. In 3 vols. (Sonnenschein.)

Broken Fortunes. By Henry Creswell. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Her Portrait. By C. J. Wills. (Griffith, Farran & Co.)

Richard Escott. By E. H. Cooper. (Macmillans.)

THERE is only one fault (setting aside quite minor defects of style and manner) which we can conceive a competent critic finding with Mr. Bailey-Martin. This fault is not that Mr. Percy White has inspired himself (as he certainly has) at the founts of Barry Lyndon and The Fatal Boots; or that his hero is a sort of compromise between the heroes of these two masterpieces—a more timid and modern scoundrel than Barry, and a slightly more splendid though not intrinsically less base rascal than the victim of the monster Stiffelkind. Mr. White could have drunk at no fairer fount; and it is one of his chief merits that he does not do discredit to his nourishment. Mr. Bailey-Martin is the second son of an enriched grocer, who determines to make a gentleman of him by the authentic and well-tried road that leads through a "preparatory establishment for the sons of the nobility," a public school and a university. The young man (though there is a time when his parent is dissatisfied with him) treads this primrose path with a sure and seldom straying foot. He makes friends in youth with a future peer, and ultimately succeeds in marrying the future peer's sister, who, though neither young, nor lovely, nor amiable, has a fortune of her own. In order to do this he jilts a pretty girl who loves him, with, it must be confessed, some better reason than, in the case of his predecessor, Stubbs was loved. For Mr. Bailey-Martin is a handsome fellow, accomplished, well-spoken, well-mannered, and, it would seem, no coward in some ways. He even gets into Parliament by an excessively audacious use, not so much of his wife's family interest, as of sympathy excited by his father-in-law's outrageous treatment, which he provokes and bears. All his world looks rosy, when a combination of one human and pardonable weakness and divers unpardonable crimes ruins him. His human nature cannot resist the temptations of a pretty American; and his diabolic nature cannot resist the temptation of not merely slighting and neglecting, but playing mean and cruel tricks upon his jealous, ugly, elderly wife. His goings-on are detected; and the reader may be left to find out how he is just saved from utterly hopeless social downfall at the cost of his seat and his wife's fortune, and left in a sort of refuge for the unscrupulous after all. Mr. White has drawn the character extremely well, and has arranged the story with remarkable success, especially in regard of that one amiable weakness of the rascal's which ruins, or nearly ruins him, and which a tiro would probably have rejected as out of character. The fault, and, so far as we can see, the only fault (that Lord Righton, Mr. Bailey-Martin's brother-in-law, is a little too much like Lord Cinqbars modernised is again venial), is that Mr. White has not yet fully acquired the great secret of ironic handling of the kind. This is rather to run the risk of not driving a point quite home than that of driving it too hard and too far. The general scheme of his autobiographic scoundrel's apologetic confession is sound enough; but the book is overweighted as a whole. There are many pages which had better have been paragraphs, and many paragraphs which had better have been sentences. But this art of not saying too much is about the last art learnt: even Swift, even Fielding, had it not at first. And Mr. Bailey-Martin is the best first appearance made by any practitioner of the bitter kind of true humour that we remember since Mr. Traill's first signed prose made its appearance in the Dark Blue several hundred years (or at least months) ago.

No two books could in certain obvious and apparent ways be more different than Mr. Bailey-Martin and How they Loved at Grimpat. But they are alike in being exceptionally good; and perhaps they are not quite so unlike in their general way of looking at the world as may seem to the careless. Mrs. Esler's Village Idylls, though for the most part very homely in subject (in only one does the heroine "proceed a marchioness"), are conceived entirely in the Romantic style. They mostly have happy endings; their morals are as sound as the Catechism; and in point of poetical justice there is hardly one of their decisions which would be reversed by a court of appeal composed of Shakspeare, Dante, and Sir Matthew Hale. Yet there is, as there must be in all work that is really good and not merely burlesque, a very strong undercurrent of melancholy, and even of satire, in the book, which saves it entirely from the dangers of mawkishness and rose-pink. "Naomi" is perhaps the best of the less cheerful tales: and "Betty's Luck" the best of the lighter. But they are all good, even the faintly improbable marchionessing of Daisy Wynn; and one of the best compliments we can pay them is to confess that, except sheer, precise, and hearty recommendation to read, we can say very little about them. They have hardly any faults—which is monstrously unfair to the critic.

Mr. Cobban's The Burden of Isabel gives us the idea of a book with which a good deal of pains has been taken. Nor can it be said that these pains have been by any means always or altogether lost. It is, perhaps, scarcely generous to dwell much on a certain want of assimilation and incorporation of materials, which are, on the whole, good materials, and which have, as has been said, been prepared with evident care. But we are conscious, we admit, of a sense of this want. We are no Puritans of the "classical" theory, as against underplots and episodes and digressions; on the contrary, we rather like a freely branching story. But then the main trunk should always be in evidence. We are not quite sure that it is so in The Burden of Isabel. The heroine, with her puzzlements between a homeless though not unlovable opium-eating father, a pair of uncles, one of them provided with an aunt, and a pair of suitors, one of whom is her cousin, a prosperous, though rash, young Lancashire merchant and manufacturer, and the other a rising journalist; the accompanying fortunes of the Suffield family and of the "corner" in cotton on which, much to his father's horror, George Suffield embarks, are by no means inartificially blended and connected. But the reader is never quite sure on which to fix his chief attention. So, too, the other or travelling uncle and his rascally Indian servant, Daniel Trichinopoly (whose lingo, by the way, is not unamusing); Suffield the elder's "Tame Philosopher" or secretary; the pair of scoundrels who, with Daniel's help, nearly ruin the Suffields; Alexander Doughty, Isabel's father's henchman and rather unangelic guardian angel; and, lastly, the second pair of lovers, the capitèle Euphemia Suffield, and the burly Briton, Lord Clitheroe—are all rather above the average in interest. Indeed, the only character of the novel who is distinctly "below par" is the journalist Ainsworth, who is a prig and a poor creature. But the whole book seems to want more "stirring together."

The same perhaps ungracious criticism is not wholly out of place in regard to Miss Sichel's Worthington Junior, which the author has called "a story of contrasts," and which she might have called, if she had chosen, "a story of East and West." Worthington Junior and his philanderings with his two loves, Diana and Fanny; Loo of the East End and her philanderings (if that mild word befits such robustious proceedings) with her two lovers Jim and Algy—these are the two pillars of the novel; and, though it would not be fair to say that they are unconnected pillars, they have little connexion except the author's decision that they shall do duty together. A third interest concerns Worthington Junior's friend, Thornleigh, who in his turn also comes to be interested in Diana, but has entanglements with a widow-woman. Here, also, as in The Burden of Isabel, we may say that the ingredients are rather better than the manipulation. Miss Sichel's hand is a little uncertain. We trust, we humbly trust, that no three undergraduates either at Oxford or Cambridge ever talked as Worthington, Thornleigh, and a friend of theirs talk in almost the opening chapter; and elsewhere, also, we find the author seemingly attempting things with which she is not familiar. But the East-End and hospital scenes are decidedly good; there is sureness and success in the portrait of Fanny Sinclair; and the whole book is readable above the average.

If the complaint just made of two novels seems captious, the comparison of a third shall explain it. Broken Fortunes does not, in detail, contain better things than either The Burden of Isabel or Worthington Junior. In fact, there is perhaps a little less freshness and power in its separate parts than in theirs. But as a whole it is infinitely better charpenté, and such interest as it has is not in the least frittered away. Indeed, we have no complaint to make of Mr. Cresswell, except that he drowns the person whom we like the most of all his characters. However, the nicest people do get drowned sometimes, no doubt. And so, as with a well-constructed novel it is very undesirable to tell anything about the story, we shall only recommend Broken Fortunes to readers, who will find it quite a success of its kind.

The kind of Dr. Wills's Her Portrait is so odd that it could not fail to be best (or for that matter worst) thereof, seeing that we do not know another example. Mr. G. A. Storey has accompanied the letter-press (if Dr. Wills will pardon that profane word) of the history of Phillida Fano with a perpetual commentary in the other kind of black and white, which is always interesting, and sometimes, as in the portrait of "Adelaide," full of charm. The story itself is largely busied with studio talk and, perhaps, a few studio personalities, though none of an offensive kind.

Against Richard Escott we have little but the fact that the writer, though he does not seem to live west of the Atlantic, divides "knowledge" after the l. Now the edge of a knowl or knoll is, no doubt, something conceivable (though knolls are usually rounded); but it is not the same as savoir, or connaissance, or scientia, or Kenntniss. This is probably not Mr. Cooper's fault; and his history of an unmitigated scoundrel, who had an interesting and estimable family, is itself by no means unworthy both of esteem and interest. Indeed, it speaks well for Mr. Cooper that he has contrived to insinuate doubts, whether the scoundrel was after all unmitigated or the family amiable and interesting. There is a sort of outside frame to the story which is rather superfluous; there is some very stale and not very strong satire about matrimony and honeymoons and so forth; and the only two characters which are developed at all, those of Escott and his son-in-law the Socialist Alford, are not developed enough. But apparently they might have been if the author had liked, while too many novel characters have no capabilities of development in them.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

CURRENT THEOLOGY.

Biblical Essays. By the late J. B. Lightfoot, Lord Bishop of Durham. Published by the Trustees of the Lightfoot Fund. (Macmillans.) This volume, of which about one-third has already appeared in print, contains the late Bishop Lightfoot's well-known lecture on the internal evidence for the authenticity and genuineness of St. John's Gospel, originally published in the Expositor, and now supplemented by two essays printed from lecture notes, one on the external, the other on the internal evidence. Of these the most important is the second on the external evidence, which is set forth with unusual fulness and completeness. It was the Bishop's opinion that this branch of the evidence had been unduly disparaged even by conservative critics; and believing the authenticity of St. John to be "the centre of the position of those who uphold the historical truth of the record of our Lord Jesus Christ given us in the New Testament," he has brought together from every quarter of Christendom a host of witnesses, orthodox and heretical, to the early and scarcely disputed reception of the Fourth Gospel, the only exception being the small sect of heretics nick-named Alogi by Epiphanius. His case would, of course, have been even stronger had he been able to make use of the discovery, since the latest date appended to these lecture notes (1867-1872), of the Arabic text of Tatian's Harmony. But, after all, the comparatively early date of the Gospel (A.D. 100-130) is no longer in dispute; and it is possible to admit that it even came from the school of John and contained genuine reminiscences of the beloved disciple, without accepting as historical all the details in which it is so conspicuously opposed to the Synoptics. The Bishop, it may be remarked, is only half right in classing Unitarians, as distinguished from Rationalists, among the assailants of this Gospel. The older Unitarians maintained its authenticity, but explained away its doctrine of the Incarnation. The remaining contents of the volume include essays on some of the Pauline Epistles, which would have had their place in the series of Commentaries projected by the Bishop had he lived to carry out his intention.

The Apostolic Age of the Christian Church. By Carl von Weizsäcker. Translated from the Second and Revised Edition by James Millar. Vol. I. (Williams & Norgate.) This is the first instalment of the new series of translations projected by Messrs. Williams & Norgate; and it will be generally agreed that a better choice could not have been made than of a work "which," remarks the editor, Prof. A. B. Bruce,

"has the merit of being not only able and masterly, but extremely interesting, discussing a multitude of questions relating to the origin of the Christian Church in a manner fitted to engage the attention of general readers not less than of professional theologians."

Prof. Weizsäcker, it is perhaps unnecessary to say, is one of the most prominent of the German Rationalist school, and follows the traditions of Tübingen, where he is professor, in regard to the historical value of the Acts and the accounts of the Resurrection. Nevertheless, it is pleasant to find that Prof. Bruce does not shrink from crediting him with "a moderation and soundness of judgment which are by no means common either in Germany or anywhere else." Prof. Weizsäcker's style, fortunately, presents few difficulties to the translator, and this seems to be throughout a correct and readable version. Another volume will complete the work.

Explanatory Analysis of St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans. By H. P. Liddon. (Longmans.) The late Canon Liddon was best known as an eloquent preacher, but this posthumous work shows that he was also an accurate scholar and a painstaking student of Scripture. It is a very thorough and minute analysis of Paul's great Epistle, accompanied by numerous observations calculated to elucidate the text, which themselves constitute a complete commentary on the Epistle. The author acknowledges large indebtedness to Meyer, with whom, however, he sometimes comes into conflict, notably, e.g., in his reading of the famous verse, Rom. ix. 5; and it shows his anxiety to commit himself to nothing which he had not thoroughly tested that he withheld the publication of his work for many years, partly at least because he was not satisfied with the explanation he had given of Rom. vii., 14-25. The analysis was originally prepared for the students attending the lectures which Dr. Liddon gave as Ireland Professor of Exegesis at Oxford. It is satisfactory to know that the book, as it now appears, had been prepared by its author for publication.

The Epistles of St. Peter. By J. Rawson Lumby, D.D. (Hodder & Stoughton.) This is the latest addition to the Expositor's Bible. Prof. Lumby's exposition is, perhaps, a little prolix, but is, on the whole, clear and to the purpose. He accepts, of course, both the Epistles as Peter's, and appeals in support of the Second to the authority of the Council of Laodicea, with the remark that "no doubt there was evidence then before the assembled Fathers which time has now destroyed." This, we should say, is extremely unlikely; and, besides, the sixtieth canon of the Council of Laodicea is itself of doubtful authenticity.

PROF. A. SABATIER, of the Ecole Pratique des Hautes Etudes, has published (Paris: Imprimerie Nationale) an examination of the Gospel of Peter in relation to the Canonical Gospels. His conclusion is that the new Gospel contributes nothing of historical fact to our knowledge of the last scenes in the life of Jesus; but that, nevertheless, it is of great importance as verifying and correcting the results of modern criticism. He would date it in the reign of Hadrian (117-138), and regard it as representing an intermediate stage between the Canonical and the Apocryphal Gospels. It enables us to discriminate the various stages by which the story of the life and death of Jesus passed, from oral tradition, through anonymous logia, to the final redactions as we now have them. He dwells particularly upon the evidence now afforded to show that there were once two distinct traditions with regard to the appearances of Jesus after His Resurrection: (1) That of Mark, Matthew (?), and Peter—that these took place only in Galilee; (2) that of Luke—that they took place in or near Jerusalem. John knows of both traditions, which he harmonises and spiritualises.

PROF. PERCY GARDNER has been bold enough to publish (Macmillans) a pamphlet propounding a novel theory upon the origin of the Lord's Supper. First, comparing the accounts given in the Gospels with each other and with that given by St. Paul (1 Cor. xi. 24), he infers that the formula of institution, "This do in remembrance of Me" (found only in Luke), and also the comparison of bread and wine to Jesus's body and blood (found in Matthew, Mark, and Luke), were borrowed from St. Paul. Then, arguing from the words with which St. Paul introduces his account, "I myself received from the Lord," he concludes that St. Paul intended to imply that it was revealed to him personally in a vision, and not derived from any tradition or document. In other words, the Sacrament (as distinguished from the Agape) is based, not upon an historical fact recorded by an eye-witness, but upon the inspired imagination of St. Paul. Prof. Gardner takes pains to show that such a theory is consistent with St. Paul's special system of teaching, and also with the general development of religious thought. Finally, he makes one more most ingenious suggestion: that St. Paul possibly derived the idea of a commemorative repast from the central feature in the Eleusinian mysteries, with which he must have become acquainted during his residence at Corinth. No evidence, however, is adduced to prove that such a commemorative repast did form the central feature in the Eleusinian mysteries. If any should be shocked by the propositions here baldly summarised, we can assure them that they will not find anything irreverent in Prof. Gardner's statement of them. He goes so far as to say that he should himself regard them with horror, if they did not seem to him to be fully reconcileable with the Christian faith.

READERS of Dr. Dillon's article in the Contemporary Review, in which the researches of Prof. Bickell, of Vienna, on the origin of Ecclesiastes (but not on Buddhism) are popularised, will be glad to learn that for two shillings they can obtain this clever critic's German translation of the Book of Job "in its original form," according to the indications of the strophes, the metre, and the Septuagint (with the help of the Sahidic version). The translation is in the metre of the original text, and addresses itself to the educated reader. We have already an English version in the "rhythm" of the original (The Poetry of Job, by Prof. Gilbert, of Chicago, 1889), so that both the rival theories on the verse-form of the original can be to some extent appreciated by the English reader. The title of Prof. Bickell's new work is Das Buch Job (Wien: Carl Gerold's Sohn). His corresponding edition of the Hebrew text was noticed in the ACADEMY for January 27.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MR. GEORGE ALLEN will publish in the course of next month a new book by Mr. Ruskin, entitled Verona and other Lectures, delivered principally at the Royal and London Institutions between 1870 and 1883. It will be illustrated with a frontispiece in colour, and ten photogravure plates from drawings by the author.

THE next volume in the series of "Rulers of India," which the Clarendon Press announce for immediate publication, will be Sir Thomas Munro: and the British Settlement of the Madras Presidency. The author is Mr. John Bradshaw, editor of Milton, Gray, and Goldsmith in the Aldine edition of the British Poets.

MESSRS. BLISS, SANDS & FOSTER have made arrangements with the editor of "A Son of the Marshes" and Prof. Boulger for the joint production of twelve monthly volumes, to be entitled The Country Month by Month. Mr. Lockwood Kipling has supplied a design for the cover. The first number will appear on March 1, and will be descriptive of that month.

MESSRS. W. H. ALLEN & Co. will publish in the spring a new work by Mr. W. McCullagh Torrens, on the History, Origin and Growth of Government by Cabinets, from the Union with Scotland to the Acquisition of Canada and Bengal.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will publish immediately, in connexion with the Irish Literary Society, a volume of addresses under the title of The Revival of Irish Literature. These will include two lectures by Sir Charles Gavan Duffy, delivered within the last two years; one by Mr. George Sigerson, on "Irish Literature: Its Origin and Environment"; and one by Dr. Douglas Hyde, on "The Necessity for de-Anglicising Ireland."

MESSRS. W. & R. CHAMBERS have in the press a handy and popular Gazetteer of the World, Topographical, Statistical, and Historical.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK will publish immediately, uniform with the "Book-Lover's Library," First Editions of American Authors, a manual for book-lovers, edited by Mr. H. Stuart Stone.

TO-DAY will be published the late Mr. Wolcott Balestier's posthumous novel, entitled "Benefits Forgiven," which has recently been running in the Century Magazine.

MESSRS. F. V. WHITE & Co., will publish, this month the following novels: A Great Temptation, by Dora Russell, in three volumes; An Unsatisfactory Lover, by Mrs. Hungerford; and a cheap edition of Interference, by B. M. Croker, in picture boards.

MR. HEINEMANN will bring out immediately a one-volume edition of Mr. Charles Godfrey Leland's Memoirs.

MR. WILMOT HARRISON's book on Memorable Edinburgh Houses, published last autumn, is already out of print. It will probably be issued in a popular form during the spring.

MESSRS. W. & R. CHAMBERS announce a modernised edition of their Elocution, the readings and recitations for which have been selected by Mr. R. C. H. Morison. While the standard passages from the older writers have been retained, many pieces by living authors which have not before appeared in similar collections have been added. Among the new names are those of T. B. Aldrich, Alexander Anderson, J. M. Barrie, R. J. Burdette, Austin Dobson, Bret Harte, Jerome, Rudyard Kipling, Q., George Macdonald, E. F. Turner, Mark Twain, &c.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co. have in the press a second edition, in three volumes, of the novel by "Iota," entitled A Yellow Aster.

At the London Institution, on Monday next, at 5 p.m., Mr. I. Gollancz will give a lecture on "English Bards of the Welsh Marches."

THE Indian Magazine for February (Constable) gives a list of natives of India at present sojourning in Great Britain. The total is 306, as compared with 207 three years ago. There is a notable increase among Muhammadans, who now number 93; and also in those from the Punjab and Burma. Bengal (101) and Bombay (99) are almost equally represented; but we are surprised to learn that there are 49 from the Punjab, as compared with only 17 from the North-West; and that Burma (11) has almost as many as Madras (13). Of course, the great majority are living in London, and studying law. Medicine, however, is fairly well represented; and we are pleased to find a good many studying engineering. It seems that Cambridge has 45 Indian students, while Oxford has only 3. The number returned as preparing for the I.C.S. Examination is 24, fairly distributed between the several provinces. There are also 7 Indian boys at English public schools, such as Harrow and Rugby. The number of Christians among the total seems to be 19.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

PROF. AUGUST WEISMANN has been appointed by the Vice-Chancellor to be Romanes Lecturer at Oxford this year. The lecture will be delivered in the Sheldonian Theatre on Wednesday, May 2. His two predecessors, it will be remembered, were Mr. Gladstone and Prof. Huxley.

BISHOP BARRY has been appointed Hulsean Lecturer at Cambridge for the year 1894-5.

IN Convocation at Oxford next Tuesday, a new statute will be promulgated, conferring upon demonstrators and other assistants in laboratories a right of appeal to the vice-chancellor, in the event of their dismissal by the professor who appoints them.

IT appears that the income of the Indian Institute at Oxford is inadequate to meet the necessary expenditure. It is therefore proposed to apply £50 a year out of the surplus income of the Boden Fund towards the general expenses, and further to defray the cost of fabric repairs out of the General Fund of the University. In this connexion it may be worth mentioning that this year no candidate has been found of sufficient merit to qualify for the Boden scholarship in Sanskrit.

PROF. H. H. TURNER will deliver his inaugural lecture as Savilian professor of astronomy at Oxford on Friday, February 23. His subject is "The International Photographic Chart of the Heavens"; and the lecture will be illustrated by lantern slides.

DR. H. GOUDY, the new regius professor of civil law, will also deliver his inaugural lecture on the following day (Saturday), his subject being "The Fate of the Roman Law North and South of the Tweed."

MR. T. H. RICHES, of Caius, has been appointed by the special board for biology at Cambridge to occupy a table at the Zoological Station at Naples for five months.

THE list of pictures bequeathed by Mrs. Combe to the University of Oxford is printed at length in the University Gazette, and their value is described by H. G. W. in the Oxford Magazine. By Holman Hunt, there are no less than nine works, ranging over a period of forty years. These include "A Family of Converted Britons succouring Christian Priests in their Escape from the Druids" (1850), and "London Bridge on the Night of the Marriage of the Prince of Wales" (1863), which contains several portraits among the crowd. By Millais, there are three, of which the most notable is "The Return of the Dove to the Ark" (1851); by Rossetti, only one, "Dante's Celebration of Beatrice's Birthday"; and two by another less known member of the pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood, C. A. Collins. There are also two oil-paintings by Bonington, two water-colour drawings by David Cox, two by William Hunt (both landscapes), and a bust of Mr. Combe, by Woolner. By the terms of the bequest, the collection must be kept together in one room in the University Galleries, where it is hoped they will be placed on view by the end of the present week.

THE Archbishop of Canterbury has conferred the degree of D.D. upon the Rev. John Julian, author of the Dictionary of Hymnology, and the degree of M.A. upon the Rev. Alexander James Harrison, in recognition of his lectures on "The Evidences of the Christian Faith."

ORIGINAL VERSE.

PRECIPICE, SEA, AND SKY.

(Inscription on a Mountain at the furthest accessible point.)

Terror dwells here, unneighbour'd and alone!

Thus on the swart rock's face,
With lifted arm by upward currents blown,
My signature I trace.

Terror dwells here, and from this barrier's height,
This giant shadowy form
Peers thro' the clear and golden evening light,
More sinister in sunshine than in storm,
And shouts to earth and heaven, to sea and shore,
No further, and no more!

GEORGE DOUGLAS.

OBITUARY.

ROBERT MICHAEL BALLANTYNE.

LAST week we briefly recorded the death of Mr. R. M. Ballantyne, the most popular writer of stories for boys of our time. In October he went abroad to spend the winter at Tivoli; but it was at Rome that he died, having gone thither a few days before, in company with his daughter.

He was a son of Alexander Ballantyne, the youngest of the brothers who formed the firm of printers at Edinburgh, so unfortunately associated with Sir Walter Scott. He used himself to tell how his father was employed to copy for the press the early novels of the Waverley series, because his handwriting was least known to the compositors. His eldest brother, James Robert, has left a name honoured among Orientalists as principal of the Sanskrit College at Benares, and afterwards librarian to the India Office. Another brother, John, who won distinction as an artist, is still living.

R. M. Ballantyne was born at Edinburgh in April, 1825, so that he had nearly reached his sixty-ninth year. When a boy of sixteen, he entered the service of the Hudson Bay Company, in which he remained for about six years. His first two books were both based upon personal experiences among the fur-traders and Indians of the North West; and some of his later stories go back to the same region. The total number of volumes that bear his name must be little short of one hundred. In the last, which was published just before Christmas, he gives an account of the pains he took to verify his facts, when describing adventures by land or sea. He was an active supporter of the volunteer movement in its early days, and he possessed no mean skill with his pencil. His death is greatly mourned by a large circle of friends at Harrow-on-the-Hill, where he had made his home.

J. S. C.

HENRY GOLDSMITH.

AN accomplished expert in a province of legal archaeology now little cultivated has recently passed away in the person of Mr. Henry Goldsmith. After an education at University College School, he became at an early age the assistant of the late Sir William Hardy, who united with his functions as Keeper of the Records of the Duchy of Lancaster an extensive practice as a legal antiquary, and stood at the head of his profession as an authority upon peerage law. Under his guidance Mr. Goldsmith became thoroughly conversant with that recondite and technical branch of study. There have been few disputed claims to the dignity of a peer tried within the last thirty years in which his services were not required. When Sir William Hardy abandoned private practice, Mr. Goldsmith commenced working upon his own account. The natural modesty of his character, however, and the extreme deference which he paid to the claims of others, prevented his attaining that professional rank to which his acumen and scholarship justly entitled him. His humility only endeared him the more to the friends who knew his worth. He was further commended to their sympathy by the patient fortitude with which, during the last fifteen years of his life, he withstood the assaults of a painful and probably incurable malady. There are none of his intimates who will not feel, with the writer of these lines, that their limited circle of trusted associates is sensibly narrowed now that he has left it.

H. G. H.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE first number of the Revue de Paris (London: Asher) may be said to satisfy the high anticipations which the prospectus had aroused. It opens with an instalment of hitherto unpublished letters, addressed by Balzac to the Russian countess who ultimately became his wife. Next follows the picturesque description of a visit to the convent of Loyola among the Basque mountains, by Pierre Loti. The novelists are the Parisian Gyp, and the Italian Gabriel d'Annunzio. The personal sketch is of the very newest Academician, M. Ferdinand Brunetière. But what will most attract English readers is the advance chapter from Renan's posthumous volume on Philo the Jew. First, we have an inimitable sketch of the philosopher and his theology, with this comment on the contradictions involved:

"L'histoire de l'esprit humain est pleine de ces pieux contresens. Ce que faisait Philon il y a dix-neuf cents ans, c'est ce que font de nos jours tant d'esprits honnêtes, dominés par le parti pris de ne pas abdiquer les croyances qui se présentent à eux comme ayant un caractère ancestral. On risque les tours de prestidigitation les plus périlleux pour concilier la raison et la foi. Après avoir obstinément nié les résultats de la science, quand on est forcé par l'évidence, on fait volte-face et l'on dit avec désinvolture: Nous le savions avant vous."

We must not omit to mention a graceful article, telling the romantic story of the poet king of Scotland, James I., by M. Jusserand.

IN the Boletín of the Real Academia de la Historia for January, F. Coelho continues his study of the Roman road from Chincilla to Zaragoza: studies which will be most useful to future explorers, showing the many points which still remain to be examined. Padre Fita prints and discusses Roman inscriptions and Hebrew epitaphs, remarking how many of these latter are in verse. Ribeiro de Vasconcellos gives, in Portuguese, a pleasant account of the life of Suarez in the university of Coimbra (1597-1617). Mention is made of his controversy with James I., and of the burning of his book at St. Paul's, London. Fernandez y Gonzalez describes an Arabic MS., and gives a quotation from it, showing that Count Julian was governor of Ceuta and of Algeciras. Fernandez Duro fixes by a contemporary record, compared with other notices, the death of Columbus at Valladolid, on the eve of the Ascension, May 20, 1506. The same document mentions the landing (June 8, 1512) of 10,000 English at Fontarabia to help against the King of France.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- AUBLET, Ed. La Guerre au Dahomey, 1888-1893. Paris: Berger-Levrault. 7 fr. 50 c.
- BERTHIER, G. Da divina commedia con commenti secondo la scolastica. Vol. I. fasc. vii. Freiburg: Beth. 2 fr.
- BOUCHAUD, P. de. Claudius Popelin: peintre, émailleur et poète. Paris: Lemerre. 3 fr. 50 c.
- D'EYLLAC, La Bibliophilie en 1893. Paris: Rouquette. 10 fr.
- FERRY, Jules. Discours et opinions de, p.p. P. Robiquet. T. 2. Paris: Colin. 10 fr.
- FOURNIER DE FLAUX, E. Pendant une mission en Russie. 1<sup>re</sup> série. Paris: Guillaumin. 10 fr.
- LAHONNÈS, Jules de. L'Eglise Saint-Etienne, Cathédrale de Toulouse. Toulouse: Privat. 7 fr. 50 c.
- MEYER, A. O. Studien zur Geschichte der plastischen Darstellungsformen. I. Zur Geschichte der Renaissance-Hermes. Leipzig: Engelmann. 2 M. 40 Pf.
- NOACK, F. Die Geburt Christi in der bildenden Kunst bis zur Renaissance. Darmstadt: Bergsträsser. 4 M.
- RENNET, A. L'existence du rentier. Paris: Guillaumin. 3 fr. 50 c.
- OESCHLEBÄUSER, W. Shakespeareana. Berlin: Springer. 6 M.
- RÉUNION des Sociétés des Beaux-Arts des départements: 17<sup>e</sup> Session, 1893. Paris: Plon. 10 fr.
- ROD, E. La secorde Vie de Michel Teissier. Paris: Perrin. 3 fr. 50 c.
- SCHLIEREN, A. Der Esel u. der Mensch. Ein Beitrag zur Kulturgeschichte. Wiesbaden: Bechhold. 1 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

- ABHANDLUNGEN, historische. 4. Hft. Das Ceremoniell der Kaiserkrönungen von Otto I. bis Friedrich II. Von A. Diemand. München: Lüneburg. 5 M.
- BLONDEL, J. E. Histoire économique de la conjuration de Catilina. Paris: Guillaumin. 6 fr.
- BUEHL, M. De provincialium romanorum quaestoribus, qui fuerunt ab a. n. c. 672 usque ad 710. Chemnitz: Bühl. 1 M. 50 Pf.
- CATHERINE II. Instruction de, pour la Commission chargée de dresser le projet d'un nouveau code de loi. St. Pétersbourg: Zinserling. 10 fr.
- FAGNIEZ, Gustave. Le Père Joseph et Richelieu (1577-1638). Paris: Hachette. 20 fr.
- GRISER, K. Geschichte d. Armenwesens im Kanton Bern von der Reformation bis auf die neuere Zeit. Bern: Schmid & Francke. 4 M. 50 Pf.
- HAENDLER, B., u. A. MÜLLER. Das Münster in Bern. Bern: Schmid & Francke. 24 M.
- PARDELLAN, P. de. 1870-71. Chevauchées prussiennes. Du Rhin à la Manche. Paris: Dentu. 3 fr. 50 c.
- RENAN, Ernest. Histoire du peuple d'Israël. T. Ve et dernier. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 7 fr. 50 c.
- SOBEL, Albert. Lectures historiques. Paris: Plon. 3 fr. 50 c.
- URKUNDBUCH der Stadt Basel. 2. Bd. Bearb. durch R. Wackernagel u. R. Thommen. Basel: Reich. 27 M. 60 Pf.
- URKUNDBUCH, Dortmunder. Bearb. v. K. Rübel. 2. Bd. 2. Hälfte. Dortmund: Köppen. 10 M.
- WAHL, Maurice. Les premières années de la Révolution à Lyon (1788-1792). Paris: Colin. 10 fr.
- WEISS, K. Fr. Die kirchlichen Exemtionen der Klöster von ihrer Entstehung bis zur gregorianisch-clunienischen Zeit. Leipzig: Fock. 2 M. 60 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- DARY, G. L'Electricité et la défense des côtes. Paris: Grelot. 5 fr.
- BÜHN, F. Die paläarktischen Grossschmetterlinge u. ihre Naturgeschichte. 9. Lfg. Leipzig: Heyne. 1 M. 20 Pf.
- SCHIFF, M. Gesammelte Beiträge zur Physiologie. Lausanne: Benda. 48 M.
- SCHLEICHER, F. Das diastatische Ferment der Pflanzen. Leipzig: Engelmann. 3 M. 50 Pf.
- VERNOY, C. Blumen u. Insekten der Insel Norderney u. ihre Wechselbeziehungen. Leipzig: Engelmann. 9 M.
- WETTM, Th. B. van. Researches on Matrices and Quaternions. Leiden: Brill. 2 M.
- ZAPALOWICZ, H. Das Rio Negro-Gebiet in Patagonien. Leipzig: Freytag. 3 M. 60 Pf.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- GOETZLER, L. Animadversiones in Dionysii Halicarnassensis antiquitates romanas. Pars II. München: Ackermann. 2 M. 40 Pf.
- HEINZEL, R. Ueb. Wolframs v. Eschenbach Parzival. Leipzig: Freytag. 2 M. 30 Pf.
- SCHÖNE, A. Coniectanea critica. Kiel: Toeche. 1 M.
- TOMASCHKE, W. Die alten Thraker. II. Die Sprachreste. 1. Hälfte. Glossen aller Art u. Götternamen. Leipzig: Freytag. 1 M. 40 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE SEPTUAGINT versus THE HEBREW TEXT OF THE BIBLE.

IV.

Athenaeum Club.

In my preceding letter I brought together the views of some of the most competent scholars of modern times, who have specially examined the respective merits of the Masoretic and the Greek texts of the Book of Jeremiah, and who agree that the Greek text is much to be preferred and that the Hebrew is marked by numerous alterations, interpolations, &c.

I should now like to prosecute the inquiry somewhat further. The last chapter of Jeremiah has been a puzzle to most of the commentators. It has nothing to do with the earlier part of the Book, and is merely a transfer of a long passage from the Book of Kings, or from the original authority of the Book of Kings, and is appended to the prophecies apparently à propos of nothing. The text of Jeremiah concludes with the last verse of the previous chapter, which reads "So far the words of Jeremiah," proving not only that this was the terminus of the particular narrative, but that the whole Book was a compilation. We cannot explain the presence of this apparently inconsequent chapter from the Hebrew text of the Bible. If we turn to the Septuagint, however, we have a very promising clue. In that version the Book of Lamentations does not begin in the abrupt way in which it does in the Hebrew Bible, but with the following exordium:—

"And it came to pass after Israel had been carried away captive, and Jerusalem made desolate, Jeremiah sat weeping, and lamented this lamentation over Jerusalem, and said."

In regard to this initial clause, which is the only material variation between the Hebrew and Greek texts of the book. Dr. Payne Smith speaks as follows:

"It is scarcely possible that the LXX., in a matter like this, can have made a mistake, and the tradition, which they have embodied in this verse, was apparently received also by the Jews of Palestine: for Josephus says (Antiq. x. 5) that Jeremiah composed a dirge for Josiah's funeral, 'which remains unto this day.' These last words go far to prove that Josephus identified the Lamentation spoken of in 2 Chronicles xxxv. 25, with our present book. So, too, the book is attributed to Jeremiah in the Targum of Jonathan, in the Talmud (Baba Bathra xv. 1), and in the Syriac version (at the beginning and end of ch. v.)."

The same view is also held by Wellhausen.

But this is not all. If the verse be, as these authorities affirm, perfectly trustworthy on these grounds, it becomes much more interesting when we find that it in fact continues and completes the narrative in the last chapter of Jeremiah; and that the whole forms a very proper and a very interesting preface to the Lamentations which follow.

It is true that in many—nay, in most—of the Greek codices, the Book of Baruch intervenes between the text of Jeremiah and that of Lamentations; but this is only another proof of the fact referred to more than once in these letters, that the codices in question, instead of representing the Septuagint, represent in many cases one of the later Greek versions on the eclectic text of Origen. The true order in this case has, however, been preserved in some Greek MSS.; in the Vulgate, which derived it doubtless from the ante-Hieronymian Itala; and in our own English Bibles.

This explanation of the occurrence of the last chapter of Jeremiah where it is found, and of its contents, seems so reasonable that it is strange it has not been generally adopted, although pointed out long ago. It is another case of the tendency of microscopic criticism sometimes to displace the criticism derived from everyday wisdom. So far as we can gather, the Fathers who wrote before Origen and who quote Lamentations quote it as the work of Jeremiah, and make no distinction at all; and it seems to me plain that in the original Septuagint it ran continuously on after Jeremiah, and was only separated by the Rabbis at a later time and transferred to the Hagiographa.

The evidence is also very strong that originally Lamentations was directly and continuously followed by the Book of Baruch. Jerome rejected Baruch because, as he says, it no longer existed in Hebrew. This is, however, a misleading statement. We are expressly told in the Apostolical Constitutions, written in the third century, that the Book of Baruch was read in the synagogues. It will be remembered that in ch. i., v. 14, it is expressly said that the Book was to be read in the Temple. Jerome's statement probably refers to the practice of his day in Palestine. It is quoted and used by the fathers who wrote before Origen, and apparently always treated as an integral part of Jeremiah. Athenagoras, who died in A.D. 177, cites Baruch without hesitation as a prophet (see Legat. pro Christ. 9. Irenaeus, who died in 202, cites Baruch under the name of Jeremiah (see Adv. Har. v. 35, 1). Clement, who died in 200, also quotes Baruch (see Pædag. II. 3); so does Dionysius of Alexandria. Origen certainly treated Baruch as an integral part of Jeremiah.

Again, there can be no doubt that the Greek Baruch is a translation from the Hebrew. In his article on "Baruch" in the Encyclopædia Britannica, Dr. Davidson urges that the number of Hebraisms it contains (which are sometimes so peculiar that they cannot be resolved into the authorship of a Greek-speaking Jew) point to the Book having had a Hebrew original, which had gone into disuse and been supplanted by the Greek version in Jerome's day. He also urges certain features in the Book as pointing to its Palestinian origin. He further points out that in the Hexaplar Syriac version there are continual references in the margin to the Hebrew, showing that, in Theodoton's time, the Hebrew text was still extant. The Septuagint version agrees so entirely in construction, phrases, and words with that of Jeremiah that there cannot be very much doubt that, as Dr. Davidson says, it was made by the same person who translated the latter.

Appended to Baruch in many MSS. and forming the 6th chapter of the Book is the so-called Epistle of Jeremiah. Although Dr. Davidson denies its Hebrew origin, Welte (see Herb's Einleitung, 1st part, 14 and 15) and Reusch produce arguments to show it was originally written in Hebrew. The 4th verse of the letter is supposed to have been the origin of the allusions in Maccabees ii. 3-5. The letter, like the rest of the Book of Baruch, was treated in the Septuagint as an integral part of the work of Jeremiah, and it is specially named by Origen when he reports the Hebrew Canon of his time. The arguments are cumulative, and they seem to converge upon one conclusion: namely, that when the Septuagint translation was made, the so-called Book of Jeremiah included Lamentations, Baruch, and the Epistle of Jeremy, that the disintegration of the text and the distributing of its contents among sections of the Bible to which different authority attached was the work of the refining and Rabbinical criticism of the latter part of the second century; and that here (as in the cases cited in previous letters) we shall do well to return to the Greek text as nearly as we can, instead of tying ourselves to the text preserved by the Masorets as the revisers of the Old Testament did, and as Protestant Theology has so persistently done since it championed the views of Jerome against those of Augustine on the subject of the Canon. This view is not new: it is an old view, and it has the supreme advantage of having been the matured view of, perhaps, the most learned and acute textual critic of modern times, Lagarde.

I have not yet finished my subject, but my present letter is long enough.

HENRY H. HOWORTH.

SIR THOMAS MORGAN.

Oxford: Feb. 3, 1894.

The following letter from Sir Thomas Morgan to Dr. Samuel Barrow settles a question which has been much discussed—viz., the authenticity clay may, after all, have had a sub-glacial origin.

On all the controversial points referred to above, the author's views were already fully known to geologists. With regard to the doctrine of Uniformitarianism, his attitude, as might have been anticipated, is that of most moderate men at the present day. They accept the fundamental principles of the Hutton-Lyell creed, but have widened their views in accordance with the advance of modern science. It is pleasing to note the respectful terms in which Prof. Bonney refers to our great masters, contrasting as his language does with the half-suppressed sneers occasionally heard in certain quarters. Much of the early part of the professor's volume is devoted to those subjects with which Lyell fascinated us in his Principles—the operation of natural agencies which are at play on the surface of the earth at the present day, in illustration of geological changes which have occurred in the past history of the earth. At the same time it cannot for a moment be held, as might possibly be inferred from certain remarks in the preface, that the present volume in any sense takes the place of that classical work.

With reference to the illustrations in The Story of our Planet, it may be pointed out that a notable feature is the introduction of a few chromolithographs, which—though perhaps a trifle too highly coloured—remind us of the style of illustration used in certain German works of kindred character, notably in Neumayr's Erdgeschichte and in Kirchhoff's Unser Wissen von der Erde.

F. W. RUDLER.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE FABLES OF AVIANUS.

Trinity College, Oxford: Feb. 11, 1891.

The complete sentence of Avianus' preface is as follows: "De his ego ad quadraginta et duas in unum redactas fabulas dedi, quas rudis latinitate compositas elegis sum explicare conatus." Mr. Jenkinson, with Hervieux and several others, explains this to mean that the forty-two fables of the Aesopian collection, which Avianus versified, were till then only known in a rough (perhaps a prose) Latin version, and that Avianus gave them artistic form by drawing them up in elegiacs. This view he thinks the only possible one. I deliberately rejected it, explaining the words to mean that Avianus drew up his forty-two fables in an unpolished style and in elegiacs. My reasons for this view were (1) the correspondence of the previous clause in in unum redactas dedi = in unum redegei et dedi, with rudi l. compositas elegis explicare sum conatus = rudi l. composui et elegis explicare sum c. (2) If the antithesis which Mr. Jenkinson finds were intended, it would, I think, have been expressed more distinctly, either by inserting ego before elegis, or possibly by adding ante before compositas. (3) The rudi latinitas, in spite of the Virgilian cast of Avianus' version, is, after all, perfectly palpable, and in some ways even obtrusive: "words are admitted which belong to the decadent diction of the epoch, and the grammatical construction is allowed to follow the increasingly lax usage of popular speech" (Prolegomena to my edition, p. xxxv). I doubt whether anyone who reads these fables would not find them sufficiently "rude" to justify such a description as ruditatis.

itate compositas. Compare them, for instance, with the elegiacs of Orientius' Commonitorium, or with Maximianus' elegiacs: the difference is very marked, and is just such as might be expected in a poet who, writing on a popular subject, designedly introduced popular constructions and uses of words.

ROBINSON ELLIS.

P.S.—In my second notice of Hervieux' Avianus (ACADEMY, February 10), the words de duabus ollis are wrongly printed de duabus ouis.

THE S-PLURALS IN ENGLISH.

Oxford Feb. 8, 1894.

As Prof. Earle's two last letters consist entirely of vague generalities and unsupported assertions unaccompanied by any corroborating fact, I may be excused from discussing them. He has not disproved a single one of my statements, nor shown that my conclusions are not valid; while, on the other hand, he has not produced the slightest evidence in support of the notion of French influence on our s-plurals, which I was surprised to find that he held. Until some proof of it is forthcoming, scholars must continue to regard it as an "ancient and baseless superstition."

A. S. NAPIER.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE Bakerian Lecture will be delivered before the Royal Society on Thursday next, by Prof. T. E. Thorpe, his subject being a research carried out by Mr. J. W. Rodger and himself on the relations between the viscosity (internal friction) of liquids and their chemical nature.

THE gold medal of the Royal Astronomical Society has been awarded to Mr. S. W. Burnham, for his discoveries of binary stars and his researches in connexion therewith.

THE Order of St. Maurice and Lazarus has been conferred by the King of Italy upon Sir Joseph Lister, M. Pasteur, and Prof. Virchow.

THE name of the Guilds Central Institution, at South Kensington, has been changed to that of the Guilds Central Technical College.

THE fourth annual general meeting of the London Amateur Scientific Society will be held on Friday next at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, when Mr. J. D. Hardy will deliver his presidential address, and Mr. W. H. Davis will be proposed as his successor in the chair. There will also be the usual exhibition of objects of interest.

MESSRS. FREDERICK WARNE & Co. have sent us the first quarterly volume of The Royal Natural History, edited by Richard Lydekker, which they are also issuing in monthly parts. The scale of the work may be inferred from the fact that about 230 pages are devoted to the order Primates (Man, however, being excluded), and that Chiroptera, or Bats, are not yet completed. There are four coloured plates, and six others of full-page size, besides more than a hundred interspersed in the text. Most of these are admirable examples both of drawing and of engraving.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE Classical Review (David Nutt) for February is a double number, and also contains the index for 1894. A prominent feature is the proportion of space devoted to works of theological interest. Prof. T. K. Abbott reviews Chase on "The Old Syriac Element in the text of Codex Bezae," arguing that the theory of the author is by no means made out to the full extent claimed; Mr. M. R. James criticises Charles on "The Book of Enoch," to which the author has already replied in the ACADEMY; Mr. J. Rendell Harris reviews the fifth part of Zahn's "History of the New Testament Canon," drawing special attention to the arguments adduced for the superiority of the Syriac version of the text of the Apology of Aristides; Mr. H. M. Gwatkin briefly notices the new part of Harnack's "History of Early Christian Literature"; and Dr. C. Taylor examines various theories as to the Gospel of Mark, in view of the light thrown on them by the discovery of Tatian's Diatessaron. Of the other reviews, perhaps the most important is that of Kenyon's "Greek Papyri in the British Museum," by Mr. J. Rendell Harris who is even able to extract some instruction from the jargon of the magical formulæ. Among the original articles, Prof. Henry Sidgwick prints a paper (read recently before the Cambridge Philological Society) on the trial scene in Homer, maintaining the old interpretation against the theory of J. H. Lipsius; Mr. F. W. Walker continues his Philological Notes, explaining how certain anomalous forms ( $\beta\delta\eta$ ,  $\eta\alpha$ , and  $\eta$ ) do not contravene his position, that the Greek  $\sigma$  aorist is an indicative, formed with the personal suffixes of the perfect from the  $\sigma$  subjunctive of an unthematic stem; as Mr. R. J. Walker contends for the existence in Aristophanes of a Doric future, that is to say of a future at once sigmatic and circumflexed. Finally we may mention that Prof. R. Ellis continues his collation of the Madrid MS. of Manilius, and also reviews two new editions of Catullus.

M. THEODORE REINACH has reprinted from the Revue des Etudes Juives (Paris: Durlacher), a paper entitled "Juifs et Grecs devant un Empereur Romain." In the course of his researches for a work he has nearly completed on the gentile sources of Jewish history, his attention was drawn to a fragmentary papyrus in the Louvre, relating to the Jews of Alexandria and a Roman Emperor. This papyrus has been published more than once, by far the best edition being that of Wilcken (Hermes, 1892). M. Reinach, however, claims to have amended Wilcken's text in several points. He argues that it is an appeal brought, not by Jews alone, but by two rival deputations of Greeks and Jews, about a religious disturbance that had taken place in Alexandria some little while before. The Roman Emperor is unnamed. Wilcken would identify him with Trajan; but M. Reinach gives some reasons for thinking that he may be as late as Commodus. In any case, we have here the first historical record of a ghetto, or region of a city exclusively set apart for Jews. Another curious feature is the mention of a pantomime "King of the Jews." M. Reinach prints all the Greek text that is decipherable, together with a French translation. It appears that two small fragments of the same papyrus are now in the British Museum (No. xliii., Forshall).

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

CAMBRIDGE PHILOLOGICAL SOCIETY.—(Annual Meeting, Thursday, Jan. 25.)

PROF. JEBB, president, in the chair.—The following new officers were elected for the ensuing year:—president: Dr. Postgate; vice-president: Prof. Jebb; members of council: Prof. Skeat, Mr. Edwards, Mr. Hicks, and Mr. Neil; secretary: Mr. Giles. The following resolutions were unanimously passed: (1) "That a sum not exceeding £30 be voted for the purpose of printing and publishing the unpublished philological MSS. of the late Mr. H. D. Darbishire in a memorial volume, it being understood that each member of the society receive a copy of the volume." (2) "That the society authorise the republication in the same volume of the late Mr. Darbishire's papers already published by the society."—Dr.

Fennell criticised Dr. Brugmann's account of the suffixes -dhro-, -dhra-, -dhlo-, -dhli- (Grundz. ii. § 77). Of the three instances adduced to show that "isolated examples may date from early times," he argued that one had very little weight, viz., Czech stadlo by Latin stabulum, there being a Czech stado of the same meaning as stadlo, while Latin showed nothing parallel to stado, and stabulum, meaning "herd, drove," was late and poetic; that another had no weight, viz., λύθρον by Lat. delubrum, pollubrum, as the b was for the s seen in lustrum. To the instances of b for earlier s might be added labrusca for lav-rusca (cf. lascivus hederæ): salebra for sal-es-ra; probrum for prosur-, akin to Skt. prish "sprinkle," as if "a bespotting"; nubrare for g'is-rare, akin to Eng. queasy "shaking, trembling," gaesum (Keltic) as if "a quiverer," Skt. jishati "moves"; ebrius for ē-yis-riō-, adj. stem from ē-yis-ro-m neut. = "strong ebullience," from adj. ē-yis-ro-s "strongly ebullient," fr. e and yes-ro, adj. stem = "ebullient," akin to ξῖω; sōbrius assimilated to cōbrius, fr. sōb-ro-s for sōb-ro-s from sē-yis-ro-s. The setting of the remaining instance, Czech sidlo, by Lat. sabula would be beyond criticism if it were certain that Lat. -bulo, -bulā were from -dhlo-, -dhli-. There is not sufficient evidence for the allegation that these suffixes arise from a determinative dh + the suffixes -ro-, -rū-, -lo-, -li- respectively. The only early Greek instance of an early -dho-, κ.τ.λ. form, by a kindred form in -dho- or -dho- is ἐπιδόμων by ἀναδόμος (Brugmann only gives the late δομός). The meaning of ἐπιδόμων connects it with ἀπορία, ἀπός, rather than with δομός. The θ of ἐπιδόμων may belong to the root, if we derive the word from είδομαι (cf. τέρας, βέβαιος, βέβηλος) from √sedh, cf. Skt. sādhu "excellent"; while ἐχθρός may be from ἐχθ + op + o (cf. ἐχθαίρω). If faber is to be set by τετός, the -dh- is reduplicative, not a determinative. Brugmann has confused two if not three distinct cases, besides offering some questionable etymologies. Is the source of -dhro- in some cases (when it is not composite, as in ἐπιδόμων and ἐχθρός) the root dhr "hold, contain, support"? Note the Old Pers. taf-e-dhra, "a melting," not noticed by Brugmann.

MANCHESTER GOETHE SOCIETY.—(Wednesday, Jan. 31.)

THE REV. F. F. CORNISH, president, in the chair.—Mr. T. A. Stephens read a paper on "The Date, Form, and Sources of Goethe's 'Clavigo,'" in which he arrived at the following conclusions. There is no reason to doubt Goethe's statement in Dichtung und Wahrheit, and elsewhere, that he wrote "Clavigo" in eight days, after reading Beaumarchais's Mémoires at a party of friends, at the suggestion of a lady, who is believed to have been Anna Sybilla Münch. It can be proved from Goethe's contemporary letters that this happened between May 6 and June 1, 1774; and Düntzer even tries, with some plausibility, to fix the date as the week from May 13 to 20. In form "Clavigo" is a return from the irregularity of "Goetz" to the conventional rules of the drama, and as an acting play it is a decided improvement upon the earlier work. While in Beaumarchais's narrative of the Clavigo episode the scene changes seventeen times, there is in Goethe's play no change of scenery in three acts, and but one change in each of the other two. The influence of Lessing's "Emilia Galotti" can be recognised both in the language and in the treatment of the dialogue. Like Lessing, Goethe throughout pays due regard to the necessities of the stage, and the action flows directly from the characters. There is further a certain resemblance between the characters of Marinelli and Carlos, as well as several minor resemblances. Goethe's chief sources are the Mémoires of Pierre Augustin Caron de Beaumarchais (1732-1799), and more especially the "Quatrième Mémoire contre Goetzmann," published in February, 1774, which contains as an episode Beaumarchais's action against the Spanish author and court official, José Clavigo y Fajardo (1730-1806). The story is briefly: that Clavigo (or Clavigo), having broken his promise to marry Beaumarchais's sister, the brother came to Madrid, forced Clavigo to sign a declaration acknowledging his guilt and re-establishing the reputation of the lady, and with its help finally obtained Clavigo's expulsion from his office. The sister, far from dying of a broken heart, like Goethe's heroine, returned to France, and was there married to a M. Durand; nor was Clavigo killed by the avenging brother, but was again received in favour at court and died full of honours in 1806. Beaumarchais's narrative is in the main borne out by the documentary researches of Loménie in Beaumarchais et son temps. Goethe's indebtedness to Beaumarchais's Mémoire is considerable, not only in the main conception, but also in the details of the story. Thus, the account of Beaumarchais's first arrival and reception at his sister's house is mainly taken from the Mémoire, but Goethe's alterations are worthy of note. With Beaumarchais, everybody, after the first excitement, is calm and businesslike; while in Goethe's play the whole of the scene is steeped in an atmosphere of high-strung emotion. The most obvious resemblance of the two versions is, however, in the second act of Goethe's play, containing the first interview between Beaumarchais and Clavigo, the greater part of which is a literal translation from the Mémoire. The main incidents are the same: viz., (1) The pretext on which Beaumarchais visits Clavigo, accompanied by a friend; (2) Clavigo's question as to what has brought Beaumarchais to Madrid, and his offer of assistance; (3) Beaumarchais's ambiguous reply, with the special reference to his friend; (4) Beaumarchais's narrative; (5) The revelation and the signing of the declaration in the presence of the servants; (6) Clavigo's bold request to Beaumarchais to act as mediator between Marie and himself, and Beaumarchais's refusal. The points of difference in the whole treatment of the subject are, however, very significant. In the Mémoire the main interest is not in the sister, who is scarcely mentioned, nor in Clavigo, who is portrayed as a poltroon, but in the personality of Beaumarchais, who places his own doings in the most favourable light with all the ability of a skilful special pleader. This could not of itself supply a sufficient dramatic interest. To obtain this Goethe had to set Beaumarchais somewhat in the background: he had to transform the character of Clavigo from that of a farcical coward to a man not unworthy of Marie's love, and that love itself had to be presented with a depth and intensity unknown to the original. To gain these effects, Goethe could not present the story of Clavigo's second desertion in the way in which it appeared in the Mémoire. With him Clavigo's return and repentance are sincere, and the final declension is due not to his own heart, but to the influence of Carlos. The difference in treatment between Beaumarchais's narrative and Goethe's drama are typically shown in the reconciliation scene. Neither the elder sister nor her husband are mentioned in Beaumarchais's Mémoire; nor, of course, is Clavigo's friend Carlos. One of the friends by whom Beaumarchais found his sister surrounded is brought into the play in the person of Bueneo. The letter from the French Ambassador produced in the fourth act is almost a literal translation of a letter in the Mémoire. The lecturer passed over the sources of the fifth act (which has, of course, no counterpart in the Mémoire) consisting mainly of a ballad—not yet positively identified—which suggested the idea of the final scene, as he had discussed these at a previous meeting of the society.

VIKING CLUB.—(Friday, Feb. 2.)

PROF. WATSON CHESYNE, Jarl, is the chair.—Mr. H. L. Brækstad gave a lecture on "Norway and its People," illustrated by lantern views. The early history of the country was briefly traced, beginning with the settlement by the Northmen, a branch of the Teutonic or Gothic race, the ancestors of the Norwegians of to-day. The aboriginal Lapps had been driven further and further north, till they were at last left in peace at the northern extremity of the country, where, however, they are now fast dying out. The characteristic independence of these Northmen, or hardy Norsemen, was fully illustrated, Norway being one of the few countries, if not the only one, in Europe where the peasantry have never been serfs. Their udal laws trained them in the management of their own affairs, and produced that feeling of self-respect and independence which the possession of property, and land in particular, gives. The early Northmen, not being able to wring sufficient out of the barren soil for their livelihood, had to resort to Viking raids for the necessities and luxuries of life, harassing the coasts of their own country, as well as Scotland, England, and France. Mr. Paul du Chaillu's work, The Viking Age, was briefly noticed, particularly the assertion that the English race must look to the Scandinavians for their ancestors, and that the old Saxons were, indeed, nothing but Norwegian, Swedish, and Danish invaders, who drove the Celts into Wales and other outlying parts of the country. The lecturer, while acknowledging the well-known Norwegian and Danish settlements in Orkney, Shetland, the East Coast of Scotland, Yorkshire, and Ireland, pointed out that England had already been settled by Saxons and Angles for hundreds of years before the invasions of the Norsemen, and that there was no evidence whatever that the early Saxons came from Norway or Denmark. The Saxons, another branch of the Teutonic race, came, according to the best authorities, from the Elbe and the North of Germany, while the Angles, also Teutons, came from Angel in the South of Denmark. Norway was divided into numerous small kingdoms until 870, when Harold the Fair-haired united the whole under one crown. In 1450 Norway was joined to Denmark, and so continued for nearly four hundred years, being treated like a conquered province, producing the most disastrous results to Norway; but nevertheless the peasants maintained their personal rights. In 1814, Norway regained its independence, and was eventually united with Sweden under one king, but declared a free, independent, and indivisible kingdom, retaining its own parliament, government, army, and navy. Norway has for the last fifty years had a most perfect system of local government. Norwegians of to-day consist of two classes—Bönder or peasants, and townspeople, the latter to a great extent of foreign origin. The peasantry are still the kernel of the nation. They have always been the freeholders of the land on which they live, on which, as a rule, their forefathers have lived for centuries before them. From the earliest times the peasantry have been the absolute owners of the land. During many political difficulties the Norwegian peasants have been the saviours of the country; and from their ranks have sprung some of the most celebrated men of our day, such as Björnson, Ivar Aasen, Skredsvig, a great number of their best painters, and nearly all their sculptors. Norway ranks high among European countries in education: all the peasants and working classes can read and write; they all know the constitution and the history of their country. In speaking of the modern literature of the country, reference was made to Wergeland, Welhaven, Björnson—the latter has been well called "the political conscience of the Norwegian people," Ed. Grieg, the musician, and lastly Ibsen, who has been described as a pessimist and realist of the first water, but whom the lecturer preferred to regard as the Shakespeare of the nineteenth century.—In the discussion which followed, Dr. Karl Blind said that Mr. Brækstad had given his hearers a good idea of the people of a country which, on account of its free institutions, has been called the "Northern Switzerland," and an equally good glimpse of the modern literature of Norway, as represented by Björnson, Ibsen, and others. In the translation of Ibsen's dramas, Mr. Brækstad has had a hand, and a very efficient hand it was. He (Dr. Blind) understood that the lecturer was engaged now on the translation of a work of Jonas Lie, another of his eminent literary countrymen. Impressive as some of Ibsen's plays are held to be, it was to be hoped that the Norse race would not allow itself to be influenced by their pervading tone of gloomy pessimism, or else life would not be worth living for them. He was glad to find that Mr. Brækstad had taken a proper estimate of Mr. du Chaillu's work, The Viking Age. That book was valuable for its illustrations, and for its extracts from the Edda and the Sagas; but the same could not be said of some of the arguments of its author, who actually disputed the fact of the Anglo-Saxon settlement of England. Referring, in the course of his remarks, to an attempt which has been made to explain the names of England from the Scandinavian word eng, which means a meadow—so that this country would bear its appellation from being a grassy land, of flat or undulating appearance, Dr. Karl Blind said that the Angles, or Engles, had, after all, clearly left their trace in Englefield, Anglesey, and other place-names. The Angles and Saxons were well recorded in the title of the early English kings. In the Saxon Chronicle, this country is spoken of as Engla-lande. In Germany, to this day, it is still practically referred to as Engel-land. Mr. Brækstad (the speaker continued) had dwelt on some differences between separate branches of the Teutonic race—namely, the Norwegians and the Swedes. Differences no doubt exist. At the same time the similarities are much greater. An Orkney man or a Shetlander might often pass, in outward appearance, for a Norwegian, a Swede, a Dane, or even a German, and vice versa. Norway, though its population is so small, has one of the largest commercial fleets. This same maritime bent is mentioned by Tacitus of the Svions, the forefathers of the Swedes, in the Germania. The Germans, on their part, were the great maritime and naval power in the middle ages; and love of the sea is again strongly coming up among them now. So in this respect, as in many others, the Teutonic nations have very much the same characteristics.

ANGLIO-RUSSIAN LITERARY SOCIETY—(Imperial Institute, Tuesday, Feb. 6)

E. A. CAZALET, Esq., president, in the chair.—The president informed the members that correspondence had been opened with Russian painters and musicians, with the object of promoting their interests in this country. Several of them had joined the society.—Major-General Tyrrell then read a paper entitled "Russians in Oriental Warfare," in which he observed that, according to Macaulay, "the national existence of the Spaniard was one long crusade," and the same might be said of the national existence of the Russian. He was the first to roll back the waves of Mongolian barbarism, and to follow up its receding tide till he imposed his own yoke on the neck of his former oppressor. The lecturer called this a long Panorama of War, but he proposed to dwell only on the later scenes. He expatiated on the prominent position which foreign officers occupied in the Russian army, especially after Peter the Great, who on making a European tour confided the command of his army to the distinguished Scotch adventurer, Patrick Gordon. In all these wars the Russians proved victorious, with the exception of two; one, the Crimean war, when Turkey had France and England for allies; the other the war in 1711, when Peter the Great was forced to conclude a disadvantageous peace on the banks of the Pruth, with the Turkish sabre at his throat. The peculiarities of the various armies and their modes of fighting were explained. The military vigour and ruthless slaughter of Münnich and Suvorov were graphically illustrated. The latter said, "Stab the Turk with the bayonet and then stab him again: even when he is nearly dead, he may still tumble you over with his sabre." Suvorov was the first inventor of the bayonet exercise in European armies, teaching his soldiers to thrust at fascines dressed up in robes and turbans to represent Turks. At Ismail the body of the Turkish Saraskier was pierced by sixteen bayonet thrusts. Religious fanaticism on both sides lent peculiar fury to the contest. A German major attached to the staff of Field Marshal Count Diebitsch Zabalkowsky (also a German by origin) declared that no one but a Russian could undergo the fatigues and privations that accompany a protracted campaign in Turkey. And we may add that none but Russians would have shown such utter negligence of sanitary precautions, and such callous insensibility to the wants and comforts of their men. The Earl of Albemarle, then Major Keppel, writes:—"The common answer of the Russian officers, to our expressions of regret at the great loss they had sustained, was, that is of no consequence, Russia does not want for soldiers." The Russo-Turkish war of 1827-29 was noteworthy as being the first time that a Russian army crossed the Balkans. This war is also notable for the campaigns of Paskievitch in Asia, which are masterpieces of Oriental warfare. His first laurels were won against the Persians.—A discussion followed, in which Mr. Marval dwelt upon the advantages of peace and of a friendly understanding with Russia. In his opinion, if ill feeling existed, it was on the side of the English and not of the Russians. The frontiers of great powers should be contiguous: barbarous buffer-states were a fallacy.—Mr. Marchant referred to Pushkin's Journey to Erzeroum, which contained beautiful descriptions of Transcaucasia and awful scenes of Turkish cruelty.—Captain Townshend described from personal knowledge the restless desire of all orientals for fighting, and the eager enquiries of various tribes on the Indian frontier as to the probability of war between Russia and England.—The president expressed the opinion that England and Russia ought to influence the minds of their less civilised neighbours in the East, and show them that fighting was not the only object for which human beings had been created.—Mr. E. Delmar Morgan, in supporting a vote of thanks to General Tyrrell, said that when travelling in Central Asia he had been told by General Kaufmann, that there was security for life and property in all the places which before the Russian advance had been noted for brigandage.

FINE ART.

EGYPT EXPLORATION FUND.

THE EXCAVATION OF THE TEMPLE OF QUEEN HATASU AT DEIR-EL-BAHARI.

Luxor: Jan. 10, 1894.

THOSE who revisit Luxor this winter will see a great change in progress at Deir-el-Bahari. Ever since Mariette opened out the now famous bas-relief of Queen Hatasu's expedition to the incense-land of Punt, her singular temple has attracted all lovers of the best Egyptian art. Nothing more exquisite has survived from the great period of the XVIIIth Dynasty than these wall-pictures of ships bringing apes and incense, tusks and skins and precious metals for the queen; and the view of the terrace which is backed by this relief is alone worth a much longer pilgrimage than the visitor must make to Deir-el-Bahari. It has been long known that this Terrace and the south end of that above it (which alone used to be accessible) constitute only one corner of the whole temple: vast mounds of rubbish, in certain places between thirty and forty feet high, rose over all the northern part of the terraces, burying far more than Mariette had disclosed, while smaller heaps buried less deeply also the eastern side. Fragments of sculpture, projecting here and there from the mounds, proved that many bas-reliefs must exist beside those laid bare by Mariette, and excited for many years vain regrets that so much of the work of Hatasu's sculptors should remain unseen. The necessity of banking up the sliding mountain side and cutting through forty feet of earth and stones had been sufficient to deter all explorers until a year ago, when, at last, the committee of the Egypt Exploration Fund determined to carry through what no private excavator could undertake, and made application to the Director-General of Antiquities in Egypt. The concession was accorded readily, accompanied by the offer of the gratuitous loan of plant necessary for excavation on a large scale; but it was stipulated that the temple must be completely débarrassé, and it was on that understanding that M. Naville began work in January 1893.

The remarkable results of the first short season have been made public already. Beginning with the uppermost terrace, the excavators found under the débris of the cliff an unsuspected group of chambers. Against the western rock was a Hall of Offerings built by the Queen, whose portrait appears there, as elsewhere on the temple, in male guise, accompanied by Thothmes II. and III. Adjoining on the east was found a chamber with vestibule, containing a High Altar, built of white stone, and dedicated by the queen to Harmachis. In its possession of this altar, perfectly preserved, with its graduated incline ascending to the platform, Hatasu's Temple is unique among all the Temples of Egypt. Leading into the northern cliff is also a little chapel, a veritable gem of Egyptian painting, dedicated to Thothmes I., his wife, and his mother, Senseneb. The painted reliefs in this shrine, which vie in interest with the Punt sculptures, are being reproduced in colour by Mr. H. Carter, one of the artists attached this year to the expedition. A little space was cleared also above the colonnade of the second terrace, and other remarkable objects brought to light—namely, two ebony panels, one the side of a shrine about six feet high, dedicated to Amen by Thothmes II., the other part of one of the doors. Both are now at Ghizeh.

The labours of the first season and of the three weeks which have elapsed since work was recommenced in the second have produced an astonishing change in the appearance of the temple. It is literally being cut out of the mountain. When the vast mounds upon the middle terrace have been cleared away—a labour which cannot proceed very fast—the brilliantly-white colonnade round its north-western end will become a landmark visible for miles. The clearance of this part of the temple will have a double interest: firstly, architectural, for Mariette's plan has been found to bear very little relation to fact, and the present appearance of the walls promises unusual features of construction; secondly, artistic, for we have found that a wall of unknown painted reliefs exists below the accumulated rubbish. These will be laid bare during the next fortnight; but the main mass of the mounds will hardly disappear this season. Already upon the upper terrace are piled more than 300 sculptured blocks, taken by the Copts from all parts of the Temple to build their convent walls. In the mounds of the middle terrace we shall recover nearly as many more, of which some show already. When all is cleared, and the possibilities of further discovery exhausted, these blocks will be sorted, and, if possible, built up again in their original places. This work, which will be supervised by Mr. J. Newberry, the architect attached to the expedition, will be of the first importance both on artistic and historical grounds; for it will result in the reconstruction of several scenes hardly inferior, either in interest or workmanship, to the famous Punt reliefs. For example, much has been recovered of the decoration of the third or lowest terrace, showing that there was represented another nautical scene—the transportation of two obelisks from Elephantine, at the bidding of the Queen. Either in the mounds, or by the demolition of the Coptic walls left standing on the upper terrace, it is hoped that the rest of this scene may be found. Every effort is being made to preserve all evidence as to the subsequent history of the temple, and to find the small objects of antiquity scattered among the débris. So far, the main finds of the latter class have been beads, scarabs, and figurines, made of the famous blue-glazed ware. Good Demotic and Coptic ostraka are frequent, and there is much refuse from rifled mummy pits of the XXIInd Dynasty. Some coffins and mummies have been found lying loose among the upper layers of débris: one fine case belonged to Namen-Menkhet-amen, a relative of Osorkhon II. and Takelothis; another contains a very finely rolled mummy, for whose reception it was not originally intended; a third is early Coptic, and shows on the front of the outer cloth representations of wine and corn in the hands, while below is the sacred boat of Osiris, and over the heart a suastika.

The uppermost layer of the mounds consists entirely of the débris of previous excavators, who searched either in the temple precinct or immediately above on the hillside for mummy-pits. It contains mummy refuse and many sculptured blocks, but naturally no small objects, except those broken or despised by earlier diggers. Several scraps of newspaper, French and German, have been found in it. Below this lies a layer from three to six feet deep of Coptic rubbish, left by the monks of the convent. Here are found ostraka and large quantities of broken blue glaze ware. Immediately below, in the only place on the middle terrace where we have sounded to the bottom, we have found the original pavement. Only, therefore, if we come upon untouched mummy-pits below this pavement, can we hope for any considerable find of small antiquities; for, so far as we have yet seen, there is no débris older than Coptic. It is possible that towards the centre of the terrace we may find accumulations left untouched by the monks. But, unless such proves to be case, the same methods of excavation need not be resorted to, nor can the same finds be expected as on sites covered with the slowly gathered silt of ages, or in cemeteries lost in the sand.

While the upper stratum of the mounds is being cut away, progress can be made in the copying of the inscriptions, a large number of which, having been pretty thoroughly erased, present great difficulties. The reconstruction of the Great Altar is to be begun as soon as the masons, now at work on the house which is being built for the excavators, are free. When the whole site has been cleared, the very costly and difficult work of reconstruction must be begun. That of the western-most wall will present peculiar difficulties, but, from the point of view of artistic effect, will best repay labour and cost. If the stone-slide of the cliff can be banked up, and the present Coptic constructions demolished, a large number of sculptured blocks, belonging to other parts of the temple, will be recovered, and the niches restored to their former beauty. The immense task of cutting away the mounds on the middle terrace will take two seasons at least, and the more shallow accumulation on the lowest terrace will still remain. No excavation of the same magnitude is being conducted at present in Egypt; and it is satisfactory that, where so much labour and money must be expended, the monument to be laid bare should be of such exceptional interest. Architecturally, Hatsheut Temple has no parallel: in the quality and preservation of its painted reliefs, it vies with any of the best known tombs; it is placed in a grander situation than any other building in Egypt. The boon which its clearance will confer on lovers of art and the picturesque can hardly be overstated; and science will gain not less by the exploration of a monument of the great XVIIIth Dynasty, the finest existing memorial of Egypt's most famous queen.

D. G. HOGARTH.

ENGLISH DRAWINGS AT MESSRS. AGNEW'S.

THE Messrs. Agnew's is one of the few dealer's exhibitions which is really worth notice. It is not a chance collection: doubtful drawings do not mingle with the genuine; and though the Messrs. Agnew are tolerant of the popular, they have more especially encouraged the sterling and, as we may now say, the classical. Other dealers of the better sort have no doubt done their share towards increasing that taste for fine and early English drawings—the drawings of Girtin, Turner, De Wint, Cotman, and David Cox—which was created for the most part by an enlightened literary criticism; but for the reputation of, at least, several of these masters, the Messrs. Agnew have certainly done more than anybody else in the "trade." Nor is their present exhibition inferior as a whole to those previous ones, in which they have confirmed the delight of the connoisseur in the most excellent of English work. In their gallery, as of old, are noble Turners of various periods, and wrought with very different aims; and by the side of them are De Wint's, such as Mr. Vokins has been wont to love and to gather together—"Cumberland Hills," for instance, and again a "Lincoln"—the city which De Wint drew the most. Of the David Coxs, the earlier are pleasant and craftsmanlike; the later are really powerful examples. The great period of this artist dates, it has been maintained, only from 1844, and thus embraces the time of his old age; for he was about sixty when his "great period" began. The Messrs. Agnew show, as usual, admirable examples of George Barret, an undisturbed and imperturbable classicist, the serenity of whose art is well perceived in the composition entitled "Morning." Not a few good moderns have been admitted by the Messrs. Agnew to the distinguished companionship of the long-deceased masters of English landscape drawing; and among them is Mr. Hine, who is fortunately still with us, and Mr. Thomas Collier, whom we have but lately lost. Mr. Hine's "Down drawings" are executed exactly in the fashion in which the scenery he is wont to depict most of all demands to be treated; while the more obviously masculine manner of Dr. Thomas Collier is, for economy of means and truth and vividness of effect, entitled to take rank as almost le dernier mot of landscape painting. As time passes, Mr. Thomas Collier's reputation can but increase.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MR. HUBERT HERKOMER, Mr. Ernest A. Waterlow, and Mr. Lionel Smythe have been elected members, and Mr. J. R. Weguelin an associate, of the Royal Society of Painters in Water Colours.

THERE will open next week, at the Fine Art Society's in New Bond-street, an exhibition of drawings by Mr. Harry Furniss, described as "political and pictorial."

WE may also mention that an exhibition of works by amateur and other members of the Royal Water-Colour Society Art Club will be on view, in Pall Mall East, from Thursday of this week to next Wednesday.

MR. A. S. MURRAY, of the British Museum, will deliver a course of three lectures on "Greek Sculpture" at the Royal Academy, beginning on Monday next. He proposes to deal particularly with sarcophagi (including those recently found near Sidon), with stelae, and with reliefs on pedestals and throne. On Thursday of the following week, Mr. W. B. Richmond will commence a course, also of three lectures, on "The Evolution of Sculpture."

THE general meeting of the Society for the Preservation of the Monuments of Ancient Egypt will be held on Friday next, at 3 p.m., in the rooms of the Society of Antiquaries, Burlington House, when the question of the proposed dam across the Nile at Assuan, involving the submersion of the Temple of Philae, will be discussed.

THE second general meeting of the Hellenic Society for the present session will be held on Monday next, at 5 p.m., at 22, Albemarle-street, when Mr. H. Stuart Jones will read a paper entitled, "A Reconstruction of the Chest of Kypselos."

MESSRS. A. & C. BLACK have sent us the first yearly issue of the Book-Plate Annual and Armorial Year Book. It is described as "edited by John Leighton," but we are convinced that we shall not err in assigning both the letter-press and the illustrations to the (almost unaided) pen and pencil of the editor. Every page—not excluding the cover—is replete with curious lore and honest idiosyncrasy.

THE STAGE.

PAILLERON'S "CABOTINS."

Paris: Feb. 13, 1894.

"CABOTINS," M. Pailleron's comedy in four acts, full of literary reminiscences, was brought out last night at the Théâtre Français. It is a satire on the political, artistic, and literary charlatans so numerous in modern society: whose success is not due to their intrinsic merits, but rather to their ability in passing themselves off as men of talent, who pander to the worst tastes of the day, who are always singing their own praises to the detriment of others.

M. Pailleron's Cabotins hail from the South, from Daudet's "Midi." They are redolent of garlic and vulgarity, and have formed a mutual admiration and assistance society, known as "La Tomate." The first act takes place in the atelier of Pierre Cardevent (M. Worms), a young sculptor, the only man of real talent among the ratés who surround him. He is giving the finishing touch to the bust of a beautiful girl with whom he has fallen in love at first sight, when in walks his friend and adviser Grigneux (M. Got), who in many points reminds one of Murger's Schaunard, a broken-down idealist who earns a precarious living by copying "La Joconde" for American amateurs. The old man recognises in Pierre the heaven-born genius, the true artist who creates a chef-d'œuvre almost unconsciously, by inspiration alone; and he watches over him with anxious care, lest he should fall into the clutches of the enemy Woman, who has been the cause of his own downfall. While the two are discussing art, enters Caracul, the Cabotin of art, who has founded the group of Apartistes painters and hit on the original idea of holding their Salon amid the ruins of the Cour des Comptes; thanks to the abuse heaped on this new evolution of art by the critics, all Paris has rushed to see the Apartistes Exhibition and their 240 "abominations" are selling at unhoped for prices. "Ah! success purifies everything," exclaims Larvejob, a Cabotin of literature, whose pornographic novel, Vierge et Nourrice, has just reached its fifth edition. The next to appear is handsome, fashionably-attired Dr. Saint-Marion, the Cabotin of medicine, whose good looks and honeyed words have won the good graces of his lady patients. But the life and soul of "La Tomate" is Pégomas, the Cabotin journalist and politician, an up-to-date combination of Giboyer, Rabagas, and Numa Roumestan, an exuberant Toulousian, blessed with an easy conscience, ready wit, and a sharp pen, who, by dint of bluster and impudence, is making his way to the fore, and, at the same time, is able to assist his friends of "La Tomate" in getting their share of cakes and alo. The part is admirably portrayed by M. de Féraudy, who has scored a popular success.

While Pierre is quietly working at his clay, Pégomas and his comrades are cracking jokes at Grigneux and his theory as to the mission of the true artist. The old man, disgusted with their empty talk and paradoxes, ends by calling them a set of worthless Cabotins, which only adds to their merriment, until a sensation is produced by the entrance of la belle Mme. Laversac (Mlle. Brandès), the wife of the eminent art critic. She has come, attended by a small court of admirers, to tell Pierre that the médaille d'honneur has just been awarded to him, and to invite him and his comrades to a grand entertainment given in their honour at her house. This first act, full of wit, life, and movement, is worthy of the author of "Le monde ou l'on s'ennuie," and the first part of the second is equally good.

At the soirée given in the artistic abode of Laversée, who owes his reputation to the fact that he is the nephew of a director of the Beaux Arts, and is writing a voluminous work on Murillo, we come across other Cabotins beside the master of the house: for instance, Hugon, of the Institut, who smokes his pipe in the drawing-room, and is loud in his praise of "Les Jeunes," in order to curry favour with the rising stars, and escape their criticisms; then there is Brasecommié, the lawyer and judge, and other distinguished members of the Cabotin clan. Some of these characters are, however, a little overdrawn, and savour too much of the charge d'atelier. Unfortunately, the "comédie de mœurs" suddenly turns to drama: the love of Pierre for the beautiful Valentine (Mlle. Marsy), an orphan adopted, spoilt, and finally neglected by Mme. Laversée, who is jealous of her, gives rise to a series of badly connected incidents, which belong to the most old-fashioned stage conventionalities, which neither the talent nor the beauty of the actors can render attractive or really interesting. Fortunately, Pégomas, who is the hero of the evening, makes his appearance every now and again to give fresh life and interest to the play. By the way, the clou of the second act is the appearance of Coquelin Cadet at the Laversée's soirée in his own part of Cadet; he brings down the house with the monologue: "Le pauvre sculpteur," which will probably become the fashion and the plague of this season's private entertainments.

"Cabotins" is an amusing comedy, but an indifferent drama. CECIL NICHOLSON.

MUSIC.

OBITUARY.

DR. HANS VON BÜLOW.

THE death on Monday of this great pianist will not cause any sudden void to be felt, since, during the last few years, his mental powers were on the decline. If he had been nothing more than a distinguished pianist, his quickly-earned fame, already a thing of the past, would be scarcely worth recording. He devoted his gifts, however, to the advancement of his art. Born in 1830, he went, in 1848, to Leipzig, in order to study jurisprudence; but he became attracted to music, and threw himself, heart and soul, into the new school of Berlioz, Liszt, and Wagner. By deed and word he fought for the new cause—for romance versus routine, for liberty versus the fetters of tradition. Bülow, though an enthusiastic champion of the new ideas, was not, like many shallow minds, so carried away by them as to ignore the great masters of the past. His love and admiration for Bach and Beethoven were boundless; and so anxious was he that, with the full-toned instruments and large public halls of the present day, their music should not sound old, that at times he suggested alterations which not only rabid purists but liberal-minded musicians hesitated or refused to accept. His edition of the later pianoforte works of Beethoven aroused considerable opposition; sticklers for the text resented any change. And yet, without accepting all Bülow's suggestions, it may be said that no more earnest and intelligent effort had ever been made to read, through the letter, into the composer's spirit. Bülow's Beethoven is a work that will always be valued by earnest students.

As a pianist Bülow took, and deservedly, high rank. He had enormous technique, was a most careful and finished player, and his memory, too, was prodigious. Playing for mere playing's sake was, however, never his aim; his recitals were educational. His repertoire included the best works of the classic masters, and his readings, though perhaps intellectual rather than emotional, were most striking. He did much to encourage the rising composers of his day, and in the matter of novelty, his influence in London, some years ago, was most marked. In Bülow, as in Liszt, Wagner found, indeed, a powerful champion; for the master he reduced orchestral to pianoforte scores, he made and played transcriptions, conducted music-dramas, and, besides, often wielded in his cause a sharply-pointed pen. His pen, and also, on occasions, his tongue, often stirred up anger; for he was of too excitable a nature, of too artistic a temperament to be satisfied either with soft questions or soft answers. Like all great men, he had his faults, but he was a genuine artist. J. S. S.

MUSIC NOTES.

THE "In Memoriam" Wagner Concert, given by Mr. Henschel on Thursday, Feb. 8, was a brilliant success. The programme, including Wagner excerpts and the "Eroica" Symphony, calls for no detailed notice. Band and conductor were at their best. One is tempted to compare past with present—the indifference, or opposition, to Wagner with the enthusiasm now displayed in his favour. At some future day the same process will be repeated with regard to the successor of Wagner, who, however, has not as yet appeared above the horizon.

Mr. RICHARD GOMPERTZ's second chamber concert took place at the Prince's Hall on Tuesday evening. A Quartet in A minor for strings, by Dr. C. V. Stanford, proved an interesting novelty. The opening movement, with its contrasted sections, combines skill with feeling. The Prestissimo is short, crisp, and effective. The quiet Andante, with its dramatic section, seems almost to belong to the category of programme music. The Finale is clever and brilliant. The work ought to be heard again soon. The performers—Messrs. Gompertz, Inwards, Kreux, and Ould—deserve high praise. In Brahms's Sonata for violin and pianoforte (Op. 78), Mme. Haas played in a quiet, expressive manner. Beethoven's great Quartet in C minor was finely rendered. Mr. W. Shakespeare was successful as the vocalist.

(1) THE wily advertiser seeketh to provoke merriment.

(2) ANOBIUM ERODITUM, the devouring book-worm, turns up its nose (and its toes) at Stickphast Paste.

(3) ANYBODY go one better?

ESTABLISHED 1851.
BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSIT repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.
SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

A PENNY A DROP.

THE PURE OTTO OF ROSE

IN
Toilet "Vinolia" Soap and
"Vinolia" Toilet Powder

NOW COSTS A PENNY A DROP.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS
and
POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
PIES. Also,
ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,
TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.
SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER, BELFAST,

Were awarded the Grand Diploma of Honour—Highest Award for Irish Damask Table Linen, Edinburgh, 1890
Two Prize Medals, Paris, 1889.

IRISH DAMASK TABLE AND HOUSE LINEN.

Fish Napkins, 2s. 11d. per doz. Dinner Napkins, 5s. 6d. per doz. Table Cloths, 2 yds. square, 2s. 11d. 2½ yds. by 3 yds., 5s. 11d. each. Kitchen Table Cloths, 11½d. each. Strong Huckaback Towels, 4s. 6d. per doz. Frilled Linen Pillow Cases, from 1s. 2½d. each.

IRISH CAMBRIC

Embroidered Handkerchiefs, in all the latest styles, from 1s. to 20s. each.

IRISH LINEN

Illustrated Price-Lists and Samples Post Free to any part of the World.

COLLARS, CUFFS, SHIRTS.

COLLARS: Ladies' and Children's 2-fold, 3s. 6d. per doz. Gents' 4-fold, 4s. 11d. per doz.
CUFFS for Ladies, Gentlemen, and Children, from 5s. 11d. per doz.

Best quality long-cloth Shirts, 4-fold Linen Fronts, 35s. 6d. half-dozen. (To measure 2s. extra.)

POCKET HANDKERCHIEFS.

Hemstitched:
Ladies', 2s. 9d. per doz.
Gents', 3s. 11d. "

BY SPECIAL
APPOINTMENTS TO
THE QUEEN AND
EMPEROR FREDERICK
OF GERMANY

ROBINSON & CLEAVER, BELFAST.

MR. MURRAY'S LIST.*DEAN STANLEY'S LIFE AND WORKS.

With Portraits, 2 vols., 8vo, 32s.

THIRD EDITION OF THE

LIFE AND CORRESPONDENCE

OF

ARTHUR PENRHYN STANLEY

Late Dean of Westminster.

By ROWLAND E. PROTHERO, M.A.,
Barrister-at-Law, late Fellow of All Souls' College,
Oxford.*With the Co-operation and Sanction of the*Very Rev. G. G. BRADLEY, Dean of Westminster.WORKS of the late DEAN STANLEY.*SINAI and PALESTINE, in connection with their History. With Maps. 12s.THE BIBLE in the HOLY LAND: being Extracts from the above Work, for Young Persons. 3s. 6d.LECTURES on the HISTORY of the JEWISH CHURCH, from Abraham to the Christian Era. With Portrait. 3 vols., crown
8vo, 18s.LECTURES on the HISTORY of the EASTERN CHURCH. Crown 8vo, 6s.SERMONS and ADDRESSES to CHILDREN, including the Beatitudes—the Faithful Nurse. Post 8vo, 3s. 6d.HISTORICAL MEMORIALS of CANTERBURY. 6s.LIFE and CORRESPONDENCE of DR. ARNOLD. With Portrait. 2 vols., 12s.MEMOIR of EDWARD, CATHERINE, and MARY STANLEY. 9s.HISTORICAL MEMORIALS of WESTMINSTER ABBEY, from its Foundation down to the year 1870. 15s.HISTORY of the CHURCH of SCOTLAND. 7s. 6d.THE EPISTLES of ST. PAUL to the CORINTHIANS. 18s.SERMONS PREACHED at WESTMINSTER on Special Occasions. 12s.CHRISTIAN INSTITUTIONS:
Essays on Ecclesiastical Subjects. 6s.ESSAYS on CHURCH and STATE. Crown 8vo, 6s.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.*SOCIAL EVOLUTION. By Benjamin Kidd. 8vo, 10s. net.VILLAGE SERMONS: Preached at Whatley. By the late R. W.
CHURCH, D.C.L., sometime Dean of St. Paul's, Rector of Whatley, Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford.
Second Series. Crown 8vo, 6s.FISHERS of MEN. Addressed to the Diocese of Canterbury in his Third Visitation. By EDWARD WHITE, Archbishop. Crown 8vo, 6s.TIMES.—"With keen insight and sagacious counsel the Archbishop surveys the condition and prospects of the Church."
OBSERVER.—"Exhibits in a very high degree a man of statesmanlike mind.....The whole volume is elevating and inspiring."THE INCARNATION and COMMON LIFE. By Brooke Foss WESTCOTT, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop of Durham. Crown 8vo, 9s.TIMES.—"A collection of sermons which possess, among other merits, the rare one of actuality, reflecting, as they frequently do, the Bishop's well-known and eager interest in social problems of the day."PAIN, PLEASURE, and ÆSTHETICS: an Essay concerning the Psychology of Pain and Pleasure, with special reference to Æsthetics. By HENRY RUTGERS
MARSHALL, M.A. 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.TIMES.—"Students of metaphysics will not fail to notice this important treatise."THE THEORY of HEAT. By Thomas Preston, M.A. (Dub.), Fellow of the Royal University of Ireland, and Professor of Natural Philosophy, University College,
Dublin. 8vo, 17s. net.ECONOMIC GEOLOGY of the UNITED STATES. With Briefer Mention of Foreign Mineral Products. By RALPH S. TARR, B.S., F.G.S.A., Assistant Professor of Geology at Cornell University. 8vo, 16s. net.MATERIALS for the STUDY of VARIATION. Treated with Especial Regard to Discontinuity in the Origin of Species. By WILLIAM BATESON, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 8vo, 21s. net.DICTIONARY of POLITICAL ECONOMY. Edited by R. H. Inglis
PALGRAVE, F.R.S. Sixth Part (Completing Vol. I.). Medium 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.DICTIONARY of POLITICAL ECONOMY. Edited by R. H. Inglis PALGRAVE, F.R.S. Vol. I. (A—E.). Medium 8vo, 21s. net.SPEAKER.—"The book promises to be, in its complete form, a permanent and authoritative addition to the front ranks of works of reference."
NEW YORK INDEPENDENT.—"When complete will be unique as to range and plan in the English language."LADY WILLIAM. By Mrs. Oliphant. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.OBSERVER.—"It contains very delicate observation of human life and character."
NATIONAL OBSERVER.—"Mrs. Oliphant's last book, 'Lady William,' is mainly a study of a charming woman, and in this respect is equal to, if not better than, anything she has written. It is pleasant reading from start to finish."
ATHENÆUM.—"For variety of character and equability of tone this is one of Mrs. Oliphant's best novels."

MACMILLAN'S THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.—New Volume.

MISS STUART'S LEGACY. By F. A. Steel. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.SATURDAY REVIEW.—"It throbs with the vigour of real creative power."
SPECTATOR.—"It is remarkably clever; it is written in a style which has ease, dignity, grace, and quick responsiveness to the demands of the theme; it has passages of arresting power and fine reticent pathos; and it displays a quick eye for character and a power of depicting it with both force and subtlety."MEDIÆVAL RECORDS and SONNETS. By Aubrey de Vere.
Globe 8vo, 5s.DAILY CHRONICLE.—"No writer of our time has won more sincere and widespread respect than Mr. Aubrey de Vere."
SPECTATOR.—"When he writes of chivalry, of saints, of miracles, it seems as if one of Giotto's frescoed figures, with its at once fresh and yet formal simplicity, had descended from the wall and were talking to us in its own person."EURIPIDES in ENGLISH VERSE. By Arthur S. Way, M.A., Author of "The Iliad of Homer Done into English Verse," and "The Odyssey of Homer Done into English Verse." ALCESTIS; HECUBA; MEDEA. Crown 8vo, sewed, 1s. 6d. each.TIMES.—"His accomplished performances in Hæmerie translation should certainly procure a cordial reception for these scholarly renderings."TALES of the CIVIL WAR from CÆSAR'S COMMENTARIES.
Adapted for the Use of Beginners. With Vocabulary, Notes, and Exercises. By C. H. KEENE, M.A.
Post 8vo, 1s. 6d. [MACMILLAN'S ELEMENTARY CLASSICS.]THE SATIRES of DRYDEN.—ABSALOM and ACHITOPHEL, Parts I. and II.; THE MEDAL; and MACFLECKNOE. Edited, with Memoir, Introduction, and Notes, by J. CHURTON COLLINS. Globe 8vo, 1s. 9d. [MACMILLAN'S ENGLISH CLASSICS.]EDUCATIONAL NEWS.—"He lavishes on these three poems quite a wealth of illustration, and brings out the points of each poem into strong relief by the information he affords."
GUARDIAN.—"His notes are commendably brief and pointed."

MACMILLAN &amp; CO., LONDON.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1138.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

New and Cheaper Edition, fcap. 8vo, 4s. 6d.

THE NEW TESTAMENT in the ORIGINAL GREEK, according to the Text followed in the Authorised Version, together with the Variations adopted in the Revised Version. Edited for the Syndics of the Cambridge University Press, by the late F. H. A. SCRIVENER, M.A., D.C.L., LL.D.

ADVERSARIA CRITICA SACRA. With a short Explanatory Introduction, by the late F. H. A. SCRIVENER, M.A., D.C.L., LL.D. Demy 8vo, 10s.

A NEW MANUAL FOR CONFIRMATION CANDIDATES.

THE CHURCH CATECHISM EXPLAINED. By the Rev. A. W. ROBINSON, M.A., Jesus College, Cambridge, Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Wakefield. Fcap. 8vo, 2s.

OPINIONS.

The BISHOP OF CARLISLE.—“Well arranged and fitted for the use of Confirmation candidates.”

The BISHOP OF ROCHESTER.—“Admirably adapted for its purpose, and likely to supply a very real need.”

The BISHOP OF SALISBURY.—“Contains much useful information and sensible instruction.”

The DEAN OF ST. PAUL'S.—“It will be most useful in assisting these engaged in teaching children the real meaning of the Church Catechism.”

LATIN and GREEK VERSE COMPOSITION. By the late T. S. EVANS, M.A., D.D., St. John's College, Cambridge, Professor of Greek and Classical Literature in the University of Durham. With a Memoir by the Rev. Canon WAITE. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE PITT PRESS SHAKESPEARE.

“For schoolboys of fourteen and upwards this edition is not to be beaten, and we can congratulate Mr. Verity and the University Press upon the publication of what will probably become the standard school edition of this play.”—Guardian.

A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, Glossary, and Index, by A. W. VERITY, M.A., sometime Scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge. Third Edition. 1s. 6d.

A NEW ENGLISH GRAMMAR.

“Will soon become a standard text in secondary schools, and mark an epoch in the teaching of English grammar.”—Guardian.

THE ELEMENTS OF ENGLISH GRAMMAR. By A. S. WEST, M.A. 2s. 6d. [PITT PRESS SERIES.]

CAMBRIDGE NATURAL SCIENCE MANUALS.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE SERIES.

HEAT and LIGHT. By R. T. GLAZEBROOK, M.A., F.R.S., Assistant Director of the Cavendish Laboratory. Crown 8vo, 5s. [Nearly ready.]

The Two Parts are also published separately—

HEAT. By R. T. GLAZEBROOK. Crown 8vo, 3s. [Now ready.]

LIGHT. By R. T. GLAZEBROOK. Crown 8vo, 3s. [Now ready.]

A further List of forthcoming Volumes in this series will be forwarded on application.

A TREATISE on ELEMENTARY HYDROSTATICS. By J. ORRIVES, M.A., Fellow and Lecturer of Christ's College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 5s.

PLANE TRIGONOMETRY. By S. L. LONEY, M.A., late Fellow of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge. 7s. 6d. Part I., up to and including the Solution of Triangles, is published separately. 5s.

NEW VOLUMES OF THE PITT PRESS SERIES.

Subject for Cambridge Higher Local Examinations, 1894-5.

PLATO.—PROTAGORAS. With Introduction and Notes by J. ADAM, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Emmanuel College, and A. M. ADAM 4s. 6d.

“This edition may be confidently recommended as the best English edition of an important dialogue.”—Journal of Education.

Subject for London B.A. Examination, October, 1894.

ARISTOPHANES.—VESPAE. By C. E. GRAVES, M.A. Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. [Nearly ready.]

Subject for the Cambridge Local Examinations, December, 1894.

EURIPIDES.—HECUBA. With Introduction and Notes by W. S. HADLEY, M.A., Fellow of Pembroke College, Cambridge. [Preparing.]

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS, CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.

THE OXFORD CHAUCER

In Six Volumes, demy 8vo, with Portrait and Facsimiles

THE COMPLETE WORKS

OF

GEOFFREY CHAUCER

EDITED FROM NUMEROUS MANUSCRIPTS

By PROF. W. W. SKEAT

NOW READY, VOL. I., PRICE 16s.

Pp. lxiv, 568, demy 8vo, with Contemporary Portrait and Facsimile from the Harleian MS.

CONTENTS

General Introduction

Life of Chaucer

List of Chaucer's Works

Introduction to the Romaunt of the Rose

Introduction to the Minor Poems

The Romaunt of the Rose

The Minor Poems

Notes to the Romaunt of the Rose

Notes to the Minor Poems

The remaining Five Volumes will be published at short intervals during the present year

The complete set of Six Volumes is offered to Subscribers at Three Guineas net, payable in advance

The subscription list will be closed before the issue is completed, and the names of original subscribers will be given at the end of the sixth volume.

THIS Edition of Chaucer, by one of the greatest Authorities on early English Literature, represents the unremitting labour of a quarter of a century. It is a complete edition of ALL THE GENUINE WORKS OF CHAUCER, whether in prose or poetry. It contains an ENTIRELY NEW TEXT, founded upon the best Manuscripts and the earliest Printed Editions.

It is the first modern edition (not counting mere reprints from the old black-letter copies) which contains the whole of Chaucer's Works.

Various readings are recorded wherever they have any interest or value.

The requirements of METRE and GRAMMAR have been carefully considered throughout. Besides these, the PHONOLOGY and SPELLING of every word have received particular attention, the spelling being, in fact, a fair guide to the true old pronunciation. The present edition is therefore the first that adequately represents the author's words.

A COMPLETE COMMENTARY accompanies the whole, in which Chaucer's indebtedness to Boccaccio, Statius, Ovid, Boethius, &c., is duly pointed out.

In the NOTES every difficulty has been considered.

The GLOSSARY is of exceptional fulness; and all necessary INDEXES are appended.

OXFORD

At the Clarendon Press

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE

Oxford University Press Warehouse, Amen Corner, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PAGE

PEARY'S EXPLORATION OF GREENLAND, by Dr. R. BROWN	161
MISS ROSETTI'S VERSES, by E. K. CHAMBERS	162
THE LIFE AND TIMES OF W. H. SMITH, by J. A. HAMILTON	164
NEW NOVELS, by J. B. ALLEN	165
SOME BOOKS ON ANCIENT HISTORY	166
NOTES AND NEWS	167
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	168
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	168
TRANSLATION: "AN ELEGY OF SIMONIDES," by Archdeacon CHRETIEN	169
MAGAZINE AND REVIEWS	169
M. BRAUNELLE at the Académie Française, by CECIL NICHOLSON	169
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	170
CORRESPONDENCE—
Coleridge and Opium, by Dr. W. Aldis Wright; The Etymology of Shanklin , by F. M. Nichols; The Theocum , by E. T.; "Engelland," by Dr. Karl Blind	170
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	170
RECENT WORKS OF PHYSICAL SCIENCE, I.	171
CORRESPONDENCE—
Mr. Bowd's Discoveries at Yeha, near Aksum, by the Rev. H. G. Tomkins	171
PHILOLOGY NOTES	172
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	172
JAMES AND WILLIAM TASSIE, by FREDERICK WEDMORE	172
LETTERS FROM EGYPT, by Prof. SAYCE	173
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	174
STAGE NOTES	174
RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SUDLOCK	175

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &amp;c.—

Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & Co., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS

115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List:—115, Fleet Street, London.

MR. KIRWAN.—LESSONS in SPEECH

Illustrated Dramatic Readings (a combination of speech, pictures, and music). Selections. Literary Lectures.—Address, 2, Vernon Place, W.C.

ELOQUENCE, Voice Production, Gesture,

Shakespeare, Gymnastics, Delsarte, Esthetic, Physical and Vocal Drill, Private Lessons in Expression, Practice in Reading, Recitation, and Criticism. The CHAFFEE-NOBLE TRAINING SCHOOL OF EXPRESSION, 13, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W. Principal, Miss FANNIE MASON.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to best

University or Army Tutors, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained (free of charge) by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. BEYON, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL

MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STUCKER, 6, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

NEWSPAPER FOR SALE.—A Monthly

Class-Paper, established 14 years, good Subscription list and Advertisement connection, which could be easily extended. Price for copyright, goodwill, book debts, office furniture, &c., £400; or half-share, £200.—Reply in confidence, "Review," care of ACADEMY, 27, Chancery Lane, W.C.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS

promptly supplied on moderate terms.

CATALOGUES on application.

DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS &amp; NORGATE,

Importers of Foreign Books,

AND

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,

20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS

and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application

The Author's Manual

By PERCY RUSSELL.

With Prefatory Remarks by Mr. GLADSTONE.

Sixth Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s

With Portrait.

The WESTMINSTER REVIEW says: "A very complete manual and guide for journalist and author. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense. . . . We have little else but praise for the volume."

DIGBY, LONG & CO., PUBLISHERS,

19, BOUVERIE STREET T STREET, LONDON.

THE COLONIAL COLLEGE and

TRAINING FARMS (Limited),
Hollisley Bay, Suffolk.

For the Training of those destined for Colonial Life, &c.

The College owns and farms for the instruction of its students a fine Seaside Estate of 1,800 acres.
Prospectus on application to the RESIDENT DIRECTOR.

ELTHAM COLLEGE, KENT

(THE ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL).

TEN OPEN ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS, £40 to £20, on APRIL 11, 12, 13.—Full particulars of HEAD MASTER.

DURHAM GRAMMAR SCHOOL.

There will be a Vacancy in the HEAD MASTERSHIP of the CATHEDRAL SCHOOL of the Dean and Chapter of Durham in July, 1894. The Head Master must be Graduate of one of the English Universities.—Applications, with copies of recent Testimonials and the names of three Referees, should be forwarded to the Chapter Clerk of the Dean and Chapter of Durham, The College, Durham, from whom all necessary information may be obtained, on or before the 31st March.
February 17th, 1894.

"Greek should be taught as a living language."—JENN.

GOUIN'S SERIES METHOD,

CENTRAL SCHOOL OF FOREIGN TONGUES,

HOWARD HOUSE, ARUNDEL STREET, STRAND.

CLASSES in GREEK (Modern, leading to Ancient) will begin in March, Mondays and Thursdays, 11—1; Evening, 7—9. Also HEBREW shortly.

Application (also for German, French, &c.) to the Directors, Messrs. SWAN & BATES.

BRITISH MUSEUM.

The READING ROOMS will be CLOSED from THURSDAY, MARCH 1st, to MONDAY, MARCH 5th, inclusive.

British Museum, E. MAUNCE THOMPSON,
21st February, 1894. Principal Librarian and Secretary.

LEIGH HUNT.—A fine COLLECTION

OF FIRST EDITIONS, in rare state. Catalogue free.—E. JOHNSON, Bookseller, Cambridge.

PALL MALL.—Drawings by the celebrated Japanese Artist, WATANABE SHOTEN.

MESSRS. FOSTER will include in the SALE OF WEDNESDAY NEXT, the 28th inst., TWENTY-TWO DRAWINGS by this well-known Artist, of whose work an Exhibition was recently held in London.

May be viewed Monday and Tuesday next.—54, Pall Mall.

PALL MALL.—CHENU'S Illustrations Conchyliologiques.

MESSRS. FOSTER will include in the SALE OF THURSDAY NEXT, 1st MARCH, a large number of highly-finished COLOURED ENGRAVINGS of this well-known work.

May be viewed Tuesday and Wednesday.—54, Pall Mall.

TO SCULPTORS and others.—PORTLAND PLACE, W.

A very handsome 13-ROOMED RESIDENCE, with Two noble STUDIOS at rear, specially adapted for Artistic Work of Colossal Proportions. The Studios are let to an eminent sculptor, but possession may be obtained by one quarter's no ice. The Residence will be offered with possession.

MESSRS. ROBERT TIDEY &amp; SON

will SELL by AUCTION, at the MART, CITY, on WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 28th, 1894, at Two o'clock precisely, the direct PORTLAND LEASE of No. 31, DEVONSHIRE STREET, W. Unexpired term 28 years at £45 per annum, the premises being together of the rental value of £250 per annum.

May be viewed. Particulars, &c., at the Mart, of Messrs. MOODIE & MILLS, Solicitors, 20, Rasinghall Street, E.C., or of the AUCTIONEERS, 188, Essex Road, Islington.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY

74, New Oxford Street, London,

Is remarkable for its Display of Copies of Celebrated Works of

THE GREAT MASTERS.

Reproductions of the most important Paintings in the following Collections:—

NATIONAL GALLERY, LONDON,

BUCKINGHAM PALACE,

WINDSOR CASTLE,

UFFIZI, FLORENCE,

PITTI, FLORENCE,

ACADEMY OF FINE ARTS,

FLORENCE,

AMSTERDAM,

THE HAGUE,

LOUVRE, PARIS,

LUXEMBOURG, PARIS,

ROYAL GALLERY, DRESDEN,

HERMITAGE, ST. PETERS-

BURG,

PRADO, MADRID,

VATICAN, ROME,

HAARLEM,

FRANKFORT,

AND

THE PARIS SALONS.

A LARGE COLLECTION of EXAMPLES of MODERN FRENCH and ENGLISH ART in SELECTED FRAMES suitable for HALL, LIBRARY, DRAWING-ROOM BOUDOIR, &c.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE

of 194 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 68 Miniature Photographs of notable Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

AUTOTYPE: a DECORATIVE and EDUCATIONAL ART.

NEW PAMPHLET—FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

THEATRES.

COMEDY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, DICK SHEPIDAN. Messrs. H. B. Irving, Brandon Thomas, Cyril Maude, Lewis Waller, Sydney Brough, Edmund Maurice, Will Dennis, F. M. Paget, &c.; Mesdames Vane, Pattle Browne, Lena Ashwell, Radclyffe, Ettie Williams, A. O'Brien, and Miss Winifred Emery.

COURT THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.50, THE TRANSGRESSOR. Messrs. Fernandez, Brookfield, Hicks, Bucklaw, Cowie, and Arthur Elwood; Misses Coleman, Hatton, Blakiston, and Miss Olga Netherale. Preceded, at 7.50, by UNDER THE CLOCK. Messrs. Brookfield, Hicks, Nainby, Wykes; Miss Lottie Venne, Miss Wilmot, &c.

CRITERION THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9.10, THE HEADLESS MAN. Mr. Charles Wyndham, Messrs. Blakeley, Valentine, Worthing, Atherley, Taylor; Mesdames Jeffreys, Frances, Matthews, Miller, N. Noel, Baker. Preceded, at 8.10, by THE BENGAL TIGER. Messrs. Somerset, Atherley, Hemsley; Misses M. A. Victor, Maria.

DALY'S THEATRE, LEICESTER SQUARE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, Shakespeare's comedy of TWELFTH NIGHT. Miss Rehan as Viola; and George Clarke, James Lewis, Herbert Gresham; Violet Vanbrugh, Catherine Lewis, &c.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.

THIS DAY, at 1.30 and 7.30, ROBINSON CRUSOE. Messrs. Herbert Campbell, Dan Leno, Little Tich, Harry Payne, Arthur Alexander, John D'Auban, Chas. Dodsworth, and Brown Newland, and Le Clercq; Misses Ada Blanche, Marie Lloyd, Emma D'Auban, Lily Harold, Julia Kent.

GARRICK THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, CASTLE. Messrs. J. Forbes Robertson, W. L. Abington, Gilbert Hare, G. W. Anson; Miss Rose Leclercq, Miss May Harvey, and Miss Kate Rorke. At 7.50, A CASE FOR EVICTION. Mr. Scott Buist, Miss Helen Luck, Miss Conti.

GAIETY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.10, DON JUAN. Messrs. Arthur Roberts, Robert Pateman, Edmund Payne, Willie Warde, George Mudie; Mesdames Millie Hylton, Cissie Loftus, Maria Davis, Louise Montague, Sindon, Earle, Mills, Henderson, Hamer, Durkin, Cannon, Benton, Collier, Price, Sutherland, and Katie Seymour.

GLOBE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, CHARLEY'S AUNT. Mr. W. S. Penley, Messrs. Walter Everard, Ernest Hendrie, H. Farmer, Cecil Thornbury, and H. Reeves Smith; Misses Ada Branson, Merrick, Clayton, Nina Boucicault. At 8, JOHN THURGOOD, FARMER.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, THE CHARLATAN. At 8, SIX PERSONS. Mr. Tree, Messrs. Fred Terry, Fredk. Kerr, Nutcombe, Gould, C. Allan, Holman Clark, Montagu Hay; Mesdames Lily Hanbury, Gertrude Kingston, I. Vanbrugh, Brooke, and Mrs. Tree.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

THIS DAY, at 1.30 and 7.30, Mr. Oscar Barrett's Fairy Pantomime, CINDERELLA. Misses Ellaline Terris, Kate Chard, Clara Jecks, Minnie Terry, Florrie Harmon, Sueie Vaughan, Alice Brookes; Messrs. Victor Stephens, Deane Brand, Lugg, Harry Parker, Fred Emney, Blunt, Wallace, Charles Lanri.

LYRIC THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, Christmas Edition of LITTLE CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS. Messrs. E. J. Lonn, John F. Sheridan, P. Cook, G. Tate, W. S. Laidlaw, R. Carse; Mesdames Holland, Moore, Alice Lethbridge, G. Whiteford, E. Greville, Thorne, M. Marsden, and Miss May Yohé. At 7.40, WEATHERWISE.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, A GAIETY GIRL. Messrs. C. Hayden Coffin, Eric Lewis, Kaye, Bantock, D'Orsay, Porteous, Kimma, Somerville, and Harry Monkhouse; Misses Decima Moore, Juliette Nevills, Cutler, Studholme, Pounds, Phelps, M. Hobson, Massey, Lloyd, Robinson, Gorst, and P. Broughton. At 7.45, ADOPTION.

ROYALTY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.40, THE LITTLE WIDOW. Messrs. Charles Snoden, Welton Dale, A. E. W. Mason, Frank Lacy, E. H. Paterson; Misses Minnie Palmer, Emilie Orattan, Sidney K. Phelps, Jane Grey. At 8, IN OLDEN DAYS. Messrs. Harry Orattan, A. E. W. Mason; Miss Emilie Grattan.

SAVOY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, UTOPIA, LIMITED. Messrs. Rutland Barrington, W. H. Denny, J. Le Hay, Scott-Fishe, Gridley, S. Russell, Hunt, and C. Kenningham; Mesdames Nancy McIntosh, Florence Perry, Emmie Owen, and Rosina Brandram.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

Under the Management of Mr. Weedon Grossmith. THIS EVENING, at 9, THE NEW BOY. Mr. Weedon Grossmith, Messrs. J. D. Beveridge, J. Beauchamp, S. Warden, K. Douglas, T. Palmer; Mesdames Gladys Homfrey, May Palfrey, Edna Beringer, H. Dacre. At 8.15, THE GENTLEMAN WHIP.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 7.45, WET PAINT. Mr. H. Sparling, &c. At 8.20, WAPPING OLD STAIRS. Messrs. Courtice Pounds, Richard Temple, Avon Saxon, H. Sparling, H. Boucher; Mesdames Mary Turner, Hannah Jones, Mary Hutton, and Jessie Bond.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

PASSAGES FOR TRANSLATION FROM FRENCH AUTHORS.

SELECTED BY

WALTER DURNFORD, M.A.,

Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, Assistant Master at Eton College.

London: EDWARD STANFORD, 26 and 27, Cockspur Street, S.W.

MUDIE'S*SELECT*LIBRARY.For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and
SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

ONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thenceless the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY,10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER, Is in daily communication with this Library.MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,11, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND &amp; CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical ProcessFor the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations,
Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost
Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,&c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., are prepared to undertake the Printing and Publishing of first-class
Newspapers, Magazines, Books, Catalogues, Pamphlets, Prospectuses,
Articles of Association, Minutes of Evidence, &c., in the best style.
Their offices are fitted with the latest improvements in Rotary and other Machinery, the most modern English and Foreign Type, and they employ none but first-class workmen. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 2750. Telegraph, "Africanian London."

New Edition, pp. 324, cloth, 1s., post free.

HOMOEOPATHIC FAMILY IN-STRUCTOR. By Drs. R. and W. Erps. Describes fully and prescribes for general diseases.London: JAMES ERPS & Co. (Ltd.), 48, Threadneedle Street, and 170, Piccadilly.THEISM; or, the Religion of Common Sense.A Handbook of Religion based on our Reason, Conscience, and Love, apart from so-called "Revelation."By the Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, B.A. Oxon., formerly Vicar of Hemlingham, Minister of the Theistic Church, Swallow Street,
WILLIAMS & NORGATE. Price 2s. 6d.

Now ready, crown 8vo, price 6d., 5s. pp.

IBSEN. A Lecture delivered at UniversityCollege, Liverpool, by Request of the Senate, January 28, 1894, by SIR EDWARD RUSSELL.Liverpool: EDWARD HOWELL, Church Street. London: SIMPAIN, MARSDALL & Co., Limited.THE "BORDER" WAVERLEY.

READY MARCH 1st.

REDGAUNTLET. 2 vols.TWELVE ETCHINGS by or after FRANK SHORT, W. HOLE, R.S.A., JAMES ORROCK, R.I., D. Y. CAMERON, Sir JAMES D.
LINTON, P.R.I., &c., &c.

Introduction and Notes by ANDREW LANG.

LONDON: JOHN C. NIMMO, 14, KING WILLIAM STREET, STRAND.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE,

No. 941.—MARCH, 1894.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS.—HOW THEY HELD THE BASS FOR KING
JAMES, 1691-1694, by Andrew Lang.—THE RICH MISS RIDDELL, by Dorothea Gerard.—GLASGOW AND BALLIOL, by P. A. Wright Henderson.—THE POWER OF DANTE, by Moira O'Neill.—ABOUT A BOOK OF AUTOGRAPHS.—THE PREPARATORY SCHOOL.—THE STORY OF MARGREDEL: BEING A FIRESIDE HISTORY OF A FIFESHIRE FAMILY (Conclusion).—
THE NEWEST ABOUT EARTH-WORMS, by F. E. Beddard, F.R.S.—THE LEGEND OF ISHTAR, by G. B. Stuart.—TO AND FRO IN LAPLAND: ANGLING EXPERIENCES, by George
Lindesay.—THE NAVY AND ITS DUTIES.—THE INDIAN CURRENCY MUDDLE, by W. R. Lawson.—ESCAPED FROM THE WEEK.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD &amp; SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

NATURAL SCIENCE

For MARCH

Will contain a Special Account of the

HAECKEL CELEBRATION.

With Portrait. One Shilling net.

MACMILLAN &amp; Co., London.

NOW READY.

NEW NOVEL.*A QUEER HONEYMOON.

By H. DEW.

Price One Shilling.

London: HATMAN, CHRISTY & LILLY, Limited,
20-22, St. Bride Street, E.C.; and of all Booksellers.

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

THE WEARIED CHRIST, and other

Sermons. By Rev. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

"Very frank in tone, and modern in application."

The Bookman.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

PAUL'S PRAYERS, and other Sermons."As striking and suggestive as any Dr. MacLaren has published.....The book is full of helpful thoughts."

Christian World.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

THE GOD OF THE AMEN, and other

Sermons.

"Replete with a keen spiritual insight, combined with an aptness of illustration and beauty of diction which cannot fail to both impress and charm the reader."—Methodist Times.LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, PUBLISHERS, 21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.; and all Booksellers.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSIT repayable on demand.TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.The New Review.

MARCH, 1894. Price 1s.

THE HOUSE OF LORDS as a CONSTITUTIONAL FORCE.

1. By F. . . .

2. By the Right Hon. the LORD HALSBURY.

3. By the Right Hon. the LORD ASHBOURNE.

4. By the EARL OF IDDESLEIGH.

5. By the EARL OF DONOUGHMORE.

HIANNELE: a Dream Poem. (Act I.) By GERHART HAUPTMANN.

Translated by WILLIAM ARCHER. (Illustrated.)

NEARING THE RAPIDS. By E. LYNN LINTON.

TENNYSON. By the late FRANCIS ADAMS.

APOLOGIA PRO ARTE MEA. By HARRY QUILTER.

AN ILLUSTRATED LOVE EPIC. (I.) By WILLIAM MAKEPEACE

THACKERAY. (Now first published.) With NOTES by GERARD

FIENNES.

THE BERLIN RECONCILIATION. By SIDNEY WHITMAN.

SOME HISTORIC DUELS. (Concluded.) By EGERTON CASTLE.

(Illustrated.)

A COMMONPLACE CHAPTER. (II.) By HUBERT CRACKANTHORPE.

CHESS (with Problems). By I. GUNSBURG.

THE OFFICIAL ESTIMATE of the RIVAL NAVIES. By

"NAUTICS."

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

(1) THE wily advertiser seeketh to provoke merriment.(2) ANOBIUM ERODITUM, the devouring book-worm, turns up its nose (and its toes) at Stickphast Paste.

(3) ANYBODY go one better?

A PENNY A DROP.

THE PURE OTTO OF ROSE

IN

Toilet "Vinolia" Soap and

"Vinolia" Toilet Powder

NOW COSTS A PENNY A DROP.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

BREAKFAST—SUPPER

E P P S'S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

C O C O A

BOILING WATER OR MILK.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.
THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS for MARCH, 1894.
I. A BEGINNER. Chaps. VII.—IX.
II. PAT MAGEE.
III. THOMAS LOVELL BEDDOES.
IV. OXFORD versus CAMBRIDGE.
V. IN AN OLD PORCH.
VI. AN ANTIQUARY OF THE LAST CENTURY.
VII. MAHON'S QUEST.
VIII. THE GREATER GLORY. (Conclusion)
IX. '30 PORT.
X. AN INTERLOPER. Chaps. VII.—IX.

NEW WORKS.

READY THIS DAY.

WOMEN of LETTERS,

including Memoirs of Lady Morgan, the Misses Berry, Mary Wollstonecraft Shelley, Lady Ann Barnard, Sarah Countess Cowper, Mrs. Opie, and Lady Duff Gordon. By GERTRUDE TOWNSEND MAYER. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

FREDERIC HILL: an

Autobiography of Fifty Years in Times of Reform. Being the Recollections of a Retired Civil Servant. By his Daughter, CONSTANCE HILL. 1 vol., demy 8vo, with Portraits, 16s.

"A charming book, most interesting, and most readable." ANDERSON FREE PRESS.

The CONVERSATIONS

of JAMES NORTHCOTE, R.A. Recorded by WILLIAM HAZLITT. A New Edition, Edited, with an Essay on Hazlitt and a Note on Northcote, by EDMUND GOSSE. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"Will be welcomed by a considerable section of the public—not only by those who are interested in matters of pictorial art, but by all who are attracted to bright and lively gossip of the miscellaneous sort. The conversations are eminently readable."—Globe.

NEW NOVELS AT THE LIBRARIES

READY THIS DAY.

A NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE SCOTTS OF BESTMINSTER."

A DEVOTED COUPLE.

By J. MASTERMAN.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE SIN OF JOOST AVELINGH."

THE GREATER GLORY

By MAARTEN MAARTENS,
Author of "An Old Maid's Love," &c.
3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Rich in epigram and humour, both incisive and original, this work will rank among its author's best efforts."—Morning Post.

"No review can do justice to the many deep and delicate studies in this careful, brilliant, and picturesque book."—Daily Chronicle.

"A most ingenious and clever novel, full of good things."—Daily Telegraph.

"A book which has a charm of style quite its own, and has enriched the world of fiction with new characters, destined to more than passing fame."—Observer.

"A serious and striking production."—Scotsman.

NOW READY.

THE ROMANCE of SHERE MOTE. By PERCY HULBURD, Author of "In Black and White." 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

THE VICAR of LANG-

THWAITE. By LILY WATSON. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"This pretty story is a plea for tolerance and charity among the 'clashing of the creeds.' There is much that is touching in the book, much simple pathos and bits of quaint humour."—PALL MALL GAZETTE.

NOW READY.

SPEEDWELL. By Lady

GUENDOLEN RAMSDEN. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"This graceful and pathetic book will please all readers. The story of woman's love and man's inconstancy is sweetly and freshly told."—PALL MALL GAZETTE.

NOW READY.

BRITOMART. By Mrs.

HERBERT MARTIN, Author of "Bonnie Lesley," &c.
3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A noble novel—a realistic and deeply-thought-out story, as charming as it is good."—World.

SECOND EDITION.

DIANA TEMPEST. By

MARY CHOLMONDELEY, Author of "Sir Charles Danvers," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

ABBOTSFORD AND THE PERSONAL RELICS

And Antiquarian Treasures of Sir Walter Scott.

By the Hon. Mrs. MAXWELL SCOTT, of Abbotsford, and Illustrated by William Gibb.

In 1 vol., royal 4to, price £2 12s. 6d. net.

"A sumptuous volume, which will delight the manifold admirers of the Great Magician."—Times.

"It is on all accounts a desirable book."—Athenaeum.

"The whole brings before our eyes, in a manner that is almost pathetic, what Scott loved next after his own good name."—Academy.

"Every lover of Scott will thank her (Mrs. Maxwell Scott) and Mr. Gibb for a book they must all wish to possess."—Speaker.

"This magnificent volume, in style, matter, and manner, is worthy of its subject and its authors."—St. James's Budget.

"Daintily bound in white and blue, and full of admirably executed lithographs, it was a welcome gift to any Scottophile. The letterpress, which is pleasant reading, modestly and accurately describes the chief treasures of Abbotsford."—National Observer.

Demy 8vo, price 21s.

A YEAR AMONGST THE PERSIANS.

BY

EDWARD G. BROWNE, M.A., M.B.,

Fellow of Pembroke College, and Lecturer in Persian to the University of Cambridge.

"To all who wish to understand the springs of Persian character, to realise at once its great gifts and its lamentable failings, and, above all, to appreciate the width of the gulf by which the mind of the East is severed from that of the West, Mr. Browne's remarkable book may be recommended as a faithful and fascinating guide."—Hon. GEORGE CURZON, M.P., in the Pall Mall Gazette.

In 2 vols., post 8vo, price 25s.

THE REMAINS OF ANCIENT ROME.

BY

J. HENRY MIDDLETON,

Director of the South Kensington Museum.

Illustrated with 102 Wood Engravings, and 4 Coloured Plans.

"For completeness and freshness of information, and for clear and sound judgment on points of controversy, it is the best manual which visitors to the Eternal City and students of Roman topography can use."—Athenaeum.

Crown 8vo, Illustrated, price 7s. 6d.

OUR LIFE IN THE SWISS HIGHLANDS.

BY

JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS,

And his DAUGHTER MARGARET.

"A strikingly picturesque and vivid account of Davos and the Davosers and the life of an Englishman of letters there."—Speaker.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

WHERE TO GO ABROAD.

A Guide to the Watering-Places and Health Resorts of Europe, the Mediterranean, &c., and including a Trip through India.

Edited by A. R. HOPE-MONCRIEFF.

"It is very good reading for those who, as we do, like guide-books to read when they are neither merely dry nor ambitiously funny, and it gives a great deal of information without pretending to omniscience."—Saturday Review.

A. & C. BLACK, Soho Square, London, W.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

JUST READY.

FRA PAOLO SARPI

The Greatest of the Venetians.

BY THE

REV. ALEXANDER ROBERTSON,
Author of "Count Campello and Catholic Reform in Italy."

With Illustrations and a Facsimile Letter.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

THE GREEK QUESTION.

NEW WORK BY MR. SAMUELSON.

GREECE:

Her Present Condition and Recent Progress.

By JAMES SAMUELSON,

Author of "Roumania, Past and Present," "Bulgaria, Past and Present," &c.

Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

IMPORTANT NEW SERIES.

MEN OF ACHIEVEMENT.

Uniform demy 8vo Volumes, cloth, gilt top, 6s. 6d. each.

NOW READY.

1. MEN OF BUSINESS. By William O. STODDARD. With numerous Illustrations.

"* Containing sketches of the lives of some of the most successful men of business in America, such as Cornelius Vanderbilt, John Jacob Astor, Cyrus Field, Chauncey Depew, George Pullman, Levi Morton, and a dozen others."

2. INVENTORS. By Philip G. Hubert (Jun.). With Illustrations.

In preparation.

3. EXPLORERS and TRAVELLERS. By General A. W. GREELY.

4. STATESMEN. By Noah Brooks.

ANCIENT ARMS AND ARMOUR:

A Pictorial and Descriptive Record of the Origin and Development of Arms and Armour.

To which are appended 183 Plates, specially drawn from the Author's Collection.

By EDWIN J. BRETT.

Imp. 4to, 650 pp., with 1,200 Original Engravings, half-bound, FIVE GUINEAS net.

"Mr. Brett's magnificent work."—Daily Telegraph. "We know no authority more thorough and up-to-date."—Daily Chronicle. "A masterpiece of its kind.... Mr. Brett's work is as interesting as it is valuable."—Black and White. "Is noteworthy for the very elaborate series of illustrations with which it is enriched."—Times. "We have lately had a sort of revival of the Man in Armour. Mr. Brett's splendid volume, therefore, has fallen on welcoming days."—Daily News. "It is a book that all antiquaries and lovers of ancient armour will deem a great acquisition to the shelves of their libraries."—Life. "Some of the finest pictures in Mr. Brett's book are Italian arms and weapons of the journey. Mr. Brett is an enthusiastic believer in the life of the Middle Ages. His collection seems to be very rich."—Observer. "Many of Mr. Brett's suits of armour came from such well-known collections as those of Sir Samuel Rush Meyrick, Sir Coutts Lindsay, Lord Lonsborough, Count Gayeski, &c. Mr. Brett's work is a truly monumental volume."—Sporting and Dramatic News. "Every great library will have it upon their shelves. A truly magnificent work."—England.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

GLIMPSSES OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION:

Myths, Ideals, and Realities.

By J. G. ALGER, Author of "Englishmen in the French Revolution," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A deeply interesting and most valuable work."—Daily Chronicle.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE.

MARCH NUMBER.

CONTENTS.

THE SEA ISLAND HURRICANES—The RELIEF. Joel Chandler Harris. (Illustrated.)

A POUND OF CURE. A Story of Monte Carlo. Chaps. 1, 2. William Henry Bishop.

THE HIGH BUILDING and its ART. Barr Ferree. (Illustrated.)

MILTON VISITING GALILEO. Painted by Tito Lessi. Philip Gilbert Hamerton. (With Frontispiece and Portrait.)

LIFE and LOVE. Melville Union.

THE FARMER in the NORTH. (Sketches of American Types.) Octave Thane. (Illustrated.)

ON "PIRATICAL SEAS. A Merchant's Voyages to the West Indies in 1805. Peter A. Grotjan.

SUBTROPICAL FLORIDA. Charles Richards Dodge. (Illustrated.)

THE SUMMER INTIMACY. George A. Hubbard.

THE CABLE STREET-RAILWAY. Philip G. Hubert, jun. (Illustrated.)

JOHN MARCH, SOUTHERNER. Chaps. 16-22. George W. Cable.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1894.

No. 1138, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

My Arctic Journal: A Year among Icefields and Eskimos. By Josephine Diebitsch-Peary. With an Account of the Great White Journey across Greenland. By Robert E. Peary. (Longmans.)

WHEN Mr. Peary returned from his winter-quarters at McCormick Bay, it was hoped that, before he set out on a second expedition, he would be able to prepare a full narrative of an exploration which was unquestionably the most important ever made in Greenland. In many respects, indeed, the doubling of the Northern termination of that huge trapezoid of ice and snow, and returning from east to west the same season was, considering the slender resources which he had at his command, the most meritorious made in the Arctic Regions for many years past. Unfortunately, however, Mr. Peary could not find time to complete the book which he began. His first venture was made for the most part at the expense of the Philadelphia Academy of Natural Sciences. The cost of his second, which is on a larger scale, is entirely defrayed by himself; and it says much for the enthusiasm of his countrymen that, by lectures and contributions to the periodical press, he was enabled to accumulate £6000 in the nine months which intervened between his arrival home and his departure for Bowdoin Bay, where he intends to winter not far from his old quarters. Mrs. Peary's modest volume must therefore, with a few scattered papers by her husband, serve to gratify public curiosity until he again appears among us, a happy event which we may hope is due next September or October. It is not intended to be more than a stop-gap—a memoire pour servir—until Mr. Peary's own account of his labours is published.

A brief narrative of the sledge journey across Greenland from the explorer's own pen, and some account of the proceedings of the second expedition up to the date when the vessel which took it out left last autumn, give completeness to the history. It does not, however, contain one word about Mr. Peary's experimental journey on the inland ice in 1886 from Pakitsokfjord, where, in 1867, Mr Edward Whymper and I made an attempt to penetrate the interior, though too late in an exceptionally warm summer to accomplish a great deal. But Peary's journey, in spite of Nansen's belittling of it, was with those of Nordenskjöld, scientifically more important than the young Norwegian's two years later. For the Swede and the American settled, as it afterwards appeared, for good and all, the accuracy of the conclusions theoretically arrived at regarding the interior of Greenland. Nansen added nothing whatever to these observations, so far as they altered the inferences in question. Indeed if Peary's and Nordenskjöld's journeys, outward and back again, are taken in the aggregate, they actually travelled quite as far on the inland ice as their successor. He crossed a comparatively narrow portion of the country by going from east to west. Had not the explorers mentioned been certain of meeting death by starvation on the uninhabited east coast, where they would have arrived at the beginning of winter without provisions enough to return, they would have had little difficulty in crossing Greenland six degrees north of where Nansen and his companions did. But, however admirable as was Peary's experimental journey in 1886—of which no adequate account has been published—it, and all other explorations of a like character, sink into insignificance beside that of 1892, just as that of 1892 will, we all believe, be dwarfed by that of 1894, when Cape Bismarck may be reached, and the outline of Greenland completed in a rough way. Mr. Peary even hints at "a dash for the Pole." But that is the least important part of his work: no contribution to geography can be gained by going a few degrees beyond Markham's or Lockwood's furthest.

Mrs. Peary can only tell of life in and about the hut at McCormick Bay, of a few sledge journeys in the neighbourhood, and of the voyages out and home. But though her narrative cannot possess much novelty, so many expeditions having wintered in the northern parts of Baffin's Bay and the entrance to Smith's Sound, it is unique in so far that it is the story of a wife who shared the hardships of her husband and his five comrades in so high a latitude. Danish ladies pass years at a stretch on the southern side of Melville Bay, and at least one whaler's wife has wintered with her husband in Cumberland Sound. But, unless there were Dutch vrouwen at Smeerenberg, that strange Spitzbergen hamlet of two centuries ago, Mrs. Peary is the first civilised woman who has passed a winter in latitude 77° 43'. This distinction the devoted wife must now share with the female attendant who accompanied her to Bowdoin Bay last autumn. Nor does it seem that the courageous lady was in any way a hindrance to the expedition. Her deft hands, domestic accomplishments, and joyous temperament cheered the party. As Mr. Peary had the ill-luck to fracture his leg just before he landed, his wife's care was doubly necessary. Under her hands "Redcliffe House," the turf-padded plank shanty the men erected, soon became homelike, and a never-failing centre of attraction for the Eskimo, with whom Kane and Hayes have familiarised us. It would appear that the stories circulated in the summer of 1891 about the expedition being insufficiently "found" were partially true. For Mr. Peary depended on supplying the meat for the expedition by hunting in the vicinity of his quarters. In this, as in other respects, his plans were fortunate in the result being equal to the anticipation. All the winter they were well supplied with reindeer venison; and with fresh meat and fresh bread every day they had no fear of the scurvy which played havoc with most of the earlier Smith Sound expeditions. The winter, in spite of 53° below zero, did not hang heavy on their hands. For it was spent in preparing clothing, provisions, and sledges for the spring work, and in collecting dogs to drag the sledges across the great "inland ice"—the glacier-covered interior of Greenland.

Mr. Peary started on this expedition in May with one companion (Astrup, a Norwegian), and in three months was back again at Redcliffe House, after reaching the northern termination of the Greenland mainland in about lat. 82° N., and the east coast in lat. 81° 37' 5" N., and long. 34° 5' W. Actually only forty working days were consumed in this remarkable journey, mainly owing to the better quality of the glacier ice in high latitudes than further south where previous journeys had been made, though the unexpected trend of the eastern coast north-westward materially shortened the distance to be traversed. The journey from Independence Bay to McCormick Bay occupied thirty-one days, including three spent in camp during a severe storm. Fog also embarrassed the explorers. But with the exception of two musk-oxen and a calf killed on the ice-bare strip of land which there, as elsewhere in Greenland, skirts the coast, every ounce of food had to be carried; for not a sight or sound of living thing can be expected on the inland ice. Except where the great interior sheet discharges itself at the coastline, crevasses were not encountered; and as none of the "nunataks" or bits of land peering above the ice, which are so common close to the coast in South Greenland, were seen, not a scrap of moraine relieved the monotony of the white sheet. The ice-bare land around the northern and eastern shores was, however, covered with "big and little boulders," and with a kind of breccia formed by the enormous pressure of the superincumbent ice which had covered the ground ages ago. We see something similar in South Greenland—everything showing that those who regard ice-worn boulders as a moraine profonde are on the right track. On these "outskirts," as the Danes call the ice-free "selvage" of coast-land, many musk-oxen, snow-buntings, sand-pipers, a gerfalcon, and a pair of ravens were observed, besides bees, butterflies, and numerous flowers, among others the yellow poppy, which is perhaps the hardiest of the Arctic Flora.

These discoveries are to me of peculiar personal interest. For as early as 1867, and still later, in 1875, when preparing a digest of the physical geography of Greenland for the "Arctic Papers of the Royal Geographical Society," I came to the conclusion that the interior of Greenland was covered with a vast glacial sheet, as any land must necessarily have revealed itself in the shape of the moraines, which, however, are markedly absent from any portion of the inland ice. In addition to a number of geological conclusions which time has done nothing to invalidate—the connexion of the fjords with glaciers, the identity of the old brick clays with the clays of the infra-glacial stream, &c.—I ventured to form certain inferences regarding the northern termination of Greenland, which Mr. Peary has so strikingly confirmed. Reasoning from the fact that there was no great extent of land to the east or west, that the tides and currents from the Spitzbergen Sea (with occasional pieces of Siberian driftwood) find an outlet through Smith's Sound, and that the Spitzbergen ice-stream was not deflected far eastward, I suggested the termination of Greenland in a comparatively narrow point, composed of broken islets, in about 82° or 83° N. latitude. That the northern coast was ice-bare was certain, from the distribution of the musk-ox, ermine, and lemming, which, with the Eskimo, I concluded must have doubled the northern end of the country to reach the east coast, these three animals being unable to subsist on the inland ice; and, moreover, they are, to this day, limited in their southern extension by the glacier extensions and fjords dividing the coast line. It was, therefore, specially pleasing to me that a "theoretical discovery" made so many years ago should have been confirmed to the letter by Mr. Peary, who, from not mentioning this, as, indeed, he does not the work of any of his predecessors, was in all likelihood not acquainted with the memoir in question, which was printed mainly for the members of Sir George Nares's expedition. At the time it was written we knew much less about Greenland than at present. But in 1875 quite enough had been ascertained to make the conclusions noted all but inevitable to the dozen or so people possessed of any scientific acquaintance with Greenland. Yet it is curious—perhaps amusing—to recall that, thirteen years after I had tried to show the interior of Greenland to be ice-covered, Baron Nordenskjöld actually undertook an expedition to prove that it was ice-bare, but returned after demonstrating the accuracy of what he was so confident in being able to disprove. Still later, General Greeley was confident, because he had found part of Grant's Land snow-bare, that inner Greenland would be in a like condition, and even went so far as to apportion the due credit which the originator of this astounding piece of nonsense deserved. Greeley—who, however, knew nothing about Greenland—also doubted (if one can make out the meaning of a rather involved passage in his book) Greenland terminating where I inferred it would (and does), though he erroneously makes Col. Feilden responsible for what it is quite possible that excellent naturalist might not have cared to father in 1875. Indeed, at that time, maps still appeared with Petermann's hypothetical extension of Greenland right across the Pole, a prolongation of the "Land of Desolation," only credible on the assumption that a great many things existed which we know do not exist. Finally, it is with no desire to play the prophet, if the reviewer recalls the fact that these theories—which are no longer theories, but prosaic pieces of school-book geography—were offered to a world bent on believing something very different, at the time when Dr. Nansen was in the nursery and Mr. Peary still at Bowdoin College. Even now I should not have referred to their confirmation of what was once in the same category as the proverbial German's camel, had it not been noticed, it would seem, in the Scandinavian and American journals. A Norwegian correspondent, who is both distinguished and facetious, is, indeed, good enough to ask whether the writers of the passages in the Geographical Society's Proceedings, 1891 (p. 294), and Journal, September, 1893 (p. 252), are of Balzac's opinion, that "life demands a great deal of forgetting."

Mr. Peary's longitude of Independence Bay demands the most careful scrutiny. For on its accuracy depends, of course, the actual breadth of Northern Greenland, and, indeed, the certainty that he did reach the east coast, and not simply a point on the northern shore. We are not altogether confident in its absolute correctness. Few longitudes by the sextant are worth very much. In Africa, in spite of their being obtained by occultations and eclipses, there are not half a dozen on which geographers depend. If this is the case where lunars and other observations, for which night is necessary, can be taken, how much more prone to error must be circum-meridian altitudes of the sun during the long Arctic day, even when the chronometer rate is checked by means of dead reckoning kept by an odometer? Mr. Peary is, however, quite convinced that his longitude is good; and considering that on nearing McCormick Bay he was only five miles out in his dead reckoning, his faith is not without foundation. The scientific observations which would have been most desirable are those on the nature of the inland ice and on the ice-bare land, from a geologist's point of view. These we cannot learn were made. For the only member of the party capable of examining such questions to any purpose—the naturalist, Mr. Verhoeff—was lost in crossing a glacier at the head of Robertson Bay. His friends believed that he would be found living among the Eskimo. But on Mr. Peary's second expedition returning to Inglefield Gulf last autumn, the Eskimo declared they had not seen anything of him. He fell, most likely, into a crevasse. It appears, however, from an excellent paper contributed to the Geographical Journal, by Mr. Cyrus Adams (October, 1893), that many other observations were accumulated, and will no doubt be published either in a report communicated to the Philadelphia Academy of Natural Sciences, or in this narrative of all his journeys, which we trust Mr. Peary may live to prepare.

Meantime, this brief, lively, well-illustrated, and entirely unpretentious tale of a remarkable expedition will be widely read and warmly appreciated.

ROBERT BROWN.

Verses. By Christina G. Rossetti. (S. P. C. K.) If the past year has been mainly one of silence among the Muses, if Mr. Swinburne and Mr. Morris have said no word, if the babble of lesser singers has too often only reminded us of the great voices that are hushed in Westminster Abbey, it will still be memorable for two gracious things. It has found a new poet in Mr. Francis Thompson, and it has given us a singularly beautiful volume from the hands of Miss Rossetti. Miss Rossetti's gifts, unfairly, as I think, obscured for some time by the marvellous genius of her brother, have none the less won recognition in the hearts of many men. Her poetry has always been reticent and unassuming, but always stamped with a rare distinction, a perfection of form, and an elevation of spirit which are as welcome as flowers in May. It is with a pride of possession that one puts her new volume upon the shelf, to return to again and again for refreshment of the appropriate mood. The verses here gathered together have been in a sense published before, and are now reprinted from the three volumes of devotional musings in which they originally appeared. Practically, however, they are new to lovers of literature, whose attention is not always called to the publications of the S. P. C. K. In various ways they are not without traces of their origin. A cycle of verses written, as some of Miss Rossetti's are, to fit the feasts and fasts of the Prayer Book, must needs, one would think, want something at times of spontaneity. The spiritual moods of the most devout do not follow precisely the order of the ecclesiastical year, nor can those who are nearest in sympathy to John write with equal felicity of Paul and Didymus. A little discreet pruning might have made this book even more representative of the author's powers than it is, by the removal of repetitions and weaknesses accidental to the method of its composition. But this may not be everyone's view, and even so much of criticism appears ungracious, where the only desire is to praise rightly.

It is natural, after this long interval, to look back to Miss Rossetti's earlier work, and attempt to measure the growth which divides it from that of to-day. Certain elements in that earlier work have disappeared; certain others have become fixed and dominant. The note of paganism, so inconsistent with the writer's general standpoint, has ceased to sound; there are no more dirges for dead love, no more tears over life or yearnings for the rest of oblivion. The sense that the world is a vanity of vanities has survived, but it has been transformed: no longer an ultimate criticism of existence, it has become the foil to a religious philosophy. And so, too, the veil of unearthliness, of detachment, which was always present in her most characteristic and serious moods, has extended itself over the whole field of vision. The direct human view of things, the fresh impulse of the senses, the keenness of simple emotion, have become dim in the shadow of all time and all eternity. There is abundance of love for humanity still; but it is a reflected love, for man as the image of the Most High, for man as the beloved of Christ, not for man simply as man. When Miss Rossetti speaks of love now she means not clinging but charity.

"Lord, make us all love all: that when we meet
Even myrads of earth's myriads at Thy Bar,
We may be glad as all true lovers are
Who having parted, count reunion sweet,
Safe gathered home around Thy blessed feet,

Come home by different roads from near or far,
Whether by whirlwind or by flaming ear,
From pangs or sleep, safe folded round Thy seat.
Oh, if our brother's blood cry out at us,
How shall we meet Thee who hast loved us all,
Thee whom we never loved, not loving him?
The unloving cannot chant with Seraphim,
Bear harp of gold or palm victorious,
Or face the Vision Beatifical."

In this sense Love is the keynote of Miss Rossetti's book. It is the final outcome of all her disciplines and raptures, her message, as it was St. John's, to her generation. She rings changes on the beloved word of Love, filling her heart with its music. But the individual, personal love of the Monna Innominata, that is no longer a subject of her song. An exactly similar change has come over her outlook upon nature. It has been etherealised, spiritualised. The primal sensuous delight in flowers and the song of birds, the heart that beat in sympathy with June, have vanished. She is still sensitive to the beauty of earth, but chiefly to those aspects of that beauty which suggest the unearthly, the symbolic aspects, in which the spiritual shines most clearly through the material veil: not the full-hearted, aggressive, jubilant moods, but the quiet tints, the serener landscapes, the gentle breezes. These tendencies were visible enough in both the earlier volumes; but then they were but the expression of one side of a multiplex personality: in the verses now before us all the light is reflected from that one facet. In a word, Miss Rossetti has become definitely and exclusively a religious singer.

Of course in a sense all great poetry is religious, with lamps of spiritual illumination and deep wells of spiritual consolation. But in a narrower sense it is convenient to mean by religious poetry the presentation, through the poet's art, of spiritual truth in the forms and under the symbols which it has taken on for Christianity, the versing of definitely Christian doctrine and Christian aspiration. In this kind of poetry English literature has, as a rule, been singularly lacking. We have nothing to set beside the grand bursts of Latin medieval hymnology. Some splendid passages of Milton and the work of a remarkable little group of writers who preceded Milton, sombrenesses of Donne and serenities of Herbert, Crashaw with his sensuous raptures, Vaughan with his "bright shoots of everlastingness," Southwell, Habington, Herrick, Marvell, and half a dozen others—these are the brief flowering time of the rose of religious song in England. It was a thing that grew up and died in some two-thirds of a century, and it was never repeated. What followed is written at large in the pages of our hymn-books: indifferent rhyming and, at the best, irreproachable sentiment in fustian phrase. During the eighteenth century, hymn-writing fell to lower levels than any other branch of literature; and, ritual being an essentially conservative thing, and conservatism a drag never to degeneration but always to reform, the romantic revival affected it not at all. Lyte and Faber are as mediocre as Ken or Watts or Wesley. Even the High Church movement, which in so many ways breathed new life into the dry bones of English Churchmanship, failed in this one. Viewed merely as poetry, the Christian Year is inconsiderable; and even Newman, a marvellous artist in prose, seldom moves freely in the restraints of metre. The fact is that to the Anglo-Saxon temper, with its extraordinary love of precise statement, even religion has usually presented itself as a thing rather to be formulated in creeds than to be shadowed forth in symbols. Metaphor, extravagance, hyperbole, the life of religious poetry, as of all poetry—these it always prefers to avoid. And therefore we have no great religious music, no great religious painting either. An English divine writes hymns in the spirit in which Archbishop Trench claims to have compiled his Sacred Latin Poetry. He says:—

"It is needless to say that all hymns which in any way imply the Romish doctrine of transubstantiation are excluded. In like manner all are excluded, which involve any creature-worship, or which speak of the mother of our Lord in any other language than that which Scripture has sanctioned and our Church adopted."

But the Muse, even Urania, refuses to have her wings clipped like this, or to be chained to the car of the Thirty-nine Articles. It is worth noting that, of the band of seventeenth-century writers whom I mentioned just now, two were Catholics; and the three greatest, Donne, Vaughan, and Herbert, were all of Welsh extraction, Celts not Saxons. Evidently religious poetry is something of an exotic in English literature.

I do not know whether Miss Rossetti is a Catholic or a Protestant—and how difficult it would be to say this of Keble or Newman—but it is quite certain that with her Italian blood she has inherited tones of speech and manners of thought which do not belong to our country; and in this fact you have a physiological expression of the unique character of her work. She stands in definite and easily intelligible relations to her brother on the one hand, and to the artistic tendencies of Dante and the Pre-Raphaelite painters on the other. There is the same intimate sense of spiritual beauty, and the same desire to embody this beauty in a concrete symbol. Some of her verses are almost archaic in this respect; they are one in spirit with those groups of heavenly figures drawn rather stiffly with trumpets and uplifted faces on a gold background: these, for instance:

"Leaf from leaf Christ knows,
Himself the Lily and the Rose.

"Sheep from sheep Christ tells,
Himself the Shepherd, no one else.

"Star and star he names,
Himself outblazing all their flames.

"Dove by dove, he calls
To set each on the golden walls.

"Drop by drop, he counts
The flood of ocean as it mounts.

"Grain by grain, his hand
Numbers the innumerable sand.

"Lord, I lift to Thee
In peace what is and what shall be.

"Lord, in peace I trust
To Thee all spirits and all dust."

Miss Rossetti is almost equally felicitous in her handling of imagery, whether she elects the traditional inheritance of religious poets, the well-worn store of scriptural metaphor, rich with its association; or whether she goes further afield, to seek a spiritual suggestion in the harvest of her own quiet eye. Very delicate is some of her vignette work, as in this prayer for the grace of detachment from earthly things:

"Not with the sparrow building here a house;
But with the swallow tabernacling so
As still to poise alert to rise and go
On eager wings with wing-outspeeding wills
Beyond earth's gourds and past her almond boughs,
Past utmost bound of the everlasting hills."

She displays also a remarkable command of metrical form. As of old, the sonnet seems to be the mode of expression most natural to her: a sonnet constructed with infinite art, with the very spirit of music in its rhythms, and with a subtle and audacious disposition of irregular accents to dispel all danger of monotony. But outside this special sphere she is at her ease alike with the simplest lyric and the most complicated stanza. Long poems are excluded from the scope of the present volume, and, one thinks, rightly so. The long religious poem is essentially a mistake: it is but rarely and for brief intervals that the religious consciousness, or any other intensely emotional consciousness, can maintain itself at such an elevation as to pass naturally into song. So here we have mainly short swallow-flights of music, bubbling springs that well up for a moment and disappear in the earth again. Two or three I cannot forbear quoting. The first two are complete; the third is half of a two-stanza poem. I give them with their headings.

"THESE ALL WAIT UPON THEE.

"Innocent eyes not ours
Are made to look on flowers,
Eyes of small birds and insects small;
Morn after summer morn
The sweet rose on her thorn
Opens her bosom to them all.
The least and last of things
That soar on quivering wings,
Or crawl among the grass blades out of sight,
Have just as clear a right
To their appointed portion of delight
As Queens or Kings."

And a second:

"A VAIN SHADOW.

"The world—what a world, ah me!
Mouldy, worm-eaten, grey;
Vain as a leaf from a tree,
As a fading day,
As veriest vanity,
As the froth and the spray
Of the hollow-billowed sea,
As what was and shall not be,
As what is and passes away."

And a third:

"Earth hath clear call of daily bells,
A chancel-vault of gloom and star,
A rapture where the anthems are,
A thunder when the organ swells:
Alas, man's daily life—what else?—
Is out of tune with daily bells."

There is a very delicate beauty in the imperfect rhyme—itsself subtly "out of tune," which completes the sense here.

Some of the simpler rhythms appear to me well adapted for singing purposes. I do not know if any of them have been set to music. But if so, the hymnbook compilers might take the opportunity to diversify their doggerel with a little literature. This, for instance, has the refrain which is so effective in congregational singing.

"A PURE RIVER OF WATER OF LIFE.

"We know not a voice of that River,
If vocal or silent it be,
Where for ever and ever and ever
It flows to no sea.

"More deep than the seas is that River,
More full than their manifold tides,
Where for ever and ever and ever
It flows and abides.

"Pure gold is the bed of that River,
(The gold of that land is the best),
Where for ever and ever and ever,
It flows on at rest.

"Oh goodly the banks of that River,
Oh goodly the fruits that they bear,
Where for ever and ever and ever,
It flows and is fair.

"For lo! on each bank of that River,
The Tree of Life life-giving grows,
Where for ever and ever and ever,
The pure River flows."

Miss Rossetti's philosophy is as low-toned, as full of half-tints, as her art. It is no robust, jubilant, self-satisfied, Christianity that she has to offer. She has seen the world and the bitterness thereof. The shadows of its disappointments and perplexities still cloud her mental horizon. And yet through all she retains a moderate optimism: she is content to walk dimly, to hold a humble faith, that in some unknown way things will work out all right, that man will have a chance of fulfilling his high destinies, and that Love will still be lord of all. It is a philosophy of resignation, a creed for the evening of life, of acceptance rather than endeavour, waiting rather than working. "They also serve who only stand and wait." Here is a characteristic meditation:

"THEN SHALL YE SHOUT.

"It seems an easy thing,
Mayhap, one day to sing,
Yet the next day
We cannot sing or say.

"Keep silence with good heart,
While silence fits our part;
Another day
We shall both sing and say.

"Keep silence, counting time
To strike in at the chime:
Prepare to sound—
Our part is coming round.

"Can we not sing or say?
In silence let us pray,
And meditate
Our love-song while we wait."

So, too, in a very beautiful sonnet she looks to death with a faith that has been tried and has come through the trial serene and confident:

"Death is not death, and therefore do I hope:
Nor silence silence; and I therefore sing
A very humble, hopeful, quiet psalm,
Searching my heartfield for an offering;
A handful of sun-courting heliotrope,
Of myrrh a bundle, and a little balm."

Surely a heartfield, where it is good to wander and gather rest and comfort in the heat of the day.

EDMUND K. CHAMBERS.

Life and Times of the Right Hon. W. H. Smith. By Sir Herbert Maxwell. In 2 vols. (Blackwoods.)

THERE is no doubt that, for the moment, this is an opportune book. It is readable, without putting any strain upon either the philosophy or the history of the reader. It is written by one amiable gentleman about another, and it merits and will surely obtain the indulgence of a good-natured public. This is about the measure of it: to be read this year, shelved the next, and forgotten thereafter. If there were any political secrets among Mr. Smith's papers, the time has not come to divulge them; and accordingly, where official documents have to be referred to, as for example in connexion with the despatch of the fleet to Besika Bay, selections are made from them for purposes of local colour only, and not as additions to history. Here the author could not well help himself: as it is, he has perhaps strained official reticence somewhat in the following quotation from one of Mr. Smith's letters to his family:

"At luncheon at the Admiralty we were discussing our several ideas of rest, and G. Hamilton and Gesehen both declared in favour of being allowed to stay at home on Sunday morning when their wives went to church."

On the other hand, if forecasts are permissible at all, it is pretty safe to say that five-and-twenty years hence, when the publication of secrets will have become at the same time discreet and uninteresting, a Life of Mr. Smith will be impossibly out of date. To whom will it then appeal? Outside of departmental work he did hardly anything: his influence, strongly felt by his contemporaries, will be unappreciable in another generation. Accordingly, his life—if it was to be written in two volumes at all—had to be written now, and on these terms it was placed in good hands when it was committed to Sir Herbert Maxwell.

Discursive, garrulous, and chatty, Sir Herbert seems to have written with even less trouble than it will cost another to read him. Some old stories, that have done good service for past generations of politicians, are retold of the present. An easy familiarity with the classics elevates the subject of the book: so easy indeed that Sir Herbert spurns the fetters of mechanical formalism and renders Mr. Smith's family motto, Deo non fortuna fretus, as "freighted not by fortune but by God." He draws accomplished parallels—between the Smiths' Methodist objections to sending their boy to Oxford, and the edict which forbade Lacedemonian youths to go to Athens; between the mental and moral qualities of young Raffaele in his studio, and of young W. H. Smith at 192, Strand. As it would have been impossible to make a full book of the "Life" alone, it has been very plentifully filled up with the "Times" of Mr. Smith, chronologically and annalistically arranged on the plan of the annual summaries which newspapers publish on New Year's day. Page follows page in which Mr. Gladstone is far more the theme than Mr. Smith; digressions on the eloquence of Bishop Magee, the attitude of Lord Hartington, and so forth abound; and what was perhaps meant to disguise the political unimportance of the greater part of Smith's life in effect emphasises it. Since the "Times" of W. H. Smith contain so little of Smith himself, the conclusion is forced on us without escape that he originated nothing, that he led but little, and that, however admirable personally, he had singularly little influence on the times in which he lived. Hence, for some third of this book the interest lies not in Mr. Smith, for he played during its time at most a spectator's part, but in the opinions of Sir Herbert Maxwell. They are frankly old-world and Tory. To him the Ballot Act is still "un-British, almost cowardly," and the Reform Act of 1867 a beginning of evil. Of 1865 he writes:

"With Lord Palmerston's firm will and quaint genial personality there was lost that sense of security, which made moderate men of both parties feel safer under a strong Liberal administration than under a weak Conservative one. Henceforward, step by step, in ever-accelerating descent, the Liberal party was to follow the path of reckless opportunism, till, as has come to pass at this day, it has parted with all the men who might draw to it the confidence of the educated and consciously responsible."

Smith belonged to a class of statesmen peculiar to the middle of this century, of whom, as time goes on, England is likely to see less and less. Trade made him, trade educated him, and he did his work as a consummate tradesman does it. Who the Smiths were nobody knows. His grandfather married beneath him; his grandmother could not write her name. His father was a hard-headed, self-willed, and somewhat narrow-minded man of business. Smith's boyhood was dull; his education was contracted; he was put to work for his living early, and from the time when luckier lads get into sixth forms, he was overworked in his business and had the command of money which he had earned himself. These beginnings, no doubt, led him to great things; he became, and largely thanks to them, enormously rich, though neither closefisted nor greedy, and leader of the House of Commons without a particle of the gift of oratory. But they had their revenge. In later life he regretted his ignorance of classical history, but that was a small matter; his real defect was his inability to amuse himself except with extra work, his inveterate tendency to commonplace, his want of spring of mind and imagination. Hence his leisure was devoted to more business, the business of benevolence. When he was not earning money, he administered charities, and was a model parishioner, a school board member, and so forth. His politics were middle class politics, moderate Liberal at first, moderate Conservative afterwards. He was blackballed at the Reform at thirty-nine, Liberal-Conservative candidate for Westminster at forty, and Conservative-Liberal member a little later, soon merging into a docile Conservative of a rather opportunist kind. His mind expanded itself in Evangelical religion, and his piety is equally remarkable for its unobtrusive sincerity and for its entire want of unction. His reading was practically nil, though Sir H. Maxwell thoughtfully mentions that he was the proprietor of some thousands of well-bound books. In fact, his business was to sell books, not to read them. From the Crimean to the Russo-Turkish War he was, in his own person, practically the firm in the Strand; and when he took up the labour of leading the House of Commons he took it up as a business, which it was his duty to conduct, and he managed it with fairness, orderliness, and regularity, more precious perhaps in the long run than the brilliance of Conservative or the earnestness of Liberal premiers.

The sterling worth of his character was such that no man could fail to respect it and few to admire it. He was the most modest of men, and had the rare natural gift of being entirely devoid of snobbishness. When he first went to the Admiralty he writes to his wife:

"My patent has come to-day and I have taken my seat at the Board, who address me as 'Sir' in every sentence. It is strange and makes me shy at first, and I have to do what I hardly like—to send for them, not go to them; but I am told they expect me, as their chief, to require respect."

To Mr. Lawson, of the Daily Telegraph, he said, about the same time, "It must seem funny enough to you, who remember me working in my shirt sleeves, to see me installed here." As late as 1887 he presided, as one of their number, at the annual dinner of the Prince of Wales' tradesmen—why not? did he not supply the newspapers to Marlborough House?

Of his public talents he was singularly diffident. To Mr. Penrose Fitzgerald he writes at a time when he was actually leading the House:—

"My present impression is that I ought not to speak anywhere at all; old Jenner is very strong against it. I cannot believe that a speech of mine would help any fellow, but I would rather give you a lift up than any other man in the House."

In truth, as a speaker, Smith was wholly mediocre. He had difficulty in framing a sentence, not a simple statement of fact, without introducing the word "duty" into it, not in the least from cant, but from a sheer combination of moral excellence with intellectual limitation. Commonplace was the vein in which he found natural self-expression:—

"The elections are all going against us," he wrote in 1880, "and it looks as if the Liberals would be as strong as they were in 1868. I hope Cross will keep his seat, but at present the wave—for it is just like a tidal wave—appears to be rising higher and sweeping everything before it. We know, however, that there is a Ruler, and that the wills of men can be controlled by Him, and I am quite content."

And in 1887:—

"As I grow older I realise that I am getting nearer to the end myself; and while the close of life loses any terror it once had, the duty of being useful to all around me . . . comes home to me every day with greater strength."

His charity was enormous, and had the rare virtues of being reserved and discriminating. He gave constantly, with every precaution to conceal the giver's name; and at the same time, pressed with petitions as he was, he knew how to refuse. Strange applications were made to him. One introduction ran thus:—

"The bearer of this is an earnest Christian young man. He is at present employed in a wine cellar, an occupation altogether unsuited to his tastes now that he has become a new man in Christ Jesus."

But this was not the way to approach him, and he could be stern to canting and insincere appeals. "Think of my mother, sir!" said a dismissed rascally clerk; "she has no one to depend on but me, and if you dismiss me without a character I shall be unable to support her." Smith was not to be thus imposed upon. "You should have thought of your mother before, sir," was all he said.

His quiet humour was considerable, and under a suave and guileless demeanour he concealed—as the House of Commons discovered during his leadership—no little strategical finesse. Once it aided him so far that he even turned the tables on an interviewer:

"The proprietor of one of the principal New York dailies being in London, wrote to request an interview with the First Lord of the Treasury. Smith had minuted the letter 'Express regret,' when he changed his mind and said to his secretary, 'No! let him come; he can give me the information I want about the municipal institutions of New York' (the Local Government Bill was under consideration in the House of Commons at the time). An appointment was made, the interview took place, and for a quarter of an hour the great journalist was kept busy answering Mr. Smith's questions. Then the next appointment was announced, the visitor was bowed out, and it flashed on him that for once a Britisher had outwitted a Yankee. 'I guess,' he remarked to the private secretary as he picked up his hat, 'I guess that Mr. Smith has interviewed me.'"

It is on Smith's personality that the reader will like best to dwell, and to dwell affectionately, and this is the part of his life which Sir Herbert Maxwell has handled best. Perhaps if, instead of a weighty book, Sir Herbert had produced only a magazine article or two, sketching Smith's career and estimating his character and influence, he would have paid to his late leader a more felicitous tribute. But however the portrait be presented, no one can turn from it without a feeling of sincere respect and of warm liking, or without a wish, strong in proportion to the part politics play in his interests, that we had more plain men like the late Mr. W. H. Smith.

J. A. HAMILTON.

NEW NOVELS.

Red Diamonds. By Justin McCarthy. In 3 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

Britomart. By Mrs. Herbert Martin. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

A Buried Sin. By Lady Duffus Hardy. In 3 vols. (White.)

Michael's Crag. By Grant Allen. (Leadenhall Press.)

Joyce Martindale. By Mrs. H. E. Russell. (Remington.)

Raymond's Folly. By B. Paul Neuman. (Fisher Unwin.)

A Naughty Girl. By J. Ashby Sterry. (Bliss, Sands & Foster.)

The Old House of Rayner. By B. Grimley Hill. (Digby, Long & Co.)

Relics. By Frances MacNab. (Heinemann.)

THERE is no one who will not welcome a fresh work from the pen of Mr. Justin McCarthy. His name is a guarantee for good workmanship; and if Red Diamonds, his latest effort, can scarcely be pronounced superior to previous productions, it certainly shows no abatement in originality and imaginative power. The plot is a singular, but not an altogether improbable, one. Six South African adventurers become joint owners of a diamond mine, which yields little at first, but eventually turns out worth a million of money. By an arrangement duly formulated in a deed of partnership they are possessors of equal shares in the mine, each partner naming an heir to succeed him in case of his own death. Then a chapter of accidents ensues. One of the band dies of an overdose of chloral, a second is murdered, a third is killed in a duel with another partner, who forthwith decamps from the scene of action, while a fifth, Noah Bland, is lynched in punishment for a crime of unusual atrocity, but, before execution, is allowed time to write a letter home to his son and heir in England, Japhet Bland. The sole survivor, an American named Seth Chickering, sells the property and comes to London with the intention of discovering the various heirs. Here the story commences. Seth Chickering is murdered on the very night of his arrival; and the memoranda contained in his pocket book, which is produced at the inquest, furnish materials for an entertaining tale running through three pleasant volumes, and ending satisfactorily to all parties concerned, except to the leading villain, Japhet Bland, who in respect of cold-blooded villany is a worthy descendant of his father.

Britomart is a novel powerfully conceived, and full of strong scenes and strong characters. The writer is particularly happy in the complete contrasts of individual character which she contrives to introduce throughout. In the opening scene Richard Trevenna, a cynical and sceptical invalid of fifty, is persuaded by his old friend Edmund Grey, a warmhearted, shy little man, Master of an Oxford college, to atone for a wrong committed in early life, and to marry the woman who more than twenty years before had borne him a daughter. In consequence of this marriage Geoffrey, the nephew and expectant heir of Richard Trevenna, becomes disinherited, and is compelled to break off his engagement with Viola Field, the daughter of a wealthy London merchant. Richard Trevenna soon passes out of the story, which is mainly concerned with the subsequent fortunes of Geoffrey, Penrose Trevenna (the illegitimate daughter already mentioned), and Viola Field. The last-named character, a feeble-souled, doll-like little creature, reminding one of Dora Copperfield, is a skilfully drawn antithesis to Penrose, the "Britomart" of the book, who is gifted with the strongest powers of will and sense of duty, coupled with an almost uncomfortably bold habit of plain speaking. Mrs. Martin is more successful in her delineation of women than of men; but her story never lacks interest for a moment, and ought to prove a successful one.

Without presenting any novel features either of plot or character, A Buried Sin is well constructed, and reads pleasantly. The mischief of the story is wrought by one Levison, a Jew, land-agent to Sir Reginald Thurlowe, who, to gratify a private grudge, procures for the heir, Harold Thurlowe, a sentence of ten years' transportation, by commissioning the latter to cash for him a cheque ostensibly drawn by Sir Reginald. Of the notes thus procured for him he gives Harold half, and buries the remaining half in his garden. The cheque turns out to be a forgery; and as no notes can be traced except those cashed by Harold, he is brought to trial, and the verdict goes against him. It does not require an Oedipus to forecast almost from the first what the outcome of this situation will be; and the only mystery is whether the "Buried Sin" is the buried bank notes, or whether it refers to the concealment of a compromising bit of family history on the part of Mrs. Kent, mother of Reginald and Algernon Kent, two prominent characters of the tale. There is a touch of weakness in the device by which Dolly Blaine and George D'Alton are enabled to marry at the end of the book. People are not so much in the habit of settling large estates and handsome incomes, even upon near and dear friends, in order to bring their love affairs to a satisfactory conclusion, as to justify a novelist in resorting to such a contrivance. Nevertheless, there is a straightforward directness of narrative in A Buried Sin, an entire absence of padding, and an abundance of love-making, which are in themselves ample recommendations.

Mr. Grant Allen frequently contrives to invest his literary productions with some external feature of an uncommon order. A few months ago it was an extraordinary title that met the eye and excited the curiosity; on this occasion it has occurred either to the author or his publisher to announce Michael's Crag, on the outside of its cover, as "Mr. Grant Allen's 'New Story.'" Litera scripta manet; and possibly the device is an ingenious one for perpetuating an impression of the freshness of the work long after successors to it have been born, which at the author's usual rate of production will not be in the far distant future. Mr. Allen may be assured that there is no need of any factitious contrivance for maintaining the popularity of the present story. Some of his quaintest inventiveness has been pressed into the service in the composition of this ingenious novelette. Two of the characters alone are unique specimens of creative genius. One is Walter Tyrrel, who has accidentally caused the death of a boy by kicking some stones over the top of a Cornish cliff, and who for fifteen years shuns the summit and paces the beach beneath, tortured with an agony of remorse; the other is Michael Trevennack, the boy's father, who received an injury to his brain in the same accident, and who now avoids the foot of the rocks, and delights to frequent their summit, burning with a frantic impulse—only suppressed at the entreaties of his wife—to announce himself to the world as Michael the Archangel. Three hundred and fifty marginal illustrations in silhouette, by F. C. Gould and A. C. Gould, are a fantastic but not an unpleasing feature of the work.

Tales of Australian life are, necessarily perhaps, pervaded by a strong family likeness, and there are few phases of life or scenery in Joyce Martindale which Bolderwood and other popular writers have not already utilised. Apart, however, from the usual incidents of sheep and cattle farming, there is a tale of an Anglican curate of strictly ascetic views, belonging to a church in Sydney, who, unfortunately for his pronounced opinions upon the virtue of celibacy, loses his heart to Joyce Martindale, the heroine. The sensible advice of his vicar upon the subject is successful in calming his conscientious scruples, and all might have gone well but for the discovery that his elder brother had some years before robbed Joyce's father of a large amount of money. Mrs. Russell delivers strong and sometimes trenchant opinions upon social subjects; her powers of description are good, and her dialogues above the average order of merit.

Raymond's Folly, further described as "The story of an experiment in Utopia," gives an account of the formation of a Boys' Club, designed to be "so attractive that the boys would dread the idea of leaving it, and yet affording far more than mere entertainment, being in truth a comprehensive training of body, mind, and character." As usual with books of this sort, the results achieved are delightful; but as the scheme depends for its success entirely upon the personal character and influence of its presiding genius, it is scarcely one which the most sanguine reformer could ever expect to see realised, except in special instances.

It would be rash to assume that the addition of sixpence to the usual price of a paper-covered novelette could imply any guarantee of superiority in regard to the contents, but at all events A Naughty Girl, published at eightpence, is far above the average merit of this class of books. Mr. Sterry appears to have tried his hand at fiction on several previous occasions, and he writes in an easy style, with an abundance of up-to-date allusions, which seems admirably adapted for light literature of the kind. Lest the title should be thought to indicate any tale of impropriety, it may be well to explain that the central figure of the narrative is a penniless young lady who is fond of the harmless pleasantry that "having naught she must needs be naughty."

Another addition to the vast mass of books which invariably compel one to wonder why they were ever written, and how they ever came to be printed, is The Old House of Rayner, a book which contains also a story entitled How to Read in "The Long." The latter is a weakly written and rather foolish account of two Oxford undergraduates, who went down to Cornwall to read for their examination, but fell in love instead. The Old House of Rayner has a trifle more backbone in it, and may perhaps be allowed to pass muster as a specimen of melodramatic and sensational narrative; but the writer's trick of investing with personality the house itself—e.g., "Now this arrangement did not at all please the Old House. He did not care at all for Mrs. Tarleton—in fact, thought her a scheming humbug," &c.—is puerile and tiresome.

Readers will be charmed with Relics, a book purporting to contain the thoughts and reflections of a spinster, who, however, late in life meets with an old lover of her early days, and marries him. As the author herself remarks, it is little more than a record of forgotten trifles, but the humour and pathos and genial fancy she displays merit the kindest of criticisms.

JOHN BARROW ALLEN.

SOME BOOKS ON ANCIENT HISTORY.

Studies of Travel. By E. A. Freeman. In 2 vols. (Putnam's Sons.) These two books—one on Greece, one on Italy—are notes of Prof. Freeman's travels in 1877, 1881, 1883, reprinted from various magazines. Among the papers is the Iter ad Brundisium, over ground not familiar to everyone, by Anagni and Ferentino, Benevento, Hannibal's Camp, and fishy Bari. As we turn over the pages we hear again the voice of the Professor, his clear enunciation, his well-remembered emphasis. We recognise the style which brings out and insists on the leading thoughts, and which is so transparent in its simplicity. It seems an easy style till we try to imitate it, and then we get some suspicion of its hidden art. One feature of it, at all events, is the intense, though restrained, enthusiasm which runs all through. Prof. Freeman felt all that he saw and all that he said, and he makes his descriptions alive to his readers. He had a sure hand in depicting localities, and his remarkable memory makes every scene clearer by some apt comparison. The note of interest in human affairs is, of course, always the leading one. It is the arch at Tyrins, the rude walls at Cori, which draw his eye first; when nature comes under his regard, it is nature as she affected man or worked for him—the hill-top sites which protected town life, or the sea "which brought so many dangers." Great was the pleasure which he evidently felt in tracing the history of Norman architecture half over Europe, from Britain to Bitonto; and the tiny Byzantine churches of Athens claimed his attention as much as the work of Perikles or Herodes. From Athens, certainly, he might well illustrate one of his dicta: "In the life of cities nothing preserves like early overthrow, nothing destroys like continuous life"; but we are not sure that this is always true. Argos illustrates it in one way, Mycenae and Ninfa in another; some day we may find that Sybaris illustrates it, but what can Silchester show, save its walls? There are more misprints than there should be in these Studies—Gabia for Gabii ought not to have escaped revision, and "how the spirit of freedom set with Thrasyboulos on the brow of Phylé" invites conjectural restoration. But the Studies are as charming as they are instructive. There are a few books, sometimes oddly chosen, which English and American travellers make a point of reading at certain places: Le Roi des Montagnes at Athens, Romola at Florence, at Rome the Marble Faun and Boissier's Promenades Archéologiques. Let these two dainty little volumes go henceforth in the travelling bag to Piræus and across the Alps.

"UNIVERSITY EXTENSION MANUALS": Greece in the Age of Pericles. By A. J. Grant. (John Murray.) This is a clear and thoughtful sketch of the best days of free Greece, but slighter than Dr. Evelyn Abbott's Pericles and the Golden Age of Athens. Mr. Grant has wisely not tried to put everything into one small book, and he has selected for special stress—(1) the social and religious conditions of the country; (2) the relation of Greek history to the general history of Europe. Hence he brings out clearly the essential unlikeness of an ancient state to a modern one, not only in size, but also in the fact that its civilisation was the property, almost exclusively, of males; and he indicates more indirectly how far the performance of most of the labour by slaves in Greece vitiates a comparison between Greek and modern democracy. There is no royal road to learning, and all these new manuals make an offer of learning or culture on too easy terms; but Mr. Grant's writing leaves the impression that he could do good work on a larger scale and of a more solid sort. The illustrations are, many of them, poor. The Acropolis of Athens is not such a mountain as p. 71 makes it, and a drawing of it which contains the Tower of the Franks is hardly worth reproducing at the present day.

"GESCHICHTE DES ALTERTHUMS." Zweiter Band. Geschichte des Abendlandes bis auf die Perserkriege. Von E. Meyer. (Stuttgart: Cotta.) Herr Meyer's second volume, the continuation of a long interrupted work, is an illustration of a certain reaction against specialism which is beginning to show itself in more than one field. Like Welzhofer's Allgemeine Geschichte des Alterthums, it is an attempt to deal with the history of the Mediterranean peoples as a part of a larger whole, and to depict that whole, not merely to allude to it. The task is one calling for a somewhat rare combination of qualities: learning directed to some neglected fields as well as to the vids triptolous of Greek and Roman affairs, and a power of fusing various material into one easily-flowing story. In this latter quality Welzhofer is superior, because of the difference in the mode of narration. His story is simple, direct, straight-ahead; while Meyer breaks up his into sections, each having of course a unity of its own, but causing an interruption in the flow. On the other hand, Meyer is the more gründlich, each of his sections carrying with it a long note on the ancient authorities, on modern writings, and on contested points. This, of course, is not literature, but it has a distinct scientific value. The bulk of the book is given up to early Greek affairs, but a good deal is said too of Italy, Persia and Carthage. The Hittites too (Chetiter) are inserted among the factors of Greek civilisation. Hittite influence in Mycenaean art

"shows that a connection between the East and the Aegean Sea existed even by land; types of Hittite art found their way through trade to the Greeks. But political relations too must have existed between the Mycenaean states and Asia Minor. That the Hittites pushed their conquests as far as Sipylus cannot have been without effects on the Greek world, though we cannot say definitely what the effects were."

Dr. Meyer's Book I. (Greece under Eastern Influence) deals with the population of the West, its points of connexion with the East, the Mycenaean culture (described and valued perhaps a thought too positively); the oldest states of Greece (Thebes, Athens, Thessaly), the Trojan War, and the settlement of Asia Minor. Book II. (the Greek Middle Ages) goes on to the inroad of the hill tribes, internal politics of states of this period, and their degree of civilisation. Book III. (on the End of the Middle Ages and on the Powers of Carthage and Persia) takes up Lydia, the state of Greece in the seventh century, and the religion and philosophy of the sixth century. It is curious that Herr Meyer thinks it still necessary to controvert the old-fashioned view of a fundamental difference of Ionian and Dorian, to which Grote seemed to have given the deathblow long since. But we are among matters of more recent controversy when we come to Drakon. As to the date of that legislator, Meyer appears to accept the authority of the Ἀθηναίων Πολιτεία as confirming Busolt's suggestion, that Drakon must be placed after Kylon; but he does something to relieve the extreme awkwardness of that view when he (following Cauer) speaks of the account of Drakon's constitution in the A. II. as an insertion, the ideal constitution of some aristocratic thinker or group. Herr Meyer has a strong sense of the reality of things, of their practical aspect; and this feeling for truth, which leads him to insist on the out-of-place character of the arrangements fathered upon Drakon, has also enabled him to make some very interesting speculations on the actual working of the property-qualification of Solon's time.

La Propriété Foncière en Grèce jusqu'à la Conquête Romaine. Par P. Guiraud. (Paris: Hachette.) We have here a book of extraordinarily wide range and most elaborate completeness, and the only fair way of dealing with it is to indicate by description its manifold contents. M. Guiraud has taken the evidence afforded him by history (as Plutarch gives it), by Plato's Utopias (always rooted in the usages of Greek life), by the private speeches of the orators (who lied about facts, but had to keep to the law), and by Greek inscriptions (among which that of Gortyna holds an honoured place). With all this evidence, and some minor sources, before him, he has written what might be called The Greek Landlord's Manual. No other title would really unite and justify the various topics of his book. When the landlord whom we may suppose to use it is in an active and outdoor frame of mind, he can turn to his manual for a long article on Greek agriculture, on the treatment of vines and corn, on the management of lambs and goats, of chickens and pigeons. It will appear that against all dangers, hail or cattle-plague, he must protect himself, there is no insurance society to help him. If he be thinking of legal difficulties, if he be feeling litigious or his title be called in question, he will find the Greek law of real property set forth with many references to leading cases, and with as much lucidity as is compatible with the fact that law may vary from state to state. What are his rights and where they end; from whom he can inherit; to whom he may leave property, and with what limitations; what rules govern sales; and what taxes have to be paid—all these things he may read at his leisure, and his manual even includes (an almost unnecessary gratification) taxes not directly on land. If our landlord is bent on business, he may go on to see the usual conditions of a lease, and learn how he may bind his tenant to respect existing trees, to use up certain farm products on the farm, and to apply a due amount of manure. Here and there our modern editor may be mistaken, but in the main we take it that he is supplying correct facts and sound law. His merit lies in having well co-ordinated the material; but it is material most of which has passed through many a brain before his, so that it is now safely understood and put in the right light. To the less original side of the book belongs the examination of property classified according to its owners: property owned by adult individuals, by minors, by associations, by temples, by the state itself. A separate chapter on the preservation of written titles reminds us to wonder how it is that the black sheep of Attic lawsuits seem to have ventured so often to say that they had lost important documents. A jury which deserved one-tenth of the compliments usually paid to juries would surely make short work of so obvious a pretence. But in addition to all this sober and instructive account, there is also a more speculative side to the work, wherein the author goes back to a time anterior to documents and asks whether the Greeks began with property-communism or with individual ownership. With neither, he says, though he admits at last that the former is just possible; they began with joint tenure of landed property by families. Private ownership ultimately grew out of this, but was always tempered by some surviving religious beliefs. The family system broke up: it was flooded from below by the stragglers, the outcasts, the landless men, of whom we hear something even in Homer, and who must have multiplied with time. At all events the future was theirs; theirs was the magic of full ownership; theirs was the energy which had overflowed into crime or had forbidden them to be content at home. As the unattached multitude rose and swamped the old families and privileged classes, there arrived a time when colonies were founded by men ill at ease in Greece and led by men glad to remove their threatening foci. But no colonies sufficed in the long run, and political changes followed on changes of land tenure. Finally came the nemesis of the institution of individual property, and we find a chapter on "Socialist Theories in Greece." M. Guiraud has written a very interesting and really philosophic contribution to law and history.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. ISBISTER & Co. announce for publication in April a volume entitled Tennyson: his Art and Relation to Modern Life, by the Rev. Stopford A. Brooke.

A BOOK of poetry breaking rather new ground is announced by Messrs. Elkin Mathews & John Lane in A London Rose and other Rhymes, by Mr. Ernest Rhys. It takes its main impulse, however, not from London but from Wales. It attempts the experiment of introducing certain of the metrical effects, peculiar to Welsh poetry, into its rhymes; one ballad in particular, relating to a remote bardic episode and entitled "The House of Hendra," even makes use in a modified form of the much debated Cynghanedd. The volume will be ready next month.

MESSRS. RIVINGTON, PERCIVAL & Co. have ready for early issue, on behalf of the Eastern Church Association, a work entitled East Syrian Daily Offices, by the Rev. Arthur J. Maclean, Dean of Argyll and the Isles. It is a translation from the Syriac of the Daily Offices of the Eastern Syrians, who are also known as Nestorians. Their liturgies, baptismal office, and ordination service have long been known to the Western reader in the translations of Renaudot, Badger, and Denzinger. But, so far as the writer of these pages knows, the daily offices have never been translated; and he desires, therefore, to present an English version of the complete non-liturgical services so far as they are contained in the East Syrian Psalter, and in the books known as Qdhamuwalhar ("Before and After") and Takhsa ("Order"), a description of which is appended to the Introduction.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL will publish next week Aphorisms from the Writings of Herbert Spencer, selected by Julia Raymond Gingell, and illustrated with a portrait.

MESSRS. W. & R. CHAMBERS will begin at the end of March a serial issue in shilling monthly parts of their Encyclopaedia.

MR. EDWARD HOWELL, of Liverpool, will shortly publish a volume of lectures and addresses on various subjects, by the late John Lovell, sometime editor of the Liverpool Mercury, and founder of the Press Association. The volume is edited by his daughter, and will be called "Literary Papers."

A NEW novel by Miss May Crommelin, which has not previously appeared in serial form, will shortly be published by Messrs. Bliss, Sanda & Foster, in two volumes, entitled Dust before the Wind. The author had originally intended to publish the work anonymously, but she has been induced by her friends to put her name to it.

MR. STANDISH O'GRADY'S new work, Lost on Du Corrig; or, 'Twixt Earth and Ocean, will be published on February 28 by Cassell & Co.

MESSRS. JARROLD & SONS announce a novel by Mr. Fergus Hume; and also a volume of stories by Mr. Curtis Yorke, to be entitled Between the Silences.

MR. W. P. RYAN'S little book on The Irish Literary Revival, containing notices and portraits of the leading Irish writers of the day, as well as studies of the Irish Literary Societies, will be published by the author at 12, Bloomsbury-mansion, W.C., at the end of the present month.

MESSRS. RIVINGTON, PERCIVAL & Co. will publish a new and thoroughly revised edition of Life on the Lagoons, by Mr. Horatio F. Brown. In this new edition numerous illustrations have been added; and the author has been able to include a description of the restorations which have recently been carried out at the Ducal Palace, based upon information furnished to him by the architect in charge of the works.

MISS MARIE CORELLI'S Barabbas, the translation of which into Hindustani we announced a short time since, is now being rendered also into Gujarati. The translator is M. Murzham, a Parsi author of standing in his own country. There is also to be a translation of Barabbas into Arabic, but the final arrangements have not yet been made.

MESSRS. EYRE & SPOTTISWOODE announce for publication in March a new edition of The Imitation of Christ, with an Introduction by Canon Knox Little; and an illustrated edition of Neale's translation of The Rhythm of Bernard de Morlaix, with twelve pictures printed in monotype.

MR. FISHER UNWIN is publishing immediately a shilling edition of How to be Happy though Married, by the Rev. E. J. Hardy.

MR. A. P. MARSDEN announces cheap editions of the two following novels:—Mr. W. Carlton Dawe's Golden Lake, illustrated by Mr. Hume Nisbet; and Mr. C. C. Fernival's The Fascinating Miss Lamarche.

MR. GLADSTONE has conferred a pension of £150 on the Civil List upon the Rev. Wentworth Webster, as "a gift of honour, not of relief."

THE following have been elected by the committee as members of the Athenaeum Club:—Sir Robert Stawell Ball, Mr. John MacWhirter, and Dr. J. E. Sandys.

At the meeting of the London Ethical Society, to be held at Essex Hall, Strand, on Sunday next, February 25, at 7.30 p.m., Mr. Leslie Stephen will deliver a lecture on "Authors and their Duties."

ON Monday next, Messrs. Sotheby will begin to sell the stock of books of Mr. J. Toovey; and the sale will last altogether for ten days. All classes of literature are represented; but perhaps the special features are county histories, the publications of printing clubs, and sporting books. The gems of the collection undoubtedly are an illuminated MS. of the romance of "Lancelot du Lac," of the fifteenth century, and a copy of the First Folio of Shakspeare, in fairly good condition.

MR. ARTHUR L. HUMPHREYS, of 187, Piccadilly, has reprinted for private circulation Love's Garland, one of the earliest and rarest of those charming collections of posies, which breathe the spirit of the seventeenth century. For good reasons, he has chosen the second edition of 1674, which it happens that Mr. Brown also reprinted as one of the opuscula of the Sette of Odd Volumes. He has prefixed a bibliographical note; but for the history of posies reference must still be made to the lecture delivered a few years ago before the Royal Institution by Sir John Evans, who does not disdain to collect these trifles. Mr. Humphreys has brought out his little book in a style worthy of its contents.

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

THE March number of the New Review will contain an article on "Tennyson," written, from the point of view of an advocatus diaboli, by the late Francis Adams.

NEXT Monday the Star will publish the first of a series of extracts from letters addressed to or written by Shelley. Some of them have never before been printed, while others have appeared only in a partial form.

AMONG the contents of the March number of the English Illustrated Magazine will be: "The Ballad of a Haunted House," by Mr. Andrew Lang; a story of the sea in verse, by Mr. Rennell Rodd; a story by Mr. George Gissing, entitled "Our Mr. Jupp," and "Along the Garonne," by Mr. Stanley J. Weyman.

THE March number of Cassell's Magazine will contain the opening chapters of a new serial story of adventure, entitled "On a Lee Shore." The scene of the story is laid mostly in Australasia, and is illustrated by Mr. W. Hatherell, one of the illustrators of "Picturesque Australasia."

ONE of the features of the March number of the Ludgate Illustrated Magazine will be an article by Mr. Frederick Dolman, entitled "A Prima Donna's Scrap-book." The article, which is illustrated with many portraits and facsimiles, deals with the career of Mme. Marie Roze.

A NEW weekly illustrated journal for young men and women, entitled You and I, is announced for publication on March 1, by Mr. Elliot Stock.

AFTER a short period of suspended animation, Science Gossip will re-appear next month, under the joint editorship of Mr. John T. Carrington and Mr. Edward Step, who have obtained the promise of contributions from several prominent men of science. It will be published in future by Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall & Co.

THERE will also be published on March 1—by the Scientific Press, at 428 The Strand—the first number of a new monthly review, called Scientific Progress, which boldly announces that in no case will its articles be of a popular character. The editor is Prof. J. Bretland Farmer, who will have the assistance of a committee of specialists.

AN illustrated interview with Mr. Thomas Hardy, from the pen of Mr. Frederick Dolman, will appear in the new number of the Young Man.

MR. WILLIAM REEVES will publish on March 1 the first number of a new monthly, called Strings: the Fiddler's Magazine. It is edited by Mr. John Broadhouse, for many years editor of the Musical Standard.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

MR. JOHN WILLIS CLARK, registry of the university and the historian of the university and its colleges, has been appointed by the vice-chancellor to deliver the Rede Lecture at Cambridge this year.

THE discussion in the Senate at Cambridge on the report of the Council on post-graduate study fills nearly six pages in the University Reporter. The scheme in general was warmly approved, especially by the professors. The chief argument against it was the fear of cheapening the degrees and of reducing the income of the university.

It happens that the current number of the University Gazette contains the report of a committee of the Hebdomadal Council at Oxford on the same subject. There are important differences between the two schemes. At Oxford, it is proposed to create two new research degrees, those of M.Sc. and M.Litt, which shall be open (1) to graduates of Oxford without additional residence, and (2) to others (whether graduates of other universities or not) who shall give satisfactory proof of general education and of fitness to enter on a course of special study. From this latter class, residence for three years is required, reducible to two years in the case of those who have already resided for two years in an approved institution. Both classes alike must pursue a line of study or research sanctioned by a committee; and the degree is to be conferred on the certificate of a delegacy, accompanied by a report of the work done by the candidate. Strangers are required to matriculate, and may afterwards proceed to the M.A. degree in the usual course.

AT a meeting of the Ashmolean Society, to be held in the University Museum at Oxford on Monday next, Prof. Silvanus Thompson (whose praenomen is misprinted in the University Gazette) will deliver a lecture on "Magic Mirrors," with illustrations and experiments.

THE report of the Fitzwilliam Museum syndicate at Cambridge records the acquisition during the past year of two musical rarities: the autograph MS. of a Cantata by J.-S. Bach, "Mache dich, mein Geist, bereit," given by Mr. Sedley Taylor; and what is believed to be a unique copy of Glees and Rounds, published about 1770 for the Harmonic Society of Cambridge, given by the Earl of Sandwich. Mr. Pendlebury has also added to his valuable donations of printed music.

APPLICATIONS are invited for two new lectureships at Edinburgh University—in French language and literature and Romance philology, and in German language and literature and Teutonic philology. The stipend offered is £400; and the term of office is five years, subject to renewal.

A COMMITTEE has been formed at Aberdeen, with the Marquis of Huntly, lord rector, as chairman, for instituting a memorial to the late Prof. William Minto. In accordance with the views of his widow, it is proposed that the memorial should take the form of a prize in connexion with the English or the logic class; and, if funds permit, a bust of the professor may be added. The first list of subscriptions amounts to £150.

THE valuable biological library of the late Prof. Alfred Milnes Marshall has been presented by his family to Owens College, Manchester; and it is proposed to invite subscriptions for a memorial fund, to be devoted to the maintenance of the library.

MR. HOLBROOK GASKELL having contributed £1000 to complete the endowment of the chair of botany at Liverpool University College, the council have decided to confer the professorship upon Mr. R. J. Harvey Gibson, who has held the lectureship in botany during the last five years.

THE Oxford Historical Society has just issued to its subscribers for 1893 Volume III. of The Life and Times of Anthony Wood, edited by the Rev. Andrew Clark. This covers the period from 1682 until Wood's death at the end of 1695. It thus includes what is, perhaps, the best known event in Oxford history—the dealings of James II. with Magdalen College. Other incidents recorded are: the foundation of the Ashmolean, the expulsion of John Locke, the burning of Hobbes's Leviathan, the publication of Athenae Oxonienses, and the trouble which it brought on its author. But, on the whole, it must be said that this volume is less generally interesting than its two predecessors. Except in the description of royal visits, there is little continuous narrative, but mere jottings of facts, which are often at second hand and have nothing to do with the university. None the less do we admire the zeal with which the editor has expanded and annotated these 500 pages of trivialities. In 1686, we read that claret has entirely superseded canary sack in London; in 1689, of the planting of the elm trees in Non-ultra Walk, the path that now runs between Keble College and the Parks; in 1692, that a thief was hanged, despite the offer of a maid to marry him on the scaffold. The editor promises a fourth volume, which will contain not only an exhaustive index, but also the original documents in the suit of Clarendon v. Wood.

TRANSLATION.

AN ELEGY OF SIMONIDES.

No earthly thing remaineth in one stay.

Full wise the ancient Chian's word appears,
"Man's generations pass like leaves away";

But seldom men receive it in their ears

And graft it in their hearts; for hope is there,

A native plant within the young man's breast,
And while there blooms youth's much-loved floweret fair,

Light is his thought; his scheming hath no rest;
He looketh not to grow old or to die;

When full of health, he hath no thought of pain;

Child as he is, he doth not well descry

How few short hours of youth and life remain.

So do thou, timely warned, while thou dost live
To thine own soul her share of blessings give.

S. CHEETHAM.

Rechester: Feb. 14, 1894.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

IN the Antiquary for February, Captain J. W. Gambier continues his account of the Guanches, the ancient inhabitants of the Canary Isles. He uses strong language, but not too strong, about the merciless slaughter of these simple and innocent people by the Spaniards. It would seem that, though the men were almost all killed off, the women were spared, for the Guanche type of face still exists on these isles among the cave-dwellers. Two female portraits are given, one of them of a high type of beauty. Mr. Roach le Schoniex gives a good account of the museum in the grounds of the Yorkshire Philosophical Society at York. The place is in itself noteworthy, as it contains what little is left of the great Benedictine Abbey of St. Mary without the Walls, from which a body of earnest and brave men seceded for the purpose of founding the Cistercian Abbey of Fountains. There is no local museum in England which is more carefully kept, or where the objects are more intelligently classified. As was to be anticipated, the York museum is very rich in Roman remains, the greater part of which have been found in the immediate neighbourhood. One of the cases containing Roman objects is very touching. It is occupied by a collection of the toys of Roman children. Among other things, we find a child's whistle and the bottoms of several glass vessels which have been rounded off to be used in some game. There are also several infants' feeding bottles. Among the mediæval antiquities is perhaps the finest mortar of English manufacture in existence. It was cast in 1308 for use in the infirmary of St. Mary's by Brother William de Torthorp. There it probably remained till the fall of the house, after which it must have experienced many vicissitudes. Some of its later wanderings have been traced. It was restored to its old home in 1835. A good engraving of this precious object is given. Among the notes for the month strange news appears from Norwich. Sir Thomas Browne, the author of the Religio Medici, was buried in the church of St. Peter Mancroft in that city in 1682. In 1840 his remains were disturbed, and the skull stolen. It is now preserved in the Norfolk and Norwich Hospital, in a small pathological museum, in companionship with remains of criminals who have been executed in front of the castle.

M. BRUNETIÈRE AT THE ACADEMIE FRANÇAISE.

THE expectations of the distinguished company which met on Thursday last, under the dome of the Institut, to assist at the reception of M. Brunetière, the new Academician, were fully realised.

M. Brunetière's oration was a masterpiece of eloquence and wit, of academical irony and polished epigram. He spoke for over one hour without any apparent effort, in full possession of his subject and his audience, stopping now and again to dwell with slight emphasis on an epigram or a flash of wit, then, after waiting a few seconds until the murmur of applause had subsided, he would resume with easy gesture his argument as naturally as if he were conversing with a chosen few on some familiar subject.

Of his predecessor, M. John Lemoine, he said little:

"Born in London during the 'Cent Jours' of a French father and an English mother, I may observe that there existed in his talent, as in his person, something eminently British. . . . A 'galant homme,' a witty writer, a bold, courageous journalist, who never said but what it pleased him to say, and, when he had said it, retired within his inner self, and said no more."

After a few characteristic remarks on M. Lemoine's career as a journalist, the orator began his expected attack on modern journalism and journalists, whom he described with much wit and irony as a set of self-sufficient ignoramuses.

"A new generation has grown up, whose ardour for indiscretion is only to be equalled by its entire indifference to ideas. Like the orator who did not think when he didn't speak, these young men only think when they are questioning; their victims supply them with 'copy,' to which they add their own inexactitudes. And this is what is termed been well informed."

After this slap at the "interviewers," he proceeded:

"Excuse the rather homely expression—what we expect from the journalist, as his name indicates, is the plat du jour; and we require it to be served hot, or in less culinary and more academical terms, he must catch and seize, as it flies, the transitory and ephemeral, which will perish to-morrow with the occasion that gave it birth—the shifting or relative element of things. This is what we require of the journalist."

The journalists who wrote for the National and the Journal des Débats, under the direction of Armand Carrel and Bertin, were a very different class of men.

"Do you remember the story of Littré's début? For three years—I say three years—the task of that Hellenist, that philosopher, that savant, was to make extracts from foreign papers under the eye of Armand Carrel."

The truth is, that Littré proved himself a very indifferent journalist, notwithstanding his three years' apprenticeship. Again, in those days a journalist had as much time to write his article as he chose to take, while the up-to-date journalist of the present day must "knock off" his Premier Paris as soon as the "special wire" or the telephone has said its last word. Other objections and contradictions might be offered to M. Brunetière's criticisms, and these ought to have been presented by the Comte d'Haussonville in his reply; but such was not the case.

He began by singing the praises of the new-comer, of the Revue des Deux Mondes, and the late M. Buloz. Then he mildly criticised M. Brunetière's application of the theory of evolution and scientific methods to criticism, and, in alluding to his well-known combativeness of character, boldly exclaimed, "Ah! Monsieur, que vous êtes pugnace!" But a passage towards the end of the Comte d'Haussonville's speech, as noble an eulogy of character as could be uttered of any man, must have gone to M. Brunetière's heart. Alluding to the loud applause which greeted the recently elected Academician when he opened his course in the new lecture-hall of the Sorbonne, he said:

"Mais les applaudissements, qui, ce jour là, ont ratifié la choix de l'Académie, avaient une signification plus flatteuse encore. Ils s'adressaient moins à votre leçon, moins surtout à telles déclarations dont votre probité intellectuelle se fait un devoir peut-être excessif, qu'à votre vie entière: moins au conférencier qu'à l'homme lui-même, et, dans un temps où certains succès brillants doivent trop à la camaraderie et au charlatanisme, c'est une chose saine et fortifiante de constater qu, pour arriver comme vous, non seulement la réputation, mais à la popularité, il suffit de quoi? Oh! de bien peu de chose: d'avoir consacré vingt-cinq ans de sa vie à un travail sans relâche; de s'être fait du métier des lettres une conception tellement haute qu'elle soit incompatible, je ne dis pas avec la moindre faiblesse, mais avec la plus légère complaisance, d'avoir placé constamment le souci de la sincérité et de la justice au-dessus de toute préoccupation personnelle; enfin de mettre au service de ces rares qualités un double don qu'il n'est pas fréquent non plus de posséder à un égal degré, celui de l'écrivain et de l'orateur. Voilà, Monsieur, ce que, même dans le Palais de la Vérité, on pourrait dire de vous; et, puisque les deuils répétés qui ont frappé l'Académie m'appellent pour la seconde fois en bien peu de temps à l'honneur de parler en son nom, c'est pour moi une grande et personnelle joie de saluer en vous le modèle achevé, dans notre littérature contemporaine de ce que nos pères appelaient: l'honnête homme."

The current number of the Revue de Paris contains among other interesting articles—such as M. Darmesteter's "La Guerre et la Paix intérieures," a short but exhaustive sketch of French politics from 1871 to 1893; M. M. Paléologue's "L'Amour chez Henri Heine"—some interesting Souvenirs of Ernest Renan, by M. Jules Simon, in which he vindicates Renan's memory from the strictures uttered by M. Chaillemel-Lacour in the course of his recent reception-speech at the Academy.

CECIL NICHOLSON.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BOURALIERE, A. de la. Les Débuts de l'Imprimerie à Poitiers 1479-1515. Paris: Paul. 4 fr.
- BRUNETIERE, Ferd. L'Évolution de la Poésie Lyrique en France au XIX<sup>e</sup> Siècle. Paris: Hachette. 3 fr. 50 c.
- DESSOLLIERS, Félix. Organisation politique de l'Algérie: exposé, critiques et réformes. Paris: Challamel. 5 fr.
- DEVILLE, le Capitaine. Palmyre: souvenirs de voyage et d'histoire. Paris: Plon. 4 fr.
- FONT, Aug. Favart: l'opéra comique et la comédie-vaudeville aux XVII<sup>e</sup> et XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècles. Paris: Fischbacher. 10 fr.
- HAVARD, H. Mierevelt et son gendre. Paris: Lib. de l'Art. 4 fr. 50 c.
- MAUCLAIR, Camille. Eleusis: causeries sur la cité intérieure. Paris: Didier. 3 fr. 50 c.
- MAYER, G. Lussalle als Sozialökonom. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 2 M. 40 Pf.
- MORSE, H. L'Irrigation en Asie Centrale. Paris: Soc. d'éditions scientifiques. 6 fr.
- SAADI'S politische Gedichte, übers. v. F. Rückert. Hrag. v. E. A. Bayer. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 3 M. 60 Pf.
- SOUBIER, A. Le Théâtre en France 1871 à 1892. Paris: Fischbacher. 10 fr.
- SPIERRE, O. v. Die sozial-politischen Ideen Alexander Herzens. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 3 M.

THEOLOGY.

- STRÄTER, H. Die Erlösungslehre des hl. Athanasios. Freiburg-i.-B.: Herder. 3 M.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- BEZOLD, F. v. Ueb. die Anfänge der Selbstbiographie u. ihre Entwicklung im Mittelalter. Erlangen: Blassing. 80 Pf.
- CALMETTES, Fernand. Mémoires du Général Baron Thiebaut. T. II. 1796-1799. Paris: Plon. 7 fr. 50 c.
- DELABOIX, F. Les Procès de sorcellerie au XVII<sup>e</sup> siècle. Paris: Lib. de la Nouvelle Revue. 3 fr. 50 c.
- JORGE, Thomas III. Marquis de Saluces. Paris: Champion. 5 fr.
- MITTELSTONEN aus dem Stadtarchiv v. Köln, fortgesetzt v. J. Hansen. 21. Hft. Köln: Du Mont-Schauberg. 5 M. 60 Pf.
- PIAGET, E. Essai sur l'organisation de la compagnie de Jésus. Paris: Fischbacher. 6 fr.
- PISTOR, M. Das Apothekerwesen in Preussen nach deutschem Reichs- u. preussischem Landesrecht. Berlin: Schoetz. 7 M.
- RODOCANACHI, E. Les Corporations ouvrières à Rome depuis la Chute de l'Empire romain. Paris: Picard. 40 fr.
- SCHOENLANK, B. Sociale Kämpfe vor 300 Jahren. Alt-nürnbergische Studien. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 4 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- ERHARDT, F. Metaphysik. 1. Bd. Erkenntnistheorie. Leipzig: Reideland. 12 M.
- GOMPEZ, Th. Griechische Denker. Eine Geschichte der antiken Philosophie. 2. Lfg. Leipzig: Veit. 2 M.

PHILOLOGY.

- EÖRME, O. Zur Kenntnis des Oberfränkischen im 13. 14. u. 15. Jahrh. Leipzig: Fock. 2 M.
- IGNARD. Livre des privilèges de Manosque, cartulaire municipal latin-provençal (1169-1315). Paris: Champion. 15 fr.
- KLEMM, K. Das Sadvimābrāhmana m. Proben aus Sayānas Kommentar, nebst e. Übersetzung. Prapāthaka I. Gütersloh: Bertelsmann. 2 M. 40 Pf.
- SCHNEIDER, R. Excerptum περί διαλεκτικῶν. E codicibus Baroccianis LXXII. et CIII. bibliothecae Bodleianae ed. R. S. Leipzig: Teubner. 60 Pf.
- SONNEFELD, G. Stilistische u. Wortschatz im Beowulf, ein Beitrag zur Kritik des Epos. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 60 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

COLERIDGE AND OPIUM.

Trinity College, Cambridge: Feb. 20, 1894.

The date of Coleridge's first experience of laudanum must be put at least eight months earlier than the time assigned to it by Mr. Hutchinson (ACADEMY, Feb. 17, p. 143); for, in a letter written by Coleridge on March 12, 1796, to "The reverend Mr Edwards No 26 opposite St Philip's Church Birmingham," he says:

"DEAR EDWARDS

Since I last wrote you, I have been tottering on the edge of madness—my mind overbalanced on the e contra side of Happiness—the repeated blunders of the printer, the forgetfulness and blunders of my associate &c &c abroad, and at home Mrs Coleridge dangerously ill, and expected hourly to miscarry. Such has been my situation for the last fortnight—I have been obliged to take laudanum almost every night."

This letter, with three others addressed to the same correspondent, is in the Library of Trinity College, Cambridge. It is dated "Saturday 12 March 1795"; but the reference to Mrs. Coleridge, and the fact that March 12 was a Saturday in 1796 and not in 1795, show that 1795 is a slip of the pen.

WILLIAM ALDIS WRIGHT.

THE ETYMOLOGY OF SHANKLIN.

East Mount, Shanklin: Feb. 17, 1894.

It has occurred to me some time since to conjecture that the name of the river Coln was one of those words which have a sort of double etymology, the form of the original name being affected by a supposed derivation from another source; and that the first three syllables of the word Camulodunum contained the British name of the river, from which the modern name was a corrupt derivative. This supposition is confirmed by what Sir Herbert Maxwell tells us in his letter (ACADEMY, February 10) of the words Camlan, Camling, and Camalon, as names of brooks or rivers.

I am staying at a place the name of which has not, so far as I know, been satisfactorily explained. I was inclined to derive it from the brook or linn which has formed the well-known "chine." But Sir Herbert Maxwell, in giving the etymology of Cromlin in Antrim (cromgleann), suggests what is probably the true explanation of the last syllable of Shanklin. Will he or some other Celtic scholar supply the origin of the first syllable? The oldest authentic form of the name, so far as I know, is Shentling, so printed by Sir Richard Worsley from a list of knights' fees of the 8th year of Edward I., and Shentleng, so written in a return made to the Bishop of Winchester by the dean of the Isle of Wight in 1305. It is obviously probable that the locality should derive its name from the chine, or ravine, by which it is still principally known, and that this, like other natural objects, should retain its British name.

F. M. NICHOLS.

A THEOMACA.

Feb. 17, 1894.

Has any student of folklore taken into consideration the curious story in the Liber Landavensis of Saint Samson and his encounter with a "theomaca ursuta [sic] et cornuta cum lancea trisulcata per uastas silvas uolitans," who overthrows and half kills the Saint's travelling companion, a young deacon? Adjured to give an account of herself, the hag answers:

"Theomaca sum. Nam parentes mei huc usque preuariatore nobis existeret: et nemo in hac silua remansit, nisi ego de meo genere. Habeo octo sorores & matrem quæ adhuc uiuunt, et in ulteriori silua degunt, et ego marito tradita sum in hac heremo: sed quia mortuus est, recedere dehac silua nequeo."—The Text of the Book of Llan Dŵr. Reproduced by J. Gwenogvryn Evans. Oxford: 1893 (p. 13).

Much early folklore must lurk in the family and matrimonial history of this demon-woman, whose terrible figure recalls that of the Triumphant Death of the Campo Santo. Her inability as a widow to change her place of abode seems especially to require explanation.

E. T.

"ENGELLAND."

London: Feb. 18, 1894.

Allow me to mention that, in the report of my remarks at the Viking Club, there is a misprint in the passage where it is stated that in Germany, to this day, England is still "practically referred to as Engel-land." Instead of "practically" I had said poetically. Thus, in several songs of Freiligrath the name of this Anglo-Saxon land occurs in that form. As, for instance, in the poem on Johanna Kinkel's death:

"Zur Winterszeit in Engelland,
Versprengte Männer, haben
Wir schweigend in den fremden Sand
Die deutsche Frau begraben."

In German folk-speech also—as I have often heard—the word Engelland, in which the name of the Angles is clearly preserved, is still in use. I need scarcely add that, historically speaking, the Angles (as I have shown in the October number of the Scottish Review of last year) appear not only on the Baltic shores, and later on the Rhenish borders, but even as far south as Thuringia—namely, on the upper course of the river Unstrut. The Lex Anglorum et Werinorum, hoc est Thuringorum, is evidence of it. In those Thuringian quarters, not far from Greussen, there are villages called Kirchengel, Westengel, Feldengel, opposite Werningshausen. In these place-names the Engle or Angle folk and the Warings have evidently left their mark.

In the dialect of that district there are curious vestiges of certain peculiarities of English speech: for instance, in the way of forming the participle. People there say: "Er kam rittning" (he came riding). The usual German participle would be "reitend."

KARL BLIND.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- SUNDAY, Feb. 25, 4 p.m. Sunday Lecture: "The Story of St. Simon and of Fourier," by Dr. G. J. Wild.
- 7.45 p.m. Ethical: "Authors and their Duties," by Mr. Leslie Stephen.
- MONDAY, Feb. 26, 5 p.m. London Institution: "The Chemistry of Cleaning," by Prof. Vivian Lewes.
- 8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Greek Reliefs on Pedestals and Thrones," by Mr. A. S. Murray.
- 8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "The Decorative Treatment of Artificial Politure," II., by Mr. Hugh Stannus.
- 8.30 p.m. Geographical: "Exploration on the Upper Mekong," by Mr. H. Warrington Smyth.
- TUESDAY, Feb. 27, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Locomotion and Fixation in Plants and Animals," VII., by Prof. C. Stewart.
- 4 p.m. Colonial Institute: Annual Meeting.
- 8 p.m. Civil Engineers: "The Liverpool Overhead Railway," by Messrs. J. H. Greathead and Francis Fox; "The Electrical Equipment of the Liverpool Overhead Railway," by Mr. Thomas Parker.
- 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Goldsmiths' Work, Past and Present," by Mrs. Philip Newman.
- WEDNESDAY, Feb. 28, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Rainfall Records in the British Isles," by Mr. G. J. Symons.
- THURSDAY, March 1, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Vedānta Philosophy," I., by Prof. Max Müller.
- 8 p.m. London Institution: "Old Traditions and Memories of our own Neighbourhood," by Canon Benham.
- 8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Evolution of Sculpture," I., by Mr. W. B. Richmond.
- 8 p.m. Linnean: "Algalogical Notes from Cumbria: The Origin of the Filamentous Thallus of Dumontia filiformis," by Mr. George Trebner; "Entomostrea and the Surface Film of Water," by Mr. D. J. Scurfield.
- 8 p.m. Chemical: "Aerial Oxidation of Terpenes and Essential Oils," by Mr. C. T. Kengzett.
- 8 p.m. United Service Institution: "The Coast-lands of the North Atlantic," VIII., by Mr. H. J. Mackinder.
- 8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.
- FRIDAY, March 2, 7.30 p.m. Civil Engineers, Students' Meeting: "Efficiency and Economy of Elevators," by Mr. Herbert W. Umney.
- 8 p.m. Philological: "The Accentual Element in Early Latin Verse, with a New Theory of the Saturnian Metre," by Mr. W. M. Lindsay.
- 9 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Theory of the Cochlea and Inner Ear," by Prof. J. G. McKendrick.
- SATURDAY, March 3, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Light," IV., by Lord Rayleigh.

SCIENCE.

RECENT WORKS OF PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

I.

A Treatise on the Mathematical Theory of Elasticity. By A. E. H. Love. Vol. I. and Vol. II. (Cambridge: University Press.) Our space hardly permits of doing more than heartily commending to the trained mathematician this text-book of a very difficult branch of science. Hitherto the only English text-book on elasticity has been Ibbetson's, if we place on one side the brilliant article of Lord Kelvin in the Encyclopaedia Britannica, and the still more important sections devoted to the subject in Thomson and Tait's well-known Treatise on Natural Philosophy. It is needless to say that Mr. Love's work, written years later, goes much farther than these. With historical introductions and ample if not always exhaustive references, it forms an excellent sample of the best type of Cambridge text-book. It has not the originality of Clebsch's volume, nor the crisp clearness and insight of Saint-Venant's works. The amount of original matter in it is comparatively small, the processes adopted are occasionally cumbersome; and once or twice, as in the treatment of the problem of flexure, we come across interpretations which we believe to be erroneous. But the book, as a whole, is good: it shows much careful work and a very wide reading. That it is not intended in the first place for physicists, or technologists, Mr. Love has wisely indicated by the introduction of the word "mathematical." The elastician will probably turn as a test of Mr. Love's work in the first place to the chapters dealing with thin plates. We fear he may come away dissatisfied, but this dissatisfaction should be rather with the present state of elastic science than with the author. The subject is still chaotic at this point, notwithstanding the labours of Lord Rayleigh, Prof. Lamb, Mr. Basset, and Mr. Love himself. We are inclined to believe that, had Mr. Love waited still a few years before the publication of his second volume, he would have found it possible to give a sounder and more connected theory. We have by no means surrendered all hope of a complete solution for thin spherical and cylindrical shells; it appears to us merely a matter of hard, very hard, analysis. Above all, we believe that approximations based on expansions in powers of the displacements may be most erroneous in their results. One good consequence, however, of Mr. Love's publication of more or less tentative theories will undoubtedly be to draw more general attention to the pressing need of further investigation. We only hope that Mr. Love will find himself able, with the advance of elastic theory, to rewrite parts of volume II. in a second edition. Meanwhile he has more than brought up the English literature of elasticity to the level of German and French publications.

An Essay on Newton's Principia. By W. W. Rouse Ball. (Macmillans.) Mr. Ball had entertained the idea of bringing out a critical edition of Newton's Principia, and had prepared historical and explanatory notes with this end in view. No more pious work could possibly be undertaken by a member of Newton's college; no more fitting publication could have been issued by the Cambridge Press; and, in many respects, no better or more sympathetic editor could have been found than Mr. Ball. Unluckily, he tells us that he is unlikely, in the immediate future, to find time to carry out this plan. Our regret is only slightly tempered by the publication of the present essay on the history of the Principia. Surely the University Press and Trinity College might, between them, make it possible for Mr. Ball to carry out his original scheme; and while the collected papers of the moderns are being issued in such splendid editions from Cambridge, a little money and a little time might be devoted to a collected and annotated edition of the works of the greatest mind which Cambridge can lay claim to. What the French have done for Laplace, what the Dutch are doing for Huyghens, and the Italians for Galilei, surely the English ought to do for Newton! Had we a Furnival among the mathematicians, we should not have had to wait so long for a standard edition of Newton's works. The English Government will hardly be induced to do what the French Government has done; but a "Newton Society," assisted, perhaps, by the Cambridge Press, might achieve much. Mr. Ball's little volume shows us that a capable editor for the Principia at least could be found. He has put into small space a very great deal of interesting matter, and his book ought to meet with a wide circulation among lovers of Newton and the Principia. Mr. Ball does not refer in his bibliography to any Italian translation of the Principia, but we believe we have heard of one dating from the eighteenth century; otherwise his bibliographical references appear very complete.

Utility of Quaternions in Physics. By A. McAulay. (Macmillans.) Mr. McAulay begins his preface—"The present publication is an essay that was sent in (December 1887) to compete for the Smith's Prizes at Cambridge"—and then follows, perhaps, as lively an attack upon the Cambridge school of mathematicians as we remember to have read. It is, however, marked by such an obvious, if unconscious, amount of personal bias, by such a silly vulgarity of tone, and by the assumption that all Cambridge mathematicians, Mr. McAulay and Prof. Tait excepted, are block-heads, not to say swine, that we strongly urge the publishers to withdraw the book till a new preface is written. At present it quite destroys the chances that the case, and a very fair case, which Mr. McAulay has made out for the extended study of quaternions will receive a hearing where he most of all wishes it to be heard. There is good matter in Mr. McAulay's text; but as he will repel Cambridge teachers by the tone of his preface, so he will fail to reach their "charges," the "budding Cambridge mathematicians," because his essay, being a Smith's Prize dissertation, presupposes a considerable knowledge of quaternions themselves. By a text-book, giving so much of the elements of quaternions as were needful to follow his physical applications, and written in a more chastened tone, Mr. McAulay would have done more real service to the branch of science which he admires, and of which there are some few quiet and modest cultivators, besides its "prophets," than by his present volume. It is needless to add that the major prophet has taken advantage of this outburst of divine afflatus on the part of the minor prophet to express how exhilarating he finds it, "after toiling through the arid wastes presented to us as wholesome pasture in the writings of Prof. Willard Gibbs, Dr. Oliver Heaviside, and others of a similar complexion." Clannishness and hard hitting are still characteristic Scottish virtues.

A Treatise on the Kinetic Theory of Gases. By H. W. Watson. Second Edition. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.) The first edition of Mr. Watson's book was published in 1876. The present, a revised, much improved, and expanded volume, is issued also in a handier form. The book is, of course, essentially mathematical: it deals almost exclusively with the ideal perfect gas, and supposes that figment of the mathematical mind "perfect elasticity" to exist for the molecules. It seems to us that, till we know more about the internal kinetic energy of molecules and its law of dissipation into the surrounding ether, the kinetic theory of gases must remain where Dr. Watson leaves it, a mathematical exercise rather than a workable physical theory. Dr. Watson keeps clear of physics pretty generally, and even the name of Van der Waals does not appear in his treatise. It lacks a table of contents or an index. Such books, especially when published by a university press, are now very uncommon, and soon the reviewer will feel able to pass them by with the single comment "no index"!

We have received The Elements of Applied Mathematics, including Kinetics, Statics, and Hydrostatics. By C. M. Jessop. (Bell.) A good deal of material is crammed, by aid of small type, into a little book. We find nothing to raise the volume above the general ruck of elementary text-books. Some of the processes—e.g., that on p. 125, to find the centroid of a circular arc—are ridiculously complex for such simple problems.

Of the "Encyklopaedie der Naturwissenschaft," Handbuch der Physik (Breslau, Trewendt), we have received Lieferungen 14 and 15. These contain the conclusion of Dr. Czapski's monograph on optical instruments, which we have noticed in an earlier review; articles on "Dioptrik," by Pulfrich and Straubel; on "Spectralanalyse," by Kayser; "Photometrie," by Brodhun; and "Scintillation," by Exner. Much of this is extremely good, and we congratulate the editor on having at last put different sections into the hands of specialists, rather than continuing to overburden Prof. Auerbach. Dr. Kayser's paper on spectrum analysis may be specially noted as a capital piece of condensed information.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. THEODORE BENT'S DISCOVERIES AT YEHA, NEAR AKSUM.

Weston-super-Mare: Feb. 10, 1894.

I have been reading Prof. Sayce's review of Mr. Theodore Bent's Sacred City of the Ethiopians, which has led me to the Karnak Lists of Thothmes III. In the List of Cush I find a cluster of names which some years ago in my MS. notes I have referred to this part of old Aethiopia. I wish I could give them in hieroglyphs in your column. I have collated Prof. Maspero's corrections, and had intended to publish my notes; but ill-health has prevented.

The place Yeha, where Mr. Bent found so many ancient monuments, is surely No. 42 of the Karnak List. Mariette gives it as spelt with the single reed, the twisted cord, and two eagles. Maspero reads it, however, as the two reeds and two eagles. In my notes I have identified it as "Iaha, near Axum." Mr. Bent identifies this city with "Ave," mentioned by Nonnosus, the ambassador of Justinian; "and the conclusion is confirmed by a fragment of an inscription found on the spot, in which Prof. D. H. Müller reads the words, 'the temple of Awa.'" Now the next name in the Karnak List is spelt with the two reeds, the looped cord which is read as = wa, and the eagle. This would read Iawa or Yawa. But Prof. Maspero strikes out the first reed, and this leaves Awa. It is true that Maspero puts marks of erasure before the first sign. But the name suggests to me a doubt whether Yeha is actually identical with Ave, Awa, or very near to it.

Perhaps this hasty memorandum will lead to the study of the great Southern List of Thothmes III. This part of East Africa is now attracting great attention. I have not been able to keep abreast of the new intelligence, but the elaborate map published by Perthes a few years ago was most useful. While writing this I am greatly grieved to read an announcement of the death of Dr. Dümichen, an illustrious Egyptologist who could have thrown great light on any such questions as these.

HENRY GEORGE TOMKINS.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

At the meeting of the Philological Society, to be held at University College on Friday next, March 2, Mr. W. M. Lindsay, of Jesus College, Oxford, will read a paper entitled, "The Accentual Element in Early Latin Verse, with a New Theory of the Saturnian Metre."

On Thursday next, March 1, Prof. Max Müller will begin a course of three lectures at the Royal Institution, on "The Vedānta Philosophy."

Among the documents in the possession of the Anthropological Institute are a considerable number of MS. vocabularies, in many cases unique in their character. As it has never come within the scope of the Institute to devote a large portion of its Journal to the publication of such material, a fund is being raised by subscription, independently of the Institute, to deal with these documents. The subscription is one guinea, payable in alternate years; and the first vocabulary to be published will be one of the Ipurinā language (Upper Purus River), South America, by the Rev. J. E. R. Polak.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

ARISTOTELIAN.—(Monday, Feb. 5.)

SHADWORTH H. HEDGSON, Esq., president, in the chair.—A paper was read by Mr. W. H. Fairbrother, on "Green and his Critics." The critics dealt with were Prof. Seth in Hegelianism and Personality, and Mr. Balfour's essays in Mind. The thorough self-consistency of Green's philosophical system as a whole was due to the fact that his ethical and political doctrines were the direct logical outcome of his metaphysical teaching. This teaching was in no way borrowed from Kant or Hegel, but the result of an "analysis into the facts of consciousness." Still less could Green be charged with Pantheism, whether metaphysical or theological, or with the petitio principii of a "ready-made ontology." The criticism fell to the ground as both false and irrelevant. It was untrue in its statement of what Green actually taught, and consisted for the most part of what was practically a restatement in slightly different language of Green's own views.—The paper was followed by a discussion.

ELIZABETHAN.—(Wednesday, Feb. 7.)

FREDERICK ROGERS, Esq., in the chair.—Mr. R. Le Gallienne read a paper on "John Cleveland." In the course of his remarks, Mr. Le Gallienne said: the poet whom he brought to the Elizabethan Society's hospitable home for lost poets was once a successful rival of Milton. When Paradise Lost was despised and rejected of men, known but to a few furtive admirers, Mr. Cleveland's poems, orations, epistles, and satires, were the talk of the town, the esteemed of the fashionable booksellers. Alas! that in the race for fame the tortoise must nearly always win; one sighed, of course, for the hare. One could have nothing but congratulations for the tortoise. The hare of Cleveland's reputation speedily ran through many editions, while Milton's tortoise groaned to itself on the bookshelves. To-day, he doubted if a single fashionable bookseller had ever heard the name of the celebrated wit. They might say Cleveland was the King's most loyal and honoured poet, a miracle of wit, a monster of fancy, the town was ablaze with his genius; but, alas, poor shade, his name was no more upon the lips of men. One seemed to see Milton and Cleveland in an emblem grimly playing at see-saw. Milton was down in 1667, and Cleveland was up, glittering in the sunshine of royal favour, with rustling laurels and fallacious rainbows of immortality about his head. To-day—well, there was no need to sadden the poor ghost with the contrast! Milton's address was the Temple of Fame; to find Cleveland they must descend to the charnel-house beneath. If it was unjust for Cleveland to ride so high in 1667, it was unjust also that he should lie so low in 1894. He was not, indeed, a great man like Milton, but he was a sturdy and brilliant figure: a wit, whose satire had bite in it even for to-day; a poet, who had passages that still had such grace "as morning meadows wear"; a rare good fellow as companion, and a manly man, whose loyalty to the cause he considered just had at least contributed its quota to the energising stream of tendency that made for all stalwart dutiful instincts in our blood to-day. If we were loyal in our impulses, it was because John Cleveland, and men like him, were loyal before us. The name of Cleveland, properly spelled Cleiveland, came from the family's original residence in the district of Yorkshire known by that name. In regard to Cleveland's relations with Oliver, Mr. Le Gallienne read his witty and courageous petition "to the Protector after long and vile durance in prison" (which won him his freedom), to give a glimpse of the man and his virile prose. The last and most complete edition of Cleveland's poems was published in 1687. He seemed to have paid the usual penalty for popularity in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries by the corruption of his text. Read by certain modern critics, Cleveland might be speedily buried beneath the mountain of his affectation, his dullness, and his occasional obscenity. Yet, such fresh and fragrant verse as that entitled "Mary's Spikenard," and beginning:

"Shall I presume, without perfume,
My Christ to meet, that is all sweet?
No! I will make most pleasant posies, Catch the breath of unblown roses," make it imperative that we should have a more intimate acquaintance with this poet. There were many pearls to be found if we cared to make the search. Cleveland was above all a poet-pamphleteer; and, consequently, his volume was considerably congested with satires and equibs, and other party verse, which, though it might have value for the historian, had naturally little attraction for the student of poetry. Nevertheless, some of his best satires retained their sting to this day, especially those against the Scotch, which were particularly vitriolic. "The Rebel Scot" was the most famous of these, and with it began Cleveland's great reputation. Cleveland also wrote many spirited lampoons against the Puritans, notably "The hue and cry after Sir John Presbyter." They got glimpses of the other camp, and of the light-hearted courage with which Cleveland bore the privations of his life as a cavalier-soldier, in two poems. He was, however, frequently unintelligible, often silly, and not a little coarse. Scattered about his book were several rousing drinking songs, which were, perhaps, a little too frank for this reticent age. For a masterly piece of criticism in verse, we could point to his stately epitaph on Ben Jonson:

"The Muses' fairest light in no dark time,
The wonder of a learned age, the line
Which none could pass, the most proportioned wit
To nature, the best judge of what was fit,
The deepest, plainest, highest, clearest pen,
The voice most eched by consenting men,
The soul which answered best to all well said
By others, and which most requital made,
Tuned to the highest key of ancient Rome,
Returning all his music with his own.

"Here lies Ben Jonson, every age will look With sorrow here, and wonder on his book."

To live by an epitaph was a somewhat melancholy paradox, but—may we not all some day be in like case. In conclusion, Mr. Le Gallienne said that Cleveland might have soared very high as a lyrical poet, had he not been so preoccupied with the politics of his day. If, on further acquaintance, they found Cleveland a bore, there was at least this to be said in his favour, that he had written his last line.—A discussion followed, which was opened by the chairman, and continued by Mr. A. C. Hayward, Mr. J. A. Jenkinson, Mr. J. E. Baker, and Mr. Le Gallienne.

FINE ART.

James and William Tassie. With a Catalogue of their Portrait Medallions. By John M. Gray. (Edinburgh: Patterson.)

THE curator of the Scottish National Portrait Gallery has here fulfilled, with all the care that characterises him, a task most proper to his office. The artists Tassie, who are the subjects of his latest and most elaborate study, deserve to be more systematically known than they have been hitherto; and if the younger, by his work, hardly merits that fulness of notice which may most justly be bestowed upon the elder and more original, it may likewise be answered that the careers of the two men and the fortunes and history of their works are of necessity inextricably mixed, and, further, that the younger man, having much of the simple charm of character which distinguished the elder, one would only unwillingly have discovered that the record of his days and his achievements had been abridged. Besides, as it is, the biographical and critical portion of the volume now consecrated to their fame does not exceed seventy pages: ten times that quantity of matter (if "matter" indeed we are to call it) is over and over again bestowed, in the course of one publishing season, upon the memoir of the unimportant and the reminiscences of the third-rate celebrity.

Not only were the Tassies very delightful people, each one in his own way, but their work—much of it done south of the Tweed, nay in London itself—is of real and permanent importance. On the east side of Leicester-square stands, two or three doors from the Alhambra Theatre, a restaurant which, I am informed, has for years had a vogue—the Hôtel Cavour—and on the site of it, a hundred years ago, was what one may most accurately describe as the "shop" of the Tassies. From that establishment proceeded their small portrait medallions of many eminent and many unimportant people—Mr. Gray has been enabled to catalogue nearly five hundred—and those reproductions of ancient gems, and of the gems wrought by certain very able men of the seventeenth century under the impulse of a classical revival, which, for us in the South at least, quite as much as their portraits, are the justification of the Tassies' fame. James Tassie's paste—who shall in his turn discover and command the secret of it! For seal—or brooch, we may suppose, or finger-ring—how hard, how durable, and in colour, how fine!

I could wish, personally, that Mr. Gray had found it in his heart to say more concerning these things. The number of them is extraordinary; and yet they have somehow been for the most part absorbed, so that that which is supposed to be the immortal delight of scarcity is again, after long years, belonging to them. The Empress Catherine, in the lifetime of James Tassie, ordered and obtained a whole collection of them. A generation ago, such of them as were about, were selling for almost nothing. To-day they are again sought for—are likely to be appreciated almost as much, and, in mere money value, to be rated much more highly, than they were in the beginning of our century. A "Tassie boom"—just as there was a boom in Renaissance medals, two or three years ago—is that, one wonders, about to be helped and heralded? Very likely. And in that case recourse will have to be had, not to Mr. Gray only—who is concerned, as I have remarked, most especially and most learnedly with the portraits—but likewise to the Descriptive Catalogue of that valued antiquary Raspe, who, in these matters and many besides them, was the Empress Catherine's adviser. His is the great record of the gems. The humbler collector, bent upon acquisitions of this nature, will have the support of at least Shelley's approval. "Get me"—wrote Shelley, in 1822, to his friend Mr. Peacock, the novelist—"get me two pounds worth of Tassie's gems, the prettiest, according to your taste."

A few agreeable illustrations in the present volume afford to an outsider, such as myself, some opportunity of judging of the portraits; some of the gems it had already been my good fortune to handle and be charmed with. The portraits have all the appearance of being of an exceeding directness. James Tassie was clearly a qualified and unaffected recorder of every age, and of either sex, and of most various character. It is hard to say whether the "David Dale"—a philanthropist, whose features have been further published in an unsigned stipple print—or the "Mrs. Jean Adam," an elderly woman, piquante and alert, or the "Lady Anne de Poelnitz," youngish and plump, or the "Adam Smith," cautious and meditative, or the "Rudolph Eric Raspe," the born connoisseur, or the "Robert Foulis," the great printer and art-patron, is the finest portrait. Nothing, certainly, is finer than the last: nothing is more sympathetic; and Foulis was a man whose nature such an one as James Tassie would assuredly entirely fathom. Only one who has himself known something of the difficulties of the cataloguer—a labourer whose work is done chiefly con amore, but is yet arduous and often baffling—can understand the measure of research which Mr. Gray's volume, as a whole, has involved; but all may appreciate the succinctness and the careful neat simplicity with which he has laid before us the essential facts of his subject.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

LETTER FROM EGYPT.

Mehendi: Feb. 5, 1894.

SINCE I last wrote we have been very busy, and are carrying back with us a large store of archaeological facts and inscriptions. After leaving Abu-Simbel, we spent a day in the temple of Hor-m-hib or Armais at Gebel Addeh; and on the cliff a little to the south of it I discovered a graffito, which referred to the temple as being in "the country of Bak." In Bak I would see the classical Aboccis, rather than in Abshek, with which it is usually identified. The inscriptions I have copied, moreover, go to show that Amon-heri, and not Abshek, was the name of the city built by Ramses II. at Abu-Simbel. North of Gebel Addeh and behind the village of Ferég are several rock-tombs, none of which, however, have inscriptions; but on a cliff above the high-road I found the cartouche of Ramses II.

Between Gebel Addeh and a conical hill to the south called Gebel esh-Sheuns in Arabic, Mashakit or Mashal-kit "Sun-rock" in Nubian, is another conical hill, on the western slope of which is a speos first described by Champollion. I was able to correct and materially increase the number of the inscriptions he copied in it, though unfortunately the cartouche of the king contained in them is so much destroyed as to make it impossible for me to say with certainty to whom it belonged. All that is clear is that it is not the cartouche of Ramses II., as given by the great French scholar. What remains resembles the name of Hor-m-hib.

Among Champollion's papers were found copies of sculptures and inscriptions from an unnamed monument. As they were upon the sheets which related to Mashakit, it has been supposed that the monument in question exists in that locality. Such, however, is not the case. We carefully explored the whole neighbourhood; and with the exception of the speos, the only relic of antiquity we could discover was a line of hieratic upon a fragment of rock. Where the monument can be I cannot imagine, as I have seen nothing which bears any resemblance to Champollion's copies.

Faras, south of Mashakit, but on the opposite bank, stands on the site of a Roman town. The remains of a Coptic church still exist there; and in the walls of its old Saracenic fortress I found stones sculptured with hieroglyphs, as well as portions of the uraeus-frieze of an Egyptian temple. At some distance from the river are three tombs of an early period excavated in a low sandstone hill; the central one has been turned into a Coptic church, and the walls are covered with early Coptic inscriptions. Prof. Mahaffy and myself spent a couple of days in copying them. One of them is dated "the 8th day of Khoiak, the 10th (year) of the Indiction of Diocletian." Most of them are written in red paint, and have the form of pagan proskynēmata. South of Faras is a tomb of the age of Ramses II., near which I found a graffito dated in the 17th year of an unnamed king.

After leaving Faras we visited the ruined temple of Serra, which Capt. Lyons has been excavating. I copied all the inscriptions that are visible, including the cartouches of the Cushite countries conquered by Ramses II., by whom the temple was built. On the north side of the entrance is a row of cartouches of the Asiatic countries he claims to have subdued. One of the texts states that the place was called User-Mā-Ra Ser-Shefi.

The excavations of Col. Halkett Smith, and more especially of Capt. Lyons, have made Wadi Helfa an interesting place to the archaeologist. The two temples of Usertesen I. and Thothmes III. have been cleared of the sand in which they were buried, and highly interesting they prove to be. In that of Thothmes III. we found several Karian graffiti and a few Greek ones. The Greek texts, however, belong to the Ptolemaic age, with the exception of one half-obliterated inscription which I discovered the day before our departure from Wadi Helfa, and which is proved, by the forms of the letters, to go back to the age of the famous inscriptions of Abu-Simbel. One of the Karian graffiti is of considerable length, and the number of them suggests that at one time a body of Karian mercenaries was encamped on the spot. The walls and columns of the forecourt of the temple also contain numerous proskynēmata of a much earlier epoch. One of them is dated in the sixth year of Si-Ptah, the last king of the XVIIth Dynasty; in another, dated in the third year of the same king, the writer, Hora, calls himself "the son of the deceased Kam", of the harem of the palace of Seti II.; while the author of a third is described as an ambassador of Si-Ptah to Khal or Northern Syria and Cush.

Immediately behind the temples Capt. Lyons has discovered a remarkable ditch of fortification cut by the Pharaohs through the rock, and once strengthened on either side by a wall. Behind the ditch is the necropolis of the ancient city, consisting of rectangular tombs cut deep in the rock, with a sloping passage at the bottom of each of them, which leads into the sepulchral chamber. One of them was opened in our presence, but proved to have been rifled centuries ago. Above the tombs rises a conical hill, on the rocks of which Capt. Lyons discovered hieroglyphic and hieratic graffiti. These I copied, and found most of them to be records of visits paid to the place by Mentu-hoteps and Antefs in the time of the XIth or XIIth Dynasty.

While we were at Wadi Helfa we made an excursion to the great Egyptian fortress of Matuga, about three miles to the south of Abusir, which was first discovered by Capt. Lyons, who has excavated a little temple or chapel in the south-western part of the enclosure. The inscriptions he found in it show that the place was named Ba, and that the fortress had been built by Usertesen III. The fortress is a very large one, defended on three sides by two walls of enormous thickness, the natural cliff serving for its protection on the eastern side. On a large island opposite to it, in the middle of the Cataract, are the remains of another similar fortress; while on a second island, a little to the south, are the ruins of a Coptic church called Darbē. On the north side of the fortress is the site of an old city; and below it, close to the river, are brick tombs, which do not seem to have been disturbed.

After leaving Wadi Helfa on our downward voyage, we first visited three ruined Coptic churches on the western bank, without, however, finding anything to reward us. Then we explored a ruined town opposite Serra. Here we found five rock-tombs on the south, the remains of an ancient quay, walls of fortification of the Roman age, and three Coptic churches—one in the town and two outside it, one of the latter being to the south and the other to the north of the walls. Close to the last are quarries of the Egyptian period.

Opposite Faras is another Coptic ruin, which again yielded nothing to our archaeological curiosity; but we were more fortunate at Ermennah (on the eastern bank), where I had noticed a tomb in the rock when we came up the river. On the rocks behind the village I found the name of Hor-m-hib. The tomb turned out to be of the same character as those of Wadi Helfa; but just below it were two niches for figures cut in the rock, with steps leading to them. At a little distance to the north of this, and at an angle of the cliff, I discovered a large and well-preserved stele, dedicated to Horus of Ma-nefer by a "governor of Nubia," who lived in the time of the XIXth Dynasty.

On the western bank, opposite Ermennah, is the site of what must have been a very large town. While wandering over it, I picked up a fine diorite axe. Capt. Lyons has found a similar one at Matuga.

We spent a day and a half at Qasr Ibrim, and discovered a large stele, containing fifteen lines of hieroglyphs, on the western face of the hill immediately to the south of the old fortress. I copied the text with the help of a glass, and found that it was a record of the conquest of the Nubians and Negroes by Seti II., as well as of the terms imposed upon them. The cartouches, however, which are twice repeated and very clear, are exceedingly puzzling; since while the first is that of Seti II., the second is, with a slight variation, that of the rival king Amon-meses. The fact gives a new complexion to an obscure portion of Egyptian history. Above the text the Pharaoh is represented in the act of slaying an enemy, while his empty chariot is being borne away from him by a couple of horses. On the right hand side of the inscription Amen-m-apt, "the royal son of Kush," offers a song of praise to his victorious lord.

Close to the stele Prof. Mahaffy found a Karian graffito, and there are a good many Coptic inscriptions scratched on the rocks. To the north are ancient pottery kilns, where one of our sailors picked up a Coptic ostrakon when we were ascending the river. The summit of the hill to the east of the fortress is covered with brick tombs, and the remains of an old town lie on the northern slope of the mountain on which it stands. At the north-western corner of the mountain I found a somewhat enigmatical inscription in Greek letters.

After Qasr Ibrim our next visit was to the interesting speos of Thothmes III. in the district of Dagenosra, to the south of the village of Ellesiyeh. Lepsius has published the inscriptions belonging to it. There is a tomb near it, with the cow of Hathor sculptured on either side of the entrance. The old Roman fortress I have described in my last letter lies on the opposite side of the Nile a little to the north of Ellesiyeh; we visited it again on our way down, and found that a town of considerable size had once existed to the south of it. We picked up Roman pottery and blue porcelain on its site.

Next we passed a morning at Dirr. To the south of the speos of Ramses II. I came across a large tomb, without inscriptions, however, and to the north of the speos a series of monuments, the first of which—a stele of Amen-m-ahib—is already known. North of this there are a good many hieroglyphic and hieratic graffiti on the cliffs, as well as two curious monuments which deserve a special description. One of these is a stele, the centre of which is occupied by two sitting animals, which look like pug-dogs set face to face; on either side is a hieroglyphic inscription, from which we learn that the author's name was Anup-a. The other monument is the most northerly of those we met with. On a rock is a long and well-preserved hieratic text, which records the name and titles of a certain "superintendent of the treasury." Immediately in front of this is a niche, in which an image once stood. The niche is now filled with bowls and offerings of wheat or durra, which I was told were given to "the Sheikh Isû," who expected that I also should not quit the spot without a suitable "bakshish." It is evident, therefore, that when paganism was superseded by Christianity the old pagan image became an image of Christ, and that upon the triumph of Islam, though the image was destroyed, the ancient cult still continued to survive. It is an instructive instance of the continuity of religious practices, if not beliefs, in the valley of the Nile.

This afternoon we explored the ruins of the fortified Coptic city of Mehendi. In the centre of it is a Coptic church, which Lepsius (in his Briefe) has mistaken for the residence of a Roman governor. The foundations of the southern gate are of Roman construction, but some of the stones have been taken from an Egyptian temple, which the sculptures upon them show to have been of a good period. Possibly they belonged to the old temple of Thoth at Penebs, the Hiera Sykaminos of the Greeks, since the temple of Maharraqa, which now exists on the site, is of late Roman workmanship. Maharraqa is only two miles to the north of Mehendi. On the rocky cliff at the south-eastern corner of the latter place I found some drawings, of Christian origin but spirited design. Among them are the dove with an olive branch in its mouth, the Good Shepherd, and a large crux ansata, the ancient Egyptian symbol of life, employed in place of a cross. A. H. SAYCE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MESSRS. BOUSSOD, VALADON & Co. will open next week, at the Goupil Gallery, in Regent-street, an exhibition of paintings by Mr. P. Wilson Steer.

At the annual meeting of the Royal Scottish Society of Painters in Water-Colours, it was decided that the lady members should in future be admitted to the meetings, and also be eligible as office-bearers.

The following works by English artists have recently been added to the Luxembourg: "Love and Life," by Mr. G. F. Watts, a small painting by the late Edward Calvert, two drawings by Sir F. Leighton, and some designs by Sir E. Burne Jones.

THE annual report of the director of the National Gallery records the following list of acquisitions during the past year:—Purchased out of a parliamentary grant: "Soldiers Quarrelling over their Booty," and "Players at Tric-Trac," by Willem Cornelisz Duyster; "View on the Shore at Scheveningen," by Jacob van Ruysdael; "Portraits of Mr. and Mrs. W. Lindow," by George Romney. Purchased out of the Clarke Bequest: "Beatrix Knighting Esmond," by Augustus L. Egg; "The Cast Shoe," by George Mason; "Chilston-lane, Torquay," by George Barrell Willcock. Bequests and donations: Bequeathed by Colonel Alexander B. Read, "A View in Hampshire," by Patrick Nasmyth; bequeathed by Mr. Charles H. Bellenden Ker, "Portrait of Mrs. Bellenden Ker," by Sir Charles L. Eastlake; presented by Mr. William Agnew, "The Harbour of Refuge," by Frederick Walker; presented by Mrs. J. Z. Bell, "Cardinal Bouchier urging the Widow of Edward IV. to let her Son out of Sanctuary," by John Zephaniah Bell; presented by Mrs. Tarratt, "A Mediterranean Seaport," by Claude Joseph Vernet; presented by a body of subscribers, "Christ Washing St. Peter's Feet," by Ford Madox Brown.

THE last number of L'Anthropologie (Paris: Masson) contains a long article—which is only the first of a series—by M. Salomon Reinach, entitled "Le Mirage Oriental." It represents the furthest swing of the pendulum, in the reaction which has been making itself felt during the last dozen years, against the extreme view that would find the sources of all civilisation in the East. After expressing his agreement with Pictet's theory of a European origin for the Aryan group of languages, with Halévy's theory of an Aramaean origin for Indian writing, and, with Darmesteter's theory of a late date for the Avesta, M. Reinach proceeds to his main argument, which is to refute the opinions of Bertrand and de Mortillet, that the pre-historic civilisations of Western Europe are due to Oriental influence. Reversing the common view, he even goes so far as to maintain that, wherever and whenever bronze, and therefore tin, is found, it must have come from the Cassiterides or Celtic Islands of the West. In a subsequent paper he promises to deal with the Mycenaean or Aegaeon civilisation.

THE STAGE.

WHEN that refined and sympathetic actress, Eleonora Duse, comes to England—as notwithstanding certain reports about her health, she is likely to do before long—she will afford to Mr. Alexander's theatre the advertisement of playing in a translation of one of his productions. The piece selected is, of course, that "Second Mrs. Tanqueray," to whose conspicuous merits justice was, we hope, done in the ACADEMY directly it was produced. No one doubts the power of the piece; all that is to be questioned is its pleasantness. It is, hy-the-by, being played at this moment at the

WILLIAMS & NORGATE'S NEW BOOKS.

Now ready, price 1s.

A SYSTEM of LUCID SHORTHAND.

DAISED BY

WILLIAM GEORGE SPENCER.

With a Prefatory Note by HERBERT SPENCER.

Just published, price 1s.

A REJOINDER to PROFESSOR WEISMANN. By HERBERT SPENCER.

Also recently published, price 1s.

THE INADEQUACY of NATURAL SELECTION. By the SAME AUTHOR.

SECOND AND GREATLY ENLARGED EDITION.

AGAINST DOGMA and FREEWILL,

and for WEISMANNISM. By H. CROFT HILLER. Demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. Containing, inter alia, beyond the Original Text, a Concise Statement of Weismann's Theory, a Controversy on its Application to Sociology, and an Examination of the Recent Criticism of Professor Romanes.

"An ally reasoned contribution to the literature of thought."—Scotsman.

THEOLOGICAL TRANSLATION LIBRARY.

Edited by the Rev. T. K. CHEYNE, M.A., D.D., Oriel Professor of Interpretation, Oxford, and Canon of Rochester, and

The Rev. A. B. BRUCE, D.D., Professor of Apologetics, Free Church College, Glasgow.

Vol. I. now ready.

THE APOSTOLIC AGE. By Carl

WEIZSÄCKER. Translated by JAMES MILLAR, B.D. Vol. I. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

"The volume is very readable and very interesting, the author's thoughts being simply and clearly expressed, and the learning which it implies having been made so thoroughly his own, that he does not need to oppress his readers with whole libraries formally introduced in notes and references."—Scotsman.

* * * The Second and Concluding Volume is in preparation.

Third and Concluding Volumes now ready.

ORIGINAL NOTES on the BOOK of

PROVERBS, mostly from Eastern Writings. By the Rev. S. C. MALAN, D.D., late Vicar of Broadwindsor, Dorset. Vol. III., Chaps. 21-31. Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s.

Vols. I. and II. may also be had, price 12s. each.

Crown 8vo, half-vellum, paper sides, price 5s.

CENTENARY HISTORY of the SOUTH

PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY. By MONCURE D. CONWAY. With numerous Portraits, a Facsimile of the Original Autograph MS. of the well-known Hymn, "Nearer, my God, to Thee," and Appendix containing an Original Poem by Mrs. ADAMS (1836), and an Address by WILLIAM JOHNSON FOX (1842).

"In this volume Mr. Moncure D. Conway tells, and tells most effectively, the story of one of the most remarkable religious societies in London or out of it."—Daily Chronicle.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 4s. 6d.

THE LIFE of the Rev. RODOLPH

SUFFIELD, Author of "The Crown of Jesus." With an Account of his Abandonment of the Roman Catholic Faith, and Extracts from his Correspondence, chiefly with Dr. Martineau.

"It would be difficult to exaggerate the fascination of the mystery and pathos of the life of such a man, of whom his friend Mr. Gladstone writes: 'He was to me a very interesting person.'"—Guardian.

Demy 8vo, cloth, price 3s.

THE HIPPOLYTOS of EURIPIDES.

Now first translated into English in its Original and Identical Metres, with Stage Directions suggesting how it may have been performed; also with Preface and Notes. By H. B. L., Author of a Translation of the "Ion."

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 18s.

ERMAN'S EGYPTIAN GRAMMAR.

Translated under Professor ERMANN'S supervision. By J. H. BREASTED, Professor of Egyptology in the University of Chicago.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London; and Edinburgh.

A REMARKABLE NOVEL.

"Uncommonly well worth reading."

NATIONAL OBSERVER.

A SUPERFLUOUS WOMAN.

IN THREE VOLUMES.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"A novel upon which has been expended an infinity of thought, and the pages of which betray a capacity for the analysis of human feelings and emotions rarely to be met with."

A SUPERFLUOUS WOMAN.

IN THREE VOLUMES.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"There is much strong and some pathetic writing in 'A Superfluous Woman,' and we dare say it will be proclaimed a remarkable book. It shows power and imagination in no small degree."

A SUPERFLUOUS WOMAN.

IN THREE VOLUMES.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

REVIEW OF REVIEWS.—"The anonymous author presents a primal passion, unencumbered of the trappings of shame and habit, with a simplicity and directness unequalled in recent English fiction. ....In short, 'A Superfluous Woman' is a clever book and a useful. Whether it will attain the success of 'The Heavenly Twins' is yet to be seen, but the good that it will do will be much on the same lines."

A SUPERFLUOUS WOMAN.

IN THREE VOLUMES.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

STANDARD.—"A love-story that is a very remarkable piece of writing, told with real power and beauty. ....The author is full of undisciplined power; she has poetry and passion and courage, and, unless we are mistaken, has a future before her. The last two or three pages of her book lift it into a poem."

A SUPERFLUOUS WOMAN.

IN THREE VOLUMES.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"A Superfluous Woman' is a bold work. We are very much afraid that 'the young person' will not be allowed to read it. If so, we sincerely hope that she will do so without permission; for though it may not be the best novel of the season, it is amongst those best worth reading."

A SUPERFLUOUS WOMAN.

IN THREE VOLUMES.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

SCOTTISH LEADER.—"Most powerfully drawn."

LONDON:

WM. HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

St. James's with much the same cast as when it first was produced: Mr. Alexander very capable, Mrs. Patrick Campbell at once astonishing, vigorous, and subtle, Miss Maude Millett wholly delightful and refined, with a most delicate grace of nature as well as of art, and Mr. Esmond, an astonishingly young actor for so important a part, now filling really admirably the rôle originally played with so incisive a touch by a great favourite of our own, we will admit, Mr. Cyril Maude. To make an end of this parenthesis, and to get back to Signora Duse, it is not, it cannot, we think, be wise of her (save as showing that she is capable of a tour de force) to present an Italian version of this now long-accepted, much-praised, and much-criticised play. The piece, alike in the persons whom it presents, and in the prejudices to which it appeals or which it sweeps aside, is thoroughly English; and, however skilfully Signora Duse may comport herself, it can scarcely be anything less than grotesque to see the impersonation of English gentlepeople and of English cads (and there are some of both in the piece) by a hack Italian company. Fortunately the actress does the thing, we may presume, rather to show her versatility than to draw audiences in chief by this performance.

We are delighted to gather that that progress in pantomime which we noted last year at the Olympic and this year at the Lyceum has spread into the country, or at all events into those places in the country which the town most influences and most affects. The truth is that, as society and the well-behaved bourgeois now go without reserve to the music hall, there is found to be less and less attraction in the process of bringing the music hall to the theatre. Thus the pantomime regains, or tends to regain, its proper place; it is again a vehicle for song and dance and quaint old-world story, rather than of grotesque antic. At Brighton the performance of "Aladdin" points our moral. We have generally made a point of seeing the Brighton pantomime, not always with unqualified approval. This year it is charming, and it is particularly charming in one feature in which the Lyceum is not strong—we mean, the dance. The vivacity, the extremely youthful good spirits of Miss Gracie Leigh—who, if she does not work too hard, will have a future—are admirable. She sings most pleasantly that now well-nigh classic strain of "Linger longer, Loo!" But how well she dances! And then there is a Margaret Fraser too, who sways about, or "foots it trippingly" in ample, noble robe of blue upon black. Her performance is really quite distinguished. And much besides is charming, and nothing vulgar. We only trust that this Brighton performance is a fair sample of what is done elsewhere.

MUSIC.*RECENT CONCERTS.

THE second concert recital of "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci" was held at the Queen's Hall last Saturday afternoon, and again the music minus the drama attracted a large audience. The performances were good, and the choral singing better than on the first occasion. The Misses Ella Russell, Greta Williams, and Grace Damian, and Messrs. Oudin, Lloyd, and Clarke all acquitted themselves well. Mr. Lawrence Kelly, who appeared in place of Mr. Braxton Smith, deserves favourable mention, and Mr. A. Appleby, who sang for Mr. A. Oswald, has an excellent voice. The success of the undertaking will lead to the performance of other operas in the same form. In the case of quite modern works the music is only one of the several factors, but many operas have been written in which it forms the chief element; and this scheme of concert recitals of operas might be made the means of rescuing much good music from ill-deserved oblivion.

On Saturday evening, Mr. E. Prout's Quartet in B flat, for strings (Op. 15, No. 2), was performed at the North-East London Institute and School of Music. The work was written many years ago, and yet we believe that it had not before been heard in London. Clearness of form and clever workmanship are the prevailing features. The thematic material is of pleasing character, its developments, indeed, are modelled on classic rather than on modern lines, and perhaps would be called by some old-fashioned. But old fashions are frequently better than new, and it is certainly safer, and more satisfactory, to be guided by the old masters than to attempt to copy their successors, whose bold ventures are for admiration rather than imitation. A copy, more or less skilful, of the mannerisms of modern composers may deceive the public for a time, and cause them to think that deep which is only superficial; Mozart and Beethoven are more solid guides than Schumann and Brahms. The work was well performed by Messrs. Ortmanns, Mistowski, Addison, and Van der Straeten.

Herr Joachim played two pieces of his own composition at the last Monday Popular Concert. They are entitled "Abendglocken" and "Ballade," and are taken from his set of pieces for violin and pianoforte (Op. 5). They are both interesting, and, as one would expect, most effectively written for the solo instrument; and, moreover, they were admirably performed. Mlle. Ilona Eibenschütz played three movements from a Moszkowsky Suite for pianoforte (Op. 50). The music is undeniably effective: old forms and old phraseology are cleverly combined with showy modern effects. Miss Eibenschütz's performance was sound and brilliant. The programme included Brahms's Trio in E flat (Op. 40), for pianoforte, violin, and horn. On this occasion the horn part was assigned to a violoncello. It was, of course, admirably rendered by Signor Piatti, but we think the music loses by the change; the soft tones of the horn produce a peculiarly tender and, at times, mysterious effect. Miss Gwladys Wood, as the vocalist, was most successful.

A concert was given at the Imperial Institute on Wednesday evening by the students of the Royal Academy. The programme opened with a very mild Serenade for strings by Fuchs, fairly well performed under the direction of M. Emile Sauret; the various instruments were not evenly balanced. Two movements from a Concertante for clarinet and pianoforte by Weber, served to show the composer at his weakest. Two part-songs, for female choir, were interesting. The first, a "Salve Regina," really for solo voice and chorus, contains some serious and most effective writing. An "Ave Maria," by De Swert, with cello obbligato, is pleasing, but of lighter character. Both pieces were given under the careful direction of Dr. Mackenzie. The programme included two movements from Lalo's violin Concerto in G minor, two pianoforte solos, and various songs.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO

THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

HODDER & STOUGHTON'S PUBLICATIONS.

SECOND EDITION, with Illustrations, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s., elegantly bound.
THE BRONTES in IRELAND; or, Truth Stranger than Fiction. By Dr. WILLIAM WRIGHT.
 "The most interesting book about the Brontës since Mrs. Gaskell's biography."—Academy.
 "His book is full of most interesting and curious matter."—Daily News.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
BOGLAND STUDIES. By Jane Barlow.
 "Her notable little book."—British Weekly.

By the SAME AUTHOR.
 FOURTH EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
IRISH IDYLLS.
 "There are passages of much promise in 'Irish Idylls' as any to be found in 'Scenes of Clerical Life.'"—Truth.

8vo, cloth, 12s.
LITERARY RECOLLECTIONS and SKETCHES.
 By FRANCIS ESPINASSE.

"This is a most delightful book, and, what is more, a literary book. Mr. Espinasse's book may defy criticism. It is good from beginning to end."—Speaker.

MR. J. M. BARRIE'S WORKS.

Buckram, gilt top, 6s. each.

1. A WINDOW in THRUMS. 12th Edition.
2. AULD LICHT IDYLLS. 9th Edition.
3. MY LADY NICOTINE. 6th Edition.
4. WHEN a MAN'S SINGLE. 8th Edition.

Twenty-ninth Thousand, with Map and Illustrations, 3s. 6d.

TROPICAL AFRICA.

By Prof. HENRY DRUMMOND, F.R.S.E., F.G.S.

"It is a charmingly written book... Prof. Drummond has not indicted the entire contents of his note-books upon a long-suffering public; he has been content, with valuable and suggestive results, to compress the sum of his observations into a few well-weighed and well-written pages."—Saturday Review.

By the SAME AUTHOR.

Paper covers, 1s.

1. NYASSALAND. Travel Sketches in our New Protectorate, Selected from "Tropical Africa."

THIRTEENTH EDITION, completing 114,000, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

2. NATURAL LAW in the SPIRITUAL WORLD.

THIRD EDITION, with Maps and Illustrations, 8vo, cloth, 12s.

THE CHURCH IN THE ROMAN EMPIRE BEFORE A.D. 170.

By W. M. RAMSAY, M.A.,

Professor of Humanity in the University of Aberdeen.

"The whole volume is full of freshness and originality."—Prof. SANDAY in the Expositor.
 "This volume is the most important contribution to the study of early Church history which has been published in this country since the great work of Bishop Lightfoot on the Apostolic fathers. It is, too, unless our memory fails us, without a rival in any foreign country.... Abke in its methods and conclusions its value is unique."—Guardian.

Elegantly bound, gilt top, 6s.

SCOTLAND YESTERDAY—SOME OLD FRIENDS.

By WILLIAM WALLACE.

"Keen portraiture, touches of pathos and of humour.... Accurate perception and long familiarity are perceptible on every page."—Academy.

THE EXPOSITOR.

Contents for MARCH. Price 1s.

- THE RIGHTEOUSNESS of CHRIST'S KINGDOM.
 By Rev. Professor Marcus Dods, D.D.
 ON THE PROPER NAMES in ST. MARK'S GOSPEL.
 By Rev. Arthur Wright, M.A.
 ST. PAUL'S CONCEPTION of CHRISTIANITY. 14. THE FLESH as a HINDRANCE to HOLINESS.
 By Rev. Professor A. B. Bruce, D.D.
 THE NEW TESTAMENT MYSTERIES.
 By Rev. E. Whiteford, M.A., Prebendary of Salisbury Cathedral.
 THE PREMIER IDEAS of JESUS. 8. SIN an ACT of SELF-WILL.
 By Rev. John Watson, M.A., Sefton Park Church, Liverpool.
 M. SABATIER'S LIFE of ST. FRANCIS.
 By Rev. T. H. Darlow, M.A.
 TRACHONITIS and ITUREA.
 By Rev. Professor G. A. Smith, D.D.
 THE SHEPHERD, GOD and MAN.
 By Rev. R. A. Watson, D.D., Dundee.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. A New Volume of the EXPOSITOR'S BIBLE.

THE EPISTLE to the ROMANS. By the Rev. H. C. G. MOULE, M.A., B.D., Principal of Ridley Hall, Cambridge.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

THE SPIRITUAL WORLD. By Alfred Cave, B.A., D.D., Principal of Hackney College, and Author of "The Scriptural Doctrine of Sacrifice and Atonement."

THE THEOLOGICAL EDUCATOR. NEW VOLUME.
 Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE THEOLOGY OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

By WALTER F. ADENEY, M.A.,

Professor of New Testament Introduction, History, and Exegesis, New College, London.

FIFTH EDITION, 8vo, cloth, 12s.

CHRIST IN MODERN THEOLOGY.

By A. M. FAIRBAIRN, D.D., Principal of Mansfield College, Oxford.

"His work is, without doubt, one of the most valuable and comprehensive contributions to theology that has been made during this generation."—Speaker.
 "A more vivid summary of Church history has never been given."—Speaker.

By the SAME AUTHOR.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

RELIGION in HISTORY and in MODERN LIFE; Together with an Essay on the Church and the Working Classes.

SECOND EDITION, handsomely printed and bound, gilt top, 3s. 6d.

THE KEY OF THE GRAVE.

A Book for the Bereaved.

By W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, M.A., LL.D.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

OUTLINES OF THE HISTORY OF DOGMA.

By Dr. ADOLF HARNACK,

Professor of Church History in the University of Berlin.

"It would be impossible here to give any adequate idea of the wealth of matter contained in this extremely valuable book, in which the history of dogma is traced from apostolic times down to the Reformation."—Glasgow Herald.

100,000 Copies. Now ready.

THE WOMAN AT HOME.

FOR MARCH. Price 6d.

CONTENTS.

1. THE DUCHESS of SAXE-COBURG-GOTHA. By M. GRIFFITH. With many Illustrations, including a set of Interiors of Clarence House, specially taken and published for the first time.
2. JOHN RANSOME'S LOVE STORY. By ANNIE S. SWAN. Fully Illustrated.
3. A TRAY of DIAMONDS.
4. WAXWORKS and ALL ABOUT THEM: an Interview with Mr. John Theodore Tussaud. By NORMAN NAGROM. With many Illustrations.
5. BRIDES and BRIDEGROOMS. With Ten Portraits.
6. ORIGINAL FASHION DESIGNS. By MILDRED HARRIS (formerly Designer to Messrs. Liberty).
7. THE END of JOE LEAMAN: an Idyll of Dartmoor. By Rev. S. BARING-GOULD. Fully Illustrated.
8. A ROYAL MUSIC MASTER: an Interview with Signor Tosti. By Baroness VON ZEDLITZ. With many Illustrations.
9. THE MYSTERY of the TIGER'S EYE. (The Children's Mystery.) By HEADON HILL. Illustrated.
10. A REMINISCENCE of MRS. CARLYLE. By FRANCES LYON. With two hitherto unpublished Portraits.
11. A REVELATION. By HILDA NEWMAN. Illustrated.
12. A PAGE of CONFESSIONS. By ANNIE S. SWAN.
13. SUNDAY READINGS. By the DEAN of ARMAUGH.

LIFE AND WORK AT HOME.

14. OVER the TEACUPS. By ANNIE S. SWAN.
15. DRESS and FASHION. Illustrated.
16. COOKERY.
17. HOUSE FURNISHING.
18. WOMEN'S EMPLOYMENTS.
19. MOTHERS and CHILDREN.
20. SMILES.

LONDON: HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, PATERNOSTER ROW.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1139.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, MARCH 3, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

CATHARINE FURZE.

2 vols., cloth, 12s.

Mark Rutherford's New Novel.—
Second Edition.

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"We have no hesitation in saying that it is by far the most impressive, original, and interesting work of fiction that has fallen into our hands for many a month."
WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"A simple and touching story, told with rare skill and power."
SCOTSMAN.—"Can be read many times by the same reader before its interest is exhausted."
CHRISTIAN WORLD.—"Mark Rutherford has treated a risky conception with rare skill and delicacy, and the story, with its strong contrasts of light and shade, fascinates the reader."
ATHENÆUM.—"A book by 'Mark Rutherford' is quite a treat.... Mark Rutherford has a fine sense of humour.... 'Catharine Furze' should be read not once, but many times."

Second Edition,
Revised and Corrected.

SPINOZA'S ETHIC. Translated from the Latin by W. Hale White.
Translation Revised by AMELIA HUTCHINSON STIRLING, M.A. (Edin.). Second Edition, Revised and Corrected, with New Preface. Demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. [Ready.]

New Vol. of the Adventure
Series.

FAMOUS ADVENTURES and PRISON ESCAPES of the CIVIL WAR. Cloth extra gilt, gilt tops, 7s. 6d. [Next week.]

By Bishop
Phillips Brooks.

PERFECT FREEDOM. Addresses by Phillips Brooks. With Introduction by Rev. JULIUS H. WARD. Etched Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. [Ready.]

37th Volume of the Story of the Nations.

JAPAN. By David Murray, Ph.D. Maps, Illustrations, and Index.
Large crown 8vo, fancy cloth, gold lettered, 5s.
The Daily Chronicle says of this series: "Such a universal history as the series will present us with on its completion will be a possession such as no country can boast of."

Dr. Jessopp's
New Volume.

RANDOM ROAMING, and other Papers. By Rev. Augustus Jessopp, D.D., Author of "Trials of a Country Parson," &c. Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.
"Random Roaming" is assured of a hearty welcome.... Contact with Dr. Jessopp's mind is a wonderful stimulus to the love of the antiquities of our island, animate as well as inanimate.—Times.

Dr. S. Cox's
Last Work.

THE HEBREW TWINS: a Vindication of God's Ways with Jacob and Esau. By the late Rev. SAMUEL COX, D.D., Author of "Expositions," &c. With Prefatory Memoir by his WIFE. Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"Characterised by the well-known simplicity and clearness of Dr. Cox's style."—Scotsman.

New Vols. of the Reformer's
Book-Shelf.

BAMFORD'S PASSAGES in the LIFE of a RADICAL. Edited, with an Introduction, by HENRY DUNCLEY ("Verax"). The New Volumes of "The Reformer's Book-Shelf." 2 vols., cloth, 3s. 6d. each.
"We cordially welcome this reprint.... Mr. Duncley's lucid and impartial introduction."—Times.

The Chinaman of To-Day.

BRIGHT CELESTIALS: the Chinaman at Home and Abroad. By JOHN COMING CHINAMAN. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"This is decidedly a clever book."—Glasgow Herald.

The Independent
Novel Series,
New Volumes.

LADY PERFECTA. From the Spanish of Perez Galdos, by Mary WHARTON, Translator of "Marianela," from the same Author.
"Delightful glimpses are caught of Spanish provincial life, such as will soon cease to exist even beyond the Pyrenees. Miss Wharton has entered entirely into the spirit of the author's work, of which her version is a very satisfactory, and even brilliant, rendering."—Morning Post.

MRS. THORNDALE'S COUSIN. By M. E. Bacot.
Demy 12mo, cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

The Pseudonym
Library.
New Volumes.

The ROUSING of Mrs. POTTER, and other Stories. By Jane Nelson.
"The homely story is worked out with dry touches of humour. Indeed, there is fascinating quaintness about all the scene."—Sheffield Telegraph.

A STUDY in COLOUR. By Alice Spinner.
Paper, 1s. 6d. each; cloth, 2s. each.

Popular
Re-issue of Miss Frances
Power Cobbe's
Works.

RELIGIOUS DUTY. 3rd Edition.

DAWNING LIGHTS. An Inquiry concerning the Secular Results of the New Reformation.

HOPES of the HUMAN RACE HEREAFTER and HERE. 2nd Edition.

THE PEAK in DARIEN: with some other Inquiries touching concerns of the Soul and the Body.

ALONE to the ALONE. Prayers for Theists, by several contributors. 3rd Edition.

THE DUTIES of WOMEN. 9th Ed.
A FAITHLESS WORLD; (and) HEALTH and HOLINESS. A Criticism and an Address.

Author's Edition, in uniform bindings, crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. each.

* * Mr. Fisher Unwin holds a stock of all Miss Cobbe's other Publications. Lists on application.

* * The Publisher can arrange for Purchasers to see these works at the nearest Booksellers, on receipt of address.

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	PAGE
RECENT THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE, by A. W. BENN	181
WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE'S VISTAS, by GEORGE COTTERELL	181
A NEW LIFE OF GEORGE HERBERT, by the Rev. H. C. BECHING	183
RUSSIA'S MARCH TOWARDS INDIA, by STEPHEN WHEELER	184
NEW NOVELS, by J. STANLEY LITTLE	185
SOME BIOGRAPHICAL BOOKS	186
NOTES AND NEWS	188
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	188
TRANSLATION: "FROM THE PORTUGUESE OF ALICE MORENO," by EDGAR PRESTAGE	189
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	189
THE TEACHING UNIVERSITY FOR LONDON, by Prof. KARL FRIEDRICH	189
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	191
CORRESPONDENCE
Chancellor's Book of the Duchesse , by Prof. Skeat; A Chequer Illustration of a Joke of Shakespeare's , by Dr. F. J. Furlival; The Book of Enoch , by M. R. James; English Hymn Writers , by Prof. Sanday; Coleridge and Opium , by T. Hutchinson	191
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	192
TWO BOOKS ON THE CONSTITUTION OF ATHENS, by F. T. R.	192
SCIENCE NOTES	193
PHILOLOGICAL NOTES	193
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	193
THE GLASGOW INSTITUTE	194
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	194
STAGE NOTES	195
RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	195
MUSIC NOTES	195

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—
Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS

115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List:—115, Fleet Street, London.

MR. KIRWAN.—LESSONS IN SPEECH

Illustrated Dramatic Readings (a combination of speech, pictures, and music). Selections. Literary Lectures.—Address, 3, Vernon Place, W.C.

ELOCUTION, Voice Production, Gesture,

Shakespeare, Gymnastics, Delsarte, Aesthetic, Physical and Vocal Drill, Private Lessons in Expression, Practice in Reading, Recitation, and Criticism. THE CHAFFEE-NOBLE TRAINING SCHOOL OF EXPRESSION, 13, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W. Principal, Miss FANNIE MASON.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL

MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STOKER, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

GREECE.—THOS. COOK &amp; SON,

Organizers of Tours in Greece, &c., have complete arrangements for visiting Athens, Epidauri, Eleusis, Hydra, Nauplia, Tinos, Argos, Mycenae, Corinth, Marathon, Salamis, Olympia, &c. Tickets by all routes.—Programme upon application to THOS. COOK & SON, Ludgate Circus, London.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS

promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.

DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS &amp; NORGATE,

Importers of Foreign Books,

11, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,

AND

20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

BIBLIOTHECA ORIENTALIS: I.

Being a Catalogue of Oriental Languages and Literature (containing New and Second-hand Books in more than 50 different languages), pp. iv-104 (1,684 Nos.) will be sent post free on receipt of 6d.

LUZAC & CO.'S ROUGH LISTS of Second-hand Books, on the History, Geography, &c., of Asia, Africa, &c., Nos. 1 to 6, have been published (728 Nos.), sent post free on application.

LUZAC &amp; CO.'S ORIENTAL LIST.

Containing Notes and News on, and a Biographical List of, all new Publications on Africa and the East. Published Monthly. Annual Subscription post free, 2s.

"The Academy," Feb. 4, 1893, writes: "Messrs. Luzac & Co.'s Oriental List... deserves the support of Oriental students.... It gives, under the heading of 'Notes and News,' details about important Oriental works, which are both more full and more careful than anything of the sort to be found elsewhere."

Vol. V., No. II. (February, 1894), just out. A few copies of Vols. I to IV, are still to be had half-bound, with full Author's index, &c., at 6s. net each volume.

LUZAC & CO., Oriental Booksellers and Publishers, 46, Great Russell Street opposite the British Museum, London, W.C.

READY THIS DAY.

THE HEREFORD CATALOGUE, No. 3

(Apply, including Inglishby Legends, 3 series, all lists; Set Notman Gale's Works; Books by Meredith, Stevenson, &c., &c.; also Foreign Books.—Post free from THOMAS CARVER, 6, High Street, Her. Co.)

BRITISH ASSOCIATION for the AD-

VANCEMENT OF SCIENCE.

Burlington House, London, W.

The NEXT ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING will be held at OXFORD, commencing on WEDNESDAY, August 8th.

PRESIDENT-ELECT—

The Most Hon. The MARQUESS OF SALISBURY, K.G., D.C.L., F.R.S., Chancellor of the University of Oxford.

NOTICE to CONTRIBUTORS of MEMOIRS.—Authors are reminded that the acceptance of Memoirs, and the day on which they are to be read, are, as far as possible, determined by Organizing Committees for the several Sections before the beginning of the Meeting. Memoirs should be sent to the Office of the Association. Information about Local Arrangements may be obtained from the Local Secretaries, University Museum, Oxford.

G. GRIFFITH, Assistant General Secretary.

ELTHAM COLLEGE, KENT

(THE ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL.)

TEN OPEN ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS, £40 to £50, on APRIL 11, 12, 13.—Full particulars of HEAD MASTER.

THE UNIVERSITY OF ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE

DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Truro, &c.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to best

University or Army Tutors, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained (free of charge) by sending a statement of requirements to A. J. BEYON, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.

WINTER EXHIBITION.

LAST WEEK.

The Exhibition will CLOSE on SATURDAY NEXT, MARCH 10th.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS

and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

The Author's Manual

By PERCY RUSSELL.

With Prefatory Remarks by Mr. GLADSTONE.

Sixth Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s

With Portrait.

The WESTMINSTER REVIEW says: "A very complete manual and guide for journalist and author. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense..... We have little else but praise for the volume."

DIGBY, LONG & CO., PUBLISHERS,

18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON.

Price 1s., post free.

INDIGESTION: its Causes and Cure.

By JOHN H. CLARKE, M.D.

London: JAMES EYRE & CO. (Ld.), 170, Piccadilly, and 43, Thirdeedle Street.

Fourth Edition, pp. 300, 5s.

PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.

By Prof. LIONEL BAILE, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.

HARRISON & SONS, 59, Pall Mall.

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

THE WEARIED CHRIST, and other Sermons. By Rev. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

"Very frank in tone, and modern in application."—The Bookman.

"They show the same wonderful fertility of apt and beautiful illustrations, the same exquisite use of language, and the same direct heart-searching power which we are accustomed to find in all Dr. Maclaren's works."

Christian World Pulpit.

"They are fully up to his old level, and are still unrivalled in their own manner."—British Weekly.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

PAUL'S PRAYERS. And other Sermons.

"As striking and suggestive as any Dr. Maclaren has published. . . . The book is full of helpful thoughts."

Christian World.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

THE GOD OF THE AMEN. And other Sermons.

"Replete with a keen spiritual insight, combined with an aptness of illustration and beauty of diction which cannot fail to both impress and charm the reader."—Methodist Times.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

THE HOLY OF HOLIES. A Series of Sermons on the 11th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John.

"Every sermon glows with unction, and shows intense power."—Methodist Recorder.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST. And other Sermons.

"Few preachers combine so many elements of effective pulpit address."—Independent.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, PUBLISHERS, 21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C., AND ALL BOOKSELLERS.

MONDAY NEXT, March 5th.

HENRY CROUCH, Limited (by order of the Court in a Debenture Holder's Action).

MR. J. C. STEVENS will SELL by AUCTION, at his GREAT ROOMS, 38, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, on MONDAY NEXT, March 5, at half-past 12 o'clock precisely, the FIRST PORTION of the STOCK of HENRY CROUCH, Limited, comprising Photographic Apparatus, consisting of Cameras in all sizes—Hand Cameras—Lenses in great variety—Microscopic Apparatus—Dissecting and other Microscopes—an immense Assortment of Oil Immersion and other Objectives—Telescopes—Thermometers, &c.

On view Saturday prior to 10 to 4 and morning of Sale, and Catalogues had of the Receiver and Manager, Mr. H. C. SARONET, Suffolk House, Laurence Pountney Hill, E.C.; and of the Auctioneer.

The valuable Library of the late Lord JAMES WANDESFORDE BUTLER, D.L., President of the Royal Historical and Archaeological Association of Ireland, including an important Collection of Rare and Standard Works in English and Foreign Literature, Irish History, Antiquities, &c., in choice condition.

WILL BE SOLD by AUCTION by JOHN W. SULLIVAN, at his Literary and Art SALE-ROOMS, No. 8, DOLIER STREET, DUBLIN, on MONDAY, MARCH 12, and Following Days.

Catalogues may be had from the AUCTIONEER.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSIT repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free. FRANK RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Now ready, crown 8vo, price 6d., 5d. pp.

IBSEN. A Lecture delivered at University

College, Liverpool, by Request of the Senate, January 26, 1894, by SIR EDWARD RUSSELL.

Liverpool: EDWARD HOWELL, Church Street. London: SIMPSON, MARSHALL & Co., Limited.

(1) THE wily advertiser seeketh to provoke merriment.

(2) ANOBIUM ERODITUM, the devouring book-worm, turns up its nose (and its toes) at Stickphast Paste.

(3) ANYBODY go one better?

A PENNY A DROP.

THE PURE OTTO OF ROSE

18

Toilet "Vinolia" Soap and

"Vinolia" Toilet Powder

NOW COSTS A PENNY A DROP.

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, Limited.

Chief Office—HOLBORN BARS, LONDON.

Summary of the Report Presented at the Forty-fifth Annual Meeting, held on 1st March, 1894.

ORDINARY BRANCH.

The number of Policies issued during the year was 54,558, assuring the sum of £5,627,065, and producing a New Annual Premium Income of £304,928.

The Premiums received during the year were £1,854,370, being an increase of £188,759, over the year 1892.

The Claims of the year amounted to £478,564. The number of Deaths was 3,397, and 154 Endowment Assurances matured.

The number of Policies in force at the end of the year was 335,176.

INDUSTRIAL BRANCH.

The Premiums received during the year were £3,971,863, being an increase of £122,706.

The Claims of the year amounted to £1,662,768. The number of deaths was 185,013, and 1,267 Endowment Assurances matured.

The number of Free Policies granted during the year to those Policyholders of five years' standing, who have desired to discontinue their payments, was 55,764, the number in force being 338,272. The number of Free Policies which became Claims during the year was 6,424.

The total number of Policies in force at the end of the year was 10,476,393; their average duration is seven and a quarter years.

The assets of the Company, in both branches, as shown in the Balance Sheet, are £18,538,865, being an increase of £2,229,213 over those of 1892.

The system of annual distribution of profits begun last year having given satisfaction alike to Policyholders and Shareholders, the Directors have decided to continue it, and a complete valuation for the past year has been made.

The Balance Sheet has been submitted to Messrs. Deloitte, Dever, Griffiths & Co., whose certificate is appended to the accounts.

THOS. C. DEWEY, } Managers.
WILLIAM HUGHES }

W. J. LANCASTER, Secretary.

The full Report can be obtained on application to the Secretary.

JUST PUBLISHED, 8vo, price 6s.

JUNIUS REVEALED.

By his surviving Grandson, H. R. FRANCIS, M.A.,

Late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

New Volume of Bishop Creighton's "History of the Papacy."

HISTORY of the PAPACY DURING the REFORMATION.

By MANDELL CREIGHTON, D.D., LL.D.,

Bishop of Peterborough.

Vol. V. (1517-1527). THE GERMAN REVOLT. 8vo, 15s.

* Vols. I. and II., 1378-1464, 32s. Vols. III. and IV., 1464-1518, 24s.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

MARCH.

THE IRELAND of TO-DAY and TO-MORROW. By the Hon. HORACE PLUNKETT, M.P.

THE SIGNIFICANCE of CARBON in the UNIVERSE. By Sir ROBERT BALL, F.R.S.

A POOR MAN'S BUDGET. By W. M. J. WILLIAMS.

AN EXPEDITION to MOUNT KENYA. By Dr. J. W. GREGORY.

THE LATEST POST OFFICE PRANK. By J. HENRIER HEATON, M.P.

THE FIRST EDITION MANIA. By WILLIAM ROBERTS.

LUOMO FATALE. By AN OSKRIER.

RAILWAY DEVELOPMENT. By J. STEPHEN JEANS.

THE NEW HEDONISM. By GRANT ALLEN.

FABIAN ECONOMICS. Part II. By W. H. MALLOCK.

FROM CAPE TOWN to CAIRO. By HENRY W. LUCY.

CHAPMAN & HALL, Ltd.

MUDIE'S

SELECT

LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and
SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

ONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books of the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS and POST FREE

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY,

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by Holf, R.A., Oulens, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of references to the various Galleries are provided and easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing nearly 70 Miniature Photographs of notable autotypes, post free, ONE GUINIA.

New Pamphlet, "Autotype a Decorative and Educational Art," free on application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.O.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAVURE, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Office: 14, HENRIETTA STREET COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

THROAT AND COUGH

Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use

EPPS' GLYCERINE JUJUBES.

In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing.

Sold only in boxes, 7½d., and tins, 1s. 1½d., Labelled:

JAMES EPPS & CO., Ltd., Homoeopathic Chemists, LONDON

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOTICE.—THE TEMPLE BAR

MAGAZINE for MARCH, 1891, contains, among other articles of interest:—A BEGINNER. By Rhoda Broughton. Chaps. 7-9.—THOMAS LOVELL BEDDOES—OXFORD versus CAMBRIDGE—IN AN OLD PORCH.—AN ANTIQUARY of the LAST CENTURY.—20 PORT.—AN INTERLOPER. By Frances M. Peard. Chaps. 7-9, &c.

NEW WORKS.

NOW READY.

WOMEN of LETTERS, including Memoirs of Lady Morgan, the Misses Berry, Mary Wollstonecraft Shelley, Lady Ann Barnard, Mary Countess Cowper, Mrs. Opie, Lady Duff Gordon, Elizabeth Inchbald, "Lamb's Duchess," Lady Hervey, Lady Mary Wortley Montagu, Mrs. Delany, and Mrs. Montagu. By GERTRUDE TOWNSHEND MAYER. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

NOW READY.

FREDERIC HILL: an Autobiography of Fifty Years in Times of Reform. Being the Recollections of a Retired Civil Servant. By his Daughter, CONSTANCE HILL. 1 vol., demy 8vo, with Portraits, 16s.
"A charming book, most interesting, and most readable."
—ABERDEEN FREE PRESS.

NOW READY.

THE CONVERSATIONS of JAMES NORTHCOTE, R.A. Recorded by WILLIAM HAZLITT. A New Edition, Edited, with an Essay on Hazlitt and a Note on Northcote, by EDMUND GOSSE. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW NOVELS AT THE LIBRARIES

NOW READY.

A NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE SCOTTS OF BESTMINSTER"

A DEVOTED COUPLE.

By J. MASTERMAN.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

THE SECOND EDITION OF

THE GREATER GLORY

By MAARTEN MAARTENS,
Author of "The Sun of Just Aveling," "An Old Maid's Love," &c.
3 vols., crown 8vo.

"No review can do justice to the many deep and delicate studies in this careful, brilliant, and picturesque book."—DAILY CHRONICLE.
"Has high merits of pathos, of humour, of artistic colour, and pictorial suggestion."—PALL MALL GAZETTE.
"Rich in epigram and humour, both incisive and original, this work will rank among its author's best efforts."—MORNING POST.
"A most ingenious and clever novel, full of good things."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.
"A book which has a charm of style quite its own, and has enriched the world of fiction with new characters, destined to more than passing fame."—OBSERVER.
"A serious and striking production."—SCOTSMAN.

NOW READY.

The ROMANCE of SHERE

MOTE. By PERCY HULBURD. Author of "In black and White." 3 vols., crown 8vo.
"Not only a story of singular ingenuity and power, but an album, so to speak, of brilliant character-sketches, graphic word-pictures, and trenchant epigrams. It is a book, in short, affording abundant proof that its author is entitled to rank in the first flight of contemporary novelists."—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

NOW READY.

THE VICAR of LANG-

THWAITE. By LILY WATSON. 3 vols., crown 8vo.
"A bright and pleasant novel."—PALL MALL GAZETTE.

NOW READY.

BRITOMART By Mrs.

HERBERT MARTIN, Author of "Bonnie Lesley," &c.
3 vols., crown 8vo.
"A novel powerfully conceived, and full of strong scenes and strong characters."—ACADEMY.

THE SECOND EDITION OF

DIANA TEMPEST. By

MARY CHOLMONDELEY, Author of "The Danvers Jewels," "Sir Charles Danvers," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

The BARON DE BOOKWORMS in "Peyton" says:
"Those who love a really good novel, excellent both in story and in literary style, will be thankful to acquire, by purchase or loan, the goods—the extra good goods—which the Gods provide. There is neither page nor paragraph in these three volumes that can be skipped without loss to the skipper. Each character is carefully analysed, in so incisive and epigrammatic a style, and with evidently so rare a knowledge of moral anatomy, as will occasionally remind the reader of Thackeray. The Baron wishes his friends no worse luck than a rainy afternoon for the perusal of 'Diana Tempest.'"

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

OUR RAILWAYS:

Their Development, Enterprise, Incident, and Romance.

By JOHN PENDLETON,

Author of "A History of Derbyshire," and "Newspaper Reporting in Olden Time and To-day."

2 vols., Illustrated, demy 8vo, 24s.

[Now ready.]

STATESMEN, PAST AND FUTURE.

Demy 8vo, price 6s.

These sketches attracted marked attention and excited special interest when they appeared in the columns of the Daily News.

[Ready shortly.]

THE STANDISHS OF HIGH ACRE.

A Novel.

By GILBERT SHELTON.

2 vols., 21s.

[Now ready.]

THE MAN IN BLACK.

By STANLEY WEYMAN,

Author of "A Gentleman of France," "Francis Cludde," &c.

With 12 Full-Page Illustrations by WAL PAGET and H. M. PAGET.

3s. 6d.

[Now ready.]

LOST ON DU CORRIG;

Or, 'Twixt Earth and Ocean.

By STANDISH O'GRADY,

Author of "Finn and his Companions," &c.

With 8 Full-Page Illustrations, 5s.

[Now ready.]

TINY LUTTRELL.

By E. W. HORNUNG,

Author of "A Bride from the Bush," &c.

(Popular Edition.) 6s.

[Now ready.]

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED,
LUDGATE HILL, LONDON.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

JUST READY.

FRA PAOLO SARPI

The Greatest of the Venetians.

BY THE

REV. ALEXANDER ROBERTSON,
Author of "Count Campello and Catholic Reform in Italy."
With Illustrations and a Facsimile Letter.
Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

THE GREEK QUESTION.

NEW WORK BY MR. SAMUELSON.

GREECE:

Her Present Condition and Recent Progress.

By JAMES SAMUELSON,
Author of "Roumania, Past and Present," "Bulgaria, Past and Present," &c.
Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

GLIMPSES OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION:

Myths, Ideals, and Realities.

By J. G. ALGER, Author of "Englishmen in the French Revolution," &c.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A deeply interesting and most valuable work."—DAILY CHRONICLE.

EVENING TALES.

Done into English, from the French of M. FREDERIC ORTOLI, by JOEL CHANDLER HARRIS ("Uncle Remus").
Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"The tales will be much appreciated by young children."

MORNING POST.

ANCIENT ARMS & ARMOUR:

A Pictorial and Descriptive Record of the Origin and Development of Arms and Armour.

To which are appended 133 Plates, specially drawn from the Author's Collection.

By EDWIN J. BRETT.

Imp. 4to, 650 pp., with 1,200 Original Engravings, half-bound, FIVE GUINEAS net.

"A sumptuous tribute to the memory of the age of chivalry."—STANDARD, (leading article). "Mr. Brett's magnificent work."—DAILY TELEGRAPH. "We knew no authority more thorough and up-to-date."—DAILY CHRONICLE. "A masterpiece of its kind.... Mr. Brett's work is as interesting as it is valuable."—BLACK AND WHITE. "Is noteworthy for the very elaborate series of illustrations with which it is enriched."—TIMES. "We have lately had a sort of revival of the Man in Armour, Mr. Brett's splendid volume, therefore, has fallen on welcoming days."—DAILY NEWS. "It is a book that all antiquaries and lovers of ancient armour will deem a great acquisition to the shelves of their libraries."—LIFE. "Some of the finest pictures in Mr. Brett's book are Italian arms and weapons of the tourney. Mr. Brett is an enthusiastic believer in the life of the Middle Ages. His collection seems to be very rich."—OBSERVER. "Many of Mr. Brett's plates of armour came from such well-known collections as those of Sir Samuel Rush Merrett, Sir Conde Lindsay, Lord Londesborough, Count Giesky, &c. Mr. Brett's work is a truly monumental volume."—SPORTING AND DRAMATIC NEWS. "Every great library will have it upon their shelves. A truly magnificent work."—ENGLAND.

CHEAP EDITIONS at all BOOKSELLERS.

In uniform crown 8vo Volumes, bound in cloth, HALF-A-CROWN each.

By WILLIAM BLACK.

STAND FAST, CRAIG ROYSTON!

By R. D. BLACKMORE.

EREMA; or, My Father's Sin.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL.

JOHN HOLDSWORTH, CHIEF MATE.

By GEORGE MAC DONALD.

MARY MARSTON.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

FASHIONS OF TO-DAY.

MARCH NUMBER.

With One Coloured Plate, Supplement Pattern Sheet, and about 40 Illustrations of Dresses and Fancy Work.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE.

MARCH NUMBER.—CONTENTS.

THE SEA ISLAND HURRICANES—THE RELIEF. Joel Chandler Harris. (Illustrated.)
A POUND OF CURE. A Story of Monte Carlo. Chaps. 1, 2. William Henry Bishop.
THE HIGH BUILDING and its ART. Barr Ferree. (Illustrated.)
MILTON VISITING GALLIO. Painted by Tito Lessi. Philip Gilbert Hamerton. (With Frontispiece and Portrait)
LIFE AND LOVE. Melville Upton.
THE FARMER in the NORTH. (Sketches of American Types) Octave Thanet. (Illustrated.)
ON PIRATICAL SEAS. A Merchant's Voyages to the West Indies in 1805. Peter A. Groen.
SUBTROPICAL FLORIDA. Charles Richards Dodge. (Illustrated.)
THE SUMMER ITINERARY. George A. Hubbard.
THE CABLE STREET-RAILWAY. Philip G. Hubert, jun. (Illustrated.)
JOHN MARSH, SOUTHERNER. Chaps. 16-22. George W. Cable.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SATURDAY, MARCH 3, 1894.

No. 1139, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

RECENT THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE.

Aspects of Theism. By William Knight, LL.D. (Macmillans.)

Natural Religion: The Gifford Lectures delivered before the University of Edinburgh in 1893. By Prof. Sir G. G. Stokes, Bart. (A. & C. Black.)

Stoics and Saints. By the late James Baldwin Brown, B.A. (Glasgow: Maclehose.)

WHILE not a year passes that is not marked by the appearance of one or more elaborate works in professed defence of Theism, not a voice is heard on the other side, not a single storming-party appears to justify the erection of these extended and ever-multiplying defensive fortifications. Perhaps the non-Theists, if there are such persons, think that there is no need for an attack, when they find that the work of demolition is being effectually carried on from within. Kant first set the example of destroying the current arguments for the existence of a God before setting up a new one of his own, which has met with equally little mercy at the hands of other religious thinkers; and his successors have pursued the same method with the result that, as has been well observed, not a single proof of Theism remains that some Theist has not at some time overthrown. The latest representative of this method is Prof. Knight, the most striking part of whose volume is a destructive criticism of the three classical proofs of Theism which Dr. Hutcheson Stirling has recently been trying to rehabilitate in his Gifford Lectures. The teleological argument, in particular, comes in for a most merciless exposure (pp. 59, seq.), not easily to be matched in English philosophical literature for the courage and address with which it turns inside out the supposed evidence from design in nature; and the dialectical skill of the author is the more apparent because it can dispense with assistance from Darwinism or any other scientific theory of evolution. But as a controversialist on the theistic side he appears, I think, to much less advantage; and one rises from the constructive chapters with a strong impression that another Prof. Knight would not leave one stone of the new edifice standing on the other. Indeed, a reader who has been "blooded" by the scathing dialectic with which the book begins, may well feel tempted to get his teeth into the proofs that are now offered instead of the mangled fallacies of natural theology; more especially if it should appear that they are merely a revised, and by no means improved, version of the old proofs. For when we are told that "we must transcend phenomena for an explanation of cause" (p. 97), what is this but the cosmological argument come back to life? And when we are further told that this cause must be a Willakin to our own, where is the warrant for such a sweeping assumption? First show that our will has ever created one single atom of matter, or one tremor of motion, and then we shall be ready to discuss the further questions, whether all matter and motion must have been similarly created, and, if so, whether such creation was necessarily the work of a single will, and not rather of innumerable wills. The "evidence of intuition," which Prof. Knight next adduces, seems to represent in a confused way the argument from universal consent, the argument from special revelation, and the Cartesian argument from the idea of a Perfect Being — by which, be it observed, I do not mean the ontological argument. The object of calling in intuition seems to be to obtain either special authority for a general belief, or general authority for a special belief. For example, we perceive all things under the form of space and time, and as objects presented to a subject. Hence it is claimed that these most general laws of experience, along with others that need not here be enumerated, possess a validity altogether different in kind from the validity of laws ascertained by experience. But again, some persons are confident that they possess what they call free-will, and, not being able to support their pretension by the evidence of experience, they fall back on an alleged intuition that informs them of its existence; and others offer the same reason for their certainty that particular things ought to be done or left undone. Now, whether intuitions of the first or universal kind do or do not form part of our minds as originally constituted need not here be discussed, since their existence, if they do exist, gives us no sort of warrant for believing in the second or special intuitions, but rather the contrary, as one fails to understand why the mysterious agency which bestowed some intuitions on all men could not bestow all on some. Prof. Knight must then be prepared to encounter some incredulity when he claims the knowledge of a personal First Cause of phenomena, or, as he sometimes prefers to call it, of "the Infinite as a Substance and a Personality," by right of a superior intuition restricted to himself and some other individuals. The assumption that all science rests on intuition, whether valid or not, is, as I have implied, irrelevant. And the appeal to special gifts of sense, as, for example, a musical ear, possessed by some persons only, is also irrelevant. For the perceptions of such persons do not, like Theism, involve the affirmation of universal propositions; it cannot be alleged of them that they conflict with admitted facts; nor are the musically endowed, like those claiming to possess the religious intuition, constantly at issue with one another on questions of fundamental importance. But, in truth, theological belief owes its existence to a perfectly intelligible process of inference; and the alleged intuition may be traced, like others of the same kind, from very crude beginnings through a long course of dialectical development up to the form that it now assumes in the consciousness of such philosophers as Prof. Knight. And in this way evolution furnishes a good argument, not indeed against the validity of a belief, but against its intuitive origin.

In the further progress of our author's exposition, the position of a superior person in receipt of a special revelation from the unseen appears to be gradually abandoned, abstract reasoning being put in the place of intuition. Finite knowledge, it is urged, implies a knowledge of the Infinite. Here we have the ontological proof under a new and a worse form. To argue from the idea of a Perfect Being to the real existence of that Being was fallacious enough, but not so fallacious as to infer the existence of an adequate reality from an idea that can only be thought as the negation of all ideas. "Infinite space" is a perfectly intelligible combination of words, but the Infinite is a senseless abstraction. One might as well talk, like Plato, of the Same and the Other. Nor can this adjective be attached, except for rhetorical purposes, to any substantive that does not carry a reference to space or time. Personality in particular can no more be called finite or infinite than it can be called green or blue. When Jean Paul at the age of five said to himself, "Ich bin ein Ich," he had got as far as any of us can ever reach. If the Infinite means that to which nothing can be added, then, in respect to our personality, we are all infinite, and a personal God cannot, qua person, be thought of as greater than ourselves. But if the antithesis of subject and object implies limitation, then He also must be conceived as finite, for without such an antithesis personality and consciousness in general are inconceivable.

The ethical argument for Theism, as here presented, avowedly rests on the assumption that our sense of right and wrong cannot be resolved into or derived from any other psychological elements. As addressed to a utilitarian evolutionist it is, therefore, entirely nugatory. But even granting the assumption, it seems to prove little or nothing. We feel instinctively prompted to the performance of certain actions called moral. Well and good; but where is the warrant for assuming that, in this instance, more than in that of any other instinct, we are receiving the commands of a personal being? Is not this a mere fragment of the much despised teleological argument, which infers the existence of a personal designer from the otherwise unaccountable character of instincts in general? The same is true of the appeal to—one cannot call it the argument from—our sense of beauty in nature, which forms the subject of the weakest and frothiest chapter in the book.

Absorption in the Infinite is, perhaps, responsible for a certain inability on the part of Prof. Knight to state finite facts with perfect accuracy. According to him, "it has been said that no evidence for the being of God exists, or in the nature of things is possible"; but that "it is wise to hold to it" as "a buttress to morality"; and this he calls "an Agnostic position" (p. 4). Now as such teaching directly contravenes what Prof. Huxley, who invented the name, calls the Agnostic principle: "In matters of the intellect follow your reason as far as it will take you, without regard to any other consideration," it would have been only fair to name the persons who are responsible for it. "Positivism tells us . . . to worship what is inscrutable to our faculties" (p. 198). Positivism does no such thing: it tells us to worship Humanity. Totemism is defined as "the recognition of a second-self, suggested by the shadow cast by the sun, by reflection in water, or by the spiritual shadow (or double) disclosed in dreams" (p. 20). This is not Totemism, but Animism. Totemism means the worship of some material object, supposed to be the common ancestor of the whole tribe to which the worshipper belongs. "To affirm the relativity of knowledge is merely to assert that all that is known occupies a fixed relation to the knower" (p. 137). Now, in the first place, the relation of the known to the knower is not fixed, but shifting; and, in the second place, the relativity of knowledge implies that any object is known as like some objects, as unlike others, and as integrated with a group to the members of which it stands in various relations of difference and resemblance. We do not find "idealism" in Parmenides (p. 153), nor does that thinker hold that "the Infinite and the Personal are contradictory of each other" (p. 169), for the good reason that he never mentions personality at all, and only mentions the Infinite to deny its existence. The professor should read his colleague Prof. Burnet's book. It is not, as stated on p. 186, "a corollary of the doctrine of the conservation of energy," even "if applied in the same way within the moral sphere as in the physical," that the amount of evil in the world cannot be lessened. So shining a rhetorician as Prof. Knight ought not to call "the depths of personality" "what is highest in man" (p. 208); nor should he say, "but no less can the Infinite dispense with the finite and itself continue to exist" (p. 217), when he means the exact contrary, i.e., that it cannot continue to exist—by the way, a rather remarkable and seemingly self-contradictory weakness on the side of the Infinite.

It is a matter for general congratulation that Sir George Stokes should have ceased to occupy the chair of Gifford Lecturer in the University of Edinburgh; and perhaps the person most to be congratulated is Sir George himself, unfitted, as by his own admission he was, to fill the post. "Perhaps," he observes at the conclusion of his second course, "it might have been better if I had not ventured to undertake the office, but left it to someone whose studies had lain in the direction of moral philosophy, or natural theology" (pp. 259-60). Meantime, for two years the munificent bequest of Lord Gifford has been diverted from the purpose for which it was intended to a purpose expressly precluded by the terms of his will: namely, to subsidising an apology for revealed religion. The hagiology of Rome offers instances of persons whose claim to canonisation rests partly on the misapplication of funds entrusted to their care. Sir George Stokes does not belong to a Church which has such honours to dispense; but the solid emoluments of the Gifford Lectureship are, no doubt, more to his taste. A part of the blame must fall on the Senate of Edinburgh University, who are responsible for this deplorable appointment. "The gods of the Epicureans created the world," says their late Lecturer—such is his knowledge of history—"and then left it all to itself" (p. 154). Since the high personages composing the Senate are apparently in the position of those gods, and cannot control what they have once created, let us hope that in this respect they will perform their office more carefully in future.

The volume entitled Stoics and Saints consists of lectures "delivered at different times and in various places during the later years of Mr. Baldwin Brown's life." They do honour both to the lecturer and to his audiences. If Nonconformists are in the habit of listening to such addresses as these, they yield nothing to the members of any establishment in true culture and breadth of sympathy. There are statements of Mr. Brown's about Greek philosophy to which I might take exception; but where the mass of truth and wisdom is so great, it would be ungracious to dwell on a few doubtful passages. Nothing better can be wished the Independents than a succession of such teachers as the late minister of their church at Brixton.

ALFRED W. BENN.

Vistas. Written by William Sharp. (Derby: Frank Murray.)

THE ten short compositions in this dainty book are perfectly described by the title, for every one of them opens up a far-reaching prospect in which the imagination of the reader can luxuriate. A vista in a landscape suggests more than it reveals. It focuses some point in a distant outlook, and gives intelligible form and beauty to what would otherwise have no distinct feature or attractiveness. But the love of natural beauty which is thus quickened is a love that craves for more. The appreciative gaze is induced to pursue his way to the inviting glades, the stretching uplands, that tempt him from afar off; and, as he goes, he finds that Nature has many things to tell him of which he had no conception before. Mr. William Sharp renders us a like service, on the higher plane of human experience and effort, by these remarkable studies. He focuses for us some crisis in human life, some bright or dark passage in the working out of things past or present, and we begin to see clearly where before we only dimly comprehended the significance of the facts of life. The passions that give colour to those facts, the hopes and aspirations and struggles that are the high lights, as failure and despair are the shadow, of existence, are never quite what they seem. They are all an essential part of the human economy; but to know them, to understand them in their working, we need that something should quicken our inner sense and stir our imagination from its lethargy. It is impossible to read almost any one of these "vistas" without feeling that it supplies this quickening force, this stirring impulse. A veil is drawn aside, a cloud is lifted, a mist is dispersed, and some glimpse is given us of the veritable reality and romance of life: the tragedy, mixed with comedy, that is enacted where we least suspect it.

One feels that it is difficult in a short review to do justice to a book which, as this does, contains far more than at first sight it seems to convey. As in a landscape, there is vista beyond vista, and the wealth of suggestion is almost endless. The choice of examples is one part of the reviewer's difficulty, for it is impossible to notice all these glimpses into the mysteries that lie about us. The momentary change from life to apparent death is one of the profoundest of all mysteries. We cannot pierce it with our speculations, but it is a subject about which wonder and affection will always be exercised. In "The Last Quest," the sixth of these "vistas," Mr. Sharp gives us a beautiful conception of what may pass in this last moment of scarcely spent mortality. The allegory, for such it is, is introduced by the following note:

"As in a vision . . . the furious charge through the smoke and across the corpse-strewn battlefield: the neighing and sobbing of horses: the hoarse cries, the sudden screams of men: the clang and whistle of swords: the shrill spiriting of a hail of bullets: the bursting crash and roar of artillery: a wild rush, a wild onslaught, and—Victory! . . . and . . ."

A soldier in the battle of life, who was engaged in this wild rush with the rest, but who fell under the hail of bullets, takes up the narrative from this point. He was still climbing the barren steep, but he was alone, and he yearned "for a fellow creature, for but the hollow echo of a distant voice." It appeared to him that his effort was a ceaseless one, and that years went over him. But when he gained the crest of the hill, he seemed still to hear the sounds of battle and the cry of "Victory." Looking behind him from the summit, he saw a strange land, a vast plain, and upon it the "ruin of ungarnered harvest." A thin dust of chaff was the only thing astir, but the wind that moved this was "too light to move the dark poppies that lay in the hollows—too faint to bend an ear of that unlifted grain." Looking closer, he saw that "every here and there the sheaves had been brought together, as though the reapers had suddenly ceased from their labour, and had gone to make ready for the harvesting." His weary looking backward brought out other things also in the still retrospect; and then, "as one rousing from sleep into daylight," he turned and looked before him. Here, too, was "a vast plain that stretched beyond the scan of mortal eyes. The sunlight lay upon it, and it was glorious to look upon." The grain on this side was golden, and the young corn "green as the heart of a shallow sea." He saw neither man nor woman. "Yet evermore, from the east to the west, swept a gigantic shadow like unto a scythe; and where the shadow swept the grain fell." Clothed "in the dusk of thadow" was the mighty shape of the Reaper. Then "a terror that was of life overmastered the terror that was of death." He became aware of another and a glorious figure. "Vast was he as the Reaper; but as he fared beyond the pathway of the sun, he was as the glory and joy of eternal youth." This was the Sower. "As I watched the Sower in the blinding splendour of the sunlight, it seemed to me that he moved onward as he sowed; and it was with me as though the minutes were like unto hours, and the hours like unto days, and the days unto years, and the years unto the immeasurable wastes of eternity."

He ran with great joy down the slopes of the steep after the Sower, but at the base of the hill was a gloomy pass, and on a wall of basalt were the words, in letters of white flame, "Too Soon." Turning in despair, he climbed again the perilous steep, and had no heart, when he reached the top, "to look where the glory of the sun fell about the Sower." It then seemed to him that in the hollow land behind him was peace, and he passed "down the hill, and through the twilit waste of that ungarnered harvest." Knowing not whither he fared, or how long, he came at length to an obscure forest beyond the plain; but when he would enter it, he "saw that the growths were intricately drawn against yet another wall of black basalt. And as I stood, pondering, I beheld two mighty portals, and betwixt them a huge mass of marble like unto the tomb. And in great letters carven thereon were the words: 'Too Late.'"

This bald and meagre paraphrase of what, in Mr. Sharp's language, is full of beautiful and highly symbolic imagery, cannot give such an impression as I should like to convey of this very striking allegory; but I hope that no one who reads this feeble rendering will omit to turn to the book itself. Even this paraphrase, however, will show that "The Last Quest" is a very fine conception of the mystery of life in death. The soul cannot go back and live again in the mortal life of the body; nor can it, while its mortal associations still cling to it, enter into the full glories of the golden land towards which it looks.

In striking contrast with "The Last Quest" is a semi-dramatic piece called "Finis." Here the imagery is also that of the "hollow land" beyond the grave; but the aspect is an intensely melancholy one. There are dim avenues which lead on to utter blackness; and though the leaves fall from the trees, there is no sound, and no branch stirs. The souls of a man and a woman who had known each other in life—the man sinning and the woman suffering—meet in these dark ways, and the woman's wrongs are avenged. The scene, if such it may be called, is almost Dantesque in its grim weirdness. It is a picture which only a powerful imagination could produce; while only a poet could have made real to us, by a few suggested rather than actual touches, the tragedy of these lost souls. They pass away, and "Only from afar, in the uttermost darkness, there is a low sighing, that passeth not, that changeth not, and is as the vanishing breath of dead prayers, dead hopes, dead dreams."

The passion of love is a more or less controlling element in most of these pieces. In "The Coming of the Prince," it is the gentle passion of which everything that is pure is symbolic. It comes with—

"White dreams,
White thoughts,
White hopes!
Shy violets,
White violets,

In woodland ways, by the brook-side,
on the hill-slopes!"

In "A Northern Night" the passion of love is betrayed into something other than itself. That can hardly be said of the intense feeling which burns throughout "The Passion of Père Hilarion." For skill in the delineation of the conflicting claims of human love and divine reverence—the stormy passages of feeling which raise a man at one moment and abase him at another—this is, perhaps, the most striking composition in the volume. Though it were read only once, it would never be forgotten; but probably no one who reads it once will deny himself the strange pleasure of reading it again.

Mr. Sharp has bestowed a great deal of highly imaginative and artistic work on "The Passing of Lilith," a new and bold variation of a legend which is almost as old as humanity. The orthodox form of the legend makes Lilith the wife of Adam before the advent of Eve. In Mr. Sharp's glowing version of the story, she passes away before Adam appears. But seen through the vista of Mr. Sharp's imagination, her relations to humanity are infinitely greater than the orthodox story supposes them to have been. From Lilith's commerce with Uluel, "the fairest of the Sons of God," and with the World-Spirit, are born, in the one case, "Hopes, Aspirations, Fair Beliefs, Virtues, Glories, Joys, and Raptures"; and in the other, "Desires, Lusts, Agonies, Passions, Temptations, Sins, Shames, Sorrows, and Despairs." Eden was thus peopled with the passions that are the good and evil, the blessing and bane of man, before man himself entered upon the scene and breathed of their influence. This "vista," indeed, gives us a pre-vision of the after-world of humanity, with its higher life and its lower life. But the vision is one of remarkable beauty. The luxuriance of colour, the play of many lights, the imagery, the mysticism, the profound suggestiveness, are impressive in an altogether unusual degree. Almost as full of colour is "The Black Madonna," another highly imaginative conception, though the detail here is daring and barbaric. It is possible that in this instance Mr. Sharp intended only to present a graphic picture of terrible rites, with a very human background; but it would be easy to read into the piece a forcible satire on the hollowness of superstition and the wiles of priestcraft. "The Fallen God" is a pathetic moan of the pagan world over a faith that has had its day and ceased to be. The picture of the vast concourse of dead kings and priests, before an altar from which the god has fallen, is marvellously real in its shadowy remoteness.

The last in order of those ten "vistas," "The Lute-Player" is not unworthy to be the crowning piece of the series. In exaltation of subject, in tenderness of treatment, in beauty of suggestiveness, it is not surpassed even by "The Last Quest." It is a delightful idea to give to the Angel of Death the same power of melodious appeal that belongs to Israfel, the Angel of the Resurrection. The lute-player discourses eternal music, and there are some who, when they hear it, yield themselves to the rapture of it; and there are some to whom it conjures up only the horror of mortal separations. Of this latter sort is the lover who would fain go on through many years with the fair woman at his side; of the former is the unhappy girl Mr. Sharp pictures, who lies weary and heart-broken in an opening on the river-bridge, and longs for the end of her sorrow. The lute-player passes by, and "touches his lute to a delicate, distant melody."

"Once, with a strange reluctant fear, the girl turns; but seeing him not in the shadow, and thinking herself alone with the murmuring water, looketh no more. So subtly soft and sweet is the music stealing upon her ears, that it is as though it came from afar. Hearing it, she smells again the wild roses and the honey-suckle in the hedges; listens to the bees lazily fumbling among the red and white clover in the hot pastures, to the faint wind astir among the flowering beans, to the lowing of distant cows, to the haunting call of the cuckoo above the woodlands, where a sleepy murmur comes from the eushats' nests. But, listening entranced, the haunting strains come to her at last, not from afar, but from below, deep from the heart of the flood flowing onward for ever and ever. Suddenly a great trembling cometh upon her: and in a low voice she crieth, 'Who is there?' As from among the grasses she hears the sound of small feet running, and of a soft, low laughter. Springing downward with a cry, she hearkens the strange music, ringing in her ears wildly sweet: but as the dark waters overwhelm her, she knows nought save a horrible choking as of a suffocating child, the fierce excretions and blows of a man, and a fearful, fathomless gulf into which she is sinking as a stone into the abyss."

It would be superfluous to commend the high merit of such writing as this. And such as this, much else in the book also is. It is a book of rare excellence and real charm: a book to be read and re-read until the vistas beyond vistas which it contains have revealed their full beauty and significance.

GEORGE COTTERELL.

Life of George Herbert. (S. P. C. K.)

The Temple. With Illustrations from the Old Masters. (Seeley.)

THE Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge had a happy inspiration when it was determined to celebrate the tercentenary of George Herbert by a new biography, and upon the whole they are to be congratulated on the success of their venture. For, although the volume before us has no merits of style, and is, indeed, not so much a biography as collections towards a biography, yet the diligence in research which it displays is most praiseworthy, and what is of more importance, it has resulted in the discovery of several new particulars. The author is anonymous; if in a future edition he supplies his name, he should also supply the name of Dr. Grosart, from whose elaborate Life much is borrowed without a word of acknowledgment.

An interesting addition to our knowledge of Herbert is furnished by the discovery of the following document in the muniment room of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln:

"Institutio G. Herbert ad prebendam de Leighton Ecclesia 5 July 1626. Eodem die anno tempore et loco immediate post preces vespertinas in partiloquio in choro ecclesie. . . comparuit personaliter Petrus Walter clericus et exhibuit procuratorium suum literarie pro Georgio Herbert diacono in artibus magistro. . ."

From which it appears that Herbert, at the time of his appointment as Prebendary of Leighton Ecclesia, was already in deacon's orders. Walton indeed had asserted the fact. "That he was about that time [i.e., when the death of King James extinguished his hopes of court preferment] made deacon is most certain; for I find by the records of Lincoln that he was made Prebend of Leighton Ecclesia July 15, 1626." But to this it was objected by Dr. Grosart that prebends were not uncommonly held by laymen; and Mr. Sidney Lee, in the Dictionary of National Biography, assumes that Walton is wrong. Walton had of course not seen the entry printed above; his information was obtained from the institution register, which is now lost.

Another interesting discovery is the date of Herbert's ordination as priest. The Sarum Ordination Register is wanting from 1625 to 1640. But last April, during a careful search at the registry, some old rolls came to light, which proved to be subscriptions to the Articles by candidates for ordination in 1630. These contained both Herbert's subscription before institution to Bemerton in April, 1630, and that before ordination in September of the same year. We know, therefore, that he was still in deacon's orders when instituted, as Walton states.

But if in these interesting particulars the latest discoveries show Walton to be correct, it is fair to mention that, in the matter of the sinecure which King James is said to have granted to Herbert, Walton seems to have been mistaken. He says "it was the same that Queen Elizabeth had formerly given to her favourite Sir Philip Sydney," i.e. as Dr. Grosart was the first to point out, it was the rectory of Whitford, in the diocese of St. Asaph. The new biographer has examined the list of prebendaries of St. Asaph, and Herbert's name is not among them. Perhaps Dr. Grosart, who follows Walton, may have something to say on the matter.

There are other points on which the new Life differs from Walton; but here it is impossible to say which of the two is correct, because no authority is given for the changes introduced. The most important of these concerns Herbert's life at Westminster School. Walton says explicitly that he was commended to the care of Dr. Neale, who was then Dean of Westminster, "not long after" he had reached the age of twelve years (which would have been in 1605), having been previously instituted at home "in the rules of grammar." The new Life, without a hint that it is contradicting Walton, makes much of Herbert's having been at Westminster under the great Lancelot Andrewes, who left the deanery for a bishopric in 1604. Now, it is extremely improbable that Walton, with his passion for bishops, and his reverence for the "ever memorable and learned Bishop of Winchester," would not have carefully ascertained when the friendship between Herbert and Andrewes first began; and he states that they met first when King James visited Cambridge at the time when Herbert was Public Orator. If the new biographer has any better authority than Walton, he should produce it. Unfortunately, the records of entries at Westminster School do not begin until 1666.

A great merit of the book is in the padding. An effort is made with considerable success to realise the life of the poet in its various stages; the chapter on school life at Westminster in the seventeenth century is peculiarly interesting; and as much information as possible is collected—not from very recondite sources, and always without acknowledgment—about the poet's friends. Occasionally, perhaps, this is a little overdone; it is hard to see, for instance, what a list of the rectors of Bemerton from 1344 can have to do with George Herbert. And once or twice there are slips into foolishness, which should be removed in another edition. It is reasonable enough to treat the "Country Parson" as a description of what actually took place at Bemerton; but to turn a sentence like "His wife is either religious, or night and day he is winning her to it" into "Either his [i.e., Herbert's] wife was religious, or night and day he was winning her to God," is ludicrous. On the whole, while welcoming the book, we cannot but express our opinion that it would be much improved by having critical notes, in which authorities should be quoted, and the differences from previous biographies pointed out and established.

We may take this opportunity of calling attention to an edition of the Temple published by Messrs. Seeley, with woodcuts from religious pictures and emblems. The selection and arrangement are made with very good taste, and the text seems to be an accurate reprint of the first edition.

H. C. BEECHING.

Russia's March towards India. By An "Indian Officer." With a New Map of Central Asia. In 2 vols. (Sampson Low.)

THE unnamed author of Russia's March towards India has been pondering the Central Asian question for many years; and since no recent publication with which he is acquainted gives a clear, historical account of the Russian advance from the Ural to the Oxus, he ventures to supply the want. A list of the more important works that have engaged his attention fills a couple of pages; but it does not include Sir Henry Howorth's History of the Mongols, though this covers most of the ground he has explored. The truth is, however, that the earlier history of Russian conquest in Asia has been related in sufficient detail by a long succession of English writers, notably by the soldier-diplomatist and scholar continually referred to in these volumes as "the late Sir Henry Rawlinson," and by Mr. Schuyler; while, for later episodes, most people will be content with Mr. Curzon's two books, and the papers laid before parliament. Moreover, "Indian Officer," in his description of Russia's dealings with the Kirghiz Kazaks, and the overthrow, more or less complete, of the Usbog Khanates, is intolerably diffuse. It is difficult to feel any keen interest in the old controversies he endeavours to revive. Surely no one cares now whether General Tcherniaeff was recalled in 1866 because he exceeded instructions or because, as "Indian Officer" believes, he failed to capture Jizakh.

On the other hand, there are some points in regard to which it is exceedingly desirable that the English public should be rightly informed; and here the author is not always a trustworthy guide. For instance, after an elaborate examination of the Anglo-Russian agreement of 1873 he states that, although the subject is beset with difficulties, there are four points which remain perfectly clear. One of them, he says, is that "the Sir-i-kul district to the east of Barzila-jai and to the north of Lake Victoria belongs to China." Since "Indian Officer" mentions that the Chinese posts were re-established throughout the Sir-i-kul district in 1883, we may presume that he means Sari-kol, Lord Dunmore's "Sariq-qol," which is a considerable distance to the eastward both of Burzila-jai and of Lake Victoria. The Alichur and Great Pamirs lie in the position assigned to Sari-kol; and it would be very rash to say that these unquestionably belong to China. Curiously enough, Sari-kol is not marked in the map prefixed to the book. Another fact which "Indian Officer" considers perfectly clear is thus expressed:—

"(4) It would not be difficult to prove historically that Shignan and Darwaz have long formed a portion of the Badakshan province of Afghanistan, and the Ameer's claim to those districts cannot therefore be lightly set aside."

As regards Shignan, it would be better to say nothing till the results of the Durand Mission and of the negotiations with the Russian government are fully known; but it has always been admitted that, so far as history counts, Darwaz belongs to Bokhara.

These may seem small matters to the general reader; but it is only by applying such tests that one can estimate the value and usefulness of a book like this. To be able to write to any purpose on the Central Asian question, at this time of day, an author must either have travelled in Russian Turkestan and the countries between the English and Russian dominions, and have travelled with his eyes open, or he must be behind the scenes in politics and have access to information not accessible to the multitude. On first glancing at his work, I fancied that "Indian Officer" might be someone who could speak with the knowledge acquired by service in the Indian political department. The mistakes pointed out render this conjecture highly improbable. He appears to have compiled his historical summary from books with which every student of the subject is familiar, and to have digested the facts found therein without the aid of that special experience which would have enabled him to see where his predecessors have gone astray. Another illustration of this defective judgment may be found in the chapter about Yakub Beg and the Chinese re-conquest of Eastern Turkestan. "Indian Officer" writes:—

"By this remarkable campaign, China thoroughly vindicated her right to take her place as one of the three Great Powers of Asia, and clearly demonstrated to the startled politicians of Europe that she is a potent factor in the Central Asian question."

It was a remarkable campaign in one sense. As long as Yakub Beg lived, the Chinese "army of the west" never ventured to attack him or to cross the border of his dominion; and it was only after his death, and when his kingdom was torn by internal dissensions, that the Chinese commander plucked up courage and advanced on the capital, which was taken without firing a shot. The Chinese were only victorious because the enemy would not fight. Instead of trusting to accounts based on the ornamental and vainglorious despatches which were printed in the Pekin Gazette, "Indian Officer" should have referred to the true story of the campaign sent to the Times fourteen years ago by a correspondent at Kashgar.

The chapter on Russian movements in the Pamir region will also be found to contain several inaccuracies. For instance, "Indian Officer" gives a highly seasoned description of the fight between a Russian force and an Afghan (?) detachment at Ak-tash:

"The Afghans were told to lay down their arms and evacuate the district, and on their refusing to obey they were promptly attacked; and those who escaped from the Russian bullets were forced to disperse."

But there were no Afghans at Ak-tash, and what the Russians did was to demolish a Chinese fort there; the garrison, consisting of a dozen Chinamen, offering no resistance.

For the rest, I doubt whether the present moment is opportune for an indictment of Russian honesty, especially when the accuser is in the service of Her Majesty's Indian Government. The moral which "Indian Officer" seeks to inculcate is that Russian promises are liable to be broken, and that Russian agreements are not worth the paper they are written on. This has been said over and over again, but it is by no means certain that anything has been gained by the iteration. What we need to know is, not so much the precise value of undertakings and assurances which have never assumed the shape of a definite and clearly-worded treaty, but the amount of reliance that may be placed in the resolution and wisdom of those who are our own rulers. Russian prevarication, after all, is no excuse for English imbecility.

STEPHEN WHEELER.

NEW NOVELS.

'Lisbeth. By Leslie Keith. In 3 vols. (Cassells.)

Good Dame Fortune. By Maria A. Hoyer. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

A Woman of Heart. By Thomas Terrell. In 2 vols. (Ward & Downey.)

Old Cabel's Will. By Frances Armstrong. (Jarrold.)

Molly and her Man of War. By Dr. Arabella Kenealy. (Bentley.)

Theories. By A. N. J. A. P. (Fisher Unwin.)

Ishmael Pengelly: an Outcast. By the Rev. Joseph Hocking. (Ward, Lock & Bowden.)

Under the Yoke. By Ivan Vazoff. (Heinemann.)

What's the World Coming To? By W. Graham Moffat & John White. (Elliot Stock.)

An Innocent Impostor. By Maxwell Gray. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

'Lisbeth is well named. It is in Elizabeth Niel's fortunes we are chiefly interested, and while Mr. Keith follows them he is at his best. The girl is an attractive and a consistent creation; she embodies all that is best in Scottish character. She holds together a household brought to the verge of ruin by a self-indulgent father, a superficially pleasant fellow, whose good nature is an attractive development of selfishness; she endures the vulgarities of a legion of aunts with the resignation of a Christian martyr. In drawing Carstairs, a sensitive young author, grimly honest in his determination to acknowledge facts as they are, Mr. Keith has been successful in the main, though it seems certain that the man's Scotch common sense would have subdued his pride, and that when he was proclaimed a successful author he would have stormed the citadel of "penny-haughtiness" in which the dour baker and his brazen-faced wife held captive the woman he loved, a beautiful and refined girl, who by some odd freak of nature had been born to them. To make such a sorry crew as the Mitchell family attractive was no small achievement; but really we have too much of them. It were a stupendous task to render artistically acceptable such a family as this, with all their jealousies, banalities, and littlenesses; but when Mr. Keith conceived the idea of presenting saliently all that is most unattractive in Scottish character, forced into rank growth in the hot-bed of cockney abomination, one is tempted to believe he was taking his revenge for some extremity of suffering he has been called upon to endure at Scottish hands. Mr. Keith has convinced us that the Mitchell viragos actually exist. May heaven preserve us from meeting them in the flesh! Despite occasional degeneracy into flabbiness, the book has fine qualities: it has pathos and humour, and the plot is held well in hand.

Good Dame Fortune shows an advance on its author's first novel. To be sure, its coincidences are strained, its love-making lacks those indefinable qualities of reticence and refinement which alone render such situations possible in art; while, to suit the exigencies of her plot, Mrs. Hoyer is guilty of a good deal of shiftness in regard to the ages of her characters. Thus, William Johnson, the rich bachelor without relatives who sets out on the quest for heirs, is represented as an old man with but few years to live; but when it is necessary to give him a certain romantic aspect, we discover that he is only forty-six years of age. In seeking heirs, Johnson meets some extremely interesting persons. Berkeley, the aesthete, and Edmund Johnson, the wicked miller, are well-devised characters—indeed, the minor actors in this drama are the best drawn. For the rest, the improbabilities of this tale are not so improbable, and its thinness is not so thin as to rob it of interest.

There is a large charity about Mr. Terrell's novel, and its tone is wholesome, though it does introduce us to shady company. It contains a series of effective stage-pictures. Ruth Elliott has been a chorus girl. Bob Fenwick, a man who lives by his wits, has measured her capacity. He is instrumental in her advance, step by step, until she becomes prima donna of "The Eden." A chance introduction to John Armytage, a rising barrister and politician, seals her fate and his: she becomes his wife. Armytage has a mortal enemy, one Sparrow, a money-lender. The former is temporarily in want of money; and Fenwick, who is unable to meet bills Sparrow holds against him, is induced to get, for Sparrow, some of Armytage's paper. But Fenwick does a little business on his own account. He forges Armytage's name to the endorsement of bills, in the hope that before they become due he will be able to meet them, and so escape the vengeance of Sparrow. But luck goes against him. There is nothing left for him but to take his own life. Meanwhile relationships have become strained between Ruth and John. She has married him for position, but she now loves him. Emotional and impulsive, she yearns for love for its own sake. But the man, phlegmatic and calculating, immersed in law and politics, has grown outwardly callous; he is satisfied with possession and its fruits. On the night Fenwick has determined to shoot himself, matters have reached a crisis. Ruth has left her husband, and gone to her old lover Fenwick. Mr. Terrell conceives a fine situation. Fenwick has shot himself through the heart, and Armytage and Ruth confront each other over the body in such a way that each thinks the other guilty of murder. Sparrow is the only man who knows to the contrary; he holds the bills and a letter of confession Fenwick has posted to him. As I have said, the novel is distinctly wholesome and full of charity. I like nothing in it so well as the bringing together of husband and wife in the final scene. Here Mr. Terrell shows true chivalry. Love can wipe out everything; that is his moral. The book has a strong personal note. Sparrow is drawn from the life, and the whole army of money-lenders will wince under the author's lash; so indeed will the medical experts and sundry others. The novel is full of caustic plain-speaking and clever cynicism; it shows keen insight. Nevertheless, one cannot forgive Mr. Terrell for playing ducks and drakes with technicalities of criminal law procedure. What is the use of the layman putting himself through a heavy course of study, so that in dealing with collateral situations he shall not be found guilty of solecisms by astute barristers like Mr. Terrell, if authors who breathe the air of the law courts are to defy the unities in this way? Again, in his anxiety to satirise a recently ennobled peer, Mr. Terrell overshoots the mark. The good man is represented as seeking for an escutcheon dating from the Norman conquest; but Mr. Terrell ought to know that heraldry in England dates from a much later period. Moreover, his incidental criticism of Norwegian literature is cheap, unbecoming, and superfluous; but small faults like these do not detract from the high merits of the book. The "Second Mrs. Tanqueray" is in many regards the fine comedy criticism has agreed to pronounce it; but Mr. Terrell's treatment of a like theme is far more effective.

It would be easy to be scornful at the expence of Miss Frances Armstrong. Her book is a temperance tract, expanded into 256 pages. It often offends our prejudices. None the less the story is interesting, and the characters are not without vitality. Many readers will follow the fortunes of the lad who falls so opportunely into the hands of old Cabel Johnstone, and who is instrumental in reclaiming his reprobate son. Moreover, the lesson the book enforces sadly needs enforcing, and Miss Armstrong lends effective aid to the cause she has at heart.

To leave Old Cabel's Will for Molly and her Man-of-War is a step from the grave to the gay. Rollicking fun and humour onliven every page of Miss Kenealy's book; and one cannot help wishing that all modern women, who believe in the potentialities and rights of their sex, took their creed in this healthy, lightsome fashion. Miss Kenealy is a daring satirist; sometimes she is a savage one. One would advise all and sundry, especially underbred British consuls, to mind their p's and q's should chance throw them in the way of this peripatetic lady. The book sails near the wind, but its author's tact saves her. What would be vulgar in ninety-and-nine persons may be distinguished in the hundredth. The story is an antidote for the "blues." Whatever heralds and aesthetes may say to the cover, the happy thought which suggested the quartering of the British and American flags may be taken as emblematic of the many happy thoughts the volume contains.

Somewhat confused and halting in its reasoning, Theories attempts to deal with the problems of woman's awakening and man's prejudice, without taking sides. But Beatrice is obviously drawn from the life: the transcript is far too literal. Art must give coherence to the scratchy and patchy, the torn edges: in other words, to the innumerable contradictions of individual character. To do this effectively, liberal pruning and rigorous compression are necessary, and such are among the methods of the great artist. Beatrice is one of those elegant triflers with social problems who prefer dialectic to acts. Had she been in any way consistent, she would not have married the young squire, but would have joined her life with the Socialist doctrinaire, his soiled linen and dropped aspirates notwithstanding. But she was not prepared to throw her personal refinement as a leaven into the seething cauldron of humanity. And who shall blame her? "Like and unlike can ne'er be equal powers." Still, she need not have made an honest man miserable and herself ridiculous. She was quite unfit for the rough and tumble work of a practical propagandist; she was too womanly to unsex herself, too selfishly egoistic to play the part for which alone she was fit. The world is stocked to the brim just now with pasteboard heroines of this brand. Such women as Beatrice do more harm to the good cause they would serve than is wrought by any amount of masculine opacity and opposition.

Mr. Hocking has a keen eye for dramatic effect; his ingenuity has its limitations, but these will not be discerned by the ordinary reader, who will also accept his bold generalisations. It may be admitted, however, that his leading deduction, that hate is hell and love is heaven, is sound enough. Ahaz Penwithen has been robbed of the estate which in the ordinary way of inheritance should have been his. His cousin, Michael Penrose, wills it to his kinswoman, Judith Stone. Reuben, son of Ahaz, makes false love to Judith, and obtains the will. On the death of Michael, he renounces Judith. In course of time, Ishmael, Judith's son, appears on the scene, intent on recovering the will, and thereby the estate. After many long years of watching and waiting, he succeeds; but he has lost his heart irrevocably to Grace Penwithen, Reuben's daughter, and his triumph turns to Dead Sea fruit in his mouth. The characters are admirably drawn, especially those of Reuben, Judith, and Ishmael. We forgive many improbable incidents and strained coincidences, but we cannot forgive certain organic faults. Reuben's preservation of the will is ridiculous—the man's superstition cannot account for it; while Ishmael's ignorance of Grace's identity with Reuben's daughter is more than absurd—he had been watching her father's house for years. A little ingenuity would have got over these glaring inconsistencies. The will should have been lost. Grace and Ishmael should have met in a part of the country remote from Penwithen. The inherent looseness of reason which makes Mr. Hocking imagine he has made out an unanswerable case in favour of his creed beguiles him into glozing over improbabilities of this kind. All the same, he has written an extremely vigorous, healthful, and interesting tale.

The first Bulgarian novel translated into English whets our appetite for more, and it will not be difficult to agree with Mr. Edmund Gosse's enthusiastic forewords in its praise. As a work of art, Under the Yoke is a notable production; as a record, by one who speaks with authority, of the stirring events which preceded the deliverance of Bulgaria, it is valuable. It cannot be said that M. Ivan Vazoff is inclined to veil the faults, the pusillanimity of his countrymen. The tale is an epic, but with all its pathos it does not lack humour. There is a singularly close resemblance between Vazoff's method and that of the great Italian naturalistic fictionist, De Amicis. The same fault mars both authors. There is an over-elaboration of detail, and the stage is crowded with superfluous and troublesome figures.

The well-advised will skip the first seventy pages of Messrs. Moffat and White's romance of the twenty-first century, and thereby escape a wearisome farrago of pseudo-scientific nonsense, in which phonographs, telephones, and tele-phonographs work their ugly will unfettered. When the areonef has once taken to the air, brisker business begins. The rescue of the shipwrecked mariners, the kingdom of civilised monkeys, and the various vagaries of "an age of electric buttons and automatic machinery" are moderately well presented. It is a relief to find that the women of the twenty-first century, although they have attained their rights, have not degenerated into epicene abnormalities. Sometimes the book is really amusing and satirical; but as often its fun is of too lugubrious a kind to cheer, while its erotic passages are suggestive of the love-making of present-day suburbs.

Maxwell Gray's short stories are interesting. "An Innocent Impostor" recalls the meeting of the claimant to the Tichborne baronetcy with Lady Tichborne. It is a pity the author does not explain that a hasty reference to a court directory led Auriol Chester to intrude himself upon strangers. Moreover, it is absurd to make a level-headed man act like a Quixotic idiot, handing over a large sum of money to a disappointed and worthless rival. Few baronetcies—that is to say, old ones—could stand such a charge upon them as £60,000. "A Glass of Cold Water" has many points of resemblance with Mrs. W. K. Clifford's "Wild Proxy." "The Hansom Cab" is excellent fooling; but "The Vengeance of the Sea," a simple little idyll, is the best of the series.

JAMES STANLEY LITTLE.

SOME BIOGRAPHICAL BOOKS.

Frederic Hill: an Autobiography of Fifty Years in Times of Reform. Edited by his Daughter, Constance Hill. (Bentley.) This is an interesting book. The editor has chosen as the motto for her father's life Wolsey's words to Cromwell:

"Let all the ends thou aim'st at be thy country's, Thy God's, and truth's."

The quotation is apt. Frederic Hill is the surviving member of a distinguished brotherhood; but not one even of that famous "league of brothers," Matthew, Rowland, Edwin, and Arthur Hill, rendered greater services to the public. The chief work of his life was penal reform. He was appointed an inspector of prisons in Scotland in 1835, and pushed on the work of reform there until 1847, when he received a similar appointment in England. The results of his work in Scotland are briefly and modestly summarised on p. 256 of this autobiography. It is sometimes urged against social reformers that they are indifferent to economy. This certainly cannot be said of Frederic Hill. At the time he quitted Scotland he had by wise management so reduced the cost of prisons that, while the average cost per head of each prisoner in England exceeded £25, in Scotland it was only £16. He was the first to suggest the indeterminate sentence, and his brother Matthew (the Recorder of Birmingham) vigorously supported him. The indeterminate sentence has been adopted by several of the American states, such as Massachusetts and Ohio, and was introduced at the state reformatory of Elmira, New York, by an Act passed in 1877. This Act took from the courts the power of definitely fixing the period of confinement in prisons until, in the opinion of the managers of the reformatory, they may be let out on parole for a probationary period of six months. The Recorder of Birmingham would have carried the principle to its logical extent; and, should the discipline of the gaol not produce the desired effect on the character of the prisoner, he would have detained him for the term of his natural life. He would as soon have set loose a caged wolf as an unreformed burglar. But the English nation would not allow even a criminal to be imprisoned for a term not limited by statute. This is one of the penalties we pay to keep intact our civil liberty. There was much in Frederic Hill's aims and aspirations that reminds us of General Oglethorpe. The General had the advantage of influence obtained through a long parliamentary career, but Frederic Hill had the advantage of never-failing brotherly advice and sympathy. "The union of my children," wrote the father of Frederic Hill, "has proved their strength." The Hill brothers had similar tastes, as well as similar opinions. At one of the Christmas gatherings at Bruce Castle, a plot was laid to inquire privately of each brother which of Sir Walter Scott's novels he preferred. All five answered Old Mortality. We have spoken of Frederic Hill's useful career, but there are many readers who would consider the less strictly autobiographical portion of the book the more interesting. The first three chapters deal with social life in the Midlands at the beginning of the century. Mr. Frederic Hill is probably the only man now living who saw Dr. Parr. He quotes two of his bon mots, which illustrate the Doctor's courage and his wit. On one occasion a young man was laying down the law against flogging, when the Doctor cried out, "Sir, it is flogging which makes the scholar, it is flogging which makes the soldier, it is flogging which makes the statesman, and it is the want of flogging which makes you—what you are." On another occasion soon after the riots in which Dr. Priestley's house had been gutted by a "Church and King" mob, the toast of "Church and King" was proposed at a public dinner. Dr. Parr had the courage to turn his glass upside down, and to exclaim in a loud voice, "I will not drink that toast; it means a Church without the Gospel, and a king above the law." This autobiography is written in an easy, conversational style, and can be warmly recommended.

Recollections of Life and Work. By Louisa Twining. (Edward Arnold.) Women who take part in public life may be divided into two classes—the workers and the talkers. Miss Twining belongs to the former category. It would, therefore, not be reasonable to expect her reminiscences to be lively; but what we regret is that Miss Twining has not devoted more of her pages to her own philanthropic experiences. We should like to have heard more of workhouses and women guardians, and less of matters which are absolutely devoid of public interest. For instance, she gravely informs us that her father's man servant,

"Thomas Patey," "wore a white livery with black velvet breeches and white stockings." A lady who accomplished such good work as Miss Twining did, need scarcely have recorded such trivialities as these. Like all workers in the cause of the destitute, Miss Twining must have met with her disappointments. Sir Walter Crofton opened a home for discharged female prisoners in Queen-square. Miss Twining took some of them on trial:

"It was a curious experience during the next two years, but hardly a satisfactory one, though made with every advantage, for I had a good and respectable elderly cook, to whom these poor women became much attached, and but little difficulty was met with during the first three months, when they were not allowed to leave the house. But when the fatal day came for the long-looked-for holiday, and we were obliged to let them go out into the temptations of the London streets, great was the anxiety and fear as to the time and mode of their return. Suffice it to say that hardly one was found able to stand the test, or come back as we hoped and desired."

Miss Twining may with justice say that she has not neglected her opportunities.

Sir Robert N. Fowler, Bart., M.P. By J. S. Flynn. (Hodder & Stoughton.) This is a memoir of the late member for the City of London, who was also twice its Lord Mayor, written by one of his sons-in-law. Robert Nicholas Fowler was born of Quaker parentage in 1828; but when thirty years of age he resigned his membership of the Society of Friends. He took this step because he held views on the union of Church and State opposed to those of the Society. We are told that his withdrawal caused no estrangement with the friends of his early years. He was always a Conservative. This was very unusual in a Quaker of the first half of the century, and may have been partially due to his mother and her brother, Mr. Daniel Waterhouse. In 1865 he contested what was then a hopeless seat for a Conservative—the City of London. In 1868 he was returned for Falmouth with the late Mr. Eastwick, one of the few Conservative successes of that election. In 1874, when the country at large gave a Conservative majority, the fickle electorate of Falmouth sent up two Liberals. In 1880 Mr. Fowler was elected as one of the members for the City, and retained the seat until his death in 1891. In 1885 he for a second time filled the post of Lord Mayor and received a baronetcy. Such in brief are the main facts of the late Sir Robert's life—a life of unvaried prosperity and usefulness. The present memoir is largely based on thirty-eight volumes of diaries and "several hampers of letters." Judging from the extracts, these diaries can scarcely have proved easy reading. It is not given to everyone who keeps a diary to be a Pepys. Sir Robert was an able man, but the perusal of his diaries leaves a flavour of the self-sufficiency of the diarist behind them. His references to Unitarians (not Jews) do not betoken a catholic spirit. However, we wish to do no injustice to a typical Englishman; and therefore we close this brief notice by endorsing Mr. Gladstone's description of Sir Robert as a "frank, bold, and courageous opponent."

Women Writers: their Works and Ways. Second Series. By Catherine J. Hamilton. (Ward, Lock & Bowden.) The first series of Women Writers was reviewed at some length in the ACADEMY; and, as we believe ample justice was then done to the unpretentious excellence of Miss Hamilton's work, the present volume may not unfairly be treated with comparative brevity. Miss Hamilton is working through her feminine authors in chronological order. She began her earlier volume with Frances Burney, and finished it with the Countess of Blessington. In the new book the first name is that of Mrs. Hemans, the last that of Louisa May Alcott; and as the year of Mrs. Hemans's birth was 1793, the time covered is, roughly speaking, a century, closing with the year of publication. The memoirs are twelve in number, five of them being devoted to poets—Mrs. Hemans, Letitia Elizabeth Landon, Mrs. Norton, Mrs. Browning, and Adelaide Anne Proctor; five to novelists or story-tellers—Fredrika Bremer, Mrs. Gaskell, Charlotte Brontë, George Eliot, and Miss Alcott; and two to critical and miscellaneous writers—Mrs. Jameson and Harriet Martineau. It will be noticed that the only foreign writer included is Miss Bremer, for we cannot reckon Miss Alcott as such; and that the much more noteworthy George Sand is omitted, probably because the story of the life of the author of Consuelo is hardly for the young person, though that of George Eliot, which also had its difficult episode, is told with all needful explicitness, and yet without possibility of offence to the most sensitive puritanism. The only names the absence of which seems really regrettable are those of Jane Taylor and Margaret Fuller. True, neither has left behind her anything of permanent importance, but both were exceptionally interesting women; and what is, perhaps, even more to the purpose, the lives of both had a literary background which would lend itself readily to artistic treatment. One pleasant characteristic of this volume, as of its predecessor, is its obvious carefulness. Miss Hamilton may be a book-maker, but she is one of the better, not of the baser sort. Now and then she shows that her reading is not quite up to date, as when she repeats the old mistake of giving 1809, instead of 1806, as the year of Mrs. Browning's birth; and occasionally, as in her detestable use of "first-class" as an adjective, she lapses into commonness of phrasing. But the reader feels that the writer is really taking pains to secure accuracy of statement and correctness of style, and this feeling contributes not a little to his enjoyment. Of course, concerning most of the writers dealt with, a good deal has previously been written, yet even fairly well-informed readers are likely to find in one or other of the papers something which will be new to them. The present writer, at any rate, has found something which is new to him in the story of the alienation of Lady Byron from Mrs. Jameson:

"She [Mrs. Jameson] accidentally became acquainted with a secret about one of Lady Byron's family which Lady Byron herself did not know. When Lady Byron heard of this, and of Mrs. Jameson's previous knowledge of it, her stern temper was roused, and, in spite of their great friendship, she and Mrs. Jameson never met again. Mrs. Jameson, sensitive and proud, suffered acutely; she frequently said that Lady Byron had 'broken her heart.'"

It is not a pleasant story; and in the interest of Lady Byron's reputation it would be well for one of her friends to discredit it, should it be possible to do so. Miss Hamilton is certainly not an ill-natured writer, and, indeed, her criticism would sometimes be all the more instructive were it a shade more discriminating. Still, what is wanted by the reader of such a book as this is a good general idea of a writer's work, and this he gets.

Women of Renown. By G. Barnett Smith. (W. H. Allen.) This book of nineteenth century studies is pleasant reading. It cannot be said to contain new facts or to give new suggestions; but the lives are well selected, and the stories well told. Mr. Barnett Smith is nothing if not catholic in his tastes. Fredrika Bremer, Lady Morgan, George Eliot, and George Sand represent literature, Marguerite Countess of Blessington, and Lady Hester Stanhope adventures, Mrs. Somerville science, Jenny Lind music, Rachel the stage, and Miss Carpenter philanthropy. The most interesting notice is perhaps that of Rachel, though to those familiar with Mrs. Kennard's book it contains little that is original. The greed of the great actress has become a by-word, but the author reminds us of her generosity to her own race. We especially recommend this book on account of its healthy moral tone. The private lives of some of the author's heroines have not been above reproach, but he handles the subject with tact and delicacy.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MR. ANDREW LANG will shortly publish, with Messrs. Longmans, a new volume of poems, to be called Ban and Arrière Ban: a Rally of Fugitive Rhymes. This is addition to a prose volume of essays on Ghosts.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN & Co. will publish before Easter The Diary of a Cavalry Officer in the Peninsular and Waterloo Campaigns, being the diary of Lieut.-Col. William Tomkinson, of the 16th Light Dragoons, edited by his son, Mr. James Tomkinson, of Wellington-hall, Tarporley. The diary covers the period from April 1809 to Christmas Day, 1815, and affords a trustworthy record of events written at the time and on the scenes described, and is said to have considerable value as a tactical study. It is published under the advice of Lord Wolseley and Sir Evelyn Wood, and will be illustrated with five maps and three etchings, including one of the author's charger, "Bob."

ALMOST one half of Big Game Shooting in the "Badminton Library" is devoted to Southern Africa. In the course of the present month we are to have two more books upon sport in the less known parts of that continent: Two Months' Sport in Somaliland, by Lord Wolveston; and Big Game Shooting in the Congo Free State. Both of these will be published by Messrs. Chapman & Hall.

THE second series of The Diplomatic Reminiscences of Lord Augustus Loftus is now in a forward state of preparation, and will be published shortly in two volumes by Messrs. Cassell & Company. In these volumes Lord Augustus deals with his residence at the Court of Bavaria (1862-66), his embassy at Berlin (1866-71), and his embassy at St. Petersburg (1872-79).

MR. DAVID NUTT will publish shortly: The Traditional Games of England, Scotland, and Ireland, with tunes, singing-rhymes, and methods of playing according to the variants extant, and recorded in different parts of the kingdom, collected and annotated by Alice Bertha Gomme, vol. i. (vol. ii. to be issued this year), forming the first section of a projected "Dictionary of British Folk-lore"; The First Nine Books of the Danish History of Saxo Grammaticus, translated by Oliver Elton, Lecturer on English Literature at the Owens College, with some considerations on Saxo's sources, historical methods, and folk-lore, by F. York Powell, issued conjointly with the Folk-lore Society, of which it forms the extra volume for 1893; Lyrics and Idylls of the Nile, by Canon H. D. Rawnsley; Selected Sonnets of Anthero de Quental, together with the poet's autobiography, translated from the Portuguese by Edgar Prestage; W. H. Widgery: Schoolmaster, a selection from his writings, with a Memoir by W. K. Hill; Wolfram von Eschenbach Parzival, translated for the first time into English by Jessie Weston, with notes and appendices upon Wolfram's presentation of the Grail legend, upon his sources, and upon the connexion of his versions with the history of the Angevin princely house; and Studies and Essays in Biblical Archaeology and Semitic Folk-lore, by Mr. Joseph Jacobs.

MESSRS. JAMES PARKER & Co., of Oxford, will publish in this country the collection of "Anecdota Maredsolana," of which the second volume has just appeared. This series consists of ancient ecclesiastical documents, edited by the Benedictines of the Abbey of Maredsous, in Belgium. The first volume was the so-called Liber Comicus, or liturgical lessons in use in the Visigothic Church of the seventh century, from a unique MS. in the Bibliothèque Nationale. The second, of still greater interest, is a very ancient Latin version of the Epistle of Clement to the Corinthians, the existence of which was unsuspected until Father Morin was fortunate enough to discover it in a library at Namur. The MS., which is of the twelfth century, is complete and well preserved; and its text is independent of those hitherto known, in two Greek MSS. and a Syriac version. Future volumes of the series will contain unpublished works of Jerome.

THE sermons on social subjects which are now being delivered in the church of St. Edmund, will be published by Mr. Elliot Stock, under the title of Lombard Street in Lent; each sermon will be especially revised by the preacher.

MESSRS. HENRY & Co. will issue immediately a humorous work by Mr. F. Norreys Connell, entitled In the Green Park, with illustrations by Mr. T. H. Townsend.

MESSRS. RICHARD BENTLEY & SON have in the press an Index to the titles of all the articles which have appeared in Temple Bar since 1860.

SINCE Mr. Heinemann became the publisher of the North American Review in this country, the interests of English readers seem to have been more liberally consulted. In the programme of the forthcoming number we notice the following: "The House of Representatives and the House of Commons," by a member of President Cleveland's Cabinet; "The Outlook for War in Europe," by Mr. Archibald Forbes; "A Naval Union with Great Britain," by Sir G. S. Clarke; "Prisons in the Old World and the New," by Major Griffiths; "Dramatic Criticism," by Mr. Bram Stoker; "Village Life in England," by the Countess of Malmesbury; and "The New Aspect of the Woman Question," by Sarah Grand.

MRS. VERE CAMPBELL'S novel, The Shibboleth, just published by Messrs. Ward & Downey, is the original of a play by the same author, entitled "Rizpah Misery," which is now being acted in the provinces by Mr. Hermann Vezin and Miss Laura Johnson.

MESSRS. BICKERS & SON announce a new edition of the late Miss Naden's Poems, complete in one volume, with an introduction on "Unity of Thought and Thing," by Dr. Lewins.

MR. LEWIS MORRIS will deliver a lecture at the London Institution, on Monday next, at 5 p.m., on "The Present and Future of Poetry in England."

AT the meeting of the Elizabethan Society, to be held at Toynbee Hall, Commercial-street, on Wednesday next, at 8 p.m., a paper will be read by Mr. Sidney Lee, entitled "New Facts about Marlowe."

NEXT Friday, Messrs. Sotheby will begin the sale of a number of books and MSS., brought together from various quarters. Among the MSS., we may specially mention the holograph of Scott's Life of Napoleon, which comes direct from Abbotsford; a collection of letters, &c., relating to Tasso, some of which are alleged to be in the handwriting of the poet; a series of sixty-four letters of Southey; and several holograph MSS. of Wilkie Collins. The books include—a box of them from Napoleon's library at St. Helena; a set of original editions of Dickens, in sixty volumes, uniformly bound; the second folio of Shakspeare; a Stobaeus that once belonged to Ben Jonson; and a presentation copy of The Rambler, which is stated to be first of any such by Dr. Johnson that has come under the notice of the auctioneers. Mr. A. Lang may like to know of a volume of contemporary cuttings, prints, &c., relating to the Cock-lane Ghost.

A MEETING of the Edinburgh Bibliographical Society was held on Thursday, February 22, when Mr. G. H. Aldis read a paper on "Thomas Finlason, the earliest and one of the most important Edinburgh printers of the seventeenth century." The connexion between this press and that of Waldegrave and others of the older printers was traced and illustrated by books from the several presses. A number of Finlason's books were also exhibited, illustrating his career from 1604 to 1627, in which year he died.

MESSRS. METHUEN & Co. have published a second volume of the Speeches and Public Addresses of W. E. Gladstone, edited by A. W. Hutton and H. J. Cohen. The whole work is apparently to consist of ten volumes, of which Vol. X. (the last in chronological order) appeared about two years ago. The present is Vol. IX. covering the period from April, 1886, to May, 1888: that is to say, the introduction of the first Home Rule Bill, and the opposition to the Criminal Law Amendment (Ireland) Act. But the interest is not wholly political; for we have also the address delivered at Hawarden on the occasion of the Queen's Jubilee. In view of the prospective embarrassment of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, special interest now attaches to two financial utterances in this volume, in which Mr. Gladstone (1) protests against inroads upon the sinking fund, or sum annually set apart for the reduction of the national debt, and (2) advocates the equalisation of the duties levied after death upon real and personal property. The book is handsomely printed; but the work of the editors is not so apparent as to justify the slow rate of publication. To prefix the same meagre headnote to the first speeches argues laziness; and on page 365 (line 7 from foot) we are convinced that the words "12 per cent" must be erroneous, for they contradict the main argument.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE Master and Fellows of Balliol College, as the legal representatives of the late Prof. Jowett, have requested Mr. Evelyn Abbott, Fellow of the College, to be responsible for the preparation of the biography of the late Master, with whom he had been in especially close intercourse for the last twenty years. Mr. Abbott will have the valuable assistance of Prof. Lewis Campbell, and also of Lord Bowen, Visitor of the College. Old friends and pupils of the Master, who are able to communicate any letters or other matters of biographical interest, are invited to send particulars of them forthwith to Mr. Abbott.

ON Tuesday next, the University of Cambridge will confer the honorary degree of Doctor of Science on Señor Ramón y Cajal, professor of histology at Madrid, who comes to England to deliver the Croonian Lecture before the Royal Society on March 8.

IN Convocation at Oxford next Tuesday, it will be proposed to confer the degree of M.A., "by decree of the house," upon Dr. Joseph Wright, deputy professor of comparative philology, who received the honorary degree of M.A. two or three years ago.

EMERITUS Professor Campbell Fraser has been appointed Gifford Lecturer at Edinburgh for the academical years 1894-96, in succession to Prof. Pfeleiderer. We may add that Prof. Pfeleiderer delivered a public lecture at Manchester College, Oxford, on Wednesday of this week, on "The Primitive Christian Community and the Beginning of the Faith of the Church."

THE following have been elected to honorary fellowships at St. John's College, Cambridge:—(1) Bishop Ellicott, formerly Hulsean lecturer and Hulsean professor, chairman of the New Testament Revision Company, and author of a grammatical and critical Commentary on St. Paul's Epistles; (2) the Rev. Joseph Bickersteth Mayor, Hon. Litt.D., Dublin, late tutor of the college, emeritus professor at King's College, London, late editor of the Classical Review (1887-1893), and author of an edition of Cicero de Natura Deorum, and of a Commentary on the Epistle of St. James.

PROF. BURDON SANDERSON and Mr. T. Pridgin Teale, M.B., will represent the University of Oxford at the international medical congress to be held at Rome on March 29.

THE Rev. Dr. C. H. H. Wright, Grinfield Lecturer at Oxford, will deliver his terminal lecture next Wednesday on "The Septuagint Version of the Book of Daniel."

ON Friday of this week, Mr. W. R. Morfill, reader in Slavonic at Oxford, was to deliver a public lecture, at the Taylor Institution, on Serbian Ballad Poetry."

PROF. EDWARD CAIRD, the new master of Balliol, has already undertaken the office of examiner in the final classical school at Oxford.

THE subscriptions to the Hert memorial fund at Cambridge now amount to over £1000. It is proposed to apply the income in making grants to any person engaged in Biblical, Hellenistic, or patristic research, or for the promotion of any undertaking connected with those departments of study.

AT a combined meeting of the Philological and Ancient History Societies at Oxford, held on Friday of this week, Mr. J. A. R. Munro was to read a paper upon his archaeological exploration of the site of Doclea, in Montenegro, last autumn.

ABSTRACTS of the accounts of all the colleges at Cambridge are published in a supplement to the University Reporter. We observe that there is no uniformity in the period covered. The first college submits its accounts for the year ended Michaelmas, 1892; the second, for the year ended September 29, 1893; the third, for the year ended Michaelmas, 1893; the fourth furnishes an abstract of "receipts and disbursements brought to account in the year 1893"; and so on. Downing alone gives details for the two calendar years, 1892 and 1893. In the latter year the amount divided among the head and (six) fellows was nil.

LORD PLAYFAIR has selected "The Modern Needs of Scientific Teaching" as the title of his address to the students of the London Society for the Extension of University Teaching, at the annual meeting, to be held at the Mansion House, on Saturday next, March 10.

LAFAYETTE COLLEGE, Pennsylvania, has conferred the degree of Doctor of Letters honoris causa on Prof. Max Müller, on the occasion of his fifty years' jubilee as Doctor in the University of Leipzig.

THE lectures on Pastoral Theology, delivered in the Divinity School at Cambridge, last Easter term, by Prebendary Gibson, have been published in a little volume by the S.P.C.K. The title is, Self-Discipline, in relation to the Life and Work of a Priest.

TRANSLATION.

FROM THE PORTUGUESE OF ALICE MODERNO.

In search of the Ideal that long I've cried
For to relieve my cruel nostalgia,
I gaily climbed an azure galley's side
To plough the sea-plains of Utopia.

The sun, that beamed full bright, for many a year
Did nought but show us pitiless a wide
Extent of wave, until, one morning clear,
Behold the ship cast anchor in the tide.

I hastened to the bow and saw an isle,
Far off, delusive, yet a stately pile
And wondrous, raised by the Creator's hand.

I scanned the chart, but out the skipper came;
"Tis fruitless, for Chimera is its name,
Its city Dreams, from where Love rules the land!"

EDGAR PRESTAGE.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

IN the Boletín of the Real Academia de la Historia for February, Dr. E. Hübner reviews favourably E. Cartaihab's "Monuments primitifs des îles Baléares." He considers the talayots to be sepulchres, and the primitive population Iberian. There are two papers on the Cuevas de Olihueta, near Toledo. The Vizconde de Palazuelos maintains that they are merely ancient quarries; Señor Moraleda asserts that they are Christian catacombs. Sanchez Moguel, in "España y Camoens," treats of the influence of Italian on Spanish and Portuguese poetry; Spaniards and Portuguese, however, substituted the historical epic in place of the chivalrous epic of fable of the Italians. The patriotism of Camoens embraced the whole peninsula, and was not confined to Portugal. The same writer points out errors in fact and date in a recently-placed inscription in the Aljaferia of Zaragoza, to commemorate Sta. Isabel of Portugal. Padre Fita prints, with useful additions, a brief chronicle of the kings of Navarre, by Dr. Juan de Jasso. Fernandez Duro has a sharp reply to Captain Gambier's article on "The True Discovery of America" in the Fortnightly Review. The cartographer, Jehan Cossin, of 1570, cannot be the Captain Cousin of 1488. The important Valencian codex, "Lo Consulat de Mar," will soon be published. In a note Padre Fita connects the word gasalia = cheptel found in Languedoc (twelfth century), and in Galicia (seventh century), with the German gesells; thus historically dating back to the Wisigoths in both places.

THE TEACHING UNIVERSITY FOR LONDON.

WHILE Wales, by dint of a little political squeezing, has got its university, and the State endowment of it also, London, with as many thousand students as Wales has hundreds, has at last a new official scheme, and with it probably a renewal of all the old controversies and endless discussions.

If there be anything which will give this scheme a better chance than its predecessors, it will be the general feeling of weariness at the whole subject, and the conviction that, if this scheme be rejected, the whole matter will rest for ten or twenty years. One of the Commissioners—whose characteristic attitude of seeing both sides of a question, and ever remaining balanced on the fence, is well illustrated by a Note to the Report—remarks that he has thought it right to sign the Report—

"because I think it on the whole preferable that a university—in the ordinary sense—should be established in London with as little delay as possible, even on a basis which I regard as ill-chosen, rather than that the question should be launched de novo on an indefinite period of agitation, discussion, and negotiation. Holding this opinion, I should have refrained from arguing publicly this fundamental question, on which I disagree with the majority of my colleagues, had it not seemed to me that a clear view of the disadvantages and dangers involved on the basis here proposed would be in any case of service to those who will actually have to construct and administer the new university."

We propose, therefore, to point out some of the disadvantages of the new scheme, not with a view of launching the question "de novo on an indefinite period of agitation"—we have, in fact, as little power of assisting or checking that as the said Commissioner himself—but in the hope that criticism may influence those who will have to deal with the scheme hereafter, should it survive long enough to be actually carried into execution.

We can best examine what has to be said against the scheme by first referring to the points raised in the dissentient notes at the end of the report. Commissioners Barry, Savory, Humphry, Palmer, and Rendall cannot agree with the proviso "forbidding the grant of money for any purpose in respect of which any privilege is granted or disability imposed on account of religious belief." Canon Browne agrees with them, so far as the proviso goes beyond the principle of the Universities' Tests Acts. The Note has a reference to "efficiency" as being the proper condition of assistance from the public funds; and the dissentients hope that no disability to apply this "most equitable principle" will be imposed upon the new university "which it has been our endeavour to make strong, free, and comprehensive." It is needless to say that these fine words absolutely obscure the real point at issue. The question is simply this: Shall any constituent School of the University receive support from university funds so long as it limits its field for selecting teachers to a particular denomination? There can, in the present state of public opinion, be but one answer to this question; and that is, the proviso inserted by the majority of the Commissioners.

The next point to be noticed is that raised by Bishop Barry and Prof. Henry Sidgwick: namely, the difficulty of combining the present purely examining functions of Burlington House with the teaching functions of a true university. It will, perhaps, be remembered that the scheme of the Association for promoting a Professorial University took refuge in a compromise: there was, "if possible," to be one university for London, and many subscribers to that scheme added, "but, it is quite impossible." This point is put with great force by Prof. Sidgwick. He argues that since "the prevalent system of the civilised world" is that teachers should examine those they teach, and that since this is a fundamental condition for the best academic teaching, the examinations of the new university, if they are to reach a high level, will have to be separate for internal and external students; but that these two sets of examinations must ultimately give two degree standards, and thus lead to continual trouble and friction. Mr. Anstey somewhat naively argues in opposition to this view that, since the university will have several distinct teaching institutions, and since there is a great deal of "common matter" in pass examinations, there will therefore be a standard set which will suit external students. Here, in truth, are the Scylla and Charybdis of the latest scheme! That scheme undoubtedly throws the balance of power in questions of examination into the hands of the teachers. Convocation is reduced to comparative impotence. But will Convocation, with its glorious rôle of "protecting" private students and correspondence colleges, submit to be thus extinguished? Under the new scheme, the present Senate of Burlington House practically disappears. Our dear old dilettanti educationists, the doctor and the conveyancer, will bid their old haunts adieu,* sadly, but perhaps in a spirit of self-sacrifice. But can anything of the same kind be expected of Convocation? We hardly imagine it. The noisier section of the present graduates and the private coaches are not likely to remain quiescent. As for the country colleges, they will "lie low": the injustice to them will be in the future the best possible argument in favour of the creation of additional universities. Prof. Sidgwick's decided opposition to the fundamental principle on which the scheme is framed—its "ill-chosen basis"—Bishop Barry's "absolute disagreement" with the "fatal combination" of imperial examining and local teaching functions, which will give to the degree of the new university "an ambiguity of meaning fatal to its value as an educational test," are likely to be used rather as weapons for Convocation to destroy any scheme, than as reasons for establishing an independent university.

Indeed, the body of the Report does not in the least meet the examination difficulty, unless the bulk of the Commissioners have tacitly recognised that the work of the new university will be so important that that of the old examining body may be rightly sacrificed to it. The Commissioners appear fairly in doubt as to whether an academic examination ought to be a test of a knowledge of facts, or of mental development. They go so far (p. xiii.) as to suggest that the former is suitable for pass students and elementary examinations, while the individuality of the teacher is only to come into play in the higher and more progressive departments of study.

"In the more elementary stages of any subject, and in subjects of exact knowledge where the demand for original and suggestive treatment is less urgent, it will be less necessary to provide against any danger of fettering the special individuality of the teacher."

Now it is precisely in the elementary teaching that the real power and character of a born teacher appears. Some of the leading Scottish and German professors insist upon starting with the very elements of their subject, as the only way of rightly training and developing minds which are to travel with them into higher regions. Especially in the exact sciences is the "demand for original and suggestive treatment most urgent." The examination as a test of knowledge of facts is essentially the professional and not the academic examination. It may be absolutely necessary for a professional licence of any kind; but to assert that it is the best thing for pass students seems to us to ignore the aim of academic education, which is not to impart facts, but to make the mind a ready instrument of thought. The Commissioners, however, repeatedly speak of examinations as tests of "knowledge"; and after apparently accepting the view that the higher and not the elementary branches of a subject require the individuality of the teacher to have full play, they conclude by leaving the earlier examinations for degrees to the individual colleges and teachers, but demand for the final examination for degrees that it should require "the same standard of knowledge" for both classes of students, internal and external. This conclusion is based on the existence of the two classes of students, and of the number of independent institutions which are to be embraced in the University. It is hard to conceive a more impotent result. The question is not, or ought not to be, one of the "same standard of knowledge" at all: it is one of the standard of mental development; and this can never be ascertained by the same system of examination for internal and external students, and for institutions possessing entirely different educational ideas and methods. This is the Charybdis which awaits this scheme, as it threatens every scheme which preserves the autonomy of the numerous institutions seeking to be embraced in the new university.

As if to still further emphasise the "curriculum-schedule" view of academic examination—the view which especially delights the professional mind—the Commissioners have constructed a governing body largely controlled, as no other university Senate in the civilised world is controlled, by professional bodies. We wonder what Oxford or Cambridge would say to one-third of their governing body being selected by practical engineers, agriculturists, druggists, medicals, lawyers, and architects! Why have not the Army and Navy, the head-masters of London schools, the Institutes of Journalists and Actuaries an equal claim? "I was brought up in the school of George Stephenson and don't believe in this college training." "But if you want the stresses in one of your great bridges calculated out?" "I pay a Swede or German to do it." Or, again: "Self-induction, sir?—self-induction is what the Americans call a bug." Such opinions are not exaggerations: they are actualities typical of the leaders of at least one side of the professional element, which the Commissioners drag into London academic life, in order that their experience may prevent errors and omissions likely to arise from a too theoretical appreciation of the subject." What the medicals have done or are doing for preliminary scientific training in one department, the practical engineers are to do in another. "Self-induction, sir?—self-induction is what the Americans call a bug."

It is, however, not so much the Scylla of external students, or the Charybdis of a common schedule for widely different institutions, upon which the scheme is most likely to come to grief. These are present dangers; the real danger is the future danger, the chaos beyond these rocks which the Commissioners steer directly for, when they state that the "continuance of the individual existence of teaching institutions must be accepted as a necessary datum." They refuse to accept "the idea either of immediate or of ultimate absorption of institutions as the basis of the university." That is to say, the Commissioners reject the leading feature of the proposals of the Association for promoting a Professorial University. They trust to some unseen providence and the Academic Council to put an end to the present educational chaos, the unnecessary duplication of small laboratories and centres of teaching, which has caused London to have various Universitätskulturen but no University. The Commissioners tell us that the Schools will form "organic parts" of the new university, "while retaining in other respects their autonomy." This is a simple dogma without any real basis; and we suspect that the Commissioners felt it to be such, for they look to the Academic Council

"as a most important agency for bringing into harmony of action the various Faculties and Schools of the University, for assisting them in making such mutual arrangements and introducing such improvements as may conduce to their efficiency and economy."

We should like to know how this will be possible. On the Academic Council there are, for example, four representatives of science; of these two, presumably, may be of pure and two of applied science. Clearly, in any one branch, every institution teaching, say, applied science cannot be represented. How can its wants be known, and how can it be fairly treated by representatives of competing institutions, who may honestly hold that the speedy dispatch of their rivals is the very best thing for academic progress in London? Indeed, if they are too painfully conscientious to hold this view, they may err on the other side; for speedy dispatch of the weaker may after all be the best solution of the present chaotic struggle. So long as institutions are not absorbed, so long as the teachers in sundry institutions depend upon students' fees, there must be strong institutional representation to prevent gross if not deliberate injustice to the smaller and weaker teaching bodies. We cannot trust to an Academic Council, on which departments of certain schools may have no representation at all, "to recommend the allocation of funds, the remuneration of professors, readers, demonstrators, &c.," and to deal with the question of equipment. There is, in our opinion, no alternative between practical absorption of institutions and strong institutional representation; no alternative between the scheme of the Professorial Association and that of the Gresham University. Under the present scheme endless friction, endless wrangling, and probably much injustice must arise from the existence of unendowed teachers in the proposed Schools of the University. The teacher's income will come from his college, and the college will and must be placed before the university. The occupants of endowed chairs will thus be placed in a position where they can afford to devote themselves to the service of the University, while the bread and butter question will put equally capable but unendowed teachers into a most invidious position. They will be unable to sacrifice the collegiate for the broader academic. In this respect the words of Lord Reay's dissentient Note are, in our opinion, the most statesmanlike and the wisest in the whole Report. He recognises that a "systematic co-ordination and redistribution of the work" will be necessary.

"Any other interpretation of the scheme will, to my mind, create needless friction, if not further prolongation of the existing chaos of higher education in London, and will prevent the fullest use of the unrivalled materials which are available in this metropolis."

Lord Reay appears to be the only Commissioner who has fully realised the existing chaos, and has grasped that separate groups of competing, and often unendowed, teachers cannot form a homogeneous university.

It is true the Report deprecates the multiplication of teaching centres; but at the same time it clearly indicates the foundation of new laboratories with university professors, presumably at new centres, for it states that there is "want of space" in the existing colleges to meet the needs of advanced students. This is certainly not true of some of them; but it is a statement intended to cover an earlier statement, that "ordinary undergraduate teaching would for the most part be organised on a collegiate basis," while "University professors would mainly regard the needs of more advanced students" (p. xxxv.). "University professors will usually deal with the higher branches of their subjects; their influence upon ordinary teaching will in a large measure be indirect" (p. xxii.). Now this is the utterly wrong view of university professors which was held at Cambridge and Oxford some fifteen or twenty years ago. However eminent in literature or science a man may be, if he is a real teacher, he wants pupils, and he will prefer to have them trained by himself and in his own methods from the earliest stages. This is the German and the Scottish and the true view of a university professor. In more than one case in Germany the professor takes a great share of the elementary work, and Privat-Dozenten trained under him largely do the specialised teaching in the higher branches. We do not want in London the old type of Cambridge professor, who lectured to two or three students, one of his colleagues or his gyp.

* Or, stay, will they not reappear as representatives on the Senate of the professional bodies?

On other points in the Report—the feeble reference to Gresham College, the constitution of the Theological Faculty, and the control of the Legal Faculty by the Inns of Court—we may have more to say hereafter. At present we must content ourselves with having indicated the three main difficulties: (1) Prof. Sidgwick's difficulty, that of granting degrees to external and internal students by examinations showing "the same standard of knowledge"; (2) Lord Reay's difficulty, that of interpreting the scheme so that it shall mean practical co-ordination of the constituent colleges. Without this co-ordination and localisation of departments the individual teacher is likely to be crushed by a curriculum-schedule system, based on a compromise between the needs of several institutions. Lastly, there is the point which flows from this, that without practical if not actual absorption, the teachers of unendowed institutions will be at a great disadvantage unless they are protected by increased institutional representation. Absorption or institutional representation are, in our opinion, the only safe alternatives.

KARL PEARSON.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BOURGET, Paul. Cosmopolis. Paris: Lemeris. 3 fr. 50 c.
CHÉZELLE, Vicomte H. de. Vieille Vénétie. Paris: Hachette. 3 fr.
DAVILLE, le Capitaine. Palmyre: souvenirs de voyage et d'histoire. Paris: Plon. 4 fr.
GRAUL, R. Hans. Schwäiger. Wien: Gesselsch. f. vervielfältigende Kunst. 9 M.
GRIFFARD, Octave. Prévost-Paradol: étude. Paris: Hachette. 3 fr. 50 c.
LIARD, Louis. L'Enseignement supérieur en France (1789—1893). T. II. Paris: Colin. 7 fr. 50 c.
MOLÉSSY, E. de. Exposition historique de Madrid 1892—1893. Paris: May & Motteroz. 7 fr. 50 c.
MOLINARI, G. de. Science et Religion. Paris: Guillaumin. 3 fr. 50 c.
RABUSSON, H. Préjugé. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
SAPPEBOSEN, A. Beiträge zur Geschichte der bayerischen Hofkapelle unter Orlando di Lasso. 1. Buch. Leipzig: Breitkopf & Härtel. 3 M.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- BAUDOT, M. A. Notes historiques sur la Convention nationale, le Directoire, l'Empire et l'Exil des Votants. Paris: Cerf. 7 fr. 50 c.
CROZA, Pierre de. Le Chevalier de Boufflers et la Comtesse de Fabrian 1768—1792. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
FAYRE, E. Eucée, comte de Paris et roi de France (1892—1893). Paris: Bouillon. 8 fr.
GÉRIN, Ch. Louis XIV. et le Saint-Siège. Paris: Lecoq. 15 fr.
KRAUSE, K. Ch. P. Vorlesungen üb. Naturrecht od. Philo-sophie des Rechtes u. des staates. Hrg. v. R. Mücke. Leipzig: Schulze. 5 M.
RENNET, le Comte Th. de. Dictionnaire des Figures bénédictines. T. Ier. Bruxelles: Sec. Belge de Librairie. 24 fr.
SER, Camille. L'Université et Madame de Maintenon. Paris: Cerf. 3 fr. 50 c.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BASTIAN, A. Controversen in der Ethnologie. II. u. III. Berlin: Weidmann. 3 M. 20 Pf.
CANTOLLE, A. et C. de. Monographie phanérogammarum prodomi continuation. Vol. VIII. Guttiferag, auctore Juliano Vaque. Paris: Masson. 26 fr.
DESSOIR, M. Geschichte der neueren deutschen Psychologie.
1. Bd. Von Leibniz bis Kant. Berlin: Carl Duncker.
19 M. 10 Pf.

PHILOLOGY.

- GRASSERIE, R. de la. Langues américaines. Langue puguina.
Leipzig: Koehler. 2 M. 10 Pf.
JACQUES, Gustave. Le livre de ce qu'il y a dans l'Inde: version abrégée publiée d'après les papyrus de B. rin et de Leyde. Paris: Bouillon. 9 fr.
PALLIOPI, Z. ed. Dictionnaire des idioms Romains/schs d'Egiadin/ota a basea. Fasc. 2. Basel: Geering. 5 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CHAUCER'S BOOK OF THE DUCHESS: A NEW IDENTIFICATION.

Cambridge: Jan. 24, 1894.

By the kindness of the Bishop of Oxford, I have just received from his lordship a new suggestion as to the meaning of lines 1318, 1319 of the Book of the Duchesse.

"A long castel with walles whyte,
By seynt Iohan! on a riche hil."

I have shown in my note that "a riche hil" cannot refer to Richmond in Surrey (as some have thought), because that place was not so named till the time of Henry VII. But this does not preclude the possibility of a reference to Richmond in Yorkshire.

The bishop's interpretation is, that "long castel" is Lancaster; "whyte" refers to Blanche; "seint Iohan" is meant to introduce the name of John of Gaunt, and the "riche hil" refers to the fact that he was Earl of Richmond.

It is easy—when you know it; yet no one has previously suggested it, so far as I can ascertain.

I certainly ought not to have missed this, for a particular reason. This is, that the popular pronunciation of Lancaster as Long-castel or Loncastel is illustrated in my own edition of Barbour's Bruce (book xvii., 285 and 852). In these passages there is reference to Thomas, Earl of Lancaster. In the former of them, MS. C. (Cambridge) has lancister, miswritten for lancaster, whilst MS. E. (Edinburgh) and Hart's edition have longcastell. In the latter, MS. C. has loncastell, while E. and Hart have longcastell as before.

I suppose that long castel was a popular pronunciation of "lon-castell," the castle on the Lune: the form lon occurs again in Lonsdale. Barbour wrote in 1375, and Chaucer in 1369; their poems are thus only six years apart. It is obvious how entirely this discovery corroborates the theory that Chaucer's lament over the Duchesse Blanche coincides with the poem here quoted. Moreover, we now see a reason for introducing the above lines, which have hitherto seemed rather pointless.

WALTER W. SKEAT.

A CHESTER ILLUSTRATION OF A JOKE OF SHAKSPEARE'S.

London: Feb. 13, 1894.

All Shakspeare students know that they hardly ever take up a contemporary book or record which does not illustrate him. Of course some of his words and phrases are in the MS. Depositions in the Chester Diocesan Registry, from which I have already sent a few extracts to the ACADEMY; but I did not expect to get from that source, proof that one of Shakspeare's jokes in "The Shrew" was but a matter-of-fact statement of an event that might have happened under his own eyes. This proof was given me by Mr. W. H. Price, the Chief Clerk of the Diocesan Registry, from the 1548-50 Depositions at Chester, which he and Mr. Irvine are to edit for the Early English Text Society. Hitherto we have always thought that Shakspeare was poking fun at us when he made Biondello say, in "The Taming of the Shrew," IV. i. 95-6, "I knew a wench married in an afternone as since went to the Garden for Parsley to stuffe a Rabit"; but Mr. Price's case shows us that this might easily have happened: the gardener or some man troth-plighted her on the spot, then retired with her to a secret place, and the "perfect Matrimony before God" (as Cranmer and his Doctors call it) was accomplished.

The case is one of a clergyman of St. Peter's, Chester, "Johannes Cotgrene, clericus, parochie sancti Petri, Civitatis Cestrie," and Alice Gidlowe, who, during his later absence from Cheshire, married Thomas Belen:—

"On 6 Feb. 1549-50, John Cotgreve deposes, that upon a mydsomer eae comeinge, the tyme shalbe ix' yeris, th's deponent with iij' other persons, as he nowe remembers, and Alis Belen, alias Gidlowe, articulate, after theye hade made merie the same day, in the evenenge, he, this deponent, accompanied with Bartime Dood, Roudall Philippe, Hugh Aston, and one [blank in MS] Picton, went to bringe the said Alis homward toward Saltneye,* where then she dwelled, Vt dicit; and beyng in Hanbrige,† this deponent spied forth a vacant howse or a herne, where no man dide dwelle att that tyme; & beyng att that tyme in familiar acquaintauns with the said Alis before named, desired that theye ij' soole [alone] together to goe into the said howse, for the intente that he, this deponent, (as he saie) wold hanc hade his pleasure off hyr; the wich thinge the said Alis wold not grante, excepte he wold att that tyme promesse to marie hyr. whereupon this deponent spake to his companions before named, desiring them to come into the said vacant howse with hym and the said Alis, for he intended to make a contract in there with the said Alis. and so there and att that present tyme, and before the persons afore specified, he toke the said Alis bie the hande, speyking these words, 'I, John, take thee, Alis, to mye wedded wiff; and therto I plight thee mye troth'; whervnto the said Alis, immediatlie then and ther answering, said, 'I, Alis, take thee John, to mye husbonde; and therto I plight thee mye troth'; and so theye toe kissed together. And this deponent desired the persons before named to bayre record off this contracte when theye shuld be called thervnto. And further required them to goe a litill before towarde Saltney, and he, this deponent, with the said Alis, wold shortly come after. after whos departure, this deponent, Vt dicit, in that vacant howse and att that present tyme, did knowe carnallie the said Alis; and so did ofteu and manye tymes afore she was married to Thomas Belen, Vt dicit. And further he saie, that he was absent and forth off the contrey when the said Alis was married with Thomas Belen; and iff he hade bene present att that tyme, he wold hanc forbiden the same, for his consens sake, Vt dicit; and that he has told to his secrett frendes off the said contracte made with the said Alis, Vt dicit."

I quote the above from my book on Child-Marriages, &c., for the Early English Text Society, to be issued next month (March), in advance for the 1897 subscription.

F. J. FURNIVALL.

THE BOOK OF ENOCH.

King's College, Cambridge: Feb. 12, 1894.

As Mr. Charles has replied to some points of an article on his translation of the Book of Enoch which I contributed to the Classical Review of this month, I should be grateful if you could afford me space for an answer.

1. With regard to the spelling Halévi for Halévy, I will freely admit that I knew very little about the matter. I did know that "Halévy" was the form now in general use; and, as Mr. Charles admits, it is also the form which the owner of the name considers to be the correct one.

2. I asked whether it is not likely enough that the various later portions which are found in the Book of Enoch were written by successive authors with a view to insertion in a Book of Enoch which already existed. Mr. Charles says that a study of the way in which the various sections have been dislocated by an editor or editors would soon disabuse me of this error. I am quite willing to allow for the caprices of redactors; but I can reconcile their existence with the view which I have stated, and that view does not seem to me to be put out of court by anything which Mr. Charles has as yet urged.

* Cranmer's Miscellaneous Writings (Parker Soc.), cited by E. B. Peacock in the ACADEMY, Oct. 21, 1876 (p. 409, col. 3).

* A village near Chester, up the Dee estuary.
† Handbridge, a suburb of Chester, across the Dee.

3. Mr. Charles forbears to quote a certain Latin version of Jude 15 (or of the passage of Enoch which that verse represents), although he is aware of its existence. I submit that this omission was unavoidable, and that Mr. Charles would have done well to cite the reasons which prevented him from including this fragment in the list of his patristic citations from Enoch.

4. It appears that, in sending the text of another Latin fragment to Mr. Charles, I said that, in the MS. which contains it, the fragment "follows a penitential edict of St. Boniface, and is preceded by" something different. In my review I noticed this nonsensical remark, and expressed the hope that possibly I might not be responsible for it. Mr. Charles rather masks the point in his letter, for he only quotes the words I have italicised. The point is, that one and the same document cannot be immediately preceded by two different things; and I think Mr. Charles ought either to have called my attention to the obvious mistake before printing, or else have looked up the description of the MS. in Casley's Catalogue, to which access must have been easy.

5. I suggested that Mr. Charles would have done well to add to his bibliography of Enoch some mention of the pains bestowed upon the fragments of Enoch by Grabe, Fabricius, DeSacy, Gfrörer, and Murray. He represents himself as having been the victim of rapid alternations of merriment and astonishment at the trivial nature of these suggestions, inasmuch as the works in question are "antiquated and virtually useless." But surely this is an ungenerous line to take. Was not Grabe the first who collected the fragments of the book to any purpose? Is Fabricius a person whom the student of apocryphal literature can decently pass over? Further, DeSacy was among the first—I believe he was actually the first—to render any portion of the Ethiopic Enoch into a European language. Gfrörer's reprint of Laurence (the least important name of those which I suggested) was an exceedingly common and popular book; while Murray's Enoch restitutus was worth mentioning as a serious attempt to vindicate the inspired character of portions of the book. I did not, I am afraid, pore over catalogues, as Mr. Charles seems to fancy, in order to rout out obscure names which he might conceivably have added to his list. All these occurred to me spontaneously as I read Mr. Charles's Introduction; and I still feel that they ought to be included in any bibliography of Enoch, whether or no they belong to the "uncritical foretime of Enochic study."

I am particularly anxious not to be taken for a hostile critic of Mr. Charles's work. I, in common with very many, am exceedingly grateful for it; but it has its faults.

M. R. JAMES.

ENGLISH HYMN-WRITERS.

Oxford: Feb. 28, 1894.

I cannot let pass without a protest the contemptuous estimate of our English hymn-writing which appears in the review of Miss Rossetti in the last number of the ACADEMY:

"Lyte and Faber are as mediocre as Ken or Watts or Wesley. Even the High Church movement, which in so many ways breathed new life into the dry bones of English Churchmanship, failed in this one."

I sincerely hope that the rising school of critics, who in some directions show so much delicate appreciation, will not endorse this dictum. The writer of it surely has a very imperfect feeling for the virtues of a "plain style" in literature. I do not deny the beauty of that which he considers beautiful, the mediæval Latin hymns, and the work of Herbert, Vaughan, and their contemporaries. But I venture to say that The Treasury of Sacred Song will match any like collection from the middle ages. And the accomplished editor of that selection does to my mind something less than justice to the men of the eighteenth century—to Watts and Wesley and to Cowper, whom even the canons of your critic should not excuse him for ignoring.

I should not have thought it worth while to write this letter, if there were not too many signs of a prevalent critical judgment which is not only an impiety to our forefathers, but promises to have a disastrous effect on our own literary ideals. The qualities of strength, massiveness, and simplicity we cannot in these days afford to despise.

W. SANDAY.

COLERIDGE AND OPIUM.

Dublin: Feb. 24, 1894.

Will you permit me to point out that the interesting fact brought to light by Mr. W. Aldis Wright in this day's ACADEMY leaves my argument on the subject of "Coleridge and Opium" quite intact? It is, of course, quite possible that Coleridge may, on sundry isolated occasions even earlier than March 12, 1796, have taken, or been given, laudanum for the relief of mental or bodily anguish. But there exists, if I do not mistake, not the faintest indication that the habit of laudanum began earlier than November in that year; while from November onwards we find a series of successive indications that Coleridge was becoming habituated to the use of the drug.

T. HUTCHINSON.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, March 4, 4 p.m. Sunday Lectures: "The Life, Lore, and Legend of Old Japan," by Mr. R. W. Atkinson.

7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Poetry and Ethics," by Mr. W. J. Jupp.

MONDAY, March 5, 5 p.m. Royal Institution: General Monthly Meeting.

6 p.m. London Institution: "The Present and Future of Poetry in England," by Mr. Lewis Morris.

8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Evolution of Sculpture," II., by Mr. W. B. Richmond.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "The Decorative Treatment of Artificial Foliage," III., by Mr. Hugh Stannus.

8 p.m. Victoria Institute: "The Origin of the Australian Race," by Dr. John Fraser.

8 p.m. Aristotelian: "Attention," by Mr. G. F. Stout.

8.45 p.m. Geographical: Commemoration of the Fifth Centenary of Prince Henry the Navigator.

TUESDAY, March 6, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Locomotion and Fixation in Plants and Animals," VIII., by Prof. C. Stewart.

3 p.m. Anglo-Russian: "Russia and the Cholera," by Dr. Frank Clemow.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Travels in the Basin of the Zambesi," by M. Foa.

8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Discussion, "The Liverpool Overhead Railway and its Electrical Equipment."

8 p.m. Biblical Archaeology: "More Glimpses of Babylonian Religion," by the Rev. C. J. Ball.

8.30 p.m. Zoological: "The Factors that appear to have influenced Zoological Distribution in East Africa," by Dr. J. W. Gregory.

"The Habits of the Flying Squirrels (Anomalurus) of the Gold Coast," by Mr. W. H. Adams.

"Two Cases of Colour-variation in Flat-fishes illustrating Principles of Symmetry," by Mr. W. Bateson.

WEDNESDAY, March 7, 4 p.m. Archaeological Institute: "The Mace of Marshfield, Gloucestershire," by Mr. E. Green.

"The Heart of Henry II.," by Mr. C. J. Davies.

"The Castle of the Peak, Derbyshire," by Mr. W. H. St. John Hope.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Refrigerating Apparatus," by Prof. Carl Linde.

8 p.m. Geological: "The Systematic Position of the Trilobites," by Mr. H. M. Bernard.

"Landscape Marble," by Mr. Beeby Thompson.

"The Discovery of Molluscs in the Upper Keuper at Shrewley, in Warwickshire," by the Rev. P. B. Brodie.

8 p.m. Elizabethan: "New Facts about Marlowe," by Mr. Sidney Lee.

THURSDAY, March 8, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Vedānta Philosophy," II., by Prof. E. Max Müller.

4.30 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Indian Currency," by Mr. J. Barr Robertson.

8 p.m. Mathematical: "Groupes of Points on Curves," by Mr. F. S. Macaulay; "The Buckling and Wrinkling of Plating supported on a Framework under the Influence of Oblique Stresses," and "A Simple Contrivance for Compoinding Elliptic Motions," by Mr. G. H. Bryan; "The Motion of Two Pairs of Cylindrical Vortices which have a Common Plane of Symmetry," by Mr. A. E. H. Love.

8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Evolution of Sculpture," III., by Mr. W. B. Richmond.

8 p.m. Electrical Engineers: "Parallel Working through Long Lines," by Mr. W. M. Morday.

8 p.m. United Service Institution: "The Coast-lands of the North Atlantic," IX., by Mr. H. J. Mackinder.

8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.

FRIDAY, March 9, 5 p.m. Physical: "Calculating Machines and especially a New Harmonic Analyser," by Prof. O. Henrici.

8 p.m. Ruskin: "Collingwood's Life and Work of John Ruskin," by Mr. W. Pitt Macdonochie.

9 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Making of a Modern Fleet," by Dr. W. H. White.

SATURDAY, March 10, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Light," V., by Lord Rayleigh.

3.45 p.m. Botanic: General Fortnightly Meeting.

SCIENCE.

TWO BOOKS ON THE CONSTITUTION OF ATHENS.

Stil und Text der ΠΟΛΙΤΕΙΑ 'ΑΘΗΝΑΙΩΝ des Aristoteles. Von G. Kaibel. (Berlin: Weidmann.)

Aristoteles und Athen. Von U. von Wilamowitz Moellendorf. (Berlin: Weidmann.)

THE growing literature of the Athenian Constitution receives a considerable addition to both its bulk and its value in these volumes, the work of two very distinguished German scholars. Opinion about "the new Aristotle" will rock to and fro for a long time yet before a position of stable equilibrium is found; but there is only one way to reach that position. The most careful examination of the text must itself be tested by the conflict of wits. No one man's judgment can be final, no one man's grasp of the material complete. But the authors of the books before us have co-ordinated the existing remarks and theories about the treatise, and have added to the number with so much ingenuity and soundness that they put their readers into a position of great advantage for attacking the problem for themselves.

Herr Kaibel's present work falls into two parts: (1) a discussion of the language and style of the treatise ascribed to Aristotle, pp. 1-111; and (2) a commentary on the text. As to the latter, suffice it to say briefly that a good deal of space in it is occupied by questions bearing on the reconstruction of the text, but that the remainder of the notes shows that valuable matter is still to be gleaned even after Dr. Sandys has been over the field. As to Part I., though it acknowledges and analyses fully the reasons which made the Πολιτεία at first such disconcerting reading, it maintains stoutly and almost contemptuously the authorship of Aristotle. "Anyone who does not accept Aristotle for the author has before him the hard task of finding another man of the same period to whom he can reasonably attribute it." This opinion rests not only on a sense of the solid value of the book, but also on another view of it which Kaibel keeps steadily before his readers—the view of it as a real work of art. It is not a careless or a trivial essay which anyone could have dashed off: it is not a laboured compilation or a severe study, fit only for the lecture-room; it is careful work and yet a real bit of literature, meant for the general public. For that public it is shaped and put together. Hence its vivacity, the briskness of the story, and the deliberate appeals to biographical interest. Designed for general use, it is also—as might have been expected—meant to act on public opinion; but no doubt Aristotle's position compelled him to be circumspect, and his views or inferences are given in so unobtrusive a form that modern readers do not readily see them all. The sly criticism of the lot as a mode of appointment to office, contained in ec. 42, 54, is plain enough when once pointed out. But all the same, Aristotle has an admiration, though but a moderate one, for the Athenian Demos. He cannot deny its right to unrestricted sovereignty, but he seems to doubt the wisdom of its claim. It seized power ἀρῶν and δικαίως, but he never says καλῶς καὶ πολιτικῶς. Herr Kaibel's essay is, like his commentary, learned, yet fresh and suggestive; but both would read more pleasantly if they exhibited more amenity toward the champions of other views.

Herr von Wilamowitz-Moellendorf too has his antipathy—toward Herr Müller-Strübing, and he cannot keep it to himself. It will out in an otherwise excellent little essay on "3000 hopliten von Acharnai," in which he defends the old reading of the number as given by Thuc. ii., 20. His work is an attempt to see how "the problems of Athenian constitutional history look when considered afresh from the standpoint of the new Aristotelian book"—a book which, if it does not satisfy our πνευμαθλή, at least νύον φέει. The two volumes are more broken or miscellaneous in character than Kaibel's treatise, falling into a number of essays. The first set of these is connected by depending pretty closely on the order of the 'A. II. and dealing with the great points which the 'A. II. gives or suggests:—chronology, Herodotus, Solon, Drakon, Thucydides, the demagogues of the fifth century, the final sketch of the Athenian constitution, the Attic chronicle, and the after-influence of the work. In the essay on the form of the constitution which came last, or was the last known to Aristotle, Herr von Wilamowitz-Moellendorf suspects his author of another silent but cutting criticism passed on the Athenian democracy. The list of successive forms of government given in c. 41 of the 'A. II. was meant, he thinks, to contrast with the Attic belief in the continuity of a democratic constitution which dated from Theseus and Solon. It is very strange to notice the unhesitating belief with which both the scholars before us accept the account of Drakon's legislation given in the 'A. II. The anachronistic character of that account seems to cause them no trouble, nor the feeling that Solon's four landed-property-classes would have been useless in Drakon's time, when, if we may believe the 'A. II. itself, offices were filled up not according to the classes but according to property measured in money. The inconsistency of the Politics and the Politeia on Drakon is got over by affirming that Aristotle learnt more about Drakon after he wrote the one work and before he wrote the other (Essays 3 and 4). The second set (13 essays) is "Inquiries based on the 'A. II.," and it opens with a valuable but all too short sketch of the sources or evidences which we have for the earlier Greek history. Very characteristic is the protest against the narrow view, represented by A. Schäfer, that the chief sources of Greek history are Greek history books. Another important essay in this second series is on "The Athenian forms of government from Peisistratos to Ephialtes." Indeed, we may say without exaggeration that Ephialtes has been "looking up" ever since the discovery of the 'A. II. The third set (15 short essays) deals with minuter points of history and law. The most notable papers are perhaps those on the poems of Solon and the trial in the Eumenides, Herr von Wilamowitz-Moellendorf writes with quite remarkable verve and liveliness, but his pages are made more difficult to read by having no capital letters except to proper names. Ordinary nouns substantive have lost the usual German capitals: well and good—an Englishman cannot object to that; but a new sentence too no longer begins with a capital. Hence bewilderment to the eye and difficulty in finding the place. F. T. R.

SCIENCE NOTES.

A SPECIAL meeting of the Royal Geographical Society is to be held next Monday, at 8.45 p.m., to commemorate the fifth centenary of Prince Henry of Portugal, surnamed the Navigator; when short addresses will be delivered by Mr. Clements R. Markham (the president), and others.

At the annual general meeting of the Geological Society, held on February 16, Dr. Henry Woodward was elected president, in succession to Mr. W. H. Hudleston. The total number of fellows, &c., is now 1353, showing a slight decrease on each of the two preceding years. The income of the past year was £2751, and the expenditure was £2205; the total invested funds amount to £10,730.

At the meeting of the Zoological Society, to be held on Tuesday next, at 8.30. p.m., Dr. J. W. Gregory will read a paper on "The Factors that appear to have influenced Zoological Distribution in East Africa," illustrated with lantern slides.

At the meeting of the Victoria Institute, to be held at 8, Adelphi-terrace, Strand, on Monday next, at 8 p.m., Dr. John Fraser will read a paper on "The Origin of the Australian Race."

MESSRS WITHERBY & Co., of the Universal Press, will issue next month an illustrated volume of essays on zoological and geological subjects by Mr. Richard Lydekker, entitled Life and Rock.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

At the meeting of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, to be held at 37, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, on Tuesday next, at 8 p.m., the Rev. C. J. Ball will read a paper entitled, "More Glimpses of Babylonian Religion."

IN the last number of the Babylonian and Oriental Record (David Nutt), Prof. Terrien de Lacouperie continues his series of papers on the origins of Chinese civilization. He has now come down to the period (second century B.C.) when the Chinese first came into direct contact with the Greeks in Central Asia. Incidentally, he suggests a novel etymology for sercs, serica, in ser, Tibetan for "yellow" and also for "eastern." M. J. Imbert writes on two Lycian inscriptions, brought from Asia Minor by Prof. Benndorf. One of these has never been published before; the other is now given in a very improved form. Mr. W. St. Chad Boscawen suggests that the Homeric title, ἀνὸς ἀνδρῶν, which Mr. Gladstone has sought to derive from Egypt, may really have a Chaldaean origin, the intermediate stage being Cyprus. Finally, Prof. Lacouperie comments on Vilhelm Thomsen's decipherment of the Yennesei inscriptions (see ACADEMY January 20). While accepting Thomsen's results, he thinks that the alphabet is an adaptation of Indo-Bactrian and Himyaritic characters. He remarks that, according to Chinese chronicles, the Turks first became acquainted with the art of writing in 554 A.D.; and that Arab historians mention Himyaritic inscriptions existing at Samarkand as late as the thirteenth century.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

CAMBRIDGE ANTIQUARIAN SOCIETY.—(Monday, Feb. 12.)

F. J. H. JENKINSON, Esq., president, in the chair.—Prof. Macalister and Prof. Hughes made the following communication: "On a newly discovered Dyke at Cherryhinton." Above the Great Chalk Quarry at Cherryhinton, when making a road to this new pit, in the cutting about 20 yards east of the road above the large quarry the end of a grave was crossed, in which lay a skeleton with the head to the north, and beside it an ornamental basin and other fragments of pottery. On the south of this cutting a kiln was sunk into the ground to a depth of some 15 feet, the approach to which was down steps on the east. The sides of this pit stood by themselves, where the excavation was made in solid chalk; but, along the approach to the pit, a deep trench was crossed extending down to the depth of the kiln. When the cutting for the new chalk pit was carried further east, the continuation of the ditch was touched. Here the ditch extends about 18 inches below the floor of the cutting, that is, to a depth of about 14 ft. 6 in. or 15 ft. It appears to have got filled up by natural operations during more than one long period, judging by the growth of humus at successive levels; but it also appears to have been filled in artificially on at least two occasions by throwing back the chalk which had been dug out of it. The arrangement of the chalk fragments would indicate that the greater part had been thrown from the east; that is, that the larger agger formed by the material from the ditch was on the upper side, the fosse being nearest the brow of the hill. Some, however, appears to have been thrown from the lower side also. Most of the chalk fragments are perfectly clean and fresh, and show no signs of having been exposed to the weather: that is to say, they appear to have been heaped up together when dug out of the ditch, and are not the sweepings from a wide area of broken material. Yet every here and there, intercalated with those layers of chalk rubble, we found surface soil and subsoil with numerous fragments of Roman or Romano-British pottery, and bones of domestic animals, among which the most common were the small shorthorn ox, the horned sheep, and the pig. About half way down were undisturbed human skeletons, which had not been buried in the soil which filled the ditch, because the continuity of the overlying layers was nowhere disturbed; but it appeared that the bodies were laid in the ditch and the material thrown in over them from either side. From their position it is a probable inference that the ditch was not then completely filled, as beds of humus, which appear to have grown where seen, occurred at higher levels. From the fragmentary character of the pottery we know that it had long lain on the surface and been knocked about and trampled on. It was the scattered debris from a Romano-British settlement. From the abundance of fragments of the commoner types, such as could be made in the district, and the rarity of Samian and articles de luxe generally, we may infer with some probability that it represents a poor settlement of late date. We have also fragments from disturbed graves and broken cinerary urns. But the skeletons in the ditch appear to have been deposited there at a much later date, and may belong to quite recent times, so far as we can judge from their mode of occurrence in the material in which they lie. We get some suggestions also from topographical and historical considerations. The great ditch known as the Roman Road points directly for this spot. If, as we suppose, that earthwork was one of the Dykes drawn across the open ground wherever it occurred between the Woodland and the Fenland, and interrupted where a patch of wood or a swamp already presented sufficient barrier, then we should expect to find it resting on some earthwork at its termination on the brow of the hill above Cherryhinton, where it will be noticed that a strip of swampy ground connects the springs with the fens. It may not have been continuous from the top of Worts Causeway to the Reservoir, as the hollow running up from Coldham Common was probably densely wooded. It was, moreover, very probable that the Romans occupied the ground protected by it, as they did at Reach, and that they availed themselves of the straight cleared route and used it as a road.

ARISTOTELIAN.—(Monday, Feb. 19.)

SHAWORTH H. HOBSON, Esq., president, in the chair.—Mr. Bernard Bosanquet read a paper on "The Conception of the Soul in Plato and Aristotle." Starting from Bacon's opposition of "substance" to "words of second intention" in criticising Aristotle's definition of mind, the writer examined passages from the Phaedrus and Timaeus, in connexion with Aristotle's definition of mind in the De Anima, and with his conception of productive reason. The treatment was divided into the general heads of motion and of consciousness; and its tendency was to affirm the fundamental correspondence of Plato's view with that of Aristotle, and the absence of what moderns mean by "substance" in both. Especially it was suggested that the relation between the mortal and immortal elements of the human soul as described in the Timæus is correlative to that between the receptive and productive factors of mind in the De Anima; and an interpretation of the "productive reason" was propounded, based on Aristotle's reference, in treating of it, to the passage in which "light" and "reason" are spoken of in connexion (Republic 508 D).—The paper was followed by a discussion.

FINE ART.

THE GLASGOW INSTITUTE.

THE present exhibition of the Glasgow Institute, while it includes a fair average of accomplished and interesting work, contains rather less than usual of what is striking and pre-eminent. It contains few of such subjects as command universal attention and make an exhibition memorable.

As usual, the display of current work is supplemented by some loan pictures, but these are less numerous and less important in scale and treatment than has been the case in most former years. Among the best of them is a landscape by Rousseau: an evening scene, with a clear mellow winter sky, flecked with flashes of crimson cloud, seen through the dark branches of gnarled, leafless oaks, and above a marshy foreground, with its reeds and its green-mantled pools of stagnant water. By Corot is an interesting, if not very characteristic little subject—a view of his own house, "Ville d'Avray"—remarkable for its great quietude of execution and effect, and for the exquisite gradation of its sky of softly delicate blue. Among the painters of marine subjects, Mesdag is represented by a passionate and effective sketch, in various tones of grey, of a dismasted barge, struggling among the billows, and—far less adequately—by a large subject, "Summer Morning"; while, among foreign flower painters, Fantin Latour shows exquisite purity of tone and richness of colouring in his renderings of "Double Petunia" and of "Roses."

Some excellent and well known works by the Edinburgh painters figure upon the walls. These include Sir George Reid's view of "Montrose Harbour," so restful in the effect of the horizontal lines of its composition—its coast, and sea, and distant city, and of the great expanse of sky, with its piled masses of softly lighted and gently shadowed clouds. Here, too, is Mr. McTaggart's "Ocean," in which, by simple truth of tone, by simple fidelity to natural lighting, this most accomplished painter has given interest, beauty, and artistic charm to a mere stretch of sky, and waves, and the level sand against which they languidly break; so that we feel no need of figure, or sail, or any such definite point of human interest.

Among the most important contributions by London painters are Mr. J. W. Waterhouse's two classical subjects, "A Naiad" and "A Hamadryad," the latter particularly delicate and graceful in its rendering of the face and figure of the female figure; and by the late Mr. Pettie is his spirited and effective oil sketch for his subject-picture of "Jacobites, 1745." The President of the Royal Academy is represented by his "Hit" of last year's exhibition, so sculptural in the accurate form and modelling of its two figures, so dramatic in the intent expression that invests the face of the elder, and in the open-eyed eagerness that possesses that of the child. In Mr. Stott of Oldham's "Summer's Day," a great stretch of undulating sand, with its changes of tone and lighting, is subtly managed, and the naked figures of boys bathing that are introduced are excellent in draughtsmanship and in their sense of sharp projection and suggestion of atmosphere behind and around them. Mr. William Strang's "Bathers" is a thoroughly characteristic work: characteristic because it suggests the work of another master—usually it is Legros that this artist's productions recall, but here it is Millet; characteristic, too, in this, that it possesses, amid all that is reminiscent, enough of a clearly personal and individual quality to render it delightful, and free it from any charge of plagiarism.

The works of the Glasgow artists include nothing more spirited, nothing fuller of vigorous colour and expressive brushwork than Mr. George Henry's "Head of a Young Girl," with its vivacious features, dark eyes, and embrowned flesh-tints, and its blue-green dress that drapes the bust, set against a background of boldly struck autumn leaves, vividly ruddy and yellow. Mr. James Guthrie's full-length portrait of Archbishop Eyre, of Glasgow, has been worked upon since it was shown in the Grafton Gallery, and its background has been altered. It cannot, however, be regarded as a favourable example of this able and original painter's art. The face is rather hard and unsympathetic in treatment, the voluminous folds of the purple robes are awkward and ungraceful; and altogether, the picture suggests the thought that the artist has been consciously endeavouring to adapt himself to the more popular requirements of current portraiture, and, in the attempt, has lost much of what is most individual in his style. He is seen to far greater advantage in his much slighter, seated portrait of "Miss Wilson." Here, manifestly, he has been painting in his own way, for his own pleasure; and the result is proportionately delightful. One might wish that the work had been carried further; but one cannot fail to enjoy the freedom of the whole, its exquisite play of blending colour, and the delicate purity of its flesh tints. Mr. E. A. Walton is at his best in his full-length portrait of "Miss Aitken." The slim figure, clad in modish "tailor-made" costume, that stands there, slowly drawing on a pair of gloves, is rendered with verve and expressiveness; and the Orchardson-like scheme of delicate colouring, the greys and fawns of the dress, the mellow whites of the background curtain, touched with a pattern of subdued yellow, and working into more vivid gold in the frame of a circular mirror, is charmingly emphasised and focussed by the dark hair, eyes, and eyebrows, and by the little black hat, with its flash of crimson feather. Mr. Lavery sends a refined full-length portrait group of a mother and child, very delicate in its restrained harmonies of greys and browns, and its accentuating points of crimson and salmon colour.

Mr. S. Campbell Holms shows a decorative series of four medieval subjects, illustrative of "Sin and Repentance." Founded very definitely upon the work of Mr. Burne Jones, and leaving a good deal to be desired in the expression of the various faces that are introduced, they yet show an excellent sense for certain noble qualities of colour, and argue well for this painter's future efforts in the direction of imaginative art.

Among the more important of the landscapes by Glasgow artists are those contributed by Mr. James Paterson. His view of "Nithsdale" shows a free and spirited rendering of a vapoury atmospheric effect, with broad handling of masses of foliage, and with that quivering delicacy and fine sense of motion in the sky which always distinguishes this painter's work, and again appears, very markedly, in his other contribution, "Hawk Fell." In "Idyll," Mr. A. Roche has portrayed a landscape of unusually complete component parts, upon a scale of unusual amplitude. While the picture shows a striving after truth of tone and lighting, it can hardly be pronounced a success; for it is sadly straggling in composition, and wanting in concentration of harmony and effect. Its painter is seen to more advantage in "Magdalena," a fancy portrait, distinguished by varied and vigorous colouring. We have pleasing and accomplished work in the subjects that represent Mr. A. D. Reid—two views of "Dordrecht Cathedral"; and, in his "Tidal River," Mr. W. J. Macgregor shows the most important and successful production that we have yet seen from his brush.

The architectural drawings in the exhibition are numerous and exceptionally interesting, and many photographs and other renderings of decorated interiors are included. In particular, we have two remarkable decorative designs by Mr. Robert Burns: "How King Arthur got his Sword," and an illustration of the battle-verse in Tennyson's "Sir Galahad." There is a very fair display of sculpture, Mr. George Frampton, Mr. Onslow Ford, and Mr. E. R. Mullius being represented. M. Ringel d'Ilzsch also sends several portrait subjects, very cleverly modelled, but eminently unpleasing in their tinting in colours more or less closely realistic.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's propose to remove the scaffolding in the choir at Easter, when the public will be able to see the decorations which have been carried out during the past three years by Mr. W. B. Richmond.

THE exhibitions to open next week include: a series of sketches of Himalayan scenery by Mr. A. D. McCormick, made on his journey in company with Mr. W. M. Conway—the full account of which will be published by Mr. Fisher Unwin in May—at the Japanese Gallery, in New Bond-street; and a collection of pictures illustrating the big game of America, at the Burlington Gallery, Old Bond-street.

THE sixteenth spring exhibition of pictures at the Atkinson Art Gallery, Southport, will also open next week.

It is announced that Mr. Harry Furniss has retired from the staff of Punch, and that he intends to establish shortly a periodical of his own.

WE have received the prospectus of a new illustrated journal, called St. Paul's, of which the first number is to appear on March 15. It is founded by Mr. Henry Reichardt, and the literary editor is Mr. Tighe Hopkins. One of its special objects will be to reproduce examples of every kind of sacred art.

EGYPTOLOGISTS will be glad to hear that about thirty copies of the Graffiti of Hat-Nub, printed last year by Mr. Fraser for private distribution, have now been placed in the hands of Messrs. Luzac of Great Russell-street, from whom they can be obtained at 10s. for the set of fifteen sheets. These graffiti, discovered in 1891, were very carefully copied by Messrs. Blackden and Fraser. They are of great historical and palaeographical importance, ranging from the VIII to the XIIIth Dynasty. Those of the Middle Kingdom are lengthy, and furnish curious information about the administration of the nomes and the state of the country in the time of the XIth Dynasty. They are generally dated in the reigns of the nomarchs, and it is equally remarkable that an oath is sworn "by the life" of the nomarch Nehera instead of the king. By the aid of these graffiti Mr. Newberry has been enabled to reconstruct the genealogy and succession of most of the nomarchs whose tombs are at El Bersheh, as will be seen in the next Memoir of the Archaeological Survey, conducted under the auspices of the Egypt Exploration Fund.

THE last number of the American Journal of Archaeology (London: Kegan Paul & Co.) is mainly devoted to papers of the American School of Classical Studies at Athens. First, we have two reports upon the further excavation of the theatre at Sicyon, which were finished so long ago as 1891. This is followed by a report on the excavations at Sparta in April, 1893, the most important result of which was to disclose the tholos or circular building spoken of by Pausanias. The minor objects discovered were almost all of Roman or Byzantine date. With this report should be read a paper by Mr. N. E. Crosby, who elaborately criticises the entire topography of Sparta, as described by Pausanias and adopted by Prof. C. Nestorides. Finally, there is a report of the tentative excavation of a mound in Argolis, near the site of Oenoe, which was also conducted in April, 1893. Of the other contents of this part, the most interesting is a discussion of the well-known wall-painting at Tiryns, of a running bull with a man holding it by the horn and apparently suspended over its back. Mr. G. B. Hussey, of Nebraska, contends that the scene must be explained from Egyptian art: the animal is not a wild bull, but a domestic ox; and the man is a neat-herd, who adopts this uncomfortable attitude only because the artist could not otherwise represent him in the background. We do not feel convinced. The parallel scene on the gold cups from Vaphio seems to represent hunting and not herding; while all the Egyptian representations (including those found by Prof. Petrie at Tel el-Amarna, which are not here referred to) are manifestly of tame cattle. In our judgment, the source of this Mykenaeen art is rather to be sought in Assyria. In conclusion, we may mention some Greek and Latin inscriptions brought back by Dr. Peters from Jerash and the Euphrates region.

THE STAGE.

MR. COMYNS CARR announces, but not we hope for a single matinée, a revival (presumably) of his own translation or adaptation of "Frou-frou," in which Miss Ellen Terry was seen for a short time in the provinces, but never, we think, in London. The part of the heroine, although requiring singular delicacy and subtlety of treatment, is, in the right hands, one of the most effective of the modern drama. Written originally, as we believe, for Mlle. Delaporte, who had a great success with it at St. Petersburg, it was played in Paris, as all the world knows, chiefly by Mlle. Aimée Desclée, whose performances, instinct with vitality and modernité, made her a reputation which her health only allowed her a few years to enjoy. The part, after the death of Aimée Desclée, was taken up by Mlle. Delaporte again, and by Mme. Sarah Bernhardt. The new exponent of the character in London is to be Miss Winifred Emery, who at the present moment shares perhaps only with Miss Olga Nethersole the capacity to interpret with brilliance and distinction the rôles that were Desclée's. And though, in characters of Desclée's more essentially dramatic and more palpitating than that of Meilhac and Halévy's Gilberte—in "Diane de Lys," for example, and in "Une Visite de Noces"—it is probable that Miss Winifred Emery would find herself less authoritative and less penetrating than Miss Olga Nethersole, in the part of Gilberte in "Frou-frou," Miss Emery need scarcely at the moment fear any rival.

MR. AND MRS. ERNEST PERTWEE gave, the other morning, at the Steinway Hall, one of their interesting dramatic and vocal recitals; and not only did they appear themselves with good effect, but they received the aid of other admirable artists. Mr. Pertwee was very effective as well as judicious in the Picture Scene from "Hamlet," and was most entertaining in Mr. G. R. Sims's sketch, "The Browns of Walham Green." Mrs. Pertwee was rightly encored, after singing, with her clear and flexible voice, Thome's "Perles d'Or." Miss Decima Moore deserves her successes generally, and does everything with brightness and spirit and the whole of her heart; but her ways are better for the stage than for the concert-room platform, because she has become perhaps even more comedian than singer—at least, there seemed reason to think so at the Steinway Hall the other day. We missed—and were sorry to miss—Miss Eva Moore, who could not get from the Lyric quite in time. We like Mr. Lawrence Kellie. It is all very well to say that he recites his songs instead of singing them. Well, he has style instead of a voice, if you will; but in any case he "says or sings" his text with admirable rhythm and significance.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

Mlle. I. EIBENSCHÜTZ played Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat at Mr. Henschel's sixth concert (Feb. 22). The lady displayed plenty of intelligence and good feeling, but, throughout, there was a want of dignity and repose. The work is one of supreme difficulty, and no doubt all allowance should be made in the case of a young pianist; but Mlle. Eibenschütz did not render full justice even to herself. Health, weather, cold fingers—many are the excuses which charity would suggest when a public performer is not up to high-water mark; but criticism deals with facts, not their causes. A vocalist, by the way, can, and frequently does, plead for the indulgence of the public on the ground of indisposition, or even refuse to sing. Such a step, however, on the part of a pianist, though quite as reasonable, would appear foolishness. The orchestra gave a satisfactory rendering of Schumann's D minor Symphony under Mr. Henschel's sympathetic guidance. The programme included Brahms's severe Rhapsody for contralto, male chorus and orchestra (Op. 53). Miss Brema sang with dramatic power, but the quality of her notes was not always pleasing. It is difficult, with a miscellaneous programme, to throw oneself into the right mood for Goethe's deep poetry, and the composer's mystic music; the Rhapsody is a work which grows on acquaintance.

The programme of the first Pailharmonic Concert given at the Queen's Hall on Wednesday evening opened with Goldmark's Overture "Sikuntala." The music is interesting and the scoring picturesque; the closing section is, however, somewhat spun out. The chief feature of the programme was, undoubtedly, Tchaikowsky's sixth Symphony in B minor (Op. 74), produced at St. Petersburg, under the direction of the composer, shortly before his death. There are commonplace moments in the music, and at times intellect prevails over emotion; but, taken as a whole, it is a work of high purpose, and one whose merits cannot be fully appreciated at a single hearing. This remark applies more especially to the opening Allegro, in which the composer has so much to say. The second movement in 5-4 time is a little tone-picture, with fresh, piquant melodies skilfully treated, yet without a trace of effort. The following Allegro contains clever writing and brilliant scoring; but it strikes one as "made." And again, it may be asked what this "chattering" music, that bucolic theme means in a Symphony styled "Pathetic," an epithet which really only applies to the Finale, which might indeed be called gloomy. There is a touch of Schubert's B minor Symphony in this Finale, but the tone is of icier hue. It seems almost as if the fates had whispered to Tchaikowsky that the thread of his life was about to be broken. The performance of the work, under the direction of Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, was magnificent. Mr. Leonard Borwick played Beethoven's Concert in E flat, and it was interesting to compare his reading with that of Mlle. Eibenschütz mentioned above. In the first movement he displayed more breadth, and in the second, more repose; but as regards the Finale the lady achieved greater success. Mr. Borwick's performance of the Grieg "Ballade" was clever, but the programme was quite long enough without a pianoforte solo. Miss Ella Russell sang Mendelssohn's "Infelice" with much vigour.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

WE regret to hear of the sudden death of Mme. Patey, the well-known contralto, after singing at a "farewell" concert at Sheffield. She was great in oratorio, and a very successful singer of ballads and simple national music, such as "The Banks of Allin Water," her awan's song. Mme. Patey was born in 1852, and had been many years before the public. Her voice showed the traces of time, and she was about to bring her public career to a close.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER, BELFAST,

Were awarded the Grand Diploma of Honour—Highest Award for Irish Damask Table Linen, Edinburgh, 1890
Two Prize Medals, Paris, 1889.

IRISH DAMASK TABLE AND HOUSE LINEN.

Fish Napkins, 2s. 11d. per doz. Dinner Napkins, 5s. 6d. per doz. Table Cloths, 2 yds. square, 2s. 11d. 2½ yds. by 3 yds., 5s. 11d. each. Kitchen Table Cloths, 11d. each. Strong Huckaback Towels, 4s. 6d. per doz. Frilled Linen Pillow Cases, from 1s. 2½d. each.

IRISH CAMBRIC

Embroidered Handkerchiefs, in all the latest styles, from 1s. to 20s. each.

Children's Bordered, 1s. 3d. per doz.
Ladies' " 2s. 3d. "
Gentlemen's " 3s. 3d. "

Hemstitched:
Ladies', 2s. 9d. per doz.
Gents', 3s. 11d. "

POCKET HANDKERCHIEFS.

COLLARS: Ladies' and Children's 2-fold, 3s. 6d. per doz. Gents' 4-fold, 4s. 11d. per doz.
CUFFS for Ladies, Gentlemen, and Children, from 5s. 11d. per doz.

IRISH LINEN

Illustrated Price-Lists and Samples Post Free to any part of the World.

SHIRTS.

Best quality long-cloth Shirts, 4-fold Linen Fronts, 35s. 6d. half-dozen. (To measure 2s. extra.)

BY SPECIAL
APPOINTMENTS TO
THE QUEEN AND EMPERESS FREDERICK
OF GERMANY

ROBINSON & CLEAVER, BELFAST.

ELKIN MATHEWS & JOHN LANE'S NEW BOOKS IN BELLES-LETTRES.

DAVIDSON (JOHN).—PLAYS; An Unhitherto Pastoral; A Romantic Faree; Bruce, a Chronicle Play; Smith, a Tragic Faree; Searamouch in Saxos, a Pantomime. With a Frontispiece, Title-Page, and Cover Design by AUBREY BEARDSLEY. 500 copies. Small 4to, 7s. 6d. net.

"As with truly strong in it, this generous vitality makes in his work for a most sensitive beauty and refinement of grain. Out of the strong come forth sweetness and with such sweetness Mr. Davidson's work, either in verse or prose, abounds."—"LOGGOLLEN" in Star.

DAVIDSON (JOHN).—A RANDOM ITINERARY: Prose Sketches, with a Ballad. Frontispiece and Title-Page by LAURENCE HOUSMAN. Fcap. 8vo. Uniform with "Fleet Street Eclogues." 5s. net.

"I would advise any one who wants a book by which to remember 1893 to go at once and buy 'A Random Itinerary.' It is a delightful book to read at home this winter if you have any memories of your own of the spring and summer of 1893."—Mr. QUILLER COUNCH in Speaker.

ALLEN (GRANT).—THE LOWER SLOPES: A Volume of Verse. With Title-Page by J. ILLINGWORTH KAY. 600 copies. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

"They are graceful and often forcible expressions of genuine personal conceptions and convictions."—Daily Chronicle.

"Clever, sprightly, ingenious, varied in mood and structure, and in every way characteristic of a literary faculty which is rarely at fault."—Times.

BINYON (LAURENCE).—LYRIC POEMS. Title-Page and Cover Design by Selwyn Image. 84, 16mo, 5s. net.

"Displays a grace of fancy, a spontaneity and individuality of inspiration, and a felicitous command of metre and diction which lift the writer above the average of the minor singers of our time."—Times.

WILDE (OSCAR).—SALOME: a Tragedy in One Act, done into English. With 10 Illustrations, Title-Page, Tail-Piece, and Cover Design by Aubrey Beardsley. 500 copies. Small 4to, 15s. net. Also 100 copies, Large Paper, 30s. net. [Ready.]

TYNAN HINKSON (KATHARINE).—CUCKOO SONGS. With Title-Page and Cover Design by LAURENCE HOUSMAN. Fcap. 8vo, 5s. net. [Ready.]

LE GALLIENNE (RICHARD).—THE RELIGION OF A LITERARY MAN. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net. [Fourth Thousand.] Also a special Rubricated Edition on Hand-Made Paper. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

"This is a remarkable book; we welcome it as a sincere and serious attempt to preach the gospel of simplicity in life and thought."—Guardian.

"The best prose he has yet written; best in its sustained and equal excellence throughout. It stoutly sets its face against pestilential modern affectations of artistic licence and personal benevolence, against the claim to be unmoored and the pretence of being bliss; it appeals to the same emotions, to natural wonder, and pity, and humility, and humour."—Mr. LOSEL JOHNSON, in Academy.

"It is neither flippant nor shallow. Altogether a book not to be missed by the literary amateur whatever the theologian may think of it."—St. James's Gazette.

LE GALLIENNE (RICHARD).—ENGLISH POEMS. Third Edition. Uniform in size and binding with "Religion of a Literary Man." Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

THOMPSON (FRANCIS).—POEMS. With Frontispiece. Title-Page and Cover Design by LAURENCE HOUSMAN. Pott 4to, 5s. net. [Third Edition.]

"I can hardly doubt that at least that minority who can recognise the essentials under the accidents of poetry, and who feel that it is poetic form only and not to forms that eternity belongs, will agree that alike in wealth and dignity of imagination, in depth and subtlety of thought, and in magic and mastery of language, a new poet of the first rank is to be welcomed in the author of this volume."—Mr. H. D. TRAILL, in Nineteenth Century.

"In our opinion Mr. Thompson's poetry, at its highest, attains a sublimity unsurpassed by any Victorian poet."—Speaker.

GREENE (G. A.).—ITALIAN LYRISTS OF TO-DAY. Translations in the Original Metres from the Italian of Carducci, Stecchetti, D'Annunzio, Panzacchi, Fogazzaro, Graf, and about Thirty other Living Writers. With Bibliographical and Biographical Notes, and an Introduction. Crown 8vo, 5s. net. [Ready.]

"An excellent Italian scholar, a critic of sound judgment, and one who is in touch through personal acquaintance with the present literary movement in Italy."—Professor DOWNES in Illustrated London News.

"Mr. Greene has done an excellent work, and he has done it very well."—Full Mark Gazette.

EGERTON (GEORGE).—KEYNOTES: Short Stories. With Title-Page by Aubrey Beardsley. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net. [Fourth Edition.]

"A work of genius. There is upon the whole thing a stamp of downright inevitableness as of things which must be written and written exactly in that way."—Speaker.

"A rich passionate temperament vibrates through every line. We have met with nothing so lovely in its tenderness since Mr. Kipling's 'Without Benefit of Clergy.'"—Daily Chronicle.

GRAHAM (KENNETH).—PAGAN PAPERS: A Volume of Essays. With Title-Page by AUBREY BEARDSLEY. Fcap. 8vo, 5s. net. [Ready.]

GARNETT (RICHARD).—A VOLUME OF POEMS. With Title-Page designed by J. ILLINGWORTH KAY. 350 copies. Crown 8vo, 5s. net. [Ready.]

HAKE (Dr).—POEMS. Selected by Mrs. MAXWELL, with Portrait, after D. G. Rossetti, and Cover Design by GLEESON WHITE. Crown 8vo, 5s. net. [Ready.]

JAMES (W. P.).—ROMANTIC PROFESSIONS: A Volume of Essays. With Title-Page by J. ILLINGWORTH KAY. Crown 8vo, 5s. net. [Ready.]

GOSSE (EDMUND).—THE LETTERS OF THOMAS LOVELL BEDDOES. Now first Edited. Pott 8vo, 1s. net. [Ready.]

THE BODLEY HEAD, VIGO STREET, W.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

SOCIAL EVOLUTION. By Benjamin Kidd. 8vo, 10s. net.

TIMES.—"It is not often that a new and unknown writer makes his first appearance with a work as novel in conception, as fertile in suggestion, and, on the whole, so powerful in exposition as 'Social Evolution' appears to us to be. 'Social Evolution' is a book which no serious thinker should neglect, and no reader can study without recognising it as the work of a singularly penetrating and original mind."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"Altogether this is one of the most suggestive and inspiring books which have ever dealt with problems of the imminent future."

OBSERVER.—"There is scarcely a page in Mr. Kidd's book which is not full of suggestion regarding the social problems of our time."

ESSAYS in HISTORICAL CHEMISTRY. By T. E. THORPE, F.R.S., Professor of Chemistry in the Royal College of Science, South Kensington, London. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

The COLLECTED WORKS of THOMAS HENRY HUXLEY, F.R.S. In Monthly Volumes. Globe 8vo, 5s. each volume. (The Eversley Series.)

Vol. VI. HUME. WITH HELPS to the STUDY of BERKELEY.

A SHORT HISTORY of the ENGLISH PEOPLE.

By J. R. GREEN, M.A. Illustrated Edition. Edited by Mrs. J. R. GREEN and Miss KATE NORGATE. Part XXX. Super-royal 8vo, 1s. net. (Vols. I., II., and III., super-royal 8vo, each 12s. net.)

BISHOP LIGHTFOOT. Reprinted from the Quarterly Review. With Prefatory Note by the BISHOP of DURHAM. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

TIMES.—"Recognised by the late Prelate's friends and admirers as the work of one who had exceptional advantages for fulfilling the task he undertook."

THE INCARNATION and COMMON LIFE.

By BROOKE FOSS WESTCOTT, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop of Durham. Crown 8vo, price 9s.

TIMES.—"A collection of sermons which possess, among other merits, the rare one of actuality, reflecting, as they frequently do, the Bishop's well-known and eager interest in social problems of the day."

VILLAGE SERMONS: Preached at Whatley.

By the late R. W. CHURCH, D.C.L., sometime Dean of St. Paul's, Rector of Whatley, Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford. Second Series. Crown 8vo, 6s.

TIMES.—"The first series of his 'Village Sermons' has long been well known and appreciated for its fine combination of spiritual insight with ethical inspiration, and this characteristic is not less conspicuous in the second series now published."

PRINCIPLES of ENGLISH COMPOSITION

through Analysis and Synthesis. A Text-Book for the Senior Classes of Elementary Schools and for Pupil Teachers. By P. GOYEN, Inspector of Schools. Globe 8vo, 2s.—KEY, globe 8vo, 4s. net.

MACMILLAN'S THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.—New Volumes.

MISS STUART'S LEGACY. By F. A. Steel.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6s.

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"The interest never flags."

BLANCHE, LADY FALAISE. By J. H. Shorthouse.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

GLOBE.—"The style is smooth, the tone so high, the atmosphere so rarefied, and the art of the narrator so skilful, that one cannot choose but read."

THE EVERSELEY SERIES.—New Volume.

PARTIAL PORTRAITS. By Henry James.

Globe 8vo, 5s.

SPEAKER.—"A very delightful volume. What one feels in reading Mr. James, and what makes the reading of him so satisfactory, is that one is in contact with a conscious and distinguished literary artist who possesses a rare talent and who has acquired the mastery of it. The singular subtleties of expression, the power of distinguishing and conveying half-tones and elusive shades of perception which are a mark of that talent, are richly exhibited in this book, and they are exhibited in connection with a very sane and shrewd critical judgment."

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

No. 413. MARCH, 1894.

CONTENTS.

1. PERLYCROSS. By R. D. BLACKMORE. Chapters XXX.—XXXII.
2. THE GROWTH of NATIONAL SENTIMENT. By C. B. ROYLAND-KEST.
3. THE RIOTS in BOMBAY. By an OLD INDIAN MAGISTRATE.
4. OESCHENEN.
5. THE 6.0 P.M. from PADDINGTON.
6. CROMWELL'S VETERANS in FLANDERS. By the Hon. J. W. FORTESCUE.
7. THE FATHERS of OPERA COMIQUE. By CHARLES WILLEBY.
8. THE TWO DOROTHIES. By WILLIAM WATSON.
9. A YOUNG MURDERER.
10. THE TRUE DISCOVERY of AMERICA.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1140.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, MARCH 10, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

MESSRS. METHUEN'S LIST.

Messrs. METHUEN announce that in consequence of the large Subscription for the FOURTH EDITION of "BARABBAS," publication is postponed till March 15th, when a FIFTH EDITION will be ready.

Marie Corelli.—BARABBAS: a Dream of the World's Tragedy. By MARIE CORELLI, Author of "A Romance of Two Worlds." Fourth and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Miss Corelli's new romance has been received with much disapprobation by the secular papers, and with warm welcome by the religious papers. By the former she has been accused of blasphemy and bad taste; "a gory nightmare"; "a hideous travesty"; "grotesque vulgarisation"; "unworthy of criticism"; "vulgar redundancy"; "sickening details"—these are some of the secular flowers of speech. On the other hand, the Guardian praises "the dignity of its conceptions, the reserve round the Central Figure, the fine imagery of the scene and circumstance, so much that is elevating and devout"; the Illustrated Church News styles the book "reverent and artistic, broad based on the rock of our common nature, and appealing to what is best in it"; the Christian World says it is written "by one who has more than conventional reverence, who has tried to tell the story that it may be read again with open and attentive eyes"; the Church of England Pulpit welcomes "a book which teems with faith without any appearance of irreverence."

THIRTEENTH EDITION OF "DODO."

E. F. Benson.—DODO: a Detail of the Day. By E. F. BENSON. Thirteenth Edition. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

Few novels of late years have been so successful as "Dodo." In its two-volume form it has passed through ten editions, and has attracted by its brilliance universal attention. The best critics have been cordial in their praise. The Guardian spoke of "Dodo" as "unusually clever and interesting"; the Speaker called it "a delightfully witty sketch of society"; the Standard said the dialogue was "a perpetual feast of epigram and paradox"; the Athenaeum spoke of the author as "a writer of quite exceptional ability"; the Academy praised his "amazing cleverness"; the World said the book was "brilliantly written"; and half a dozen papers have declared that there was "not a dull page in the two volumes."

Gilchrist.—THE STONE DRAGON.

By MURRAY GILCHRIST. Crown 8vo, 6s.

A volume of stories weird and original.

"The author's fancies are atoned for by certain positive and admirable merits. The romances have not their counterpart in modern literature, and to read them is a unique experience." National Observer.

F. S. Carew.—JIM B. By F. S. Carew. Crown 8vo, linen boards, 2s. 6d.

An unconventional and pathetic tale.

Mr. Gladstone.—THE SPEECHES and

PUBLIC ADDRESSES of the Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE, M.P. With Notes. Edited by A. W. HUTTON, M.A. (Librarian of the Gladstone Library), and H. J. COHEN, M.A. With Portrait. 8vo. Vol. IX. 12s. 6d. [Ready.]

Messrs. METHUEN are issuing, in ten volumes, an Authorised Collection of Mr. Gladstone's Speeches, the work being undertaken with his sanction and under his superintendence. Notes and Introductions will be added.

In view of the political situation it is proposed to issue Vols. IX. and X., which will include the Speeches of the last seven or eight years, immediately, and then to proceed with the earlier volumes. Volume X. is already published.

O'Grady.—THE STORY of IRELAND.

By STANDISH O'GRADY, Author of "Finn and his Companions." Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"Novel and very fascinating history. Wonderfully alluring." Cork Examiner.

"Most delightful, most stimulating. Its racy humour, its original imaginings, its perfectly unique history, make it one of the freshest, breeziest volumes." Abolitionist Times.

"A survey at once graphic, acute, and quaintly written." Times.

METHUEN & CO., 18, BURY STREET, W.C.

THEORIES:

Studies from a Modern Woman.

TIMES.—"Clever and lively.....The widening rift..... is traced very dextrously.....'Theories' is a vivacious little novel."

THEORIES.

In "The Independent Novel Series."

ATHENAEUM.—"This is a clever book."

THEORIES.

Demy 12mo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"This is a clever study..... The book is extremely interesting, and is written with a truly artistic impartiality."

THEORIES:

Studies from a Modern Woman.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"Few more intelligent, thoughtful, and hopeful stories have been written of late years.....The book teems with wit and wisdom, subtle humour, and brilliant characterisation."

THEORIES:

In "The Independent Novel Series."

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"Decidedly bright and original.....The book is full of sensible and natural reflections.....'Theories' is a novel to read."

THEORIES.

Demy 12mo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

LITERARY WORLD.—"Described with a thoroughness that bears witness to much observation and keen insight into character."

THEORIES:

Studies from a Modern Woman.

SHEFFIELD INDEPENDENT.—"The book is cleverly conceived, and well written."

THEORIES.

In "The Independent Novel Series."

SCOTTISH LEADER.—"A clever and readable novel."

THEORIES.

Demy 12mo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

CHRISTIAN LEADER.—"From beginning to end the book has both character and distinction in it."

LONDON

T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON'S LIST.

SIXTH EDITION NOW READY.

A Yellow Aster.

In 3 vols.

By "IOTA."

"The characters are drawn with a notable combination of delicacy and downrightness, and with a pathos which is as effective as it is refined." Athenaeum.

ADA CAMBRIDGE'S NEW NOVEL.

A Marriage Ceremony.

In 2 vols.

"Brightly written, with a really original plot, well-sketched characters, touches of humour, and unforced pathos. We congratulate Miss Ada Cambridge on her latest work." Full Mall Gazette.

MRS. ROBERT JOCELYN'S NEW NOVEL.

PAMELA'S HONEYMOON. In

3 vols., by the Author of "Drawn Blank."

[Next week, at all Libraries.]

BY THE HON. MRS. HENNIKER.

OUTLINES. By the Author of "Foiled," "Sir George," &c. With designed title-page and Portrait of the Author. In crown 8vo, cloth, gilt, 6s.

"Distinctly the best thing she has yet done. Close observation, sympathetic insight, and a very real literary gift, combine to make 'Outlines' a book to be treasured." Speaker.

EIGHTH AND CHEAPER EDITION.

A GRAY EYE OR SO. By

FRANKFORT-MOORE. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

"* This novel, in three-volume form, was even more successful than the same author's 'I Forbid the Banns,' it having passed through Six Library Editions."

BY THE AUTHOR OF "I FORBID THE BANNS."

A JOURNALIST'S NOTE-BOOK

By FRANKFORT-MOORE. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, with Photogravure Portrait of the Author. 12s.

[Immediately.]

BY AUTHOR OF "STILL LIFE OF THE MIDDLE TEMPLE."

MIDDLE TEMPLE TABLE

TALK. By W. G. THORPE, F.S.A. A Barrister of the Society. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, with Photogravure Portrait of the Author, 15s. [Shortly.]

A STORY OF INDIAN ADVENTURE.

THE TEMPLE of DEATH. By

EDMUND MITCHELL. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, with Frontispiece by O. H. Edwards, 6s. [Next week.]

NEW VOLUME OF

HUTCHINSON'S SELECT LIBRARY.

THE HERITAGE of LANG-

DALE: a Romance of the Eighteenth Century. By Mrs. ALEXANDER, Author of "The Wooing o't," &c. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d. [Immediately.]

HUTCHINSON & CO., PATERNOSTER ROW,

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PAGE

EUROPE AT THE FRENCH REVOLUTION, by Judge O'CONNOR MORRIS	201
BRIDGES ON THE PROSOODY OF MILTON, by LAURENCE BINTON	202
MAXIME DU CAMP'S LITERARY RECOLLECTIONS, by F. T. MARZIALS	204
MALLOCK'S LABOUR AND THE POPULAR WELFARE, by J. BONAR	204
DAVIDSON'S A RANDOM ITINERARY, by GRANT RICHARDS	205
NEW NOVELS, by J. A. NORLE	206
SOME CLASSICAL TEXTS	207
NOTES AND NEWS	208
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	208
ORIGINAL VERSE: "A WOUNDED AMAZON," by A. W. BENN	209
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	209
HONORARY DEGREES AT CAMBRIDGE	209
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	209
CORRESPONDENCE—
1. A Unknown Work of Saint Adamnan, by E. W. B. Nicholson; The Teaching University of London, by Prof. Henry Sidgwick and A. W. Bennett; Mrs. Jameson and Lady Byron, by Miss Hamilton	210
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	211
INDIAN JOTTINGS	211
SCIENCE NOTES	212
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	213
MINOR EXHIBITIONS	214
CORRESPONDENCE—
Botticelli's "Spring," by W. C. F. Anderson; A Roman Tile from Gloucester, by F. Haverfield	214
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	215
RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	215

ADVERTISER is seeking some POSITION of TRUST with light duties, in an Institute, Museum, or Library, to augment a small pension. Speciality—Microscopy. Highest testimonials.—W. B., 48, Davenant Road, Upper Holloway, N.

MR. KIRWAN.—LESSONS IN SPEECH
Illustrated Dramatic Readings (a combination of speech, pictures, and music). Selections. Literary Lectures.—Address, 8, Vernon Place, W.C.

ELOCUTION, Voice Production, Gesture,
Shakespeare, Gymnastics, Delsarte, Esthetic, Physical and Vocal Drill, Private Lessons in Expression, Practice in Reading, Recitation, and Criticism. The CHAFFEE-NOBLE TRAINING SCHOOL OF EXPRESSION, 13, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W. Principal, Miss FANNIE MASON.

CHOICE BOOKS and PICTURES offered by
LOWE (CHARLES), NEW STREET, BIRMINGHAM,

Arnold Society's Publications, complete set books included	£ 6. 0. 0
Not quite complete	75 0 0
Ivories, 170 in magnificent oak polished case, 28 drawers	35 0 0
"Punch," original choice set, vols. 1 to 103, new, half-morocco	46 0 0
"Punch," original, in years (new, half-morocco) 1841 to 1889.	12 12 0
Dugdale's Monasticon, 9 vols., purple morocco, very choice set, cost £150	45 0 0
8 vols., thick folio, half-calf, cost £150	18 18 0
Autograph Letters, collection of over 500, mostly with the envelopes	55 0 9
British Association Reports, complete set, new, half-calf	25 0 0
George Morland Prints, splendid set of 12 coloured original, framed	30 0 0
Abbotsford Waverley, 6 vols., 6s. Kindly write for samples	—
Sir Richard Steel, magnificent Kneller Portrait of, large, framed	38 0 0
Mrs. Elizabeth Rowa do do	26 0 0
Nice example of Simon Voste, wood block books on vellum	39 0 0
Perfect example of WYMAN & WOOD, 1890	28 0 0
Remarkable collection of Autographs of Members of Parliament during the Reform	50 0 0
Parliamentary Speeches, collection of 28 vols., new, half-purple morocco, uncut	20 0 0
Scott, Sir W., complete choice set of 100 vols., purple morocco, gilt, cost £250	24 0 0
Thackeray, complete works, Edition de Luxe, 26 vols., elegant crimson morocco, cost £200	40 0 0
Villon Society's Arabian Nights, 9 vols., vellum, gilt, nice as new	10 10 0
Sowerby's Botany, fine set, equal to new, last edition, 12 vols.	14 0 0
Voltaire's Works, 70 vols., large paper, coloured plates, elegant crimson morocco, cost £150.	28 0 0
Gallery of Fashion, very choice set old true calf (faultless), 7 vols.	50 0 0
Chapman's Homer, fine copy, original old calf, gilt back	20 0 0
English Spy, The, vinct, 2 vols., £2; another copy, polished morocco, 2 vols.	20 0 0
Penman's London, many hundred extra, Plates, and choice Portraits, 2 vols., atlas folio	22 0 0
Thackeray, W. M., unpublished unique Portrait by J. Orsay	60 0 0
Answorth's Novels, set of first editions, 15 vols., polished calf	42 0 0
Life of Mrs. Siddons, extra illustrated and extended, 4 vols., purple morocco.	24 0 0
Atkyn's Gloucestershire, large paper, splendid copy	25 10 0
Exquisite Drawing by Cipriani	15 0 0

LOWE'S £5 PACKAGES of Assorted Books for Village Libraries, School Libraries, Working Men's Institutes, Public Libraries, and for Private Families, have given great satisfaction wherever sent. These Packages consist of from 150 to 200 volumes, and are books well selected, and most useful for the purposes named. These books are all very carefully selected, and are books of a deeply interesting and instructive character, and are mostly in their original binding, in nice clean condition (cost nearly £20). No duplicates supplied. Books not approved of will at once be taken back and exchanged for others.

To ladies and gentlemen desirous of making presents of books, these lots are specially adapted, as they are nice clean copies, and well selected from many thousands.

PARCELS MAY BE HAD FROM £1 1s. UPWARDS.

BOOKS!

WANTED TO PURCHASE BY

CHARLES LOWE,
NEW STREET (EXCHANGE BUILDINGS), BIRMINGHAM.

LIBRARIES AND SMALL QUANTITIES OF OLD AND NEW BOOKS.

Manuscripts, Periodicals, Engravings, Old Portraits, &c., purchased, FULL VALUE GIVEN.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.

NOTICE is HEREBY GIVEN, that on WEDNESDAY, 25TH OF APRIL NEXT, the Senate will proceed to ELECT EXAMINERS in the following departments for the year commencing July 1st, 1894:—

Examinerships.	Salaries (Each.)	Present Examiners.
ARTS AND SCIENCE.
Two in Latin	£180	{ Prof. Arthur Palmer, M.A., LL.D. { Vacant.
Two in Greek	120	{ Robert Drew Hicks, Esq., M.A. { G. E. Marinidin, Esq., M.A.
Two in The English Language, Literature, and History	130	{ Prof. C. H. Herford, M.A., Litt.D. { Vacant.
Two in The French Language and Literature	13	{ Amédée Esclapart, Esq. { Vacant.
Two in The German Language and Literature	80	{ Prof. F. Althaus, Ph.D. { Karl Brühl, Esq., Ph.D., M.A.
Two in The Hebrew Text of the Old Testament, the Greek Text of the New Testament, the Evidence of the Christian Religion, and Scripture History	50	{ Rev. Prof. Stanley Leathes, D.D. { Rev. C. H. H. Wright, D.D., Ph.D., M.A.
Two in Mental and Moral Science	120	{ Prof. James Sully, M.A., LL.D. { James Ward, Esq., M.A., Sc.D., LL.D.
Two in Political Economy	30	{ Prof. H. S. Foxwell, M.A. { J. N. Keynes, Esq., M.A., Sc.D.
Two in Mathematics and Natural Philosophy	200	{ Prof. Horace Lamb, M.A., F.R.S. { Rev. H. W. Watson, Sc.D., F.R.S.
Two in Experimental Philosophy	210	{ Prof. J. H. Poynting, Sc.D., M.A., F.R.S. { Prof. J. J. Thomson, Sc.D., M.A., F.R.S.
Two in Chemistry	240	{ Prof. Herbert McLeod, F.R.S. { Vacant.
Two in Botany and Vegetable Physiology	120	{ Prof. J. B. Green, M.A., D.Sc. { Prof. Daniel Oliver, LL.D., F.R.S.
Two in Comparative Anatomy and Zoology	120	{ Prof. E. Ray Lankester, M.A., LL.D. { Vacant. (F.R.S.)
Two in Geology and Physical Geography	75	{ Prof. Edward Hull, M.A., LL.D. { Vacant. (F.R.S.)

Examinerships.	Salaries (Each.)	Present Examiners.
LAW.
Two in Jurisprudence, Roman Law, Principles of Legislation, and International Law	£100	{ Edmund Robertson, Esq., LL.D., M.P. { Vacant.
Two in Equity and Real and Personal Property	50	{ Alf. Hopkinson, Esq., M.A., B.C.L., Q.C. { John Simmonds, Esq., LL.D., M.A.
Two in Common Law and Law and Principles of Evidence	50	{ W. Blake Odgers, Esq., M.A., LL.D. { William Willis, Esq., LL.D., B.A., Q.C.
Two in Constitutional History of England	25	{ Prof. T. F. Tout, M.A. { T. A. Walker, Esq., M.A., LL.M.
MEDICINE.
Two in Medicine	210	{ John Cavaay, Esq., M.D. (R.S.) { Joseph Frank Payne, Esq., M.D.
Two in Surgery	200	{ H. Greenway Howse, Esq., M.S., M.B. { Henry Morris, Esq., M.A., M.B.
Two in Anatomy	150	{ Prof. D. J. Cunningham, M.D., C.M. { F.R.S. { Richard C. Lucas, Esq., M.B., B.S. { Prof. W. D. Halliburton, M.D., B.Sc. { P.D.S. { Prof. William Stirling, M.D., D.Sc.
Two in Obstetric Medicine	105	{ C. J. Cullingworth, Esq., M.D. { Vacant.
Two in Materia Medica and Pharmaceutical Chemistry	100	{ Prof. Thirard, M.D. { W. Hale White, Esq., M.D.
Two in Forensic Medicine	50	{ A. P. Luff, Esq., M.D., B.Sc. { Prof. J. Dixon Mann, M.D.
MUSIC.
Two in Music	50	{ Prof. J. F. Bridge, Mus. Doc. { C. Hubert Parry, Esq., Mus. Doc., B.A.

The Examiners above named are re-eligible, and intend to offer themselves for re-election. Candidates must send in their names to the Registrar, with any attestation of their qualifications they may think desirable, on or before TUESDAY, MARCH 27th. (It is particularly desired by the Senate that no personal application of any kind be made to its individual Members.)

By order of the Senate,

ARTHUR MILMAN, M.A., Registrar.

University of London, Burlington-gardens, W.,
March 6th, 1894.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL
MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. BROCKEN, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

GREECE.—THOS. COOK & SON,
Originators of Tours in Greece, &c., have complete arrangements for visiting Athens, Egina, Eleusis, Hydra, Nauplia, Tiryns, Argos, Mycenae, Corinth, Marathon, Salamis, Olympia, &c. Tickets by all routes.—Programme upon application to THOS. COOK & SON, Ludgate Circus, London.

TYPE-WRITING.
AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—
Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS
115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List—115, Fleet Street, London.

CATALOGUES
FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.
WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
Importers of Foreign Books,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS
and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 28 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

The Author's Manual
By PERCY RUSSELL.

With Prefatory Remarks by Mr. GLADSTONE.
Sixth Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s.
With Portrait.
The WESTMINSTER REVIEW says: "A very complete manual and guide for journalist and author. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense..... We have little else but praise for the volume."
DIGBY, LONG & CO., PUBLISHERS,
18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION for the ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE.
Burlington House, London, W.

The NEXT ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING will be held at OXFORD, commencing on WEDNESDAY, August 8th.

PRESIDENT-ELECT—
The Most Hon. THE MARQUIS OF SALISBURY, K.G., D.C.L., F.R.S., Chancellor of the University of Oxford.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS OF MEMOIRS.—Authors are reminded that the acceptance of Memoirs, and the day on which they are to be read, are, as far as possible, determined by Organising Committees for the several Sections before the beginning of the Meeting. Memoirs should be sent to the Office of the Association. Information about Local Arrangements may be obtained from the Local Secretaries, University Museum, Oxford.

G. GAFFITU, Assistant General Secretary.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.
(Incorporated by Royal Charter.)

Patron—HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.
President—The Right Hon. Sir M. E. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I.

THURSDAY, 15th MARCH, at 8.30 P.M.
The following Paper will be read:—
"SUFFOLK and the VILLEINS' INSURRECTION," by EDGAR POWELL.
20, Hanover Square, W.

ELTHAM COLLEGE, KENT
(THE ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL).
TEN OPEN ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS, £40 to £20, on APRIL 11, 12, 13.—Full particulars of HEAD MASTER.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to best
University or Army Tutor, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained (free of charge) by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. BEYRON, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

MONDAY NEXT.
By Order of the Administrator.—The Stock of a SURGICAL INSTRUMENT MAKER.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will SELL by
AUCTION, at his GREAT ROOMS, 38, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, on MONDAY NEXT, MARCH 12, at half-past 12 precisely—the STOCK of a SURGICAL INSTRUMENT MAKER—the Surgical Instruments of Dr. HENSMAN, and a small stock of Sewing Machines.
On view the Saturday prior, to till 4, and morning of Sale, and Catalogues had.

Fourth Edition, pp. 300, 5s.
PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.
By Prof. LIONEL REALE, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.
HARRISON & SONS, 59, Pall Mall.

EDWARD STANFORD'S LIST.

DEDICATED BY PERMISSION TO HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

Just published, Second Issue, Revised and Enlarged,
STANFORD'S LONDON ATLAS

OF UNIVERSAL GEOGRAPHY.
FOLIO EDITION.

ONE HUNDRED MAPS

And a List of Names, with Latitudes and Longitudes.

Imperial folio, bound half-morocco extra, gilt edges, price £12.

"We are glad to be able to say that in the new edition of Stanford's great 'London Atlas' many improvements have been introduced. The work ought to be a permanent monument to the enterprise of the house by which it is issued. The atlas as a whole is one of great practical utility. It is in many respects unique among English atlases. For those who use an atlas mainly to find where a place is, and who can afford the cost of the 'London Atlas,' we commend it."

Times, February 28, 1894.

Just ready, demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

MAN, the PRIMEVAL SAVAGE:

His Haunts and Relics from the Hill-Tops of Bedfordshire to Blackwall.

By WORTHINGTON G. SMITH,

Fellow of the Anthropological Institute, F.L.S., &c.

With 242 Illustrations by the Author.

Reissue of Stanford's Compendium of Geography and Travel, Revised and in great part Rewritten.

AUSTRALASIA.

Vol. I. AUSTRALIA and NEW ZEALAND.

By ALFRED RUSSEL WALLACE,
LL.D., F.R.S.

With numerous Maps and Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 15s.

Vol. II. of "Australasia," embracing "Malaysia and the Pacific Archipelagoes," by Dr. F. H. H. GUILLEMARD, is in preparation.

LONDON: EDWARD STANFORD,
26 AND 27, COCKSPUR STREET, CHABING CROSS, S.W.
Geographer to the Queen.

MUDIE'S

SELECT

LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and
SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

ONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY,

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 49, Queen Victoria St., E.C

(1) THE wily advertiser seeketh to provoke merriment.

(2) ANOBIMUM ERODITUM, the devouring book-worm, turns up its nose (and its toes) at Stickphast Paste.

(3) ANYBODY go one better?

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

THE LIFE of SIR HARRY PARKES, K.C.B., G.C.M.G., sometime Her Majesty's Minister to China and Japan. In Two Volumes. Vol. I. By STANLEY LANE-POOLE. With a Portrait and Maps. Vol. II. By F. V. DICKINS and S. LANE-POOLE. With a Map. 8vo. 25s. net.

STANDARD.—"A singularly interesting work."

TIMES.—"These volumes will be eagerly studied by all who concern themselves seriously with the political and diplomatic history of the East."

SOCIAL EVOLUTION. By Benjamin Kidd. 8vo, 10s. net.

TIMES.—"It is not often that a new and unknown writer makes his first appearance with a work so novel in conception, so fertile in suggestion, and, on the whole, so powerful in exposition as 'Social Evolution' appears to us to be. The work of a singularly penetrating and original mind."

SPECTATOR.—"We do not often devote a leader to a book, but we have an impression that Mr. Benjamin Kidd's book, 'Social Evolution,' may have wide political as well as social effects. At all events, it marks a turning point in the social controversy which is raging all around us."

THE HISTORY of HUMAN MARRIAGE. By Edward Westermarck, Lecturer on Sociology at the University of Finland, Helsingfors. Second Edition, 8vo, 14s. net.

AERO-THERAPEUTICS; or, The Treatment of Lung Diseases by Climate. Being the Lumleian Lectures for 1893, delivered before the Royal College of Physicians. With an Address on the High Altitudes of Colorado. By CHARLES THEODORE WILLIAMS, M.A., M.D. Oxon., F.R.C.P., Senior Physician to the Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest, Brompton, late President of the Royal Meteorological Society. 8vo, 6s. net.

THE STUDY of the BIOLOGY of FERNS by the COLLODION

METHOD. For Advanced and Collegiate Students. By GEORGE F. ATKINSON, Ph.B., Associate Professor of Cryptogamic Botany in Cornell University. 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

COLLEGE AND UNIVERSITY SERMONS. By the Hon. and

Rev. ARTHUR T. LYTTELTON, M.A., Vicar of Eccles, Manchester, late Master of Selwyn College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THOMAS CARLYLE. By John Nicholl, LL.D., M.A., Balliol,

Oxon., Emeritus Professor of English Literature in the University of Glasgow. Crown 8vo, sewed, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

LECTURES MARITIMES. For the use of Naval Cadets on Board H.M.S. "Britannia." By LEON DELBOS, M.A., Instructor in French, H.M.S. "Britannia." Globe 8vo, 2s. net.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

JUST PUBLISHED, 8vo, price 6s.

JUNIUS REVEALED.

By his surviving Grandson, H. R. FRANCIS, M.A.,

Late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

MARCH.

THE IRELAND of TO-DAY and TO-MORROW. By the Hon. HORACE PLUNKETT, M.P.

THE SIGNIFICANCE of CARBON in the UNIVERSE. By Sir ROBERT BALL, F.R.S.

A POOR MAN'S BUDGET. By W. M. J. WILLIAMS.

AN EXPEDITION to MOUNT KENYA. By Dr. J. W. GREGORY.

THE LATEST POST OFFICE PRANK. By J. HENRIK HEATON, M.P.

THE FIRST EDITION MANIA. By W. ROBERTS.

L'UOMO FATALE. By AN OBSERVER.

RAILWAY DEVELOPMENT. By J. STEPHEN JEANS.

THE NEW HEDONISM. By ORANT ALLEN.

FABIAN ECONOMICS. Part II. By W. H. MALLOCK.

FROM CAPE TOWN to CAIRO. By HENRY W. LUCY.

CHAPMAN & HALL, Ltd.

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW.

MARCH, 1894. Price 2s. 6d.

THE NEW ASPECT of the WOMAN QUESTION. By SARAH GRAND.

THE HOUSE of REPRESENTATIVES and the HOUSE of COMMONS. By the Hon. H. A. HERBERT.

THE OUTLOOK of WAR in EUROPE. By ARCHIBALD FORGES.

VILLAGE LIFE in ENGLAND. By the Countess of Malmesbury.

DRAMATIC CRITICISM. By BRAM STOKER.

PRISONS in the OLD WORLD and the NEW. By Major GRIFFITHS.

A NAVAL UNION with GREAT BRITAIN. By Sir G. S. CLARKE, K.C.M.G.

LONDON: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

New Edition, pp. 324, cloth, 1s., post free.

HOMOEOPATHIC FAMILY IN-

STRUCTOR. By Drs. R. and W. EPPS. Describes fully and prescribes for general diseases.

LONDON: JAMES EPPS & Co. (Ltd.), 48, Threadneedle Street, and 170, Piccadilly.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs,

Local Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations,

Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

IMPORTANT LITURGICAL WORK.

THE LITURGY

OF THE

HOLY APOSTLES ADAI AND MARI

TRANSLATED FROM THE ORIGINAL SYRIAC.

Quarto. Large type. Bound in White Buckram, 7s. 6d.;

in Vellum, 10s.; by post, 6d. extra.

May be obtained of the S. P. C. K., Northumberland Avenue, or the Hon. Secretary of the Archbishop's Assyrian Mission, 7, Dean's Yard, Westminster, S.W.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NEW WORKS.

NOW READY.

WOMEN of LETTERS.

Memoirs of Lady Morgan, the Misses Berry, Mary Wollstonecraft Shelley, Lady Ann Barnard, Mary Countess Cowper, Mrs. Opie, Lady Duff Gordon, Elizabeth Inebald, "Lamb's Duchess," Lady Hervey, Lady Mary Wortley Montagu, Mrs. Delany, and Mrs. Montagu. By GERTRUDE TOWNSHEND MAYER. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

"A couple of volumes which are sure and deserve to find many readers. It is impossible, in these busy days, for many people to study biographical matter at first hand. The field is too wide; and the average man or woman is grateful to the writer who, surveying that field, brings away from it all that is essential, and presents it in concise, clear, picturesque fashion. That is what the author has done in the present instance. She gives us the concentrated extract of many a memoir, autobiography, diary, and what not; and she serves it up in an appetising way. She eschews, for the most part, literary criticism, dwelling principally upon the lives and characters of her subjects."—Globe.

NOW READY.

FREDERIC HILL: an

Autobiography of Fifty Years in Times of Reform. Being the Recollections of a Retired Civil Servant. By his Daughter, CONSTANCE HILL. 1 vol., demy 8vo, with Portraits, 16s.

"A charming book, most interesting and most readable." Aberdeen Free Press.

NEW NOVELS AT THE LIBRARIES

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "AN OLD MAID'S LOVE."

THE GREATER GLORY

By MAARTEN MAARTENS, Author of "The Sin of Joost Avelingh," &c.

"The book is more than clever—bright and witty, and full of shrewd common sense."—St. James's Gazette.

"Rich in epigram and humour, both incisive and original, this work will rank among its author's best efforts." Morning Post.

"No review can do justice to the many deep and delicate studies in this careful, brilliant, and picturesque book." Daily Chronicle.

NOW READY.

A DEVOTED COUPLE.

By J. MASTERMAN, Author of "The Scots of Westminster," 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Miss Yonge seems to have flung her mantle over the author of 'A Devoted Couple,' and to have found a worthy successor. The story is a family one, full of sweet domesticities of English family life with a spice of Indian adventure thrown in. A most agreeable, clever, and wholesome story."—Scotsman.

NOW READY.

The ROMANCE of SHERE

MOTE. By PERCY HULBURD, Author of "In Black and White," 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A story of singular ingenuity and power, an album so to speak of brilliant character-sketches, graphic word pictures, and trenchant epigrams."—Daily Telegraph.

NOW READY.

THE VICAR of LANG-

THWAITE. By LILY WATSON. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"This pretty story is a plea for tolerance and charity among the 'clashing of the creeds.' There is much that is touching in the book, much simple pathos and bits of quaint humour." Pall Mall Gazette.

NOW READY.

EVE'S APPLE. By M.

DEANE. 2 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

BRITOMART. By Mrs.

HERBERT MARTIN, Author of "Bonnie Lesley," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NEW SIX-SHILLING BOOKS.

SPEEDWELL. By Lady Guendolen RAMSDEN. In 1 vol., crown 8vo.

MOLLY and her MAN-O'-WAR. By Dr. ARABELLA KENEALY, Author of "Dr. Janet of Harley Street." In 1 vol., crown 8vo.

FROM MOOR ISLES. By Jessie FOTHERGILL, Author of "The First Violin," &c. In 1 vol., crown 8vo.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

Demy 8vo, price 10s. 6d. Second Edition, Revised and much Enlarged.

THE OLD TESTAMENT IN THE JEWISH CHURCH.

A Course of Lectures on Biblical Criticism.

By W. ROBERTSON SMITH, M.A., LL.D.,

Fellow of Christ's College and Professor of Arabic in the University of Cambridge.

Demy 8vo, price 10s. 6d.

OLD TESTAMENT THEOLOGY

Or, the History of Hebrew Religion from the Year 800 B.C.

By ARCHIBALD DUFF, M.A., LL.D.,

Professor of Old Testament Theology in the Yorkshire United Independent College, Bradford.

Two vols., crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d. each.

NATURAL THEOLOGY.

The Gifford Lectures.

Delivered before the University of Edinburgh in 1891 and 1893.

By Professor Sir GEORGE G. STOKES, Bart.

Crown 8vo, price 5s.

A MANUAL OF THEOLOGY.

By THOMAS B. STRONG, M.A.,

Student and Theological Tutor, Christ Church, Oxford; Examining Chaplain to the Lord Bishop of Durham.

Crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d. Enlarged Edition, with Notes and Index.

THE CHURCH of SCOTLAND:

A Sketch of its History.

By the Rev. PEARSON M'ADAM MUIR, LL.D.

Crown 8vo, price 10s. 6d.

THE MEMORABILIA OF JESUS,

Commonly called the Gospel of St. John.

By the Rev. WILLIAM WYNNE PEYTON.

Crown 8vo, price 5s. Third Edition.

SKETCH of the HISTORY of ISRAEL and JUDAH.

By J. WELLHAUSEN,

Professor at Marburg.

Demy 8vo, price 10s. 6d.

SKETCHES FROM EASTERN HISTORY.

By THEODOR NOLDEKE,

Professor of Oriental Languages, Strassburg.

Translated by JOHN S. BLACK, M.A., LL.D.

Fcap. 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

H Y M N S:

Their History and Development in the Greek and Latin Churches, Germany and Great Britain.

By ROUNDELL, EARL of SELBORNE.

London: A. & C. BLACK, Soho Square, W.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

RT. HON. W. E. GLADSTONE, M.P.

By G. W. E. RUSSELL, M.P.

Twelfth Thousand.

With Photogravure Portrait, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"An honest book."—World.

"One of the most complete and succinct accounts of his extraordinary career that we have yet received.... A volume which we may specially commend as the most attractive and authoritative history of the man with whom it deals that has yet been given to the world."

"Mr. Russell has done his work with sound judgment and in excellent taste.... A worthy offering at the shrine of patriotism and genius." Daily News.

FRA PAOLO SARPI: the Greatest of the Venetians. By the Rev. ALEXANDER ROBERTSON, Author of "Count Campello and Catholic Reform in Italy." With Illustrations and a Facsimile Letter. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

GREECE: her Present Condition and

Recent Progress. By JAMES SAMUELSON, Author of "Roumania, Past and Present," "Bulgaria, Past and Present," &c. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

GLIMPSES OF THE FRENCH

REVOLUTION: Myths, Ideals, and Realities. By J. G. ALGER, Author of "Englishmen in the French Revolution," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A deeply interesting and most valuable work."—Daily Chronicle.

EVENING TALES. Done into English,

from the French of M. FREDERIC ORTOLI, by JOEL CHANDLER HARRIS ("Uncle Remus"). Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"The tales will be much appreciated by young children." Morning Post.

ANCIENT ARMS AND ARMOUR:

A Pictorial and Descriptive Record of the Origin and Development of Arms and Armour.

To which are appended 183 Plates, specially drawn from the Author's Collection.

By EDWIN J. BRETT.

Imp. 4to, 650 pp., with 1,200 Original Engravings, half-bound, FIVE GUINEAS net.

"A sumptuous tribute to the memory of the age of chivalry." Standard (leading article).

"Mr. Brett's magnificent work."—Daily Telegraph.

"We know no authority more thorough and up-to-date." Daily Chronicle.

"A masterpiece of its kind.... Mr. Brett's work is as interesting as it is valuable."—Black and White.

"Is noteworthy for the very elaborate series of illustrations with which it is enriched."—Times.

"We have lately had a sort of revival of the Man in Armour. Mr. Brett's splendid volume, therefore, has fallen on welcoming days." Daily News.

"It is a book that all antiquaries and lovers of ancient armour will deem a great acquisition to the shelves of their libraries."—Lyle.

"Some of the finest pictures in Mr. Brett's book are Italian arms and weapons of the fourteenth century. His collection seems to be very rich." Observer.

Cheap Editions at all Booksellers.

Uniform crown 8vo Volumes, bound in cloth, HALF-A-CROWN each.

STAND FAST, CRAIG ROYSTON!

By WILLIAM BLACK.

EREMA; or, My Father's Sin. By

R. D. BLACKMORE.

JOHN HOLDSWORTH, CHIEF MATE

By W. CLARK RUSSELL.

MARY MARSTON. By George Mac

DONALD.

MARCH Number now ready, price One Shilling.

FASHIONS OF TO-DAY.

In Dress, Fancy Work, Art, Music, Literature, Women's Work, &c. With Coloured Plate, Pattern Sheet, and numerous Illustrations.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE.

MARCH NUMBER.—CONTENTS.

THE SEA ISLAND HURRICANES—THE RELIEF. Joel Chandler Harris. (Illustrated.)

A POUND OF CURE. A Story of Monte Carlo. Chaps. 1, 2. William Henry Bishop.

THE HIGH BUILDING and its ART. Barr Ferree. (Illustrated.)

MILTON VISITING GALILEO. Painted by Tito Lessi. Philip Gilbert Hamerton. (With Frontispiece and Portrait.)

LIFE and LOVE. Melville Upton.

THE FARMER in the NORTH. (Sketches of American Types.) Octave Thanet. (Illustrated.)

ON PIRATE SEAS. A Merchant's Voyages to the West Indies in 1805. Peter A. Grotjan.

SUBTROPICAL FLORIDA. Charles Richards Dodge. (Illustrated.)

THE SUMMER INTIMACY. George A. Hibbard.

THE CABLE STREET-RAILWAY. Philip G. Hubert, jun. (Illustrated.)

JOHN MARCH, SOUTHERNER. Chaps. 16-22. George W. Cable.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SATURDAY, MARCH 10, 1894.

No. 1140, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

EUROPE AT THE TIME OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

"PERIODS OF EUROPEAN HISTORY."—Europe, 1789-1815. By H. Morse Stephens. (Rivington, Percival & Co.)

THIS volume in the "Periods of European History" is an admirable, nay, a masterly work. Mr. Morse Stephens requires no praise from me; and, indeed, in this brief notice of a fine performance, I shall occasionally dissent from some of his views, and shall indicate certain shortcomings and errors. But it is simply the truth that his book gives proof of broad, comprehensive, and exact thought, of extraordinary research and knowledge, and, in places, of much political insight; and it is astonishing how such a mass of details could have been fused into a well-ordered narrative, in an epitome of 362 pages. The great and permanent events and changes of 1789-1815 are set forth in their true significance, with rare exceptions, and in just proportions; what may be called the genius of an age of wonders has been placed before us with effective skill, apart from its weighty but fleeting accidents; and the whole forms a striking philosophical essay, though the historical method is strictly pursued. Not the least remarkable feature of the book is the indefatigable industry with which the author traces out even the least known parts of the history of the time, and puts them before us in clear relief. This is a rare excellence in an abridgment; and I would also dwell on the calmness of tone—occasionally in my judgment too calm—which pervades his work from beginning to end. The arrangement of the volume is not unworthy of Gibbon; and, if exception may perhaps be taken to the very scanty space given to the wars of the epoch—unparalleled for their grandeur and interest—this was inevitable, probably, under the conditions of the work. Mr. Stephens's style is usually good—lucid, nervous, simple, and never strained; but here and there his familiarity with the French tongue has, so to speak, infected his English: words such as "collaborator," "effacement," "habitude," "mobilise," ought not to have a place in his writings; and to "sponsor" and "take action" are newspaper slang. A few positive mistakes may also be noted. Nelson would have laughed to hear that "the Spanish navy was in an excellent condition" in 1796 (p. 183); Parma was not ceded to the Cisalpine Republic at Campo Formio (p. 192); and I do not think it can be truly said that the Holy Roman Empire "ceased to exist" until after the peace of Presburg. Mr. Stephens, too, gives different figures from those of any historian I have read for the numbers of the Grand Army in 1812, and of the Allies before Paris in 1814.

Mr. Stephens begins his work with a brief but very instructive review of the different nations and states of Europe before the great crisis of 1789. These had nearly all fallen under the rule of despots, in the decay of feudalism, and the exhaustion of the religious conflicts of the eighteenth century, with the exceptions chiefly of England and the Dutch Republic; but the rule of the despots had become enlightened, beneficent, and, in essence, progressive. Mr. Stephens, I think, undervalues the work of such sovereigns as Frederick the Great, of such ministers as Aranda, Tanucci, and Plombal. Unquestionably it did little for the humbler classes, especially for the still degraded tillers of the soil; but it raised humanity to a distinctly higher level; it was rich with fruitful promise for the estate of man. If, too—and this should be kept in mind—these noble reforms of the eighteenth century had not been violently checked and blighted by the tempestuous outbreak of anarchy in France, they would probably have embraced the whole community, and every order in it, as time rolled on: the tender dew would have transformed the landscape, and a tornado would not have blotted it out with consequences felt even at this hour. I cannot, also, agree with the view that a king or a minister of the first order could not have averted chaos in France, and have led the nation in the path of progress, had such a personage appeared on the scene: it is almost certain that a Napoleon or a Richelieu would have fulfilled this mission. Mr. Stephens, however, is plainly right in pointing out that the elements of a great change, political, social, and economic, were more mature in France than in other parts of the continent: the humbler classes in France already saw the dawn; they still sat in darkness in Germany, in Spain, and in Italy.

An admirable account of the various causes which led to the French Revolution will be found in this book; and I shall merely remark that Mr. Stephens has not dealt with sufficient emphasis on the essentially accidental nature of many of them. The events, too, of the great rising of 1789-91 are very well described, though scarcely enough prominence has been given to the cruelty and the foolishness which, even at this stage, were the evil characteristics of an ill-directed movement. I cannot wholly agree with Mr. Stephens's estimate of the work of the National Assembly from 1789 onwards. It certainly swept away abuses, though in a reckless and lawless fashion; it certainly accomplished some excellent reforms; it certainly proclaimed and consecrated noble principles of permanent advantage to the family of mankind. But much of its legislation was thoroughly bad; its administrative exploits shock common sense; it destroyed the forms of government and organised anarchy. In its attacks on property, in its mania for change, in its silly contempt of prescription and usage, in its monstrous arrangements for the great estate of the Church, in its fatal distribution of the powers of the state, and in its pandering to disorder in the whole public service, it exhibited folly, to be explained only by its inexperience in the domain of politics; and its chief work was, as it were, to suspend an uprooted monarchy over a weltering flood of revolution eager to swallow it up.

One of the best and most valuable parts of this book is the account it contains of European politics at the outbreak of the Revolution in France. This is an obscure and intricate maze, full of curious turnings and dim recesses; but it must be threaded and fully explored, if we are to obtain a clue to the events that followed. I shall only say of this admirable sketch, that the author's estimate of the Emperor Joseph seems to place him in too favourable a light: the universal reformer was more justly portrayed by Frederick; he was an idealogue rather than a true statesman. The most striking feature of the situation of affairs was that the minds of the leading men of Europe were turned towards the East, not towards the West, at the very crisis of the great awakening of France, and that the divisions and jealousies of the Continental Powers made it impossible to form a real league against the common enemy, who had suddenly appeared. The Convention of Pilnitz fell to pieces, and probably never was sincere; the feuds of Austria and Prussia, composed for a moment by Leopold's state craft, soon broke out again; Pitt thought only of British interests, and had no sympathy with Continental despots; and Catherine was devouring Poland while she was egging on her allies to an Anti-Jacobin crusade. No united front was opposed to the armed nation, which was teased and insulted rather than assailed; and this is the true moral of the first scenes of the war in 1792 and 1793. Mr. Stephens describes, on the whole ably, but with a too lenient and favouring touch, the internal state of France during this most tragic period. Every allowance certainly should be made for a great nation in a death struggle, attacked by treason at home and by foes on its borders; but the 20th of June, the 10th of August, the massacres of September, and the death of Louis XVI. are calamitous days in European history, and for years arrested the cause of human progress. Mr. Stephens has rightly pointed out that the concentration of power in the hands of the despotic Committee of Public Safety contributed to the ultimate safety of France; and I agree with him that the Gironde leaders would probably not have had equal success. But he has not given sufficient prominence to the hideous atrocities of the Reign of Terror: these were largely blunders as well as crimes; they account for the reaction against all reform and change, which influenced Europe for many years, and which effaced part of the best work of the eighteenth century. Nor was it the Terrorists who threw back the league of old Europe from the French borders; all that can be said is that their mode of government gave unity to a gigantic national effort. The triumph of France was due to the heroic levies who rolled the invaders away from the Rhine and the Pyrenees, and to the genius of the Hoches, the Marceaus, the Klebers; and it is a significant fact that not one of the great soldiers of France was one of the men of the Terror.

France, Mr. Stephens truly remarks, returned to the European family, after a terrific contest, at the Peace of Basle. The complicated and perplexing relations of France with old Europe during the next four years are set forth very well in this book. Their most striking feature is the baseness of Prussia. I can hardly agree with Mr. Stephens that the propaganda of the Revolution ceased before Napoleon appeared on the scene; the Directory tried to extend the ideas of 1793 perhaps as eagerly as Jacobin spouters in the Convention, but they were not equally bold or successful. The character of the great movement in France was changed by Napoleon's hard sense and statecraft; French statesmanship fell into the old ways of the monarchy abroad after Campo Formio, at least to a considerable extent. Nor can I agree with Mr. Stephens that France was near victory in 1799; the Republic, probably, would have succumbed, even after Zurich, had not a master hand seized the falling reins of the tottering state. Brumaire was justified if a coup d'état ever was; and nothing in history is more amazing than the sudden rise of France out of defeat and anarchy, and the supremacy of the First Consul, at home and abroad, after the double peace of Luneville and Amiens. During the next twelve years the history of France and Europe is associated with the extraordinary man who looms ever more and more colossal as he is seen in the perspective formed by time. Mr. Stephens's account of the foreign policy of Napoleon in most respects is excellent; but I cannot dwell on it within my limits. He cannot, indeed, examine the great master's wars, and this is looking at the sun in eclipse; but he brings out very well his great aims and his errors. I am not convinced that Napoleon was eager for war in 1799, 1800, nor for war at the crisis of 1803; and it is only fair to recollect that old Europe was ever combining in plots against him. The splendour of his conceptions, too, when head of the Continent, cannot, in justice, be kept out of sight; and, if his career of aggression failed, as it was doomed to fail, it was not without lasting good to Europe. Yet nothing can excuse his lawless ambition, and the extravagance of the projects of his later years; and the notion that he could raise the throne of Charlemagne on the prostrate wrecks of great martial races, in the civilisation of the nineteenth century, proves that, with all his genius, he was not a true statesman. Two passages of the time have not been brought out by Mr. Stephens with sufficient clearness: Trafalgar led to the Continental system, and forced Napoleon in the path of universal conquest; and England suffered heavily from the Continental system, if France and her allies were the worst sufferers.

